Theſe treatiſes heretofore ſcatered in parts, are now brought together and bound together in one entire body, which I preſent in all humility to your Highneſſe, as being the defender of the faith, and as it were the common Atlas of the reformed heauen on earth: hating ſchiſme with a perfect hatred, and embracing vnitie with a loue ſurpaſsing the loue of women: and to your Highneſſe, as being not onely the ſchollers King, but alſo the King of ſchollers: and to your Highneſſe, as a pledge of my true deuotion and vnfained thankes for that eminent place which I poſſeſſe by your royall gift in the Church of Canterburie. The Lord of Hoſts and God of peace be with your Maieſtie to the end and in the end, that as you haue now receiued in a meaſure preſſed downe from the riches of his mercy grace for grace; ſo you may hereafter in a meaſure running ouer obtaine glory for glory; for this earthly ſcepter which is tranſitorie, that heauenly crowne which is immortall and immarceſsible.

GRACE AND PEACE.

SIR,

YOV did first plant my studies, Archbishop WHITEGIFT, that president of pietie, watered them, and God gaue increase: to God, as to the fountaine of all goodnesse, I consecrate all that I haue: to your happy memories, as to the conduits of much good, I dedicate this ensuing Postill, especially to your selfe suruiuing, as to my best Patron in Cambridge, where the foundation of this worke was laid: vnto your selfe, as to the chiefe procurer of that small Benefice, where the frame was raised: vnto your selfe, as to the liuely patterne of that doctrine, which is here deliuered.

Accept it as your owne, for it beares your name, and reſembling you much, endeuours to honour you long: ſo you ſhall incourage me daily to leſſen my debt to the Church, and increaſe mine obligations vnto your ſelfe, that liuing and dying I may continue

THE MINISTERS INVITATORIE.

At what time soeuer a sinner doth repent, &c.

ALL these Texts of holy writ premised, are (as it were the bells of Aaron) to stirre vp deuotion, and to toll all-in to Gods house.

The whole ring consists of two notes especially: { Mans miserie. / Gods mercy.

The which are 2. chiefe motiues vnto [a] prayer, as we finde, precept Matth.6.9. Pray yee after this manner; Our Father which art in heauen. [b] Admonens adoptionis diuinæ, Pater Noster; & peregrinationis terrenæ, Qui es in cœlis; vt simul intelligamus egere nos auxilio, quia peregrini: & fiduciam petendi concipiamus, quia filij Dei.

And patterne, Luke 15. want and woe in the lewd sonne, pitie and plenty in the good father, occasioned repentance, neuer repented. Of the one it is commonly said, [c] Oratio sine malis, est quasi auis sine alis. Of the other, I will come into thine house euen vpon the multitude of thy mercy, Psalm. 5.7. To thee will I sing, because thou art my refuge, and mercifull God, Psal. 59 17. In the vulgar Latine; Deus meus misericordia mea. Whereupon [d] Augustine; O nomen sub quo nemini desperandum est.

Wherefore the Minister out of a due consideration of both, exhorteth his people in an Apostolicall stile, to confesse their sinnes humbly to the Lord, who is able to heare, because Almightie; and willing to helpe, because most mercifull.

The Confession of sinnes.

THe matter and manner of which Confession all other Liturgies approue, both ancient (as the Liturgies of [e] S. Iames, of S. Basil, of the [g] Syrians, of the [h] Æthiopians) and moderne (as the Scotish, Genevian, [i] English admonitioners set forme of common prayer, [k] Italian, Spanish, Dutch) all which allot Confession of sinnes a place, and this place principally. The reason hereof is taken out of Gods owne booke, Prou. 18.17. Iustus in exordio sermonis accusator est sui:

The iuſt man in the beginning of his ſpeech is an accuſer of himſelfe: for ſo read S. Ambroſ. ſer. 4. vpon the 118. Pſalme. S. Hierom. lib. 1. contra Pelagian. Melanct. in loc. and from the practiſe of Gods owne people the Iewes; as that noble Gentleman Philip Mornai notes in lib. 1. de Miſſa, cap. 3.

The Noueliſts onely miſlike the Miniſters Abſolution, and therefore in the Conference at Hampton Court, Ian. 14. 1603. they gained ſo much as to haue it in a more milde terme called, Remiſſion of ſinnes. Herein reſembling the people of [1] Bengala, who are ſo much afraid of Tygres, as that they dare not call them Tygres, but giue them other gentle names. Ne ſi propriam nomenclaturam tribuant, continùo dilacerentur. Concerning abſolution, ſee the Goſpell Dom. 19. poſt Trinit.

The Pater Noſter.

THis Prayer excels all other in [m] many reſpects, as being the [n] Goſpels Epitome, compiled by Wiſdome it ſelfe, ſo [o] large for matter, ſo ſhort for phraſe, ſo ſweet for order, as that it deſerueth worthily to haue both the Beſt and the Moſt place in our Liturgie. The [p] Firſt, as guide to the reſt: the Moſt, as a neceſſarie [q] complement to ſupply whatſoeuer is wanting in other: and therefore it is vſed at the end of the Letanie, at the end of the Communion, at the end of Baptiſme, at the end of other ſacred actions: (as [r] one fitly) Tanquam ſal omnium diuinorum officiorum.

It hath three parts:
1. A proeme, Our Father, &c.
2. A petition, Hallowed be thy name, &c.
3. A concluſion, For thine is the kingdome, &c.

In the firſt note theſe three things required in an abſolute agent:
1. Will, becauſe he is ours: for euery one wiſheth well vnto his owne, and he that doth not, is worſe than an Infidell, 1 Tim. 5. 8.
2. Skill, becauſe a father: Your Father knoweth whereof you ſtand in need, Matth. 6. 8.
3. Power, becauſe in Heauen: Strength commeth from heauen, 1 Macchab. 3. 19.

So that if we aske, we ſhall haue; if ſeeke, we ſhall finde; if knocke, it ſhall be opened vnto vs, becauſe God is a Father, Our Father, our Father in heauen.

Our] Admoniſheth vs of [t] mutuall loue, for without loue, there is no true faith, and without true faith, no true prayer, Rom. 14. 23. As the Serpent doth caſt vp all his poyſon before he drinke, ſo we muſt degorge our malice before we pray.

Father] Vſed here rather [t] eſſentially, than perſonally. So, God is a Father in creation, Deut. 32. 6.

Petition.

THe petition, in the iudgements of [d] neotericall Authors, hath ſix branches; whereof three concerne our loue, wherewith we loue God in himſelfe, and three wherewith we loue our ſelues in God: in [e] ſigne whereof the pronoune Thy, is affixed to the three firſt, thy name, thy kingdome, thy will: but the pronounes Vs, and Ours, to the reſt, Our bread, our treſpaſſes, lead vs not, &c.

Or (as [f] other diuide) the petition is, { Precatio bonorum. / Deprecatio malorum.

A requeſt for good things, whereof the { First concernes Gods glory, Hallowed be thy name. / Reſt our good, [g] of { Glory; Thy kingdome, &c. / Grace; Thy will, &c. / Nature; Giue vs this day our daily bread.

A deprecation of euill, which is of [h] two ſorts: { Malum culpæ, an euill which is ſinne { Paſt, Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes, &c. / To come, Lead vs not into temptation. } / Malum pœnæ, an euill which is a puniſhment for ſinne, Deliuer vs from [i] euill { Internall, an helliſh conſcience. / Externall, bodily dangers. / Eternall, euerlaſting death. }

In one word, from all that thou ſeeſt euill for vs, [k] be it proſperitie, or aduerſitie: ſo we pray in the Letanie; Good Lord deliuer vs in all time of our tribulation, in all time of our wealth, &c. [l] Nondum enim ſumus in eo bono, vbi nullum patiemur malum.

[m] Other affirme that the firſt three petitions are concerning the life to come: the laſt three concerning the life preſent: that which is in the middle, Giue vs this day our daily bread, concerning both.

Theſe ſeuen (if we make ſo many petitions) are [n] correſpondent to the ſeuen gifts of the bleſſed Spirit, Eſa. 11.2. and ſeuen beatitudes, Matth. 5. [o] againſt the ſeuen capitall ſinnes: [p] Ramus hath obſerued that this prayer anſwereth the Decalogue.

God is our Father, Ergo, we muſt haue no other gods.
In heauen, Ergo, no grauen Image, &c.
Hallowed be thy name, Ergo, not take his name in vaine.
Thy kingdome come, thy will be done, Ergo, we muſt ſanctifie the Sabbath, and worſhip him according to his word.
Giue vs this day our daily bread, that hauing ſufficient, we may be rather helpfull, Honour thy father, &c. than hurtfull, by wronging our neighbour; in deed, Thou ſhalt not kill, not commit adulterie, not ſteale: in word, Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe, &c.
Lead vs not into temptation, Ergo, not couet our neighbours houſe, nor his wife, &c
Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes, Ergo, bound to keepe the whole Law: which occaſioned [q] Luther to ſay, Docet oratio dominica nos eſſe quotidianos peccatores, & totam vitam eſſe pœnitentiam: all our life to be nothing elſe but a [r] Lent, to prepare our ſelues againſt the Sabbath of our death, and Eaſter of our reſurrection.

Concluſion.

PSALM.

PSALM. 51. 15.

Lord open thou my lips, and my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe

AS man is a little world in the great, ſo the tongue a great world in the little. [f] Nihil habet medium; aut grande malum eſt, aut grande bonum. If good (as Eunapius ſaid of that famous Rhetorician) a walking Library, a whole Vniuerſity of edifying knowledg: but if bad (as [g] S. Iames doth tell vs) a world of wickedneſſe. No [h] better diſh for Gods [i] publike ſeruice, when it is well ſeaſoned: againe, none worſe, when ill handled.

So that if we deſire to be doore-keepers in Gods houſe, let vs intreat God firſt to be a doore-keeper in our houſe, that he would ſhut the wicket of our mouth againſt vnſauourie ſpeeches, and open the doore of our lips, that our mouth may ſhew forth his praiſe. This was Dauids prayer, and ought to bee thy practiſe, wherein obſerue three points eſpecially:

Who, the Lord.
What, open my lips.
Why, that my mouth may ſhew thy praiſe.

For the firſt, man of himſelfe cannot vntie the ſtrings of his owne ſtammering tongue, but it is God onely which openeth a [k] doore of vtterance. When we haue a good thought, it is (as the Schoole doth ſpeake) gratia infuſa; when a good word, gratia effuſa; when a good worke, gratia diffuſa. Man is as a locke, the Spirit of God as a key, [l] which openeth and no man ſhutteth; againe, ſhutteth, and no man openeth. He did open the heart of Lydia to conceiue well, Act. 16. the eares of the Prophet to heare well, Eſay 50. the eyes of Eliſha's ſeruant to ſee well, 2 King. 6. and here the lips of Dauid to ſpeake well. And therefore, wheras in the former verſe he might ſeeme too peremptory, ſaying, my tongue ſhall ſing of thy righteouſneſſe; he doth, as it were, correct himſelfe by this latter edition, and ſecond ſpeech: O Lord, I finde my ſelfe, of my ſelfe, moſt vnable to ſing or ſay, but open thou my lips, and touch thou my tongue, and then I am ſure my mouth ſhal ſhew thy praiſe.

This doctrine ſheweth in generall our dependance on God, in [m] whom we liue, and moue, and haue our being; from whom onely commeth [n] euerie good and perfect gift.

Man is Gods image: Gen. 1. 26. Some [o] Tranſlaters vſe the word which ſignifieth a ſhadow. Now, as an image or a ſhadow doth only moue, as the bodie whereof it is a likeneſſe; when the bodie doth ſtretch forth an arme, the ſhadow preſently hath an arme; when the body doth put forth a legge, the ſhadow hath a legge: ſo man in all his actions, as a ſhadow depends on God, as the ſole foundation of all his [p] being.

In more particular, this ouerthroweth all [q] worke-mongers, and (if I may ſo ſpeake) babling word mongers. If a man cannot open his owne lips to praiſe God, much leſſe direct his owne heart to pleaſe God; if not able to tune his tongue, let him not preſume to turne his ſoule.

And if a man cannot open his mouth aright, let him not picke it with a falſe key, but rather pray with Dauid in the 141. Pſalme: Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, and keepe the doores of my lips. As it is abſurd in building, to make the porch bigger then the houſe: ſo, monſtrous in nature, when we commit burglarie, breaking the doores, and pulling downe the [r] barres of our mouth, that the narrow paſſage may bee made wide for our bigge words, and high conceits. A foule fault, when our words are either too many, or too mightie: Eccleſiaſtes 5. 1.

2. Point what, Open my lips.

Dauid [s] elſewhere thinkes our mouth too much open, and [t] S. Iames, that our tongue is too glib and vnruly. Lingua facile volat, & ideo facile violat (ſaith [u] Bernard.) In old age, when all other members are dull and ſtiffe, the x tongue notwithstanding is quicke and nimble. What need any then pray for opening their lips? I answer with the Prophet Ieremy, chap.4.vers.22. They are wise to doe euill, but to doe well they haue no knowledge. Men haue tongue enough to speake ill, an open mouth to blaspheme God, and slander their neighbour; but like Plinies Astomi, no mouth, no lips, no tongue, possessed with a dumbe deuill when they should speake well.

Hierome, y Basil, Euthymius, and other ancient Doctors obserue, that naturall corruptions, and actuall sins, are the very rampiers which stop this free passage. So Dauid himselfe doth expound himselfe, vers. 14. Deliuer mee from bloud-guiltinesse. O God, and my tongue shall sing of thy righteousnesse. His vnthankfulnesse did cry, his adultery cry, his murther cry vnto the Lord for reuenge: but alas, himselfe was mute, till God in exceeding great mercy did stop the mouths of his clamorous aduersaries, and gaue him leaue to speake.

Here we note the great wisdome of the Church, assigning this place to this versicle in this booke: namely, before the Psalmes, Lessons, and Collects: and yet after the Confession and Absolution of our sinnes, insinuating that our mouths are silenced only by transgression, and opened only by God: and therefore when we meet together in the Temple, to be thankfull vnto him, and to speake good of his name, we must craue first, that according to the multitude of his rich mercies, he would pardon all our old sinnes, and then put into our mouth a new song: that, as the seruice is holy, the time holy, the place holy; so we likewise the z persons holy, who sing, Holy, holy, holy, &c. Deus faciat tam commodum, quàm Ecclesia fecit accomodum.

Our fathers, in this, imitated the learned Hebrew Doctors, enioyning that this verse should be said at the beginning of euery prayer, in a tractatu Berachoth; that is, their Liturgie, being the first part of the Talmud, as Petrus Galatinus lib. 1. cap. 5. de Arcanis, & Sixtus Senensis Bibliothec. lib. 2. pag. 121.

My lips] A part for the whole, sufficient abilitie to praise God: Ex abundantia b cordis os loquitur. He doth entreat God then, as before, for a cleane heart, and a right spirit, that his c old ioyes of conscience may be renewed, and all the whole man throughly repaired, a good d desire to begin, a ready will to continue, a constant resolution to end in Gods holy seruice.

The key of the mouth ought not to stand in the doore of the lips, but to bee kept in the cabinet of the minde. For e the heart of fooles is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wise is in their heart. Dauid therefore doth desire first a new f soule, then a new song. The tongue is ambassadour of the minde; as often as we speake without meditation before, so often the messenger runneth without his errand. And idle words are not little sinnes, of which one day we shall giue great g account.

The minde then and the mouth must goe together: in ciuill communication, he that will not speake idly, must thinke what he speakes; and he that will not speake falsely, must speake what he thinkes. In holy deuotion, God must be praised vpon well h tuned Cymbals, and loud Cymbals, in his Quire there must be first tune well, a prepared i heart, then sound well, a cheerefull tongue, like the k pen of a ready writer. Albeit mentall prayer at sometime, and in some place be sufficient: yet l vocall, in Gods publike worship, is necessarie to stirre vp, and blow the coales of zeale, both in our selues and others. Open lips in open seruice.

That my mouth may shew thy praise.] That as of m thee, and through thee, and for thee are all things; so to thee may be praise for euermore. See Pater Noster.

God is of himselfe, and in himselfe so great, so good, as that we cannot any way detract or adde to his glorie. Nec n melior si laudaueris, nec deterior si vituperaueris. I answer, though wee cannot make Gods praise greater in it selfe, yet we may make it seeme greater vnto other; it is our duty to shew forth his praise in all our words and actions too: for albeit we cannot make a new God, and a new Christ (as the Papists doe) yet our good example, and gracious speech, may

This annunciation of praise consists of often repetition and particular enumeration of Gods especiall goodnesse towards vs. [o] Augustine therefore doth glosse the text thus: Laudem tuam, quia creatus sum. Laudem tuam, quia vt confiterer iam monitus sum. Laudem tuam, quia peccans non derelictus sum. Laudem tuam, quia vt securus essem mundatus sum.

[p] Hugo comprehends all, which concernes vs all, in foure words: God is to be praised, quia Creator ad esse, Conseruator in esse, Recreator in bene esse, Glorificator in optimo esse: qui [q] non reddit Deo faciendo quod debet, reddet ei, patiendo quod debet.

The whole text doth teach all men generally the language of Canaan, [u] that is, what and how to speake, that their mouth may glorifie God, and edifie their brethren. Especially Pastors to [x] minister a word in time to the wearie; so to tune their notes, as that they may be like apples of [y] gold with pictures of siluer. In all their sermons to preach Iesus for Iesus, hunting not after their owne, but his glorie. Gloria Patri.

THis Hymne is of good credit, and great antiquity. [z] Ramus acknowledgeth ingenuously both. It is a paraphrasticall exposition of that excellent speech, Romanes, 11. 36. [a] Of him, and through him, and for him are all things, to him bee glorie for euer, Amen: vsed in the Church to manifest our sound iudgement in matter of doctrine concerning the sacred Trinitie. We must (saith [b] Basil) as we haue receiued, euen so baptize, and as we baptize, euen so beleeue, and as we beleeue, euen so giue glorie. Baptizing we vse the name of the Father, of the Sonne, of the holy Ghost: Confessing the Christian faith, we declare our beleefe in the Father, and in the Sonne, and in the holy Ghost: ascribing glorie to God, we giue it to the Father, and to the Sonne, and to the holy Ghost. And howsoeuer Anabaptisticall Antipodes, out of their ambitious humor to contradict all other, and heare themselues onely speake, would haue thrust out of the Church all solemne set formes of holy seruice: yet Gloria Patri stands still, and like a true Martyr doth shew the greatest countenance in lowest estate.

For antiquitie, such as looke lowest affirme that it was ordained first by [c] Damasus, ann. Dom. [d] 376. Others, that it was enacted in that famous Councell of Nice, consisting of 318. Bishops vnder Constantine the Great, ann. [e] 320.

IT is euident, not onely by [h] Church history, but also by the Scripture, that Psalmes haue alwaies taken vp a great roome in diuine seruice. [i] Mat. 26. 30. 1 Cor. 14. 26. When you come together, as euery one of you hath a Psalme.

Let not any then wonder at our often Psalmody both after, and before the word expounded, and read: and sometime interlaced betweene both. A custome continued in all other reformed Churches of Scotland, France, Flanders, &c.

Aboue all other Psalmes, [k] our Church hath fitly chosen this, as a whetstone to set an edge vpon our deuotions at the very beginning of publike praiers in the Temple: teaching plainly for what matter, and after what manner, it behoueth vs to serue God in his Sanctuarie. For it consists of two parts:

1. An

Let vs ſing: with our heart, heartily: with hands and knees, O come let vs worſhip and fall downe and kneele before the Lord our maker.

Here then is a threefold patterne in one: An example for Maſters to ſtir vp their familie: an example for Preachers to exhort their people; an example for Princes to prouoke their Subiects vnto the publike worſhip of the Lord. You hold it a good rule in worldly buſineſſe, not to ſay to your ſeruants, Come ye, goe ye, ariſe ye: but, let vs come, let vs goe, let vs ariſe. Now ſhall the children of this world be wiſer in their generation, then the children of light? Doe we commend this courſe in mundane affaires, and neglect it in religious offices? Aſſuredly, if our zeale were ſo great to religion, as our lone is towards the world; Maſters would not come to Church (as many doe) without their Seruants, and Seruants without their Maſters; Parents without their Children, and Children without their Parents; Husbands without their Wiues, and Wiues without their Husbands: but, all of vs would call one to another, as [s] Eſay prophecied; O come let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, to the houſe of the God of Iacob, he will teach vs his wayes, and we will walke in his paths. And as Dauid here practiſed, O come let vs ſing to the Lord, let vs heartily reioyce in the ſtrength of our ſaluation.

True: God is a circle, whoſe Center is no where, Circumference euery where: yet is he ſaid in holy Scripture to dwell in [u] heauen, and to be preſent in his Sanctuarie more ſpecially; manifeſting his glory from heauen, his grace in the Church principally. For he ſaid in the [x] Law, In all places where I ſhall put the remembrance of my name, I will come vnto thee: and in the [y] Goſpell, Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them. Albeit euery day be a Sabbath, and euery place a Sanctuarie for our priuate deuotions, according to the particular exigence of our occaſions; yet God hath allotted certaine times, and certaine places for his publike ſeruice, Leuit. 19. 30. Ye ſhall ſanctifie my Sabbaths, and reuerence my Sanctuary.

And therefore [z] Caluin is of opinion that Dauid vttered this ſpeech vpon the Sabbath: as if he ſhould ſay, Come let vs ſing to the Lord, not in priuate only, but let vs come before his preſence with thankſgiuing.

As

As in the 100 Pſalme: Goe your way into his gates, and into his Courts with praiſe.

The conſideration of this one point, that God is in euery place by his generall preſence, in this holy place by his eſpeciall preſidence, may teach all men to pray not hypocritically for faſhion, but heartily for conſcience; not onely formally to ſatisfie the law, but alſo ſincerely to certifie our loue to the Lord our maker, giuing vnto [a] Cæſar the things which appertaine to Cæſar, and vnto God the things which belong to God. That we may not only praiſe where we ſhould, but, as it followeth in the diuiſion Whereto: Let vs ſing to the Lord, let vs reioyce in the ſtrength of our ſaluation, let vs ſhew our ſelues glad in him.

Euery one in his merrie mood will ſay; Come let vs ſing, let vs heartily reioyce: But as good neuer a wit as neuer the better. Silence is a ſweeter note then a loud, if a lewd ſonnet. If we will needs reioyce, let vs (ſaith [b] Paul) reioyce in the Lord: if ſing, ſaith Dauid, let vs ſing to the Lord.

Vaine toyes are ſongs ſung to the world, laſciuious ballads are ſongs ſung to the fleſh, Satyricall libels are ſongs ſung to the Deuill; only Pſalmes and Hymnes, and ſpirituall ſongs are [c] *melody for the Lord. LEt vs worſhip and fall downe, and kneele before the Lord our maker: not before a Crucifix, not before a rotten Image, not before a faire picture of a foule Saint: theſe are not our makers, we made them, they made not vs. Our God, vnto whom we muſt ſing, in whom we muſt reioyce, before whom we muſt worſhip, is a great King aboue all gods: he is no god of lead, no god of bread, no brazen god, no wooden god; we muſt not fall downe and worſhip our Ladie, but our Lord; not any Martyr, but our Maker; not any Saint, but our Sauiour: O come let vs ſing vnto the Lord, let vs heartily reioyce in the ſtrength of our ſaluation.

Comely geſtures in the Church.

Here let vs make a ſtand, and behold the wiſe choice of the Church, aſſigning this place to this Pſalme, which exciteth vs to come to the Temple quietly and ioyntly, Come let vs ſing; and when we are come, to demeane our ſelues in this holy place cheerefully, heartily, reuerently. I would faine know of thoſe who deſpiſe our Canons, as not agreeable to the Canon of holy Bible, whether their vnmannerly ſitting in the time of diuine ſeruice be this kneeling; whether their ſtanding be this falling downe; whether they giue God their heart, when as they will not afford him ſo much as their hat; whether their lowring vpon their brethren, be ſinging to the Lord; whether their dutie required here, be to come in, to goe out, to ſtay in the Temple, without any reſpect of perſons, or reuerence to place.

I would ſuch as doe imitate the Turks in [e] habit, would likewiſe follow them in humble comportment while they pray: [f] Magna cum Ceremonia, & attentione ſacris ſuis interſunt Turcæ: nam ſi vel digito ſcalpant caput, peryſſe ſibi precationis fructum arbitrantur: quid enim ſi cum Baſſis ſermo tibi habendus, ergo multo magis ſi cum Deo. Thinke of this ye that forget God, he will not be mocked, his truth is eternall, heauen and earth ſhall paſſe, but not one iot of his word ſhall paſſe: if an Angell from heauen, or Deuill on earth, if any priuate ſpirit ſhall deliuer vnto you rules of behauiour in the Church, contrary to this Canon of Gods owne ſpirit, let him be accurſed, Anathema. Let vs ſing, let vs worſhip, let vs, who feare God & honour the King, fall downe & kneele before the Lord our maker.

Thus much of Danids exhortation to praiſe God. The reaſons why we ſhould praiſe, follow. Set downe Firſt briefly, God is our Creator, therefore let vs worſhip and fall downe and kneele before the Lord our maker, verſ. 6. He is our Redeemer, therefore let vs ſing vnto the Lord, let vs heartily reioyce in the ſtrength of our ſaluation, verſe 1.

Secondly, more at large from his { Mercies in generall, verſe 3,4,5. / Iudgements.

For the Lord is a great God:] Moſt mighty, almighty, able to doe whatſoeuer he will, and more then he will too. See the Creed.

In himſelfe ſo great, that the heauen of heauens cannot containe him, much leſſe any barren braine inwombe him: and therefore Danid here being not able to ſet downe the leaſt peece of his greatneſſe in the poſitiue degree, comes to the comparatiue, ſhewing what he is in compariſon of other: A great king aboue all Gods. As being more excellent and mightie then any thing, or all things that haue the name of God.

Whether they be Gods in { Title, { [g] Angels in heauen. / [h] Princes on earth. } / Opinion, { As [i] gold is the couetous mans god, [k] belly-cheere the Epicures god, an [l] Idoll the ſuperſtitious mans god.

Now the Lord is the King of all gods in title, for he made them: of all gods in opinion, for he can deſtroy them. [m] Angels are his meſſengers, and [n] Princes his miniſters, all [o] power is of the Lord. The manner of getting kingdomes is not alwaies of God, becauſe it is ſometime by wicked meanes; yet the power it ſelfe is euer from God, and therefore ſtiled in [p] Scripture, the God of gods, as the [q] Wiſe man ſaith, higher then the higheſt: for religion and reaſon tell vs, that of all creatures in heauen an Angell is the greateſt, of all things on earth, an [r] Emperor is the greateſt: but the Lord (as you ſee) is greater then the greateſt as being abſolute Creator of the one, and maker of the other: [s] Quantus Deus eſt qui Deos facit! How great a God is he that makes gods, yea and marres them too at his pleaſure! ſurely this is a great God, and a great king aboue all gods. And therefore in what eſtate ſoeuer thou be, poſſeſſe thy ſoule with patience, reioyce in God, be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, feare no man, no deuill, no other God, he that is greater then all theſe ſhall be thy defence; he will performe whatſoeuer in his word he did promiſe concerning this life & the next.

In his hand are all the corners of the earth] A reaſon to proue that God is a great King aboue all gods: he is a great God, becauſe a King of gods: and he is a King of gods, becauſe in his hand are all the corners of the world, ſubiect to his power and prouidence.

The moſt mighty Monarch on earth is king as it were but of a mole-hill, a Lord of ſome one angle: but in gods hand are all the corners of the earth, and the ſtrength of the hils. i. of moſt puiſſant potentates, in compariſon of whom all other are low valleyes; ſay the ſtrength and height of the hils are his.

Antichriſt doth extoll himſelfe [t] aboue all that is called God, and the Pope doth make himſelfe Lord of Lords, vſurping the [u] whole world for his Dioceſſe: yea he hath a triple kingdome, according to his triple crowne; Supernall, extended to heauen, in canonizing Saints; Infernall, extended to hell, in freeing ſoules out of Purgatorie; Terreſtriall, extended ouer the whole earth, as being vniuerſall Biſhop of the Catholike Church. But alas, vaine man, he is but a Fox in an hole, many corners of the earth are not his; England (God be praiſed) is not his, Scotland, Holland, Denmarke not his, a great part of France, the greateſt part of Germanie, none of his, many thouſands in Portugall, Italie, Spaine, none of his; the great Cham, the Perſian, the Turke, the leaſt whereof is greater than himſelfe, none of his. And albeit all the Kings of the earth ſhould bee drunken with his abomination, yet ſhould he be Paſtor vniuerſall of the Church, but as the deuill is [x] prince of the world; not by his owne might, but by others weakneſſe, weakneſſe, as [y] S. Paul ſaid, He is our maſter to whom we giue our ſelues as ſeruants to obey.

So likewiſe the gods of the ſuperſtitious Heathen haue not all the corners of the world: for, as themſelues ingenuouſly confeſſe, ſome were gods of the water only, ſome of the winde, ſome of corne, ſome of fruit, [z] Nec omnia commemoro, quia me piget quod illos non pudet. As Heretikes haue ſo many Creeds, as heads: ſo the Gentiles (as [a] Prudentius obſerued) had ſo many things for their god, as there were things that were good.

Quicquid humus, pelagus, cœlum, mirabile gignunt:

So that their god is not as our God, [b] euen our enemies being Iudges. Other hold ſome parcels of the earth vnder him, and ſome lay claime to the whole by vſurpation. But all the corners of the world are his by right of creation, as it followeth in the next verſe.

The Sea is his, for he made it] An argument demonſtratiue, to ſhew that all the world is ſubiect to his power: and therefore in the Creed, after Almightie, followeth inſtantly, Maker of heauen and earth.

If any ſhall demand why Dauid nameth here firſt and principally the Sea, before all other creatures: anſwer may be giuen out of [c] Plinie; God, who is wonderfull in all things, is moſt wonderfully wonderfull in the Sea.

Whether we conſider (as [d] Dauid elſewhere) the

4. Wonderfull Art of ſayling on it.

Yet God in the beginning [e] made this vnruly foaming fuming beaſt, and euer ſince ruled it at his becke: for he [f] ſtilleth the raging of the Sea, and the noyſe of his waues; [g] he ſhutteth vp this barking curre in the channell, as in a kennell; he layeth vp the deepe, as in a [h] treaſure houſe, ſaying to the waters, [i] Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no further, and here ſhall it ſtay thy proud waues.

Hitherto concerning the greatneſſe, and goodneſſe of God in generall. Now Dauid in the ſeuenth verſe proceeds, intimating that the Lord of all in common, is our God in ſpeciall. He is the Lord our God, as being the people of his paſture, and the ſheepe of his hands: that is, himſelfe doth feed and fauour the Church in a more particular ſort, committing this charge to none other. See Preface of the Decalogue.

The laſt reaſon is from iudgement; for God vſeth all meanes to winne men vnto him. The ſumme whereof is, that we muſt not harden our hearts, and obſtinately ſettle our ſelues in ſinne, as our forefathers in the wilderneſſe: but rather heare the voyce of the Lord ſpeaking vnto vs out of his Word all the day long, the whole time of our life generally, but on the Sabbath day more ſpecially, leaſt in his anger he ſweare that we ſhall not enter into his reſt. Read this hiſtorie, Numb. 14. Exod. 17. for, as [k] Paul doth teach, theſe things are written for our enſample, vpon whom the ends of the world are come. Lege hiſtoriam, ne fias, hiſtoria. The iudgements of God are like thunder-claps, pœna ad vnum, terror ad omnes. As in a Common-weale, places of execution are publike, ad terrorem populi. becauſe (as Plato ſaid) Nemo prudens punit quia peccatum eſt, ſed ne peccetur. And another ancient Philoſopher to the ſame purpoſe: Maleſici non pereunt vt pereant, ſed vt pereundo alios deterreant. That the [l] State which had no benefit by their life, ſhould make vſe of their death. In like manner, Almightie God in this huge Theater of the world, doth make ſome ſpectacles vnto other, all of vs being either actors, or ſpectators: and ſo by conſequence muſt take example by other, or elſe make example to other. Te Te Deum.

THat Hymnes accurately framed by deuout men according to the word, may be ſung in the Church with the Pſalmes of Dauid, and other ſpirituall ſongs taken out of the word, we can alleage precept, and example: Precept, Coloſſians 3.16. Admoniſh your ſelues in Pſalmes and Hymnes, &c. [m] Marlorat doth conſtrue this of ſinging in the Church: and Haymo, that Hymnes were godly ſongs, inuented by the Chriſtians of that age. For Gods holy Church hath vſed this cuſtome from the [n] Primitiue times, euen vnto this preſent day.

Concerning Te Deum in particular; it is approued by [o] Luther, and held by our [p] Martyrs a good Creed: (as it is thought generally) compoſed by thoſe two great lights of the Church, Ambroſe [q] who was the moſt reſolute Biſhop, and Auguſtine [r] who was the moſt iudicious Doctor of all the Fathers.

It is reported by Dacius, a reuerend Biſhop of Millane, that in his time, who liued vnder [s] Iuſtinian [t] anno 538. this Hymne was receiued and vſed in the Church: which argueth it of greater antiquity, then vpſtart Poperie. The Noueliſt (as [u] Auguſtine writes of Fauſtus the Manichee) Vel non intelligendo reprehendit, vel reprehendendo non intelligit. Either too much paſſion, or elſe too little knowledge.

Benedicite omnia opera.

THis Canticle is a rapſodie gathered here and there from diuers Pſalmes of Dauid, as the [x] marginall notes indigitate: cited often by the learned and ancient [y] Fathers, and not cenſured for it by the Lutheran Hiſtoriographers. Cent. 5. colum. 219.

Imprinted at Midleburgh with the Dauidicall Pſalmes in Engliſh meeter: an honour denied vnto the Church-Pſalter in proſe. In a word, I find this Hymne leſſe martyred then the reſt, and therefore dimiſſe it, as Chriſt did the woman, Iohn 8. Where be thine accuſers? Hath no man condemned thee? no more doe I: goe thy way.

Benedictus. Luke 1. 68.

THe Benedictus, Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis, are ſaid in the Church daily, whereas other Pſalmes of Dauid, Aſaph, Moſes, are read but monethly. The reaſons hereof are manifeſt, and manifold, I will only name two.

[z] Hooker Eccleſiaſt. polit. lib 5. §. 40.

Firſt, theſe moſt excellent Hymnes (as [z] gratulations wherewith our Lord and Sauiour was ioyfully receiued at his entrance into the world) concerne vs ſo much more then the Pſalmes of Dauid, as the Goſpell more then the Law, and the new Teſtament more then the old. For the one are but prophecies of Chriſt to come, whereas the other are plaine diſcoueries of Chriſt already preſent.

Secondly, theſe ſongs are proper only to Chriſtianity, whereas other Pſalmes are common to the Iewes, as well as to the Chriſtians, wherewith they praiſe God in their Synagogue, ſo well as we praiſe God in our Church. A Iew will ſing with Aſaph and Dauid, that the Meſſias of the world ſhall come, but he cannot, he will not acknowledge with Zacharias and Simeon that he is come. So that the Noueliſt herein miſliking the Churches cuſtome, doth ſeeme to play the Iew; which I rather aſcribe to the lightneſſe of his folly, then to the waight of his malice. Sententiam Eccleſiæ non intelligit, [a] ſed amat ſuam, non quia vera eſt, ſed quia ſua eſt,

It is fitly placed after the ſecond Leſſon, as an Hymne of praiſe to magnifie God for the comfort we receiue by the ſweet tidings of the Goſpell; Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, for viſiting and redeeming his people.

It

It hath two principall parts: { 1. Concerning Christ and his kingdome. 2. Touching Iohn the Baptist and his office, verse 76. &c.

It is very remarkable, that Zacharias who was dumbe, vers. 20. doth now not onely speake, but also prophecie. He was made speechlesse, because he was faithlesse: but now beleeuing, his lips are opened, and his mouth doth shew forth Gods praise: saying, Blessed be the Lord.

Let no man in his affliction despaire: for (as [b] Ambrose notes) if we change our manners, Almightie God will alter his minde. Nec solum ablata restituit, sed etiam insperata concedit: He will not only restore that which was taken away, but also giue more than we can expect. [c] So he blessed the last dayes of Iob more than the first: for whereas [d] he had but 7000 sheepe, 3000 camels, 500 yoke of oxen, and 500 shee-asses: afterward the Lord gaue him 14000 sheepe, 6000 camels, 1000 yoke of oxen, and 1000 asses. In the second of Ioel; If you will turne to me (saith the Lord) with all your heart, with fasting, weeping, and mourning, I will render vnto you the yeeres which the Grashopper hath eaten, the Canker worme, and the Caterpiller. And moreouer, I will powre out my Spirit vpon all flesh, and your sonnes and your daughters shall prophecie. &c. In the 9. of Matthew, when Christ saw the faith of the palsie man, he did not only cure the sores of his bodie, but also the sinnes of his soule; Sonne, be of good cheere, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee.

In the first part two points are to be considered especially: { 1. Who to be blessed; The Lord God of Israel. 2. Why; first for promising, then for performing redemption vnto the world.

Blessed] That is, praised, as Psal. 18.47. Matth. 21.39. So that Zacharias here remembring a great benefit, begins his Hymne with thankes, Benedictus Dominus. Hereby signifying, that it is our first and chiefe dutie to be thankfull, to blesse God, who doth so wonderfully blesse vs in all the changes and chances of this mortall life, to say with [e] Iob, The Lord giueth, and the Lord taketh, blessed be the name of the Lord. God be praised, and the Lord be blessed, is the language of Canaan: whereas vnthankfulnesse is the Deuils text, and the blasphemies of wicked men are commentaries vpon it.

The Lord] For, as [f] Aristotle said; Praise is only vertues due: but none is good, [g] except God. Other are to be praised in him, so farre forth as they haue receiued any gift or good from him, only the Lord is worthy to be praised in and for himselfe.

God of Israel] So called in [h] two respects: first, in regard of his loue towards them, as being his peculiar inclosure out of the Commons of the whole world, Deut. 7.6. Psalm. 76. Esay 5.

Secondly, in regard of their seruice to him, he [i] is God of other, will they nill they. Psal 99 1. The Lord is King, be the people neuer so impatient; he sitteth betweene the Cherubins, be the earth neuer so vnquiet: but Israel willingly submitted her selfe to serue him cheerefully with all her heart. The deuill is prince of the world, because the wicked of the world be ready to giue place to his suggestions: but the Lord is God of Israel; that is, of all good men, because they resist Satan, and yeeld to his gouernment, desiring daily that his kingdome may come, and his will be done in earth as it is in heauen.

He doth vse this title, [k] rather than another, in generall, to describe the true God, and to distinguish him from the gods of the Gentiles, who were not gods, but [l] Idols: that is, deuils (as [m] Euthymius obserues.) In particular, this title did best fit his occasion, because Christ the Redeemer of the world, was promised vnto the [n] Iewes, Abraham and his seed for euer: and therefore blessed be the Lord God of Israel.

Why? First for promising: then for performing.

The promises of God touching the Messias, are [o] twofold.

1. Made by himselfe, to Adam, Abraham, Isaac, vers. 72, 73.

[o] Iansenius concord cap. 5.

2. Made by his ſeruants: As he ſpake by the mouth of his holy Prophets, which haue beene ſince the world began, verſ. 70.

He ſpake] The Prophet is but the voyce: God himſelfe is the ſpeaker, as Iohn Baptiſt ſaid; I am the [p] voyce of him that cryeth in the wilderneſſe.

By the mouth] In the ſingular number; for [q] albeit they were many, yet they ſpake but one thing, from one ſpirit, as it were with one mouth.

Which haue beene ſince the world began] For [r] all the Prophets haue foretold of theſe dayes. [s] In the transfiguration, Moſes and Elias are ſaid to talke with Chriſt: ſignifying hereby, (ſaith [t] Origen) that the Law and the Prophets, and the Goſpell agree all in one. And therefore Peter was vnwiſe to make three Tabernacles for one.

Holy Prophets: holy by { Place, [u] ſeparated from the prophane vulgar, and conſecrated to this high calling. Grace, for being hallowed and elected to this office, they ſpake by the [x] Holy Ghoſt: endued alſo with gifts of ſanctification; in ſo much that Prophets, and holy men, heretofore were voces conuertibiles, as it is [y] obſerued out of the old Teſtament, Gen. 20. 7. and new, Luk. 7. 16. Ioh. 9. 17.

This may teach the Prophets in our time to be walking Sermons, Epiſtles and holy Goſpels in all their cariage toward the people. Prædicat viua voce, qui prædicat vita, & voce. He doth preach moſt, that doth liue beſt.

As it is ſaid of Iohn the Baptiſt, [z] Cùm miraculum nullum fecerit, perpetuum fuit ipſe miraculum: So a good man doth alway preach, though he neuer comes in Pulpit. Whereas ſuch a Miniſter, as is no where a Miniſter but in the Church, is like [a] Achitophel, who ſet his houſe in order, and then hanged himſelfe. The word preached is as Aarons rod; if in the Preachers hand, it is comely: but if he caſt it from him, it will happily proue a Serpent. That which God hath ioyned together, let no man put aſunder, Holineſſe, and Prophecie. O Lord indue thy Miniſters with righteouſneſſe, that thy choſen people may be ioyfull.

As God is mercifull in making, ſo faithfull in keeping his promiſe: for he viſited and redeemed his people.

Viſited] In the better part, for viſitation in mercy, not in iudgement, as Pſal. 8. 4. Gen. 21. 1.

If Chriſt did viſit vs in our perſon, let vs viſit him in [b] his members. All of vs are his [c] ſtewards, and the good things he hath lent vs are not our owne, but his; either the goods of the Church, and ſo we may not make them Impropriations: or elſe the goods of the Common-wealth, and we may not incloſe them. He is the beſt ſubiect that is higheſt in the Subſidie booke; ſo the beſt Chriſtian that is moſt forward in ſubſidys, in helping his brethren with ſuch gifts as God hath beſtowed vpon him.

[d] The whole world (ſaith [d] S. Iohn) lieth in wickedneſſe, ſicke, very ſicke vnto [e] death. All wickedneſſe is weakneſſe, euery ſinne is a ſore; Couetouſneſſe an inſatiable dropſie; Pride a ſwelling tympanie; Laſineſſe the Gentlemans gout: Chriſt therefore the [f] great Phyſitian of the world, came to viſit vs in this extremitie: we did not ſend for him, he came of his owne loue to ſeeke and ſaue that which was loſt. It is a great kindneſſe for one neighbour to viſit another in ſickneſſe, but a greater kindneſſe to watch and pray with the comfortleſſe: yet the greateſt kindneſſe of all is to helpe and heale him. Euen ſo, and much more than ſo Chriſt loued the world; he came not onely to ſee it, but to ſaue [g] it; not onely to liue among men, but alſo to die for men: as to viſit, ſo to redeeme. The Lord did endure the croſſe, that the ſeruant might enioy the crowne: the Captaine deſcended into hell, that the ſouldier might aſcend into heauen: the Phyſitian did die, that the Patient might liue. [h] Bernard pithily: Triplici morbo laborabat genus humanum, principio, medio, fine: id eſt, natiuitate, vita & morte. Venit Chriſtus, & contra triplicem hunc morbum, attulit triplex remedium. Natus eſt, vixit, mortuus mortuus est: eius natiuitas purgauit nostram, mors eius destruxit nostram, vita eius instruxit nostram. As [i] S. Paul in two words; He died for our sinnes, and rose againe for our iustification: that is, (saith [k] Aquinas) he died to remoue from vs all that which was euill, and rose againe to giue vs all that which was good. All is infolded in the word Redeeme, the which (as Interpreters obserue generally) doth imply that we are deliuered from the hands of all our enemies, and they bee principally foure:

The { World. Flesh. Deuill. [l] Death. }

Christ ouercame the world on earth, the flesh on the Crosse, the deuill in hell, death in the graue; now being the Churches head, and husband, he tooke her dowrie, which was sinne (for shee had nothing else of her owne) and indowed her with all his goods. [m] I am my welbeloueds, and my welbeloued is mine. So that Christ was borne for vs, and liued for vs, and died for vs, and rose againe for vs: and therefore though the deuill cry, ego decipiam; the world cry, ego deficiam; the flesh cry, ego inficiam; death cry, ego interficiam: it makes no matter in that Christ cryeth, [n] ego reficiam, I will ease you, I will comfort you, I will visit and redeeme you. See Gospell on Whitsunday.

His people] The Iewes, as sent to them [o] first, and principally, whom hee did visit in his owne person, whereas all other Dioceses of the world were visited by Commissaries: I say first, for afterward all people were his people: Visitauit omnes gentes, quoniam omnes egentes. In him we are all one, there is neither Iew nor Grecian, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, Gal. 3. 28.

[p] Augustine sweetly; The beleeuing Gentiles are more Israel, than Israel it selfe; for the Iewes are the children of Abraham according to the flesh only, but we are the children of Abraham after the spirit: they be the [q] sonnes of Abraham, who doe the workes of Abraham. But what was Abrahams chiefe worke? The [r] Scripture tells vs, Abraham beleeued and it was imputed vnto him for righteousnesse. So that as [s] Paul concludes, all beleeuers are true Israelites, Abrahams seed and heyres by promise. See Nunc dimittis.

But shall we now sinne because grace doth abound? God forbid. He hath deliuered vs from the hands of all our enemies, that we might serue him without feare, in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of our life. [t] Sine timore inimici, non sine timore Domini Behauing our selues in this present [u] world religiously towards God, righteously towards our neighbour, soberly towards our selues.

Examine these fiue circumstances exactly:

1. Who did redeeme; The Lord God of Israel, [x] factor terræ, factus in terra, yea fractus in terra.
2. Whom Such as sate in darknesse and in the shadow of death. His [y] enemies, [z] aliants from his Commonwealth, and open traytors to his kingdome.
3. From what: From the hands of all our enemies.
4. With what: With his owne [a] precious blood, the least drop whereof had beene meriti infiniti, yet his death only, was meriti definiti.
5. For what: [b] That being deliuered from sinne, we should liue in righteousnesse.

Consider these points, and thinke not this Hymne too much vsed in our Liturgie: but sing with Zacharias daily, Benedictus Dominus: and say with [c] Dauid, Quid retribuam Domino pro omnibus quæ tribuit mihi? [d] Primò nihil eram, & fecit me: perieram, quæsiuit me: quærens inuenit me, captiuum redemit me, emptum liberauit me, de seruo fratrem fecit me. We owe our soules, our selues to God for creating vs, more than our selues for redeming vs.

Iubilate Deo. PSAL. 100.

THe Church doth adioyne this Pſalme to the Benedictus, as a paralell: and that not vnfitly, for as the one, ſo the other, is a thankſgiuing vnto God, inforced with the ſame reaſons and arguments: in ſo much as Zacharias is nothing elſe but an expounder of Dauid, o. Moſes. As [c] Auguſtine wittily, The new Teſtament lieth hidden in the old, and the old is vnclaſped in the new.

[f] Lex antiqua nouam firmat, veterem noua complet:
In veteri ſpes eſt, in nouitate fides.

O be ioyfull in the Lord, (ſaith the Prophet) Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, (ſaith our Euangeliſt) Why? becauſe the Lord hath made vs, and not we our ſelues, we are his people and the ſheepe of his paſture. That is, he hath viſited and redeemed his people. For [g] Auguſtine, Hierome, Caluin, Turrecrematenſis, other old and new Writers interpret this of our Regeneration, rather than of our Creation. According to that of [h] S. Paul, We are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Ieſus vnto good workes, &c.

The Lord is gratious, his mercy is euerlaſting] That is, he promiſed euermore by the mouth of all his holy Prophets ſince the world began, that we ſhould bee ſaued from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate vs.

His truth endureth from generation to generation] That is, he did in due time performe the mercy promiſed to our forefathers, he remembred his holy couenant, and kept that oath which he ſwore to our father Abraham, and his ſeed for euer.

To what end? That we might ſerue God with gladneſſe, as Dauid in his text: that is, ſerue him all the dayes, of our life without feare, as Zacharias in his gloſſe.

God [i] inſinuated himſelfe to the Iewes, as a Lord, Exod. 20. 2. but to the Chriſtians, as a father, Matth. 6. 9. And therefore ſeeing we are tranſlated from the [k] bondage of ſeruants, vnto the libertie of ſonnes; [l] hauing in ſtead of the Law, which was exceeding [m] grieuous, a burthen which is [n] light, and a yoke which is eaſie, Let vs ſerue the Lord with gladneſſe, and come before his preſence with a ſong: Non in amaritudine murmurationis, ſed in iocunditate dilectionis, as Auguſtine vpon the place.

The whole Pſalme doth afford many profitable doctrines and vſes: in that the Prophet doth double and treble his exhortation: O be ioyfull in the Lord, ſerue him with gladneſſe, with a ſong, Goe into his gates with thanksgiuing, into his courts with praiſe, be thankefull, ſpeake good of his name; he doth inſinuate our ſloth and dulneſſe in that behalfe: and therefore it behoueth all men, eſpecially teachers of men, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon to preſſe this dutie.

It teacheth all people to praiſe God with a good heart cheerefully, verſe 1.

Not in priuate only, but in the publike aſſembly alſo for publike benefits receiued of the Lord, verſe 3.

Our bodily generation, and ghoſtly regeneration, are not of our ſelues, but onely from God, verſe 2. See Epiſt. Dom. poſt Paſc.

The Creed.

THis Apoſtolicall Creed is pronounced after the Leſſons, and the Nicene Confeſſion after the Goſpell and Epiſtle: becauſe faith (as [o] Paul teacheth) is by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. We muſt firſt heare, then confeſſe: for which cauſe the Church, of [p] Scotland alſo doth vſually repeat the Creed after the Sermon.

[o] Rom. 10. 17.

[p] Scot. Liturgie prayers after Sermon.

I beleeue

I beleeue in God, &c.

Albeit the Creed be not protocanonicall Scripture, yet (as [q] Ambroſe ſpeakes) it is the key of the Scriptures: and (as [r] Auguſtine) a plaine, ſhort, abſolute ſumme of all holy faith. [t] Other Confeſſions, as the Nicene and Athanaſian, are receiued of the Church not as new, but rather as expoſitions of this old. [t] For as the foure Goſpels are indeed but one Goſpell; ſo the three Creeds are in ſubſtance but one Creed. And therefore I thought good in my paſſage thorow the whole Seruice-booke to touch vpon it a little, giuing you rather a briefe reſolution, than a full abſolution thereof.

Obſerue then in it the { Title: The Creed of the Apoſtles. / Text: I beleeue in God, &c.

In the title note the { Worke: Creed. / Authors: Apoſtles.

It is called in Engliſh, Creed, of the firſt word Credo; as the Pater Noſter is of the two formoſt words, Our Father: in other languages, Symbolum; the which hath three ſignifications:

1. A ſhot.
2. A badge.
3. A ring.

A [u] ſhot, becauſe euery particular Apoſtle conferred his particular article to this ſpirituall banquet, at leaſt the whole doth ariſe out of their [x] common writings.

2. A [y] badge, for as a ſouldier is knowne in the field by his colours and coat to what Captaine hee doth belong: ſo the Chriſtian is diſtinguiſhed by this Creed from all vnbeleeuers, and misbeleeuers. In token hereof, by good order of the Church, we ſtand vp at the Creed, openly to manifeſt our faith and alleageance to Chriſt Ieſus our Generall.

3. A [z] ring, the [a] mettall whereof is digged out of the rich mines of the Bible, refined with the fire of Gods holy Spirit, and accurately framed by the bleſſed Apoſtles.

It is the very wedding ring wherewith the Miniſter in our Baptiſme maried vs vnto Chriſt, when as in the publike Congregation Chriſt for his part ſolemnly proteſted by the mouth of his Miniſter that he would be our God: and we likewiſe vowed for our part, by Godfathers and Godmothers, that we would be his people. The Creed then ought to be reſpected as the ſignet on our right hand, and as the mariage Ring on our Loues finger.

Now for the Authors, it is ſaid to be the Apoſtles, (as ſome thinke) made by [b] themſelues after they had receiued the Holy Ghoſt, and that before they departed out of Ieruſalem to Preach the Goſpell vnto all Nations: [c] Anno Chriſti 44. Imperatoris Claudij 2. Iuly 15.

[d] Other, that it is the Apoſtles, as being conſonant to their doctrine; theirs for the matter, but not for the manner.

All agree that it is the Goſpels abridgment, which Chriſt taught his Apoſtles, the Apoſtles the Church, and the Church hath deliuered vnto vs in all ages: and therefore though it be not the Scripture of God, yet it is the [e] word and truth of God: of greater authoritie than other Eccleſiaſticall traditions, whether they be Confeſſions of particular Churches, or writings of priuate men.

The {Act / Obiect} of faith.

Act: I beleeue. Where note the {Perſonality, I. / Formality of faith: Beleeue in.

Formality, Beleeue in. For (as [g] Auguſtine and [h] Lombard teach) there is great difference betweene.

- Credere Deo, to beleeue God.

The matter or obiect of the Creed concerneth
- God
  - Eſſentially in
    - Name, God.

    - Holy Ghoſt.
- Church.

Concerning the name, [o] Auguſtine ſaith it is impoſſible that foure letters and two ſyllables, Deus, ſhould containe him, whom the heauen of heauens could not containe, [p] Dei nomen mirabile nomen, ſuper omne nomen ſed ſine nomine.

For [q] if all the land were paper, and all the water inke, euery plant a pen, and euery other creature a ready writer: yet they could not ſet downe the leaſt peece of his great greatneſſe. [*] De Deo cùm dicitur, non poteſt dici. No man can expreſſe his nature fully: yet he doth vouchſafe to be praiſed in our words, and by our mouthes, or rather indeed by his owne words, and owne ſpirit; for he muſt be called and called vpon, as he hath reuealed himſelfe in Scripture, where hee is knowne by the name [r] Iehouah, or God: and therefore this name is not properly communicable to any creature, though [s] analogically giuen to many.

In God] Not Gods, as the Nicene Creed, in one God. For God (as [t] Bernard ſaid) is vniſſimus, the moſt one: [u] ſi non eſt vnus, non eſt, either one or none.

Creator] His almightineſſe doth proue that he is God, and the creation of the world that he is almightie, Ierem.10.11. Let any make a world (ſaith Auguſtine) and he ſhall be God. Angels, men, and deuils can make and vnmake ſome things: but they cannot make them, otherwiſe then of ſome kinde of matter which was before: neither can they vnmake them, but by changing them into ſome other thing which remaineth after. Only God made all things of nothing, and can at his good pleaſure bring them againe to nothing.

This appertaineth essentially, and generally to the whole Trinitie: for the Father is not onely Creator, and Almighty, but the Sonne, and the holy Ghost.

The creation in the masse of the matter, is attributed to God the Father: in the disposition of the forme, to God the Sonne: in the preseruation of both, to God the holy Ghost.

It is said of God personally:
- Father.
- Sonne.
- Holy Ghost.

The Father is the first, not in any priority of nature, or honour, or time, but [h] order: or (as the [i] schoole) Prioritate originis: according to that of Athanasius in his Creed, The Father is of none, the Sonne is of the Father alone, the holy Ghost of both. I will send (saith [k] Christ) from the Father, euen the Spirit of truth. Ego mittam à Patre spiritum, [l] Ostendens quòd pater est totius diuinitatis, vel si melius dicitur, deitatis principium. Adore simply, rather then explore subtilly, this ineffable mystery. *Scrutari temeritas est, credere pietas esse, nosse vita est. He [m] is Father of figure of Christ as a Priest. [r] Augustine, [f] Eusebius, and generally all expositors vpon the 3. of Zachary.

This sweet name containes in it a thousand treasuries of good things, in delight whereof S. Paul vseth it fiue hundred times in his Epistles, as Genebrardus obserueth. Idem Sedulius apologet. S. Francisci lib 1. cap. 13.

2. Christ] His appellatiue [t] title of office and dignitie. Concerning these two titles, Iesus and Christ, see the Gospell Dom. 1. post Natiuit.

3. His only Sonne; which implieth that he is { God, Iohn 1. 1. / A distinct person from the Father, Mat. 28. 19.

God, because he is a Sonne, not as other by fauour, but [u] by nature: whatsoeuer the Sonne receiueth of the Father, he receiueth it by nature, not by grace, and he receiueth not as other, a part, but all that the Father hath, sauing the personall propriety.

Onely Sonne] Called the [x] first begotten, in respect of his mother and humane nature: [y] only begotten in respect of his Father, and diuine nature. For the holy Spirit is not begotten, but proceeds (as the Scripture doth distinguish) [z] Nasci est à potentia intelligente, quia filius cogitatione nascitur, & est Imago patris: at procedere est à voluntate, quia spiritus sanctus est amor, &c. I beleeue: Lord helpe mine vnbeleefe.

The coniunction, And, proueth that the Sonne is equall with the Father, as concerning his Godhead: and yet a distinct person. [a] Alius personaliter, non aliud essentialiter. I beleeue in God the Father, And in Iesus Christ.

Our Lord, as our { Creator. / Redeemer. / Gouernor, as head of the Church, Ephes. 4 5.

[b] Suetonius obserueth that Augustus refused the name of Lord. [c] Orosius notes that it was at that time when Christ was borne, that all Lordship might be giuen vnto him. See Epistle Dom. 17. post Trinit.

Christs incarnation is Israels [d] consolation, for all sound comfort stands in happinesse, all happinesse in fellowship with God, all fellowship with God is by Christ: who for this cause being very God, became very man, that he might reconcile God to man, and man to God: he became [e] little, that we might be great; the Sonne of man, that we might be the [f] sonnes of God.

His incarnation hath two parts: { Conception. / Birth.

Conceiued by the Holy Ghost.] Works of power are attributed to the Father, of wisdome to the Sonne, of loue to the holy Ghost. Wherefore [g] because this was a worke of highest loue in God toward mankinde, it is ascribed especially to the holy Spirit, Luk. 1. 35. The Holy Ghost shall come vpon thee, and the power of the most high shall ouer-shadow thee. [h] Signifying hereby that this mysterie cannot be seene cleerely, therefore not to be examined curiously. [i] S. Augustine calls it a sweet coniunction, where speech is Husband, and eare Wife. Meaning, that assoone as the blessed Virgin assented to the Angels message, she conceiued.

Birth] I make Christs incarnation a part of his humiliation, because there can be no greater abasement, then that he, who thundred in the clouds, should crie in the cradle, [k] swadled in a few raggs, whom the heauen of heauens could not containe; that the eternall Word should become an [l] infant; that he who was the Father of Mary, should be now the Sonne of Mary.

The Scripture tels vs how man comes foure [m] waies into the world.

1. By the helpe of man and woman, as all are vsually borne.
2. Without any man or woman, and so the first man was created.
3. Of a man without a woman, and so was Eua made.
4. Of a woman without a man, and so was Christ borne.

Of the Virgin Mary.] Where the mother of Christ is described by her { Name, Mary. / Surname, [n] Virgin.

After his birth againſt the { Old [d] Heluidians. / New Antidicomarianits, } holding it a point of zeale to diſgrace this holy Virgin: whereas it is our dutie [e] rather highly to reuerence her, as being the Mother of our Lord; a Propheteſſe on earth, a Saint in Heauen, (as the [f] Fathers vſually) the window of Heauen, through which it pleaſed the light of the world to illuminate ſuch as ſit in darkneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death. Of ſuch eſtimation in the Church, that whereas the [g] firſt generall Councell was aſſembled againſt Arrius, to maintaine the honour of the Sonne, and ſo by conſequence of the Father: The [h] ſecond againſt Macedonius, to maintaine the honour of the Holy Ghoſt: The [i] third was aſſembled againſt Neſtorius, to [k] maintaine the dignity of the bleſſed Virgin. And therefore let not vs giue her too little, though the Papiſts haue giuen her too much. See Goſpell on the Annuntiation.

For my owne part, I reſt my ſelfe in the iudgement of the Church wherein I liue, and hold it enough to beleeue that Chriſt did ſo much, and ſuffered ſo much, as was ſufficient for all: efficient for me: praying with the Greeke Fathers in their Liturgie; By thine vnknowne ſorrowes and ſufferings felt by thee: but not diſtinctly manifeſt to vs: haue mercie on vs, and ſaue vs. O t graceleſſe peeuiſhneſſe, we ſcantly follow Chriſt to heauen: albeit we beleeue that he went for vs into hell.

ſhall come from heauen, let vs before ſend thither our hearts to meet him: and in the meane while thence to looke for him, Philip. 3. 20. He hath ſaid it, who is Truth it ſelfe: Surely I come quickly, Amen, euen ſo come Lord Ieſus.

I beleeue in the holy Ghoſt.] The [d] Godhead of the Father is eſpecially manifeſted in the Law: the Godhead of the Sonne eſpeciall manifeſted in the Goſpell; the Godhead of the Holy Ghoſt eſpecially manifeſted in the Creed: intimating ſo much in foure words, as the whole Bible containes of this argument; namely, firſt, that the Holy Ghoſt is [e] God, otherwiſe we might not beleeue in him. Secondly, that he is a [f] diſtinct perſon from the Father, and the Sonne: I beleeue in the Father: in the Sonne: in the Holy Ghoſt. And thirdly, that he proceedeth from the [g] Father, and the Sonne, infolded in the Title, Holy Ghoſt. For albeit the Father is holy, the Sonne holy; the Father a ſpirit, and the Sonne a ſpirit, in reſpect of their nature; yet onely the third perſon is the Holy Spirit, in regard of his office. The holy, becauſe beſide the holineſſe of nature, his ſpeciall office is to make the Church holy. The Father ſanctifieth by the Sonne and by the Holy Ghoſt: the Sonne ſanctifieth from the Father by the Holy Ghoſt: the Holy Ghoſt ſanctifieth from the Father and the Sonne by himſelfe immediatly. As we beleeue that the Father is our Creator, the Sonne our Redeemer: ſo likewiſe that the Holy Ghoſt is our Sanctifier.

Againe, the third perſon is termed the Spirit, not only in regard of his nature, which is ſpirituall; but becauſe he is ſpired, or breathed from the Father and the Sonne: in that he proceeds from them both. How, I cannot ſay, you need not ſearch, onely beleeue. For as the [h] Prophet ſaid of the Sonne, Who ſhall declare his generation? ſo the moſt iudicious Doctor [i] Auguſtine, of the holy Ghoſt, Who ſhall declare his proceſſion? Inter illam generationem, & hanc proceſſionem, diſtinguere neſcio, non valeo, non ſufficio. Quia & illa, & iſta eſt ineffabilis. And therefore as the [k] ſame Father in the like caſe: Dum ſibi hæc dicit humana cogitatio, conetur eam vel noſſe ignorando, vel ignorare noſcendo. See the Goſpell Dom. poſt. Aſcenſion.

The holy Catholike Church.] The ſecond part of the Creed concernes the Church: for as [l] Auguſtine obſerueth, the right order of a Confeſſion did require, that after the Trinitie, ſhould be ioyned the Church, as the houſe for the owner and citie for the founder. [m] Againe, the Creed doth end with the Church as it did begin with God; to put vs in mind that except we haue the Church for our mother, we neuer ſhall haue God for our father.

The Church is deſcribed here by properties, and prerogatiues.

Her properties are three:
1. Holy.
2. Catholike.
3. Knit in a communion.

Her prerogatiues are likewiſe three:
1. In the ſoule, remiſſion of ſinnes.
2. In the body, reſurrection of the fleſh.
3. Both in body and ſoule, life euerlaſting.

The word, Credo, muſt be repeated in this article: but the prepoſition [n] (in) omitted, by which the Creator is diſtinguiſhed from the creatures, and things pertaining to God from things pertaining to men. It is ſaid, I beleeue in God, in the Sonne, in the holy Ghoſt: but in all the reſt, where the ſpeech is not of the Godhead, (in) is not added. I beleeue there is an holy Church, as a company gathered to God, not in the Church as God. So the beſt copies and the [o] worſt too, read.

Church is vſed in a ſenſe
- Ciuill, for an ordinary aſſembly: Acts 19. 32. 39.
- Eccleſiaſticall for

    - Ioyntly, gathered together in
      - One houſe: Rom. 16. 5.
      - One citie or countrie, the Church of Sardi, Epheſus, Apocal. 3.
      - The whole world, as in this article.

All men and Angels elected to life euerlaſting, and made one in Chriſt.

It hath the name both in Greeke and Latine of [p] calling out and ſeuering from other, as being indeed a [q] choſen and peculiar people: [r] κλητοι, quaſi ἐκλεκτοι.

Not Churches, but Church.] Becauſe all the congregations of the faithfull in the whole world make but [ſ] one onely Church. For as a Kingdome diuided into many Shires, and more Townes, is called one, becauſe it hath one and the ſame King, one and the ſame law: ſo the Church is one, [t] becauſe it liueth by one and the ſame Spirit, and is ruled by one and the ſame Lord, and profeſſeth one and the ſame faith: not one as tyed to one place, much leſſe vnto one perſon; as the Papiſts iniuriouſly confine it: for as all of them make the Catholike Church to be nothing elſe but the Romane Church; ſo ſome of them haue made the Romane Church nothing elſe but the Pope. Papa virtualiter eſt tota eccleſia, ſaith [u] Harueus in lib. de poteſtate Papæ cap. 23. As the tumultuous Anabaptiſts had framed a Church like [x] Plinies Acephali, all body and no head: ſo the Romiſh paraſites haue built a Church like the [y] Toadſtoole, all head and no body. See Epiſtle Dom. 17. poſt Trinit.

Holy.] There are many wicked in the Church, and the beſt men haue ſome faults; how then is it holy? [z] Luther anſwereth in a word: If I looke vpon my ſelfe, or my neighbour, I cannot perceiue that the Church is holy: but if I looke vpon Chriſt, who tooke away the ſinnes of the world, then I ſee it all holy. It is ſaid well, I beleeue; for we cannot ſee this holineſſe, ouerſhadowed with manifold infirmities outwardly, though the Kings [a] daughter is all glorious inwardly.

[b] Sanctified by the waſhing of water through the word, that is, made cleane from all ſinne by the precious bloud of Chriſt, which is daily preſented vnto vs both in the Word, and in the Sacraments.

The Church then is holy three wayes: in reſpect

1. Of her [c] head: which is moſt holy; like as one that hath a faire face is ſaid to be a faire man, albeit he haue ſome crooked finger, or goutie toe.
2. Of her faith: which is holy, formaliter & effectiuè: an [d] vndefiled law conuerting the ſoule, in it ſelfe holy: which forbids nothing but that which is euill, and doth not enioyne any thing but that which is good, and making other holy: being the [e] power of God vnto ſaluation.
3. In regard of her life: which is holy, [f] free from ſinne [g] raigning and condemning: euen in this world made holy by ſanctification partially: by imputation of righteouſneſſe perfectly.

This muſt be conſtrued of the Church inuiſible, the triumphant part whereof is moſt holy, the militant more holy then Infidels, Iewes, Turkes, Heretickes, and other out of the Church, who cannot enioy the gift of ſanctification: I ſay more holy, becauſe in this life we receiue (ſaith [h] Paul) but the firſt fruits of the ſpirit; not the tenths of the ſpirit, ſaith [i] Luther: and therefore [k] Chriſtianus non eſt in facto ſed in fieri; not [l] ſo perfect, but that he need to ſtoope vnder mercy.

Now for the Church viſible: that is a field wherein are Tares as well as Wheat, and both muſt grow together vntill the great harueſt, Matth. 13. Compared to the Moone, Reuel. 12. 1. ſometime decreaſing, ſometime increaſing: but when it is in the full, it hath ſome ſpots: and therefore Browniſts and Anabaptiſts obtrude more perfection vpon the Church then God requires.

Heauen hath none but good, Hell none but bad, Earth both good and bad. [m] Cùm ſub ſpecie ſtudij perfectionis, imperfectionem nullam tolerare poſſumus, aut in corpore, aut in membris Eccleſiæ; tunc diabolum nos tumefacere ſuperbia, & hypocriſi ſeducere moneamur.

Catholike.] This word is vſed ſometime for Orthodoxall; in which ſenſe [n] Pacianus ſaid, Chriſtian is my name, Catholike my ſurname. So Rome was, England is, a Catholike Church. But it properly ſignifieth vniuerſall, as here: becauſe [o] extended to all places, and all times, and all persons, not onely those who are now liuing, but also those who haue been from the beginning, and shall be to the end of the world. So that to say, the Roman Catholike Church, is like the by-word of Kent and Chrystendome: all one as to say, the particular, or the speciall generall Church.

From this naturall exception ariseth that other borrowed, as in the Creed of Athanasius: hæc est fides Catholica: that is, [p] quod vbique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est. The Catholike faith is that which is taught [q] all men: Mat. 28.19. Mark. 16. 15. in all places, Rom. 10.18 at all times, 2 Cor. 1.19. And Psal. 119.80. Thy word, O Lord, endureth for euer, and thy truth also from generation to generation.

[r] Fides est vides in ijs quæ non vides, an [s] euidence of things not euident. So that the Church we must beleeue is Catholike; not sensible, subiect to view: but inuisible, an obiect of faith.

Communion of Saints.] The Churches third property, which [t] expoundeth the two former: I beleeue the Catholike Church, [u] to wit, the Communion of Saints, If a Communion, then Catholike; if Saints, then holy.

This communion hath two parts: fellowship
- Of the members with the head, because euery Christian hath interest in all the benefits of Christ, who is not a garden-flower priuate for a few, but [x] the Rose of the field common to all: and therefore S. Iude cals his grace, the Common salvation.
- Of the members one with another: and it is either of the
  - Liuing with the liuing.
  - Dead, with the liuing.

As in the naturall body: so in the Church, Christs mysticall bodie, there is a perpetuall sympathie betweene the parts. [y] if one member suffer, all suffer with it; if one be had in honour, all reioyce with it.

[z] Martin Luther said well and wittily, that a Christian is a freeman, and bound vnto none. And againe, that he is a diligent seruant and vassall vnto all. Verè vir omnium horarum, omnium operum, omnium personarum: becomming all things vnto all men, that he may win them vnto Christ. As that Antichristian in stile, so the Christian is in deed, Seruus seruorum Dei.

There is a knot of fellowship betweene the dead Saints and the liuing. They pray to God for our good in [a] generall: and wee praise God for their good in particular. I say, we praise God in his [b] Saints particularly, for giuing Marie, Peter, Paul, such eminent graces on earth: and now such vnspeakable glory in Heauen. In affection and heart we [c] conuerse with them, alway desiring to be dissolued, and to be with Christ.

Remission of sinnes] All of vs are borne in sinne, prius damnati, quàm nati (saith * Bernard) and after increasing, wee grow from euill to worse, vntill our sinnes are remitted by Gods grace, conueyed vnto vs in the Church by his holy Word and Sacraments: it is a remission, not a satisfaction; a worke not of our merit, but of Gods mercie, who beholding vs in Christ, reputes our sinnes as no sinnes. [d] I haue put away thy transgressions, as a cloud, and thy sinnes as a mist so remitted as if they neuer were committed. Agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi, [e] dimittendo quæ facta sunt, & adiuuando ne fiant, & perducendo ad vitam vbi omnino fieri non possunt.

Sinnes in the plurall, be they neuer so many for quantitie: neuer so grieuous for qualitie. Say not with Cain, [f] My sinne is greater then can bee pardoned; but with [g] Paul, All things worke for the best vnto them who loue God. Remember (saith [h] Luther) the speech of God to Rebecca: Maior seruiet minori: The greater shall serue the lesser. Our spirituall enemies are stronger, and our sinnes are greater then we; yet they shall serue for our good: the greater shall serue the lesser, I beleeue the remission of sins. A very great benefit, because this pardon is our soules life.

Reſurrection of the body.] The whole Creed in groſſe, and euery parcell argueth a reſurrection, as [n] Eraſmus aptly. This one article is the baſis of all the reſt, [o] for if there be a God Almighty, then he is iuſt: and if iuſt, then another reckoning in another world, where good men ſhall be rewarded, and euill condignly puniſhed. If a Ieſus Chriſt who is our Sauiour, then he muſt [p] diſſolue the works of Sathan, which are ſinne and death: if an Holy Ghoſt, then all is hallowed temples, who did glorifie him heere, ſhall bee glorified of him hereafter. If a Church which is holy, then a remiſſion of ſins, a reſurrection of the body, a life euerlaſting, that all ſuch as haue beene ſubiects in his kingdome of grace, may likewiſe be Saints in his kingdome of glorie: [q] for as God is principium effectiuum in creatione, refectiuum in redemptione: ſo, perfectiuum in retributione.

Life euerlaſting.] The chiefe good, and laſt end, which we gaine by being in the Church. All men on earth haue life, but not euerlaſting: the damned in hell endure that which is euerlaſting, yet not a life, but an eternall death, as being perpetually tyed vnto torments, inforced euer to ſuffer that they would not, neither can they doe any thing that they would: only the Church elected by the Father, redeemed by the Sonne, ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall enioy life euerlaſting; not by purchaſe or inheritance, but by [r] donation and franke almaine. The ſpirituall hand which apprehends this deed of gift is faith: and therefore begin well with I beleeue in God, and continue well in being a member of his Holy Catholike Church, and thou ſhalt be ſure to end well with euerlaſting life.

THe Noueliſts haue cenſured this, and other like Suffrages, as [t] ſhort cuts or ſhreddings, rather wiſhes, then prayers. A rude ſpeech, which ſauoureth of the ſhop, more then of the ſchoole: for our Church imitated herein the meeke [u] Publican, O God, be mercifull to me a ſinner: and the good woman of [x] Canaan, Haue mercy on me, O Lord: and deuout [y] Bartimæus, O ſonne of Dauid, take pitie on me. Theſe ſhort ſhreddings and liſts are of more value then their Northerne broad-cloth: the which (as we ſee) ſhrinkes in the wetting: whereas our ancient cuſtome hath continued in the Church aboue 1200 yeeres; for Auguſtine writes, [z] Epiſt.121. that the Chriſtians of Ægypt vſed in their Liturgie many prayers, euery one of them being very ſhort, raptim quodammodo [a] eiaculatas, as if they were darts throwne out with a kinde of ſudden quickneſſe, leſt that vigilant and erect attention of minde, which in deuotion is very requiſite, ſhould bee waſted and dulled through continuance, if their prayers were few, and long. Nam plerumq́, hoc negotium plus gemitibus quàm ſermonibus agitur, plus fletu quàm afflatu, ſaith the ſame Father in the ſame place. Peruſe that learned Epiſtle, for it is a ſufficient Apologie, both for the length of our whole ſeruice, as alſo for the ſhortneſſe of our ſeuerall prayers. If Auguſtine now liued, and were made Vmpire betweene the Noueliſts and vs, he would rather approue many ſhort prayers in England, then thoſe two long prayers, one before, and the other after Sermon, in Scotland and Geneua.

This and the like ſalutations or benedictions in the time of Diuine Seruice, betweene the Prieſt and people, are of great antiquitie, and good vſe. For in the Liturgies of S. Iames, Baſil, Chryſoſtome, and that of the [b] Æthiopians, I finde that the Prieſt was wont to ſay, Pax vobis: and the people replyed, Et cum ſpiritu tuo. In that old Liturgie of Spaine, called [c] Mozarabe, becauſe the Chriſtians were mingled with Arabians, it is inioyned that the Prieſt ſhould ſay, Dominus vobiſcum, as in our booke; and the people, as ours, anſwered, Et cum ſpiritu tuo. Againe, Adiuuate me fratres in orationibus veſtris; and the whole company replyed, Adiuuet te Pater, Filius, Spiritus Sanctus. It is reported by [d] Bellarmine, and [e] Tritenhemius, that one Petrus Damianus hath written an whole booke of this argument, intituled, Dominus vobiſcum: in which (as it ſhould ſeeme) ſundry needleſſe queſtions are diſcuſſed; he liued in the daies of William the Conquerour, therefore thought probable that it was vſed in the Latine Church, euer ſince their Liturgie was compoſed by Damaſus, about the yeere 376. deduced out of the Greeke Churches into the Romane, as [f] Beatus Rhenanus, and Maſter [g] Fox coniecture.

Cum ſpiritu tuo.

THe peoples anſwer, Cum ſpiritu tuo, is taken out of the ſecond [h] Epiſtle of Paul to Timothie: The Lord Ieſus Chriſt be with thy ſpirit. It anſwereth the reapers anſwer to Boaz; The Lord bleſſe thee. Theſe mutuall ſalutation [i] inſinuate ſweet agreement and loue betweene the Paſtor and Pariſhioners: it is the Miniſters office to beginne, and the peoples dutie to correſpond in good affection and kindneſſe: for loue is the adamant of loue. When the Miniſter is a Paul, the people muſt be Galatians, if it were [k] poſſible, willing to pull out their eyes, and to giue them for his good: [l] not only to reuerence his place, but alſo to loue his perſon.

A Paſtor cannot vſe to the people a better wiſh then, The Lord be with you. For [m] if God be with them, who can be againſt them? and the people cannot make a fitter reply, then with thy ſpirit. For (as Plato diuinely ſaid) euery mans ſoule is himſelfe.

Againe, foraſmuch as God is a ſpirit, [n] and ought to be worſhipped in ſpirit; it is meet we ſhould performe this ſpirituall ſeruice with all earneſt contention and intention of ſpirit. See Magnificat.

Chriſt promiſed, *Matth.*18. to be with vs in our deuotion, in the middeſt of vs, when we meet to pray. But as [o] Euſebius Emiſſenus obſerueth, how ſhall God be in the middeſt of thee, when as thou art not in the middeſt of thy ſelfe? Quomodo erit Deus in medio tui, ſi tecum ipſe non fueris? If the Aduocate ſleepe, how ſhall the Iudge awake? No maruell if thou loſe thy ſuit, when as in praying thou loſeſt thy ſelfe.

Prayer is the Chriſtians gun-ſhot (ſaith [p] Luther) Oratio, bombarda Chriſtianorum. As then a bullet out of a gunne: ſo prayers out of our mouth, can goe no further then the ſpirit doth carrie them: if they be [q] Timidæ, they cannot flee farre: if Tumidæ, not pierce much: onely feruent and humble deuotion hitteth the marke, penetrating the walls of heauen, albeit they were braſſe, and the gates iron.

The Church hath placed theſe mutuall reſponſories at the very beginning of our prayers, after the Leſſons and Confeſſion of faith: becauſe [r] Chriſt ſaid, Without me ye can doe nothing. Wherefore the Church, as I haue ſhewed, begins her prayers at the firſt, with, O Lord open thou our lips: and here praying a freſh, The Lord be with you; begins, I ſay, with, the Lord be with you. and ends with, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. Signifying hereby that Chriſt is [s] Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt, without whom we can neither beginne well, nor end well. And this is the reason why the Church after this interchangeable salutation enioynes vs to pray, Lord haue mercy vpon vs: Christ haue mercy vpon vs: Lord, &c. vsing an earnest repetition (as I coniecture) rather to presse this one point, then (as [t] other write) to notifie three diuine persons.

[t] Belethus lib. de Diuinis offic. cap 36.

And it is worth obseruing, that we conclude these short Suffrages as we began: for as in the first we desire the Lord to be with vs and our spirit; so likewise in the last, that he would not take his holy spirit from vs, but accompany the whole Church vnto the end, and in the end.

Blessed spirits in praising God answer one another interchangeably: though vnhappy scornfull spirits vnmannerly terme this custome, [d] Tossing of seruice. But it may be said of them, as [e] Hierome wrote of Heluidius, Existimant loquacitatem esse facundiam, & maledicere omnibus bonæ conscientiæ signum arbitrantur.

The Magnificat.

Luke 1. 46. My soule doth magnifie the Lord.

THis Hymne is nothing else, but a grace, for grace: great thankes, for great things receiued of the Lord. Wherein obserue the * manner and matter of the Virgins exultation: or a thanksgiuing in the two former verses: and a reason in the rest, For he hath regarded, &c.

* Modus & causa. Gorran. in locum.

I purpose to sift euery word of the former part seuerally: and because there is (as * Luther saith) great Diuinitie in pronounes, I will first examine the pronoune My: my soule, my spirit, my Sauiour. It is not enough that other pray for vs, except our selues praise God for our selues. He that goeth to Church by an attorney, shall goe to Heauen also by a proxie.

* Com. in 1. Galat. verse 4. My.

There is an old legend [f] of a Merchant, who neuer would go to masse: but euer when he heard the Saints bell, he said to his wife, Pray thou for thee and mee. Vpon a time he dreamed that he and his wife were dead, and that they knocked at heauen gate for entrance: S. Peter the porter (for so goeth the tale) suffered his wife to enter in, but thrust him out, saying, Illa intrauit pro se & te: as thy wife went to Church for thee, so likewise she must goe to heauen for thee. The morall is good, howsoeuer the story be bad: insinuating that euery one must haue both a personality of faith, my Sauiour: and a personality of deuotion, my soule, my spirit. [g] Officium is efficium, it is not enough that the Master enioyne his family to pray, or the Father heare his childe pray, or the Teacher exhort his people to pray: but as euery one hath tasted of Gods bounty, so euery one must performe this dutie, hauing oyle of his [h] owne in his owne lampe, saying, and praying with the blessed Virgin, My soule, my spirit.

Soule]

Soule] As if ſhe ſhould thus ſpeake, Thy benefits O Lord are ſo good, ſo great, ſo manifeſt, ſo manifold, [i] that I cannot accord them with my tongue, but onely record them in my heart. It is truly ſaid, he loues but little who tels how much he loues: and ſo ſurely he praiſeth God but little, who makes it a tongue-toile and a lip-labour only, Mark 7 6. This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. God who gaue all, will haue all, and yet aboue all requireth the ſoule. [k] Sonne giue me thy heart: for that alone commands all other members, as the [l] Centurion did his ſouldiers. It ſaith to the foot, goe, and it goeth; vnto the hand, come, and it commeth; vnto the reſt, doe this, and they doe it. It doth bend the knees, and ioyne the hands; and lift vp the eye, compoſeth the countenance, diſpoſeth of the whole man: and therefore as that other [m] Mary choſe the better part, ſo this Mary beſtowed vpon God her beſt part, her ſoule did magnifie, her ſpirit reioyced.

Some Diuines expound theſe words ioyntly, ſome ſeuerally. The word ſpirit is vſed in the holy Scripture ſometime for the whole ſoule, 1 Cor. 7. 34. The woman vnmaried careth for the things of the Lord, that ſhe may be holy both in body and in ſpirit, that is [n] in ſoule.

So Saint Auguſtine in his expoſition of this hymne, thinkes that theſe two words here ſignifieth the ſame, becauſe the latter phraſe my ſpirit reioyceth in God my Sauiour, is nothing elſe but an Exegeſis of the former, my ſoule doth magnifie the Lord: inſinuating by this repetition, my ſoule, my ſpirit, that her deuotion was not hypocriticall, but cordiall and vnfained. It is obſerued in nature, that the Fox doth nip the necke, the Maſtiue the throat, the Ferret the liuer, but God eſpecially careth for the heart: being (as Ambroſe ſpeaks excellently) Non corticis, ſed cordis Deus.

And therefore Mary was not content to praiſe the Lord from the rine of her lips onely, but alſo from the root of her heart. So [o] Dauid did pray, Praiſe the Lord O my ſoule, and all that is within me praiſe his holy name. So [p] Paul would haue vs pray: Sing to the Lord with a grace in your hearts. And ſo the Church doth deſire that the Prieſt (who is the mouth of the people) ſhould pray, The Lord be with you, ſaith the Miniſter, and the whole Congregation anſwereth, And with thy ſpirit. [q] Hereby ſignifying, that this holy buſineſſe ought to be performed with all attention and intention of ſpirit.

Diuines interpreting theſe two ſeuerally, diſtinguiſh betweene ſoule and ſpirit: and ſo doth the Scripture, 1 Cor. 15. 45. The firſt man Adam was made a liuing ſoule, the laſt Adam a quickening ſpirit. Soule is that by which we liue naturally: ſpirit is that, by which we liue through grace ſupernaturally. Or ([r] as other) ſoule ſignifieth the will, and ſpirit the vnderſtanding: as Heb. 4. 12. The Word of God is liuely and mighty in operation, and ſharper then any two edged ſword, and entreth thorow, euen vnto the diuiding aſunder of the ſoule and ſpirit: that is, [s] of the will and vnderſtanding.

So that Mary ſaying here, my ſoule and my ſpirit, doth intimate that ſhe did praiſe the Lord with attention in her vnderſtanding, and deuotion in her affection. They praiſe God, with halfe an heart, who either hauing deuotion, want vnderſtanding: or elſe endued with vnderſtanding, want deuotion: and ſo while men pray with the ſoule without a ſpirit, or with the ſpirit, without a ſoule, their heart is diuided (as the Prophet [t] Oſe: Diuiſum eſt cor eorum:) and God hath but one part, happily the leaſt peece.

The line then to bee drawne from this example, is, firſt, that wee pray with our heart: ſecondly, with our whole heart, with all our ſoule, with all our ſpirit.

Doth] In the preſent. For as a gift to man, ſo glory to God, is moſt acceptable when it is ſeaſonable: not deferred, but conferred in time. [u] Gratia quæ tarda eſt, ingrata eſt gratia. [x] Proprium eſt libenter facientis, cito facere.

Magnifie] The word ſignifieth highly to commend, and extoll: Magnum facere, to make great. Now God is optimus maximus, already moſt great, and therefore therefore cannot be made more great in regard of himselfe: but all our vilifying and magnifying the Lord, is in respect of others onely.

When we blaspheme the most holy name of God, as much as in vs lieth, we lessen his greatnesse: when we blesse his name, so much as in vs is, we magnifie his glory, making that which is great in it selfe, to be reputed great of other. As [y] one fitly, Magnificare nihil aliud est nisi magnum significare.

This magnifying consists in our conuersation especially. Noli (saith [z] Augustine) gloriari quia lingua benedicis, si vita maledicis. [a] Haue your conuersation honest among the Gentiles, that they which speake euill of you, may by your good workes, which they shall see, glorifie God in the day of the visitation.

God is magnified of vs (as [b] Ambrose and Origen note) when as his Image is repaired in vs. [c] He created man according to his likenesse: that is, as [c] Paul doth interpret it, in righteousnesse and holinesse. So that the more grace we, the more glory God: he doth appeare greater in vs, albeit he cannot be made greater by vs. He doth not encrease, but we grow from grace to grace, from vertue to vertue: the which ought principally to stirre vs vp vnto this duty, for that our selues are magnified, in magnifying him: as Mary sheweth here, My soule doth magnifie the Lord, vers. 46. And The Lord hath magnified me, verse 49. [f] Qui maledicit Domino, ipse minuitur; qui benedicit, augetur: prior est in nobis benedictio Domini, & consequens est, & vt nos benedicamus Domino: illa pluuia, iste fructus.

The Lord] Lord is a name [g] of might, Sauiour, of mercy. Mary then (as Augustine and [h] other obserue) praiseth him alone, who is able to helpe, because the Lord; and willing, because a Sauiour.

And my spirit] [i] Such as distinguish betweene soule and spirit, make this a reason of the former verse: My spirit hath reioyced in God my Sauiour, and therefore my soule doth magnifie the Lord: according to that of [k] S. Iames; Is any merry? let him sing. So that this exultation of Mary, caused her exaltation of God.

Inward reioycing in spirit, is a great signe of a good conscience, [l] which is a continuall feast. The wicked are often merrie, sometime mad-merry: but all is but from the teeth outward. For (as [m] Salomon speaks) euen in laughing the heart is sorrowfull, and the end of mirth is heauinesse. But the good man (as the Virgin here) reioyceth in spirit: all worldly meriments are more talked of then felt, but inward spirituall reioycing is more felt then vttered.

It is (as the [n] Scripture cals it) a Iubilation, an exceeding great ioy, which a man can neither suppresse, nor expresse sufficiently. [o] Nec reticere, nec recitare: for how soeuer in the Court of Conscience there be some pleading euery day; yet The godly make it Hilary Terme all the yeere. See Gospell Dom. 1. Aduent. & Dom. 9 post. Trinit.

In God] Happily the spirit of the most wicked at sometime doth reioyce, yet not in God, nor in good, but in villany, and vanitie. Prou. 2. 14. They reioyce in doing euill, and delight in frowardnes: whereas in the good man the ioyes obiect is alwaies good, goodnesse it selfe, God himselfe. Dauid delights in the Lord. Mary reioyceth in God. And this is so good a ioy, that [p] Paul saith, Reioyce in the Lord alwaies, and againe, I say reioyce. We may reioyce in our friends, in our health, in our preferment, in our honest recreation, in many other things, prater Deum, beside God: yet in all, propter Deum, for God, so farre forth as they shall encrease our spirituall reioycing in the Lord. God forbid (saith [q] Paul) that I should reioyce in any thing but in the crosse of Christ. In any thing in comparison of this, in any thing which might hinder this, and yet in all things for this. See the Epistle Dom. 4. Aduent.

Sauiour] To consider God as a seuere Iudge, would make our heart to tremble: but to consider him in Christ, in whom he is well pleased, is of all ghostly comfort the greatest. And therefore if we desire to reioyce in spirit, let vs not behold God in the glasse of the Law, which makes him a dreadfull Iudge: but in the glasse of the Gospell, which shewes him a mercifull Sauiour.

Sauiour.

In

In euery Christian there are two contrary natures, the flesh, and the spirit: and that he may be a perfect man in Christ, he must subdue the one, & strengthen the other: the Law is the ministrie of death, and serueth fitly for the taming of our rebellious flesh: the Gospell is the power of God vnto life, containing the bountifull promises of God in Christ, and serueth fitly for the strengthening of the spirit. It is [p] oyle to powre in our wounds, and water of life to quench our thirstie soules. As in name, so in nature, the Goodspell, or the Ghostspell, that is, the word and ioy for the spirit. Mary then had good cause to [q] adde this epithete Sauiour, vnto God: My spirit reioyceth in God my Sauiour.

My Sauiour] We note two conclusions out of this pronoune: the first against some Papists; the second against all Papists. [r] Some popish writers affirme, that Mary was conceiued and borne without originall sinne, and that she liued and died without actuall sinne: contrary to the Scripture, Rom. 3.9. Gal. 3.22. So [s] that in honouring the feast of her conception and natiuity, with the singular priuiledge of Christ, they worship an Idoll, and not her. For an Idoll (as [t] Paul disputes) is nothing in the world: and so is that man or woman conceiued without sinne, except Christ, who was conceiued by the holy Ghost; as none other euer was, or shall be.

[u] They ground this assertion vpon a place of Augustine: [x] Excepta sancta virgine Maria, de qua propter honorem Domini, nullam prorsus cum de peccatis agitur, habere volo quæstionem. Answer is made, that Augustine elsewhere concludes all vnder sinne (though he did in that place forbeare to rip vp the faults of the mother in honour of her sonne) for in lib. 5. [y] cap. 9. against Iulian the Pelagian, he doth intimate that Maries body was sinfull flesh, concluding peremptorily, [z] Nullus est hominum præter Christum, qui peccatum non habuerit grandioris ætatis accessu: quiâ nullus est hominum præter Christum, qui peccatũ non habuerit infantilis ætatis exortu. So likewise, [a] lib. de sancta virginitate, cap. 3. Beatior Maria percipiendo fidem Christi, quàm concipiendo carnẽ Christi: nihil enim ei materna propinquitas profuisset, nisi fœliciùs Christum corde, quàm carne gestasset. And in this [b] Treatise, De fide ad Petrum, (for the Papists admit that booke) Firmissimè crede, & nullatenus dubites, omnem hominem qui per concubitum viri & mulieris concipitur, cum peccato originali nasci, & ob hoc naturæ filium iræ. Thus Augustine expounds, and answers Augustine.

Now for holy Scriptures, if there were no more texts in the Bible, this one is omni sufficient, to accuse Mary of some faults, and the Papists of much folly: My spirit reioyceth in God my Sauiour. He that hath no sinne, wants not a Sauiour: but Mary reioyced in a Sauiour, therefore shee was sorrie for her sinne. The whole need not a Physitian, saith [c] Christ: but Mary cals for a salue, therefore surely shee had some sore: and if any sinne, then she cannot be our Mediatrix, or Aduocate. Si peccatrix, non deprecatrix. [d] Our Aduocate is our propitiation for sin: [e] but the propitiation for sin, knew no sin. Ergo, quæ egebat, non agebat aduocatum. And therefore Mary, who needed a Sauiour her selfe, could not be a Sauiour of other.

Againe, we gather out of this pronoune my, Maries particular apprehension and application of Christs merits, against all Papists, who [f] teach that a generall confused implicite faith, is enough without any further examination of Scriptures, or distinct beleefe. Contrarie to the practise of Christ, who prayed in our nature and name.

[g] Deus meus, Deus meus. Of [h] Dauid, Thou art my God: of Thomas, [i] My Lord: of Mary, My Sauiour.

The second part of this Hymne containeth a reason why she did magnifie the Lord, namely for his goodnesse, Toward { Her selfe. He hath regarded the lowlinesse of his handmaid; he hath magnified me. From henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. / Other.

Regarded.

Regarded] God is ſaid in Scripture to regard three waies, (as Auguſtine notes vpon this place) ſecundum { Cognitionem, Gratiam, Iudicium.

1. His eye of knowledge regardeth all things, Hebrewes 4. 13. There is not any creature, which is not manifeſt in his ſight, but all things are naked and open vnto him.

k Pſal. 33. 18. 2. His fauourable countenance and gratious eye is vpon them k who feare him, and vpon them who truſt in his mercie.

l Matth 25. 12 3. God in iudgement will onely regard his elect. For hee will ſay to the reprobate, l Verily I know yee not. God regarded here Mary with his gratious eye, vouchſafing to make her both his childe, and his mother. The one is a benefit obtained of very m few; the other denied vnto all. It was onely granted to Mary to be the mother of Chriſt, n whereas it was denied vnto all men, to be the father of Chriſt.

m Matth 7. 14.
n Hugo Lincolnienſis, vti Surius in eius vita.

This was ſo great a grace to Mary, that as in this Hymne her ſelfe doth prophecie: From henceforth all generations ſhall account her bleſſed.

o Luke 1. 28. An Angell of heauen ſaid that ſhe was o full of grace: Gratia plena in ſe, non à ſe; in her ſelfe, but not of her ſelfe. And therefore her ſoule did magnifie the Lord, and her ſpirit reioyced in God her Sauiour; not in regard of her owne greatneſſe, but in reſpect of his goodneſſe. For ſo ſhe ſaith, He hath regarded.

Lowlineſſe.
p Marlor. in loc.

The lowlineſſe] p God cannot looke aboue himſelfe, becauſe he hath no ſuperiour; nor about himſelfe, for that he hath no equall: he regards onely ſuch as are below him; and therefore the lower a man is, the neerer vnto God, the more expoſed to his ſight who lookes from aboue. q Who is like vnto the Lord our God that hath his dwelling ſo high, and yet humbleth himſelfe to behold the things in heauen and earth? He taketh vp the ſimple out of the duſt, and liſteth the poore out of the mire. And Pſal. 138. verſe 6. Though the Lord be high, yet hath he reſpect vnto the lowly: but as for the proud, he beholdeth them a farre off. The moſt high then hath eſpeciall reſpect to ſuch as are moſt low.

q Pſal. 113. 5. 6

Now lowlineſſe in holy Scripture is vſed both { Actiuely, for humility. Paſſiuely, for humiliation, baſeneſſe, and affliction.

r Maldonat. in locum.
t Hom 27.

Origen, Beda, Bernard, conſtrue this of Maries humility: but I thinke with moſt, and beſt, that ſhe meant by lowlineſſe, her baſe degree: r For Humilitas dum proditur perditur. He that brags of his humility, looſeth it. It is (ſaith s Hierome) the Chriſtians Iewell. Now, ſaith t Macarius, he is a fooliſh begger who when he finds a Iewell, inſtantly proclaimes it, inueni, inueni: for by this meanes he that hath loſt it, will demand it againe: ſo likewiſe when wee boaſt of any good gift, the Lord who lent, will reſume it.

u Ianſenius, Beauxamis, Maldonat. in locum.

It is improbable then that Mary ſpake this of her humility: for (as ſome u Popiſh writers obſerue) ſhe did in this ſong aſcribe all her happineſſe to Gods mercy, and nothing to her owne merit.

It is true, that as death is the laſt x enemie: ſo pride the laſt ſinne that ſhall be deſtroyed in vs. y Inter omnia vitia tu ſemper es prima, ſemper es vltima: nam omne peccatum te accedente committitur: & te recidente dimittitur. z Auguſtine told Dioſcorus, Vitia cætera in peccatis, ſuperbia verò etiam in beneſactis timenda. When other ſinnes die, ſecret pride gets ſtrength in vs: ex a remedijs generat morbos, euen vertue is the matter of this vice: in ſuch ſort, that a man will be proud, becauſe he is not proud. But this was not Maries mind to boaſt, in that ſhe did not boaſt: but, as the word and coherence more then inſinuate, ſhe did vnderſtand by lowlineſſe, her meane eſtate and qualitie.

b Iuuencus, lib. 1. Euang hiſt.

b Quod me dignatus in altum, erigere ex humili, celſum.

So doth her ſelfe conſtrue the word, verſe 52. He hath put downe the mighty from from their ſeat, and hath exalted the humble and meeke: where humble is oppoſite to mightie, as in this verſe, the lowlineſſe of Marie to Gods highneſſe. I preſſe this point, becauſe ſome Papiſts (as [c] Eraſmus affirmes) haue gathered out of this place, that Marie through her modeſt cariage, worthily deſerued to be the mother of Chriſt. Whereas (beſides the reaſons alleaged) the words of this verſe, and the drift of the whole Song, confute them abundantly.

For ταπείνωσις, vſed by Luke, ſignifieth properly baſneſſe: whereas humilitie is called ταπεινοφροσύνη: and albeit the vulgar Latine read, reſpexit humilitatem, yet ἐπέβλεψεν, is aſpexit, as in our Engliſh Bibles, he looked on the poore degree of his handmaid. And this is not onely the criticall Annotation of Eraſmus, but their owne Ianſenius, and Maldonatus obſerue the ſame: for her intent was not to magnifie her ſelfe, but to magnifie the Lord.

Here then we may behold Maries exceeding great miſerie, and Gods exceeding great mercy; the good Ladies infelicitie, who deſcended of a noble houſe, yea royall blood, was notwithſtanding a diſtreſſed ſillie maiden, ſo poore, that, as we reade, Luke 2.24. ſhe was not able to buy a young Lambe for an offering. See the Goſpell on the Purification.

Let [d] not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdome, nor the ſtrong man glory in his ſtrength, neither the rich man glory in his riches, nor the Nobleman of his parentage, for one generation paſſeth, and another commeth: and [e] as we haue heard, ſo haue we ſeene, ſome who came from the Scepter, to hold the plough; and other who came from the plough, to manage the Scepter. And the reaſon is rendred in this Hymne; The Lord hath put downe the mightie from their ſeat, and exalted the humble and meeke: he hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich hee hath ſent empty away. This was his exceeding great goodneſſe toward Marie, to raiſe her out of the duſt, ſo to magnifie her, as that all generations account her bleſſed.

[e] 1 Sam.2.7.

For from henceforth all generations ſhall call me bleſſed] In the verſe before Magnificat, Elizabeth called her bleſſed: now the Virgin oppoſeth all men to Elizabeth, and all times to the preſent, ſaying, (as [f] Theophylact doth note) that not Elizabeth onely, but all men, and women, as at this time, ſo for euer alſo ſhall account me bleſſed. All generations, that is, all men in all generations, (as the Schoole doth vſually diſtinguiſh) genera ſingulorum, albeit not ſinguli generum, (or as [g] Euthymius) all people who beleeue aright in the Sonne, ſhall bleſſe the mother; not all liuing, but all beleeuing: for Iewes, and Gentiles, and Heretikes, in ſtead of this honour, reuile her. [h] Auguſtine mentioneth Antidicomarianites, Heluidius in Hieromes age was (as [i] Roſſenſis termes him) a Mariamaſtix; and in our time ſome are content to giue her leſſe, becauſe the Papiſts haue giuen her more than is due. Let vs not make the Spirit of truth a lier, which ſaith, All generations ſhall call her bleſſed. [o] Geneſ. 3. 15.

Theſe points are [a] flagons of wine to comfort the diſtreſſed ſoule. For if God, who promiſed in the beginning that the [o] ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the Serpents head, deferred his promiſe almoſt 4000 yeares, and yet at length accompliſhed the ſame to the very full: then no doubt, God hauing promiſed the reſurrection of the dead, and euerlaſting life, will in his good time bring them to paſſe. That which is paſt, may confirme our hope touching things to come: For he remembreth his mercy towards his ſeruant Iſrael, and it is on them that feare him throughout all generations.

THe Church hath done well in ioyning to the Magnificat, Pſalme 98. for the one is a perfect eccho to the other, (all [p] Interpreters agreeing, that Danids myſterie, and Maries hiſtorie, are all one) What ſoeuer is obſcurely foretold in his Pſalme, is plainly told in her Song: as he prophecied, O ſing vnto the Lord a new ſong, ſhew your ſelues ioyfull: So ſhe practiſed, My ſoule doth magnifie the Lord, and my ſpirit reioyceth in God my Sauiour. And this ([q] as Chriſt teacheth) is a new ſong: The houre commeth, and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and truth. The voice doth ſay, Magna fecit, He hath done maruellous things: and the Eccho, Magna mihi fecit, He hath magnified, or done maruellous things in me For it is an exceeding wonder, (as [r] Paul ſpeaks) a great myſterie, that God ſhould be manifeſted in the fleſh, that the father of all, ſhould be the ſonne of Marie. Voice: With his owne right hand, and with his holy arme hath he gotten himſelfe the victorie. Eccho: He hath ſhewed ſtrength with his arme, he hath ſcattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. Voice: The Lord declared his ſaluation, his righteouſneſſe hath he openly ſhewed in the ſight of the Heathen. Eccho: His mercy is on them that feare him, throughout all generations: hee hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath ſent empty away. Gentiles eſurientes, Iudæos diuites, as Theophylact expounds it. Voice: He hath remembred his mercy and truth towards the houſe of Iſrael. Eccho: Hee remembring his mercy, hath holpen his ſeruant Iſrael.

In the whole Pſalme fiue circumſtances are to bee conſidered eſpecially:
- Who.
- What.
- Whereto.
- Wherefore.
- Wherewith.

1. Who muſt ſing: All men, all things. For the Prophet in the latter end of the Pſalme doth incite ſenſible men, by directing his ſpeech vnto inſenſible creatures:

creatures: Let the ſea make a noyſe, let the flouds clap their hands, and let the hills be ioyfull. All which ſing Pſalmes and Hymnes in their kinde, onely man, for whom all theſe were made, is vnkinde. [f] The oxe knoweth his owner, and the dull aſſe his maſters crib: but Iſrael hath not knowne, my people hath not vnderſtood.

[f] Eſay 1.3.

2. What: Sing a new ſong. This is mans end, to ſeeke God in this life, to ſee God in the next: to be a ſubiect in the kingdome of grace, and Saint in the kingdome of glory. Whatſoeuer in this world befalleth vs, we muſt ſing: be thankfull for weale, for woe; ſongs ought alwayes to be in our mouth, and ſometimes a new ſong: for ſo Dauid here, ſing a new ſong: that is, [t] let vs put off the old man, and become new men, [u] new creatures in Chriſt: for the old man ſings old ſongs: only the new man ſings a new ſong; he ſpeaketh with a [x] new tongue, and walks in [y] new wayes, and therefore doth new things, and ſings new ſongs; his language is not of Babylon, or Ægypt, but of Canaan; his communication doth edifie men, his ſong glorifie God.

[x] Mark.16.17.
[y] Matth.2.12.

Or a new ſong, that is, a freſh ſong, [z] noua res, nouum canticum; new for a new benefit. Epheſ. 5.20. Giue thanks alway for all things. It is very groſſe to thanke God only in groſſe, and not in parcell. Haſt thou beene ſicke and now made whole? praiſe God with the Leper, Luke 17. ſing a new ſong, for this new ſalue.

[z] Hieron. in loc.

Doeſt thou hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſſe, whereas heretofore thou couldeſt not endure the words of exhortation and doctrine? ſing a new ſong for this new grace. Doth Almightie God giue thee a true ſenſe of thy ſinne, whereas heretofore thou diddeſt draw iniquitie with cords of vanitie, and ſinne as it were with cart-ropes, and waſt giuen ouer to worke all vncleanneſſe, euen with greedineſſe? O ſing, ſing, ſing a new ſong for this new mercy.

Or new, that is, [a] no common or ordinarie ſong, but as Gods mercy toward vs is exceeding maruellous and extraordinarie, ſo our thankes ought to bee moſt exquiſite, and more than ordinarie; not new in regard of the matter, for we may not pray to God, or praiſe God, otherwiſe than hee hath preſcribed in his word, which is the old way, but new in reſpect of the manner and making, that as occaſion is offered, we may beare our wits after the beſt faſhion to bee thankfull.

Or, becauſe this Pſalme is propheticall, a new ſong, that is, [b] the ſong of the glorious Angels at Chriſts birth, [c] Glory to God on high; peace in earth, towards men good will, a ſong which the world neuer heard before; that the ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the Serpents head is an old ſong, the firſt that euer was ſung: but this was no plaine ſong, till Chriſt did manifeſt himſelfe in the fleſh. In the Old Teſtament there were many old ſongs, but in the New Teſtament a new ſong.

[c] Luke 2.14.

That vnto vs is borne a Sauiour, which is Chriſt the Lord, in many reſpects a new ſong: for whereas Chriſt was but ſhadowed in the Law, he is ſhewed in the Goſpell; and new, becauſe ſung of new men, of all men. [d] For the ſound of the Goſpell is gone through all the earth, vnto the ends of the world: whereas in old time Gods old ſongs were ſung in Iurie, his name great in Iſrael, at Salem his Tabernacle, and dwelling in Sion, Pſal 76.

[d] Rom.10.18.

3. Whereto] To the Lord. See before Pſalme 95.

4. Wherefore] For he hath done maruellous things: hee hath opened his greatneſſe and goodneſſe to the whole world, in his creation, and preſeruation, in his redemption eſpecially, being a worke of greater might and mercy than all the reſt: for in the creation he made man like himſelfe; but in the redemption he made himſelfe like man. [e] Illic participes nos fecit bonorum ſuorum: hic particeps eſt factus malorum noſtrorum. In making the world, he ſpake the word only and it was done: but to redeeme the world, dixit multa, & fecit mira, ſaith the Text: Paſſus eſt dura verba, duriora verbera. The creation of the world was a worke as it were of his fingers: Pſalm.8.3. When I conſider the heauen, euen the the worke of thy fingers. But the redemption (as it is here called) is the worke of his arme: With his owne right hand, and with his holy arme hath he gotten himselfe the victorie.

So that if the Iewes obserued a Sabbath in honour of the worlds creation; how many Festiuals ought we to keepe in thankfull remembrance of our redemption? As Diogenes said, euery day was an holy day to a good man, so euery day should be a Sunday to the Christian man.

Aquinas excellently, 'Bonum gratiæ vnius, maius est quàm bonum naturæ totius vniuersi: The sauing of one soule is a greater worke, than the making of a whole world: 12æ. quæst. 113. art. 9.

In an allegoricall exposition (as [g] Euthymius interprets it) we must praise God in our actions, and praise him in our contemplation: praise him in our words, praise him in our workes: praise him in our life, praise him at our death: being not only Temples (as [h] Paul) but (as [i] Clemens Alexandrinus calls vs) Timbrels also of the Holy Ghost.

Ad vada Mæandri concinit albus olor.

As the Swan, so Simeon in his old age, ready to leaue the world, did sing more sweetly than euer he did before, Lord now lettest, &c.

The which Hymne is a thanksgiuing to God, for giuing his Sonne to redeeme his seruants.

And it hath two principall parts: in the { 1. Hee reioyceth in regard of his owne particular, vers. 29, 30. / 2. In regard of the generall good our Sauiour Christ brought to the whole world, vers. 31, 32.

In the first note two things especially: { 1. His willingnesse to die, Lord now lettest thou thy seruant depart in peace. / 2. The reason of this willingnesse, For mine eyes haue seene thy saluation.

Lord.

Lord] The Papists often in their life, specially at their death, vse to commend themselues and their soules vnto the protection of the blessed Virgin: Maria mater gratiæ, tu nos ab hoste protege, & hora mortis suscipe. This is their doctrine, [l] Bellarmine auoweth it: this is their practise, Father Garnet at his execution vsed this forme of prayer twice publiquely. But old Simeon here forgetting our Ladie, though shee were present, commends his soule to the Lord, who redeemed it, Lord now lettest thou, &c.

[l] Lib. de beatitudine Sanctorum, cap 17.

Now.

[m] Luke 2. 26.

[n] Calvin. in loc.

Now] Simeon assuredly was not afraid to die before, but because a [m] reuelation was giuen vnto him from the Holy Ghost that he should not see death, vntill he saw the Messias, he was exceeding desirous to liue, that he might see the word of the Lord fulfilled. [n] And therefore men abuse this example, saying they will be contented to die, when such and such things come to passe, when all their daughters be well maried, and all their sons well placed. Old Simeon had a reuelation for that hee did, whereas we haue no warrant from God, for many things we fondly fondly desire; so that whether God grant them, or not, we must submit our selues vnto his good pleasure, Now and euer ready to depart in peace, when hee doth call, taking vnto vs the resolution of Iob, The Lord gaue, and the Lord taketh, blessed be the name of the Lord.

Lettest thou] We may not our selues loose our soules, but let God let them out of prison. We must seeke to mortifie the flesh, and to cast the world out of vs: Lettest thou.

But to cast our selues out of the world, is an ° offence against { God. / Our neighbour. / Our selues. } ° Thomas 2 2æ. quæst. 64. art 5.

Against God: who saith, Thou shalt not kill: if not another, much lesse thy selfe. ᵖ For thou must loue thy neighbour as thy selfe: first thy selfe, then thy neighbour as thy selfe. The neerer, the deerer. ᵠ I kill, and giue life, saith the Lord: we are not masters of our life, but only stewards: and therefore may not spend it, or end it as we please: but as God, who bestowed it, will.

ᵖ Luke 10.27.
ᵠ Deut. 32.39.

Against our neighbours: because men are not borne for themselues alone, but for other also: being all members of one common-weale and politike bodie: so that (as ʳ Paul saith) If one member suffer, all suffer with it. ˢ Homo quilibet est pars communitatis: Euery particular person is part of the whole State. This is the true reason, why the King doth take so precise an account of the death euen of his basest subiect, because himselfe and the whole kingdome had interest in him.

ʳ 1 Cor. 12.26.
ˢ Arist. Ethic. lib. 5. cap vlt.

Against our selues. Because by naturall instinct euery creature labours to preserue it selfe; the fire striueth with the water, the water fighteth with the fire, the most sillie worme doth contend with the most strong man to preserue it selfe: and therefore we may not butcher our selues, but expect Gods leasure and pleasure to let vs depart in peace.

Thy seruant] It is not a seruile seruice, but a perfect freedome to serue the Lord. And therefore as the good Emperor Theodosius held it more noble to bee membrum Ecclesiæ, quàm caput Impery: so may we resolue that it is better to be a seruant of God, than Lord of all the world. For while we serue him, all other creatures on earth and in heauen too serue vs, Heb. 1.14. Thy seruant.

In chusing a master, euery man will shun principally three sorts of men: his { Enemie. / Fellow. / Seruant. }

Hee serueth his greatest enemie, who serueth the deuill: his fellow, who serueth the lust of his flesh: his seruant, who serueth the world. It is a base seruice to serue the world: for that is to become a vassall vnto our seruants. It is an vncertaine seruice to serue the flesh: this master is so cholericke, so weake, so sickly, so fickle, that we may looke euery day to be turned out of his doores: and that which is worst of all, he is least contented, when he is most satisfied. Like to the Spaniard, a bad seruant, but a worse master. It is an vnthriftie seruice to serue the deuill, all his wages is death: the more seruice we doe him, the worse is our estate. But he that serues God, hath the greatest Lord, who is most able: and the best Lord, who is most willing to preferre his followers: and therefore let vs say with Simeon, and boast with ᵗ Dauid: O Lord I am thy seruant, I am thy seruant. See the Epistle on Simon and Iudes day.

ᵗ Psal. 116 14.

Depart] Here first note the soules immortalitie: Death is not ᵘ exitus, but transitus; not obitus, but abitus; not a dying, but a departing, a trasmigration and exodus out of our earthly pilgrimage, vnto our heauenly home. ˣ Fratres mortui, non sunt amissi, sed præmissi: ʸ profectio est, quam putas mortem: A passage from the valley of death, vnto the land of the liuing. Depart.

ᵘ Cyprian. serm. de mortalitate.
ʸ Tertull lib. de patientia.

ᶻ Dauid said of his dead childe, I shall goe to him, but he shall not returne to mee. ᵃ Christ confirmes this: Haue you not read what is spoken of God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob? Now God, saith Christ, is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing. Abraham then is aliue, Isaac aliue, Iacob aliue; they cannot be said truly dead, but (as Simeon here departed.

ᶻ 2 Sam 12 23.
ᵃ Matth. 22. 32.

The two receptacles of all soules after this life, Hell and Heauen, infallibly demonſtrate this point. [b] Lazarus dieth, and his ſoule is preſently conueyed by bleſſed Angels vnto the boſome of Abraham: vnhappy Diues dieth, and his ſoule is fetcht and ſnatcht away by foule fiends vnto the bottomleſſe pit of hell.

As Gods eternall decrees haue an end without a beginning: ſo the ſoules of men haue a beginning without an end. The ſoule and bodie part for a time, but they ſhall meet againe to receiue an irrecouerable doome, either of, Come ye bleſſed, or Goe ye curſed.

Secondly, note that dying is the [c] looſing of our ſoule from her bonds and fetters: our fleſh is a ſinke of ſinne, the priſon of the minde, [d] σῶμα quaſi σῆμα. [e] Qui gloriatur in viribus corporis, gloriatur in viribus carceris. And therefore when [f] Plato ſaw one of his ſchoole was a little too curious in pampering his bodie, ſaid wittily: What doe you meane to make your priſon ſo ſtrong? So that a ſoule departed is ſet at libertie, like a bird that is eſcaped out of a cage. Among all other priſoners viſit your owne ſoule, for it is encloſed in a perilous priſon, ſaid a bleſſed Martyr, apud Fox. pag. 1544.

The world is ſo full of euils, as that to write them all, would require another world ſo great as it ſelfe. [g] Initium vitæ cæcitas & obliuio poſſidet, progreſſum labor, dolor exitum, error omnia: Childhood is a fooliſh ſimplicitie, youth a raſh heat, manhood a carking carefulneſſe, old age a noyſome languiſhing. Diu [h] viuendo portant funera ſua, & quaſi ſepulchra dealbata plena ſunt oſſibus mortuorum. It may be ſaid of an old man, as [i] Bias of the Mariner; Nec inter viuos, nec inter mortuos: and (as Plutarch of Sardanapalus, and [k] S. Paul of a widow liuing in pleaſure) that he is dead and buried enen while he liueth: and ſo paſſing from age to age, we paſſe from euill to euill; it is but one waue driuing another, vntill we arriue at the hauen of death. [l] Epictetus ſpake more like a Diuine than a Philoſopher: Homo calamitatis fabula, infœlicitatis tabula. Though a King by warre or wile ſhould conquer all the proud earth, yet hee gets but a needels point, a mote, a mite, a nit, a nothing. So that while we ſtriue for things of this world, we fight as it were like children, for pins and points. And therefore [m] Paul deſired to bee looſed, and to be with Chriſt: and Simeon (as ſome Diuines obſerue) prayeth here to be diſmiſſed, as [n] Ambroſe doth read) Dimitte: Lord let looſe. [o] Cyprian and [p] Origen, dimittes, in the future: as if he ſhould ſay, Now Lord I hope thou wilt ſuffer me to depart. Howſoeuer the word in the preſent, imports that death is a [q] goale-deliuerie: Nunc dimittis ſeruum; Now Lord thou ſetteſt free thy ſeruant: as ἀπολύειν is vſed, Act. 16. 35. Luk. 23. 17.

Colluuies? longi patientia carceris ætas.

In peace] [s] There are three kinds of peace: { Externall, Internall, Eternall, } Peace of { World. Minde. God. }

Or more plainly, peace betweene { Man and man. God and man. Man and himſelfe. }

The laſt kinde is meant here, though aſſuredly Simeon had all three: for our peace with God, and ſo farre as is poſſible, loue toward all men, breeds in vs a third peace, the which is the contentation of our minde and peace of conſcience: for which euery man ought to labour all his life; but at his death eſpecially, that comfortably departing he may ſing with old Simeon, Lord now letteſt &c.

I know many men haue died diſcontent and rauing, without any ſentiment of this comfortable peace, to mans imagination, and yet notwithſtanding were doubtleſſe Gods elect children. For, as [t] Auguſtine, many workes of God concerning our ſaluation are done in, and by their contraries. In the creation, all things were made, not of ſomething, but of nothing, cleane contrary to the courſe of nature. In the worke of redemption, he doth giue life, not by life, but by by death, and that a moſt accurſed death. Optimum fecit inſtrumentum vitæ, quod erat peſſimum mortis genus. In our effectuall vocation, he calls vs by the Goſpell, [u] vnto the Iewes a ſtumbling block, vnto the world meere fooliſhneſſe, in reaſon more likely to driue men from God, than to winne and wooe men to God. And when it his pleaſure that any ſhould depend vpon his goodneſſe and prouidence, he makes them feele his anger, and to be nothing in themſelues, that they may relie altogether vpon him. And thus happily the child of God, through [x] many tribulations, and, to our thinking, through the gulfe of deſperation, enters into the kingdome of heauen. [u] 1 Cor. 1.23.

[x] Acts 14 22.

For there is a two-fold preſence of God in his children: { 1. Felt and perceiued. 2. Secret and vnknowne.

Sometime God is not only preſent with his elect, but alſo makes them ſenſibly perceiue it, as Simeon here did: and therefore his mourning was turned into mirth, and his ſobs into ſongs.

Againe, ſometime God is preſent but not felt: and this ſecret preſence ſuſtaines vs in all our troubles and temptations: it entertaineth life in our ſoules, when as to our iudgement we are altogether dead, as there is life in trees when they haue caſt their leaues. And therefore let no man bee diſmayed, howſoeuer diſmayed: for God doth neuer leaue thoſe, whom he doth loue: but his comfortable Spirit is a ſecret friend, and often doth vs moſt good, when we leaſt perceiue it, Eſay 41.10. &c. 42.2.

According to thy word] If God promiſe, we may preſume, [y] for he is not like man, that he ſhould lie: neither as the ſonne of man, that he ſhould repent. This ſhould teach vs to be holy, [z] as God our Father is holy, [a] being followers of him as deare children. As he doth euer keepe his word with vs; ſo let vs euer keepe our oathes and promiſes one with another. It is well obſerued, that equiuocation and lying is a kinde of vnchaſtitie: for the mouth and minde are coupled together in holy mariage: Matth. 12.34. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. And therefore when the tongue doth ſpeake that which the heart neuer thought, our ſpeech is conceiued in adulterie, and he that breeds ſuch baſtard children, offends not onely againſt charitie, but alſo againſt chaſtitie.

According to thy word.

[a] Epheſ. 5.1.

Men ſay they muſt lie ſometime for aduantage; but it is a good concluſion both in religion, and common experience, that Honeſtie is the beſt policie, and Truth the onely durable armour of proofe. The ſhorteſt way commonly, the fouleſt, the fairer way not much about. [b] Lord who ſhall dwell in thy Tabernacle? or who ſhall reſt vpon thine holy Hill? Euen he that ſpeaketh the truth from his heart, hee that vſeth no deceit in his tongue, he that ſweareth vnto his neighbour, and diſappointeth him not.

[b] Pſal 15.

For mine eyes haue ſeene thy ſaluation] I haue ſeene the Meſſias, in whom, and by whom thy ſaluation is wrought and brought vnto vs. As Simeon ſaw Chriſts humanitie with the eyes of his bodie: ſo he ſaw Chriſts diuinitie long before with the piercing eye of faith. He knew that the little babe which hee lulled in his armes was the great God, whom the heauen of heauens could not containe: and therefore beleeuing in the Lord of life, he was not afraid of death: but inſtantly breaks forth into this ſweet ſong, Lord now letteſt thou thy ſeruant depart in peace, for mine eyes haue, &c.

The reaſon why Simeon was willing to die.

Death is vnwelcome to carnall men, as [c] Ariſtotle ſaid, Of all terribles the moſt terrible. [d] They cry out vpon the miſeries of life, and yet when death commeth, they doe as little children, who all the day complaine, but when the medicine is brought them, are nothing ſicke: as they who all the weeke runne vp and downe the houſe with paine of the teeth, and ſeeing the Barber come to pull them out, feele no more torment: as tender bodies in a pricking Pluriſie call, and cannot ſtay for a Surgeon, and yet when they ſee him whetting his lancer to cut the throat of the diſeaſe, pull in their armes and hide them in the bed.

And the true reaſon hereof is want of faith, becauſe they doe not vnfainedly beleeue that Chriſt Ieſus [e] hath led captiuitie captiue, [f] that he hath ſwallowed vp death in victorie by his death, and opened vnto vs the gates of eternall life. [g] The bleſſed theefe vpon the Croſſe died ioyfully, becauſe he ſaw Chriſt, and beleeued alſo that he ſhould paſſe from a place of paine to a paradiſe of pleaſure. [h] Saint Stephen died ioyfully, becaſe he ſaw the heauens open, and Chriſt ſtanding at the right hand of the Father. Here Simeon departed ioyfully, becauſe his eyes ſaw the ſaluation of the Lord.

[f] 1 Cor.15.54.
[g] Luke 23.43.
[h] Acts 7.56.

As there are two degrees of faith, ſo two ſorts of Chriſtians; one weake, another ſtrong. The weake Chriſtian is willing to liue, and patient to die: but the ſtrong patient to liue, and willing to die.

That a man may depart in peace, two things are requiſite:

1. Preparation before death.
2. A right diſpoſition at death.

Both which are procured only by faith in Chriſt. If a man were to fight hand to hand with a mightie Dragon, in ſuch wiſe that either he muſt kill or be killed, his beſt courſe were to bereaue him of his poyſon and ſting. Death is a Serpent, and the ſting, wherewith he woundeth vs, is ſinne: ſo ſaith [i] S. Paul, The ſting of death is ſinne. Now the true beleeuer vnderſtands and knowes aſſuredly that Chriſt Ieſus hath ſatisfied the law, and then if no law, no ſinne: and if no ſinne, death hath no ſting: well may death hiſſe, but it cannot hurt: [k] when our vnrighteouſneſſe is forgiuen, and ſinne couered, Chriſt both in life and death is aduantage, *Philip.*1.21.

[k] Pſal.32.1.

Faith alſo procureth a right diſpoſition and behauiour at death: for euen as when the children of Iſraell in the wilderneſſe were ſtung with fierie Serpents, and lay at the point of death, [l] they looked vp to the Braſen Serpent, erected by Moſes according to Gods appointment, and were preſently cured: ſo when any feele death draw neere with his fierie ſting, to pierce the heart, they muſt fixe the eye of a true faith vpon Chriſt exalted on the Croſſe, beholding death not in the glaſſe of the Law, which giueth death an vglie face: but in the Goſpels glaſſe, ſetting forth death, not as death, but as a [m] ſleepe only. Faith is the ſpeare which killeth our laſt enemie: for when a man is ſure that his [n] redeemer liueth, and that this [o] corruptible ſhall put on incorruption, and this mortall immortalitie; well may he ſing with old Simeon, Lord now letteſt thou thy ſeruant depart in peace: and triumph ouer the graue with Paul, O death where is thy ſting! O hell where is thy victorie! The ſting of death is ſinne, the ſtrength of ſinne is the law, but thankes be giuen vnto God, which giueth vs victorie through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. And thus much of the reaſon, why Simeon was not afraid of death; namely, for that he did hold in his armes, and behold with his eyes, the Lord Chriſt, [p] who is the reſurrection and the life; he could ſay with a true heart vnto God, [q] thou art my God: and his ſoule did heare God ſaying vnto him by his word, [r] I am thy ſaluation.

Which thou haſt prepared before the face of all people] The ſecond part of this Hymne, concerning the generall good our Sauiour brought to the whole world.

Wherein two points are to be noted eſpecially: 1. What are his benefits. 2. To whom they belong.

The benefits are ſaluation, light, and glory. So that the world without Chriſt, lieth in damnation, darkneſſe, and ſhame. Ieſus is a Sauiour, [s] neither is there ſaluation in any other: he is the [t] light of the world, and ſunne of righteouſneſſe, without whom all men ſit in darkneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death, as Zacharias in his ſong: he is our glory, without whom nothing belongs vnto vs but [u] confuſion and ſhame. Theſe benefits are ſo great, that they ought to be had in a [x] perpetuall remembrance. Chriſt himſelfe commanded his laſt Supper to be reiterated often, and the Church enioyneth this Hymne to be ſung daily, in a thankfull memoriall hereof.

But

But vnto whom appertaine theſe benefits? Vnto all. So ſaith the text, which thou haſt prepared before the face of all people. [y] The Lord hath made bare his holy arme in the ſight of all the Gentiles, and all the ends of the earth ſhall ſee the ſaluation of our God. Chriſt is ſet vp as a [z] ſigne to the people, and happily for this cauſe, among other, he was borne in a [a] common Inne, frequented by men of all ſorts: and the firſt newes of the Goſpell was preached in open fields, Luk. 2. as prepared before the face of all people.

[y] Eſay 52.10.
[z] Eſay 11.10.
[a] Luke 2.7.

But here we muſt obſerue, that albeit ſaluation pertaines to all, yet all pertaine not to it: none pertaine to it, but ſuch as take benefit by it: and none take benefit by it, no more than by the brazen Serpent, but they who fixe their eyes on it. If we deſire ſaluation, light, and glory, we muſt (as old Simeon) embrace Chriſt ioyfully, and hold him in our armes of faith ſtedfaſtly.

To be a light to lighten the Gentiles] If any ſhall demand why Simeon here calls Chriſt the light of the Gentiles, and glory of the Iewes, rather than the glory of the Gentiles, and light of the Iewes:

Anſwer is made that there is a two-fold darkneſſe: {Sinne. / Ignorance.

Sinne is called in holy Scriptures a worke of darkneſſe, for diuers reſpects:

1. Becauſe it is committed againſt God, [b] who is light, through the ſuggeſtion of Satan, [c] who is the prince of darkneſſe.

[b] 1 Epiſt. Ioh. 1.5.
[c] Epheſ. 6.12.

2. Becauſe ſinne for the moſt part is committed in the darke: [e] They that ſleepe, ſleepe in the night, and they that are drunken, are drunken in the night.

[e] 1 Theſſ. 5.7.

3. Becauſe ſinne deſerueth eternall darkneſſe: [f] Caſt that vnprofitable ſeruant into vtter darkneſſe.

[f] Matth. 25.30.

4. Becauſe ſinne is committed eſpecially through the darkneſſe of vnderſtanding: for Satan vſually blindeth our eyes of reaſon, and religion, and makes ſinne appeare not in it owne name and nature, but vnder the name and habit of vertue.

Now in regard of this kinde of darknes, Chriſt was a light to the Iewes, as wel as to the Gentiles: Eſay 60.1. Ariſe O Ieruſalem, be bright, for thy light is come. Ioh. 1.9. Chriſt doth lighten euery man that commeth into the world.

The ſecond kinde of darkneſſe is ignorance: the light of the bodie is the eye, ſo the eye of the ſoule is the vnderſtanding: and therefore as Chriſt ſaith, if the light that is in thee be darkneſſe, how great is that darkneſſe? The Iewes in this reſpect were not in ſuch darkneſſe as the Gentiles; hauing the Law, the Prophets, the ſacrifices and exerciſes of holy religion: In Iurie was God knowne, his name great in Iſrael, at Salem was his Tabernacle, his dwelling in Sion: whereas the [g] Gentiles were ſtrangers and aliens from the couenants of promiſe, without hope, without God in the world: but now Chriſt [h] the light of the Gentiles, yea of the whole world, hath broken downe the partition wall, and made of [i] both, one; all people, Gods people. For as the [k] naturall Sunne ſhineth indifferently vpon the good and euill: ſo the [l] Sunne of righteouſneſſe ſheweth his glorious ſauing light before the face of all people; to lighten and open our eyes, that we may turne from darkneſſe to light, from the power of Satan vnto God, Acts 26.18

Howſoeuer Chriſt be the light of all people, yet (as it followeth) he is The glory of his people Iſrael, vnto whom pertained the [m] adoption, and the glory, and the couenants. He was promiſed vnto them, borne of them, bred vp with them, he liued, preached, acted his great wonders among them: in all which reſpects, he may be fitly called Iſraels glory.

[m] Rom. 9.4.

Hence we may learne, firſt, that the Goſpell is the greateſt honour of a State.

Secondly, that all our glory depends on Chriſt our head, who is the King of glory.

Thirdly, that a good man, eſpecially a good Preacher, is a great ornament to the Country wherein he liueth: Athanaſius is [n] called the eye of his times; [o] Albinus, Englands Librarie; [p] Melanchon, the Phenix of Germanie; Chriſt, the glory of Iſrael.

THe paralell of Nunc dimittis is the 67. Pſalme, being a [q] prophecie of Chriſt, who is the [r] *countenance of God, Heb.*1.3. *Coloſſ.*1.15. For, [s] euen as when one lookes in a glaſſe, preſently he produceth an image of himſelfe, ſo like, as no difference can be found, in ſo much as it is not onely like in ſhape, but in mouing alſo, yet made without inſtruments in a moment, with one looke only: ſo God the Father beholding himſelfe in the glaſſe of his Diuinitie, doth produce a countenance moſt like himſelfe. And becauſe hee hath giuen vnto this Image all his owne being, (which we cannot in beholding our ſelues in a glaſſe) therefore that image is the true Sonne of God, very God of very God. Whereas the Pſalmiſt therefore; Shew the light of thy countenance: Simeon, Mine eyes haue ſeene thy ſaluation. The Pſalmiſt; That thy waies may be knowne vpon earth, thy ſauing health among all nations: Simeon, Thou haſt prepared ſaluation before the face of all people. The Pſalmiſt; Let the people praiſe thee, that is, the [t] Iewes, let all the people, that is, the Gentiles: O let the nations reioyce and be glad, &c. Simeon, A light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of thy people Iſrael.

In the whole Pſalme two points are ſpecially regardable, { Affectus: A requeſt of the Church in the 1,2,3,4,5. verſes. / Effectus: A grant of God in the 6,7. verſes.

In the former obſerue { Petitions for { Our ſelues in the 1. { Generally, God be mercifull vnto vs and bleſſe vs. / Specially, Shew vs the light of thy countenance. } / Other, in the 2,3,4. } / Repetitions, God be mercifull vnto vs. And againe, Be mercifull vnto vs: let the people, &c. And againe, Let the people, let all the people praiſe thee. }

God be mercifull] He is the [u] Father of mercies: Ergo, we muſt flie to him for mercy. Deus meus miſericordia mea, ſaith Dauid in the 59. Pſalme. [x] Si dicas ſalus mea, intelligo quia dat ſalutem: ſi dicas refugium meum, intelligo quia confugis ad eum: ſi dicas fortitudo mea, intelligo quia dat fortitudinem. Miſericordia mea, quid eſt? totum quicquid ſum, de miſericordia tua eſt. And therefore ſeeing Gods mercy is the fountaine of all goodneſſe, we muſt firſt deſire him to be mercifull, and then to bleſſe vs, hee that hath enough mercy, ſhall neuer want any bleſſing. [z] The word originall ſignifieth rather fauour than pitie; becauſe pitie is ſhewed onely in aduerſitie, not in proſperitie: whereas fauour in both. And therefore the vulgar Latine, Deus miſereatur, happily not ſo ſufficient, as Deus faueat: Be fauourable O Lord, and ſo mercifull as to bleſſe vs: that is, not onely to deliuer vs from euill, but alſo to giue whatſoeuer is good. In more particular, Shew vs the light of thy countenance] [a] Euery man doth deſire bleſſing, but the good man only this bleſſing: [b] all other are bleſſings of the left hand, common to the wicked with the godly; but this is a bleſſing of the right hand, which only belongs vnto Gods elect.

God lookes on the reprobate like an angry Iudge with a cloudie countenance: but beholds all his adopted children in Chriſt as a mercifull Father, with a gratious aſpect. Shew vs thy countenance, that is, indue vs with true knowledge of thy word, and a liuely faith in thy Sonne, which is thine owne image and countenance, where we may learne to confeſſe with [c] Paul, that all other things are but loſſe, in compariſon of the ſuperexcellent knowledge of Chriſt Ieſus: [d] for it is eternall life to know God, and whom he hath ſent Ieſus Chriſt.

[c] Philip.2.8.
[d] Iohn 17.3.

That thy way may be knowne] As light, ſo the participation of Gods light is communicatiue: we muſt not pray for our ſelues alone, but for all other, that

Gods

Gods way may be knowne vpon earth, and his ſauing health among all nations, Thy way, that is, thy will, thy word, thy workes. [e] Gods will muſt bee knowne on earth, that it may be done on earth, as it is in heauen. Except we know our Maſters will, how ſhall we doe it? Ergo, firſt pray with Dauid here: Let thy way be knowne vpon earth: and then, let all the people praiſe thee. Gods will is reuealed in his word, and his word is his [f] way wherein wee muſt walke, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left. Or thy way, [g] that is, thy workes, as Dauid elſewhere, Pſalme. 25.9. All the waies of the Lord are mercy and truth. [h] Or as other moſt fitly, Thy way, that is, thy Chriſt, Thy ſauing health, that is, thy Ieſus: for I am the way, ſaith our Sauiour: Iohn 14.6. No man commeth to the Father but by me: wherefore let thy Sonne be knowne vpon earth, thy Ieſus among all nations.

At this time God was knowne in Iurie, but (ſaith Hierome) Gods way was vnknowne, his Sonne was not as yet manifeſted in the fleſh: this (as [i] Paul ſpeakes) was his wiſdome: but now reuealed, as S. Iohn in his firſt [k] epiſtle, We haue heard, we haue ſeene with our eyes, and our hands haue handled of the word of life. Bleſſed eyes, happy eares: for [l] I tell you many Prophets and Kings haue deſired to ſee the things which you ſee, and haue not ſeene them, and to heare the things which you heare, and haue not heard them.

Let the people praiſe thee.] [m] Marke the ſweet order of the bleſſed ſpirit: firſt mercy, then knowledge; laſt of all praiſing of God. We cannot ſee his countenance, except he be mercifull vnto vs: and wee cannot praiſe him, except his way be knowne vpon earth: his mercy breeds knowledge, his knowledge praiſe. We muſt praiſe God, alway for all things, Epheſ. 5.20. but eſpecially for his ſauing health among all nations. And this is the true reaſon why the Church in her Liturgie doth vſe ſo many Hymnes, and giue ſo much thankes vnto God for the redemption of the world. Wherein aſſuredly ſhe did imitate the bleſſed Apoſtles in compoſing the Creed, the greateſt part whereof (as hath beene noted) is ſpent in the doctrine which concerneth our Sauiour Chriſt.

Let all the people] Some miſlike the Letany, for that it hath a petition for all men, and all people: yet we haue both a precept, and a precedent out of Gods owne booke, the Commandement is, 1. Tim. 2. I exhort that firſt of all, ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giuing of thanks be made for all men. The practiſe of Gods Church is apparant in this place, let the people, let all the people, which the Pſalmographer vttered from the ſpirit of God, as the mouth of God, and therefore let men conſtrue the Church, as the Scripture, when as the Church doth ſpeake Scripture, leſt they wipe out of the Bible many good leſſons, (as [n] Tertullian ſaid of Marcion) if not with a ſpunge, yet with a peeuiſh and ouerthwart interpretation. And here let the Noueliſt alſo remember, that both our [o] Engliſh reformers, and the Churches of Scotland, vſe the ſame petition for all men in their prayers after the Sermon.

O let the nations reioyce and be glad] [p] It is obſerued to good purpoſe, that this clauſe is inſerted fitly betweene that doubled exclamation, Let the people praiſe thee: becauſe none can praiſe God well except they do it heartily with ioy and gladneſſe. For as the Lord loues a [q] cheerefull giuer, ſo likewiſe a cheerefull [r] thankſgiuer. [s] God is terrible to the wicked, but a God of gladneſſe to ſuch as haue ſeene the light of his countenance: for being reconciled vnto God, they haue ſuch inward ioy and peace, [t] that it paſſeth all vnderſtanding.

For thou ſhalt iudge the folke righteouſly.] The Pſalmiſt heere may ſeeme to contradict himſelfe: for if mercy make men reioyce, then iudgement occaſioneth men to tremble. Anſwer is made, that all ſuch as haue knowne the waies of the Lord, and reioyce in the ſtrength of his ſaluation, all ſuch as haue the pardon of their ſinnes aſſured, and ſealed, feare not that dreadfull aſſiſe, becauſe they know the Iudge is their aduocate. Or, (as Hierome) let all nations reioyce, becauſe God doth iudge righteouſly, being the God of the

The reformers in one of their praiers after the Sermon, vſe repetition, and that of the Lords prayer, and in ſuch ſort, that within a very narrow roome it is firſt expounded paraphraſtically, then againe reiterated euery word particularly. So likewiſe the Scottiſh Church in the miniſtration of Baptiſme doth inioyne that the Creed be repeated twice. Firſt the father, or in his abſence the Godfather propounds it, and then inſtantly the Miniſter expounds it. Wherefore that worthy [c] Diuine moſt truly, there is in England a ſchiſmaticall and vndiſcreet company, that would ſeeme to crie out for diſcipline, their whole talke is of it, and yet they neither know it, nor will be reformed by it.

THe learned Athanaſian Creed conſiſts of two ſpeciall parts, vnfolding fully the two chiefe ſecrets of holy beleefe: namely,

The { Vnitie and Trinitie of God. / Incarnation and paſſion of Chriſt.

The which are called the principall myſteries of our faith, becauſe in the former is contained the firſt beginning and laſt end of man: in the ſecond, the onely and moſt effectuall meane to know the firſt beginning, and how to attaine vnto the laſt end. So that Athanaſius hath comprehended in a very narrow roome both the beginning, and middle, and end of all our felicitie. For this happily called, the worlds eye, becauſe he did ſee ſo much, and pierce ſo farre into theſe vnſearchable and ineffable myſteries.

- Matter, all these words.
- Manner,
  - When.
  - Who.

The matter is: these words, that is, these sentences and all these: for almightie God spake not the first Commandement only, nor the second, or third, and left there; but he spake them all, and therefore the Pope proues himselfe Anti-god in leauing out one, and dispensing with many. God gaue so strict a charge to keepe euery one, as any one: but the Vicar of God abounding with vnlimited authority, doth first publish what he list, and then expound them as he list. To leaue them, who thus leaue God, it is our dutie, because God spake them all, to begge of him obedience, and make conscience to keepe them all, as one wittily, Totus, Tota, Totum: The whole man, The whole law, The whole time of his life.

In the manner, I note first the circumstance of time, when God spake: namely, when all the people were gathered together and sanctified: as appeareth in the former Chapter, then God spake. Whereupon it is well obserued that all men ought to take notice of the law, whether they be Commoners, or Commanders, high or low, none so mighty that is greater, or so meane that is lesse, then a subiect to God and his ordinances: and therefore [d] Martin Luther hath worthily reprehended Antinomian Preachers, who teach that the Law need not be taught in the time of the Gospell. Indeed Christ is the [e] end of the Law: but, as [f] Augustine construes it, finis perficiens, non interficiens: an end not consuming, but consummating; for, as himselfe said, [g] I came not to destroy the Law, but to teach it, and doe it.

[e] Rom. 10. 4.
[f] Contra aduers. legis lib. 2. cap. 7.
[g] Matth 5. 17.

Secondly, we may learne by this circumstance, due preparation when wee come before God either to speake or heare his word. Auenzoar vsed to say, that hee neuer gaue purgation, but his heart did shake many dayes before. Let the Physitian of the soule then tremble, to thinke what hurt bad physicke may doe, when it is ministred abruptly, corruptly, without either paines in reading, or reuerence in speaking. Vnto the [h] vngodly said God, Why doest thou preach my Lawes, and takest my Couenant in thy mouth, whereas thou hatest to be reformed, and hast cast my words behinde thee? If hearers of the Law, much more Preachers of the Gospell ought to be throughly sanctified. In the Millers hand we lose but our meale: in the Farriors hand but our Mule: in the Lawyers hand but our goods: in the Physitians hand but our life; but in the hands of a bad Diuine we may lose that which surpasseth all, our soule.

[h] Psal. 50. 16.

Hearers also being of vncircumcised [i] hearts and eares, ought to fit and prepare themselues, as [k] Moses and [l] Iosua were commanded, in disburdening their minde, when they come to Gods house to heare God speake, not onely from vnlawfull, but also from all lawfull worldly businesse; presenting themselues and their soules in the righteousnesse of Christ, a [m] liuing, holy, acceptable sacrifice to God: and it is the dutie both of speaker and hearer to desire the Lord that he would would forgiue our [n] want of preparation, and ſo to aſſiſt vs with his holy Spirit in handling of his holy Word, as that the whole buſineſſe may be tranſacted for our good, and his glory.

The ſecond circumſtance noted in the manner is the perſon, and that is God: Then God ſpake theſe words, in his owne perſon, attended vpon with millions of [o] glorious Angels, in [p] a flame of fire: ſo that there is neuer an idle word, but all full of wonderfull wiſedome: ſo perfect a law, that it proues it ſelfe to be Gods law. For the lawes of men, albeit they fill many large volumes, are imperfect; ſome ſtatutes are added daily, which were not thought vpon before; many repealed which after experience taught not to be ſo profitable; but this law continueth the ſame for euer, comprehending in a few words all perfection of duty to God and man, inioyning whatſoeuer is good, and forbidding whatſoeuer is euill.

God is author of all holy Scripture, but the ten Commandements are his, after a more peculiar ſort: firſt, becauſe himſelfe ſpake them, and ſaid in a ſound of words, and a diſtinct voice, [q] that the people both heard, and vnderſtood them: in which ſenſe [r] S. Stephen happily calleth them oracula viua, liuely oracles: not that they did giue life, for [ſ] Paul ſheweth that the Law was the miniſtration of death; but liuely words, as vttered by liuely voice, not of men or Angels, as other Scripture, but immediately thundred out by God himſelfe.

Secondly, becauſe God himſelfe wrote them after a more ſpeciall manner: he did vſe men and meanes in penning the Goſpels and Epiſtles, and other parts of ſacred writ: [t] for holy men of God wrote as they were moued by the ſpirit of God: (as the [u] Fathers obſerue) they were the pens of Gods owne finger: but in ſetting downe the Decalogue Gods owne finger was the pen, he made the Tables alſo wherein they were firſt written, that there might be nothing in them but onely Gods immediate worke. Since then God had ſuch ſpeciall regard in deliuering the Law, we muſt hence learne with all humble reuerence to receiue the ſame. If King Eglon [x] a barbarous tyrant reſpected Ehud a man of meane qualitie, when he brought a meſſage from the Lord; how much more ſhould we with awfull reſpect embrace the Decalogue, which God in his owne perſon vttered? and it ſhould make vs exceeding zealous alſo (notwithſtanding the ſcoffes of Atheiſts and careleſſe worldlings) in obſeruing and maintaining the ſame. For, what need any feare to defend that which God himſelfe ſpake: and whereof [y] Chriſt ſaid He that is aſhamed of mee, and my words in this world, I will be aſhamed of him before my Father in the world to come? As a liuely faith is the beſt gloſſe vpon the Goſpell: ſo dutifull obedience is the beſt Commentary vpon the Law. To conclude with Auguſtine, Faciemus iubente Imperatore, & non faciemus iubente Creatore? [z] Yes Lord, ſpeake: for thy ſeruants heare.

Thus much concerning the firſt preface. The ſecond is of the Law-giuer: I am the Lord, &c. [*] Containing two ſorts of arguments, to proue that he may giue a law; and that his people are bound to keepe it. The firſt kinde of reaſon is taken from his eſſence and greatneſſe in himſelfe: I am Iehoua. The ſecond from his effects and goodneſſe towards Iſrael,

In { Generall: Thy God.
More ſpeciall: Which haue brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage.

Now whatſoeuer is ſaid vnto them, is ſaid vnto all. Almighty God is [a] euer the ſame, [b] which is, which was, and which is to come: who being Iehouah the Lord, made vs of nothing: and therefore we being his creatures, owe obedience to his commands in euery thing; eſpecially ſeeing he doth not only preſſe vs with his greatneſſe, [c] but allure vs alſo with his goodneſſe: being our God by couenant in holy Baptiſme, wherein he took vs for his adopted children, and we tooke him for our heauenly Father: He took vs for his Spouſe, we tooke him for our Husband: He took vs for his people, we took him for our God: [d] Aſonne therefore therefore must honour his father, and a seruant his master. If he be curs and we his, as he doth prouoke vs in bountie, so we must answer him in dutie.

In more speciall, as God brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage: so hath hee deliuered vs from the seruitude of Sathan, and sinne, [e] prefigured by that bondage of Egypt, and Pharaoh: that being deliuered out of the hands of all our enemies, wee might serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of our life.

Deliuerance then out of both, as benefits in their owne nature very great, and in memory most fresh, were good motiues vnto regardfull obedience.

The Lord hath done so, and more then so for vs, he hath freed vs from the Romish Egypt, and Spanish bondage, with lesse difficultie and more ease: for we are translated out of Babel and Egypt, without any trauell or iourney. Rome is swept away from England, and Ierusalem is brought home to our doores. If arguments drawne either from Gods infinite might or mercy ought to preuaile; let England shew the greatest obedience: for England hath had the greatest deliuerance.

Loue [g] is the complement of the Law. [h] Christ therefore reduced all the ten Commandements vnto these two: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart: and thy neighbour as thy selfe. The which (as [i] Tertullian obserues) is not dispendium, but compendium legis: not a curtalling, but a full abridgement of the whole law. Yet I finde three sundry partitions of the seuerals.

Lombard out of [m] Augustine, and generally the Schoole-men out of [n] Lombard, in honour of the Trinitie, diuide the first Table into three Commandements, and the second into seuen.

But all our new writers, and most of the old Doctors, ascribe foure to the first, fixe to the second: among the Hebrewes, [o] Aben Esra: the Greekes, [p] Athanasius, [q] Origen, [r] Chrysostome: the Latines, Hierome, Ambrose in epist. ad Ephesios, cap. 6.

Wherefore being compassed about with such a cloud of witnesses, I follow the Churches order, assigning foure concerning our dutie to God, and fixe touching our duty to man.

The first table then is a lanthorne to guide vs in the worship of God: as [t] some write. The two first commandements concerne God the Father as our Creator: the third, God the Sonne as our Redeemer: the fourth, God the holy Ghost as our Sanctifier. Yet so that we worship the Trinitie in Vnitie, and Vnitie in Trinitie, neither confounding the persons, nor diuiding the substance.

Or as [t] other: the two first Commandements intimate how we must worship God in our heart: the third, how we must worship God in our tongue: the fourth, how we must worship God with both in sanctifying the Sabboth.

Or the first table doth set downe two points especially:
1. The hauing of the true God for our God, in the first, Thou shalt haue no other Gods but me.
2. The worshipping of this one God, in the other three.

The first Commandement is obserued in exercising the three theologicall vertues, Faith.
Hope.

He

He that vnfainedly beleeueth in God, hath God for his God: becauſe he taketh God for the chiefe veritie: and in this vnbeleeuers and misbeleeuers offend. He that hopeth in God, hath God for his God, in that he takes him for moſt faithfull, moſt pittifull, and alſo moſt potent; as being aſſuredly perſwaded that hee can, and will helpe him in all his neceſſitie. And in this they ſinne who deſpaire of the mercies of God, or doe truſt more in men, then in God: or ſo much in men, as in God. He that loueth God aboue all things, hath God for his God, in holding him for the chiefe good: and in this they treſpaſſe who loue any creature more then God, or equall with God, and much more they that hate God: for it is a ſound concluſion in Diuinitie; That is our God which wee loue beſt, and eſteeme moſt.

Concerning the worſhip of God, note the { Manner: in the 2. Commandement. / End: in the 3. Commandement. / Time and place: in the 4. Commandement.

The ſecond doth deſcribe the manner of his worſhip: Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any grauen image, &c. forbiding all ſtrange worſhip, and inioyning pure worſhip according to his word: [u] for to deuiſe fantaſies of God, is as horrible as to ſay there is no God. And therefore though we ſhould grant, that Images and pictures of God are as it were the Lay-mans Alphabet, and the peoples Almanack: yet foraſmuch as theſe bookes are not imprinted Cum priuilegio, but on the contrary prohibited; it is vnlawfull to learne what God is by them, or to worſhip God in, or vnder them. And leſt any ſhould preſume, God hath fenſed in this commandement with a very ſtrong reaſon, I am the Lord, and therefore can puniſh; a iealous God, and therefore will puniſh grieuouſly ſuch, as giue that honour to another which onely belongs vnto me.

The end of Gods worſhip is his glory, prouided for in the third Commandement: Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine.

The which is done two waies, in our { Workes. / Words.

In our conuerſation: when as our lewd life doth occaſion enemies of religion to reuile the Goſpell, and [x] blaſpheme God. It is to take Chriſts name in vaine, when we play the Gentiles vnder the name of Chriſtians; as Paul to [y] Titus: profeſſing God in word, but denying him in our workes. [z] Hoc ipſo Chriſtiani deteriores quò meliores eſſe deberent: [a] Hee that cals on the name of Chriſt, muſt depart from iniquitie.

[y] 1 Titus 16.
[z] Saluianus de gubernatione Dei. lib. 4.
[a] 2 Tim. 2.19.

Secondly, we take Gods name in vaine by ſpeech, and that without an oath, or with an oath: without an oath, when we talke of himſelfe, his eſſence, titles, attributes, holy word, wonderfull works, irreuerently and vnworthily without any deuotion, or awfull regard of his excellent Maieſtie.

We blaſpheme God with an oath, by ſwearing either { Idlely. / Falſly.

Idlely out of { Weakeneſſe: when in our ordinary talke, through a [b] cuſtome in ſinne, we fill vp our periods with [c] vnneceſſary oathes. / Wickedneſſe: as when a wretch in his diſcontented humour ſhall binde himſelfe with an oath to doe ſome notable miſchiefe. So certaine Iewes, Acts 23. ſware that they would neither eat nor drinke till they had killed Paul: or when he ſhall deſpightfully ſweare to vex the good Spirit of God, and to trample the blood of Chriſt vnder his feet: if cards, or bowels, or dice, runne againſt him, he will make his tongue to runne ſo faſt againſt God: or when he doth ſweare by heauen, or earth, or any other creature, [d] in ſtead of the Creator.

[b] Baſilicon Doron, lib. 1. pag 17
[c] Matth. 5. 37.
[d] Deut. 6. 13. Matth. 5. 34.

An oath is an inuocating of God: he therefore that ſweares by the light, makes light his god: he that ſweares by the Maſſe, doth make that Idoll his god.

A man may forsweare himselfe three waies, as [c] Lombard out of [f] Augustine: when he doth sweare

1. That which is false, and hee knowes it false.
2. That which is true, but hee thought it false.
3. That which is false, but he held it true.

The two first kinds are abominable: namely, when a man sweares either that he knowes to be false, or thinks to be false: but the third in the Court of Conscience is no sinne; because it is with forswearing as with lying: Periurie is nothing else but a lie bound with an oath. [g] As then a man may tell an vntruth, and yet not lie: so likewise sweare that which is false, and yet not sweare falsly. [h] Thou shalt sweare in truth, that is, as thou shalt in thy conscience and science thinke to bee true: [i] for doubtlesse it is a lesser offence to sweare by a false God truly, then to sweare by the true God falsely: it is a sinne to lie, but a double sinne to sweare and lie.

The 4. Commandement.

THe fourth Commandement doth set downe the time and place of Gods holy worship: the time expresly, Remember thou keepe holy the Sabbath day: the which insinuates also the place; for God was publikely worshipped in his Sanctuarie, in his Tabernacle, in his Temple. Leuiticus 19. 30. Ye shall keepe my Sabbaths, and reuerence my Sanctuarie. The Sabbath (as [k] one calls it) is Gods schoole-day; the Preachers are his Vshers, and the Church is his open schoole-house.

This Commandement is hedged in on euery side, lest wee should breake out from obseruing it: with a caueat before, Remember: and two reasons after, one drawne from the equitie of the law: Six daies shalt thou labour. As if God should speake thus, If I permit thee six whole daies to follow thine owne businesse, thou mayest well afford one onely for my seruice: but six daies shalt thou labour and doe all thine owne worke: therefore hallow the seuenth in doing my worke. Six daies shalt thou labour. [l] A permission, or a remission of Gods right, who might challenge all; rather then an absolute commandement. [m] For the Church vpon iust occasion may separate some weeke-daies also, to the seruice of the Lord and rest from labour, Ioel 2. 15. Blow the trumpet in Sion, sanctifie a fast, call a solemne assembly. Daies of publike fasting, for some great iudgement; daies of publique reioycing for some great benefit, are not vnlawfull, but exceeding commendable, yea necessarie. Yet this permission is a [n] commission against idlenes, because euery man must liue by the [o] sweat of his browes, or sweat of his braines: hauing some profession, or occupation, or [p] vocation, wherein he must labour faithfully.

Another argument is taken from the Law-giuers example: For in six daies the Lord made heauen and earth, and rested the seuenth day. God requires no more then himselfe performed, his owne practise is a Commentary vpon his law. This may teach all Magistrates, all masters, all superiours who prescribe lawes vnto other, to become first an vnprinted law themselues. If the Prince will haue his Court religious, himselfe must be forward in deuotion: if the father will haue his children possesse their [q] vessels in chastitie, then himselfe must not [r] neigh after his neighbours wife. When Sabbath-breakers are rebuked, all their answer is, other, and that the most doe so. If they will follow fashion and example, let them follow the best: Fashion not your selues like the [s] world: but be ye followers of [t] God: who framed the whole world in six daies, and rested the seuenth: hee rested from creating, not gouerning: from making of new kindes of creatures, not singular things: he is not (as Epicurus imagined) idle, but alway working: Iohn 5. 17. My father worketh hitherto, and I worke.

The

The Commandement it selfe is { First, propounded briefly: Keepe holy the Sabbath day. / Then expounded more largely: shewing { 1. What is the Sabbath day, namely, the seuenth. / 2. How it must bee sanctified: In it thou shalt doe no manner of worke.

Keepe holy.] This day hath no more holinesse in it selfe then other times: onely God hath appointed it to holy vses aboue other: and therefore wee must keepe it more holy then other.

The Sabbath.] There is sabbathum { Pectoris, of the minde. / Temporis, of time.

The sabbath of the minde [a] is double: { Internall, peace of conscience in the kingdome of grace. / Eternall, rest of bodie and soule in the kingdome of glory.

When as [x] we shall rest from our labours, [y] all teares shall be wiped from our eyes, and cares from our heart.

[x] Apoc.14.13.
[y] Apoc.7.17.

Among the Iewes the sabbath of time was of { Dayes. / Yeeres.

Dayes { Lesser, euery seuenth day. / [z] Greater, as when the Passeouer fell on the Sabbath, as it did when Christ suffered.

[z] Iohn 19.31.

[a] Yeeres { Euery seuenth yeere, a Sabbath of rest to the land. / Euery seuen times seuen yeere, which was 49. and then followed in the 50. yeere the Iubile.

[a] Leuit.25.

This Sabbath is of dayes, expresly, kept holy the seuenth day.

There is { A naturall day, which is the pace of 24. houres: a night and a day: Gen.1.5. / An artificiall day, the space of 12. houres: as Christ: Iohn 11.9. from the Sunne rising, to the Sunne setting; of which I thinke this Commandement is vnderstood. For albeit the Iewes counted the Sabbath from euening to euening, yet it was but as they reckoned other daies; not to sit vp and watch all night: but to spend in Gods seruice so much of the naturall day, as may bee spared without hurting the body.

The seuenth is the Sabbath.] It is the iudgement of the most and best Interpreters, that the Sabbath is [b] morale quoad genus, but ceremoniale quoad speciem: Ceremoniall for the [c] manner, albeit morall for the matter. I say ceremoniall in regard of the particular: [d] as the strict obseruation of the same day and same rest: precisely to keepe the Saturday, and strictly to cease from all labour, as the Iewes did, was a shadow: therefore abrogated by the comming of the body, Christ.

The blessed Apostles herein led by the Spirit of truth, and (as some thinke) by Christs owne [e] example, [f] altered, and so by consequence abrogated the particular day. Consentaneum est Apostolos hanc ipsam ob causam mutasse diem, vt ostenderent exemplum abrogationis legum ceremonialium in die septimo: Melanct.tom. 2. *fol.*363.

[f] Acts 20.7. 1 Cor.16.2. Apocal.1.10.

Whereas therefore the Iewes obserued their Sabbath on the seuenth day, we celebrate the eighth. They gaue God the last day of the weeke: but Christians better honour him with the first: they keepe their Sabbath in honor of the worlds creation; but Christians in memoriall of the worlds redemption, a worke of greater might and mercie: and therefore good reason the greater worke should carrie away the credit of the day. See the Gospell on Saint Thomas day.

The particular rest of the Iewes is [g] ceremoniall also, for it is a type of our inward resting from sinne in this life: Ezod.31.13. Ezek.20.12. and a figure of our [h] eternall Sabbath in the next: as [i] S. Paul disputes, Heb.4.

Yet this Commandement is morall in the generall. As for example, wee must keepe one day in the seuen holy to the Lord: wherein wee must doe no manner of worke, which may let the ministerie of Gods Word, and other exercises of pietie. We must leaue to doe our worke, that the Lord may bring forth in vs his worke.

The duties then required on the Lords day be principally two: { Rest. / And a sanctification of this rest.

A double Sabbath, rest from labour, and rest from sinne: for as [k] our Church doth determine, two sorts of people transgresse this Commandement especially:
1. Such as will not rest from their ordinary labour, but driue and carry, row and ferry on Sunday.
2. Such as will rest in vngodlinesse, idlely spending this holy day in pampering, pointing, painting themselues. So that God is more dishonoured, and the deuill better serued vpon Sunday, then on all the daies of the weeke beside.

[k] Vbi supra.

Thou shalt do no manner of work.] That is, no seruile worke of thine ordinary calling, which may be done the day before, or left well vndone till the day after. But some works are lawfull namely, such as appertaine to the publique worship of God: as painfull preaching of the sacred word, reading of diuine prayers, administring of the blessed Sacraments, and euery worke subordinate to these: as ringing of bels, and trauelling to Church, Acts 1.12. 2 Kings 4.23.

And workes of mercy toward { Our selues, as prouision of meat and drinke, Matth. 12.1. / Other { Men, our Sauiour healed the man with the dried hand on the Sabbath, Mark. 3.5. / Beasts, in watring cattie, and helping them out of pound and pit: Luke 14.5.

Workes of present necessitie: [l] Physitians on the Lords day may visit their patients, Midwiues helpe women with childe, Shepheards attend their flocke, Mariners their voiage, [m] Souldiers may fight, and [n] messengers ride post for the great good of the Common-wealth.

Workes of honest recreations also, so farre as they may rather helpe then hinder our cheerefull seruing of the Lord. And the reason of all this is giuen by Christ, Mar. 2.27. The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.

Thy sonne and thy daughter.] Euery man is a [o] gouernour in his owne house, and therefore must take charge of such as are vnder him: [p] Adduc eos ad domum Dei tecum, qui sunt in domo tua tecum; mater Ecclesia aliquos à te petit, aliquos repetit; petit eos quos apud te inuenit, repetit quos per te peraidit.

Thy man seruant.] This is for { Thy good. / Their good. / The common good.

Thy good: For he that on Sunday shall learne his dutie, will bee more fit all the weeke to doe his dutie: such as obey God with a good conscience, will serue their master with an vpright heart, as [q] Iacob serued Laban, and [r] Ioseph Pharaoh.

For their good: that they may [t] know God, and whom he hath sent Christ Iesus, [u] the way, the truth, and the life. Thy seruants are men of the same mold with thee: [x] Iisdem & constant & nutriuntur elementis, eundem spiritum ab eodem principio carpunt, eodem fruuntur cœlo, aquè viuunt, aquè moriuntur, serui sunt, imo conserui.

That

That is, in the words of Scripture, [y] Thy ſeruants are all one with thee in Chriſt: made of the ſame God, redeemed with the ſame price, ſubiect to the ſame law, belonging to the ſame maſter: Epheſ.6.9. Pity then and piety require that thou ſee them obſerue the Lords day, for the good as well of their bodies as ſoules.

For the common good: [z] For euery man hath iuſt cauſe to be ready willingly to labour all the weeke, when as he is aſſured he ſhall reſt on Sunday.

Thy cattle.] Hence we may gather much comfort: for if God in his mercy prouide for the welfare euen of our brute beaſts, of which he hath made vs Lords; he will aſſuredly much more reſpect vs his ſeruants and children: he cannot be careleſſe for men, who is ſo carefull for oxen.

The Commandements are ſo well knowne, and often expounded, that as [a] Auguſtine ſpeaks in the like caſe: Deſiderant auditorem magis quàm expoſitorem. I paſſe therefore from the firſt table, containing all dutie to God, vnto the ſecond, teaching all dutie to man: I ſay to man as the proper immediate obiect of them. Otherwiſe theſe Commandements are done vnto God alſo: for he that clotheth the naked, and viſiteth the ſicke, doth it vnto Chriſt: Matth. 25.40.

The law then concerning our neighbour is partly { Affirmatiue, teaching vs to doe him all good: Honour thy father and mother, &c. / Negatiue, teaching vs to doe him no hurt: Thou ſhalt not kill, &c. }

This table begins with honour of our father, [b] Firſt, becauſe next vnto God we muſt honour thoſe who are in the place of God.

Secondly, becauſe the neglect of this one Commandement occaſioneth all diſorder againſt the reſt: for if ſuperiors gouerne well, and inferiors obey well; how can any man be wronged in word or deed?

[c] Thirdly, becauſe of all neighbours our parents are moſt neere to vs, as being moſt bound to them of whom we haue receiued our life. Thy parent is Gods inſtrument for thy naturall being: thy Prince Gods inſtrument for thy ciuill being: thy Paſtor Gods inſtrument for thy ſpiritual being. Wherefore as thou art a man, thou muſt honour thy naturall father; as a citizen, honour thy ciuill father; as a Chriſtian, honour thy eccleſiaſticall father.

Honour imports eſpecially 3. things: { Obedience. / Reuerence. / Maintenance. }

Obedience, Children obey your parents in all things: Coloſſ. 3.20. that is, as Paul doth interpret himſelfe, Epheſ.6.1. in the Lord. In all things agreeable to the will of God: otherwiſe for Chriſts loue we muſt hate father and mother, Luke 14.26. [d] Hierom notably: Licèt ſparſo crine & ſciſſis veſtibus vbera quibus te nutrierat mater oſtendat, licèt in limine pater iaceat, per calcatum perge patrem, ſiccis oculis ad vexillum crucis euola. The moſt eminent patternes of obedience to father and mother are the [e] Rechabits, [f] Iſaack, [g] Chriſt: [h] Venerabatur matrem, cuius ipſe erat pater, colebat nutritium quem nutrierat.

Reuerence, Bearing them reſpect in words, and outward behauiour, though they be neuer ſo meane, and we neuer ſo mightie. Prouerbs 23. 22. Honour thy father that begat thee, and thy mother that bare thee. As if he ſhould ſay, Be dutifull vnto thy parents: not becauſe they be rich and in great place, but becauſe they be thy parents, how baſe ſoeuer they be. [i] Matris anguſtam domum iudicas, cuius tibi non fuit venter anguſtus? [k] parentes non amare impietas eſt, non agnoſcere inſania eſt. Examples of this vertue, recorded in holy Scriptures are [l] Ioſeph and [m] Salomon and in our Engliſh Chronicles, Sir [n] Thomas More, who being Lord Chancellor of England, vſually did aske his father bleſſing in Weſtminſter Hall publikely: the which cuſtome of our nation is good and godly.

Maintenance.] If the parent bee blinde, the childe muſt bee his [o] eye: if lame, the childe muſt be his foot; if in any want, the [p] ſtaffe of his decaied age.

So q Christ tooke care for his mother at his death: r for it is great reason that children hauing receiued life of their father & mother, should procure to preserue vnto them the same life. Nature doth read this lesson. s Valerius Maximus hath a memorable historie of a young woman who gaue sucke to her mother in prison, and so kept her aliue, who otherwise was adiudged to bee famished. A pious office, so well accepted of the Iudge, that he did both pardon the mother, and prefer the daughter. t Aristophanes affirmes also, that the young Storke doth feed the old.

There is a dutie required of the parent toward the childe, as well as of the childe toward the parents: yet the law speaketh expresly to the one, and not to the other. That the father being in order of nature and in wisdome superiour, might suspect his dutie to be written in himselfe; father and mother are u nomina pietatis, officiorum vocabula, natura vincula. The duty then of superiors is infolded in the word father: a Minister is a father, a Master a father, a Magistrate a father: teaching them to be so well affected to their inferiours, as parents are to their children.

Againe: the loue of parents towards their children is so naturall and ordinarie, that there is lesse need to put parents in minde of their dutie. But contrariwise children are not vsually so dutifull to their parents (as the x Schoole speakes) Amor descendit, non ascendit, benefactor plus diligit quàm beneficiatus; and therefor it was necessary to admonish them of their loue: neither is God content with a bare precept, but hath adioyned a promise, That thy daies may be long, for there is no reason he should inioy long life, who dishonoureth those of whom he receiued life: but if God shorten the dayes of dutifull children, and in stead of long life giue them euerlasting life; he doth not breake, but keepe his promise: for he doth promise long life, not absolutely, but so farre forth as it is a blessing; that it may be well with thee: and that thou mayest liue long on earth, Ephes. 6. 3.

The 6. Commandement.

THe negatiue part forbiddeth all euill, and that is committed against our neighbour three y waies: In { Thought. Word. Deed.

But because bad deeds are worse then bad words, and bad words worse then bad thoughts, it pleased the God of order first to forbid bad deeds: Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not commit adulterie, Thou shalt not steale. Then bad words: Thou shalt not beare false witnesse. Last of all, bad thoughts: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, &c.

All our bad deeds against our neighbours concerne his { Life, Thou shalt not kill. Honor, Thou shalt not commit adulterie. Goods, Thou shalt not steale.

Thou shalt not kill.] To wit, a man: for to kill other liuing things is not forbidden: and the reason is plaine, because they were created for man, and so man is master of their life. But one man was not created for another man, but for God: and therefore not man, but only God is master of our life: for a Magistrate doth not put malefactors to death as master of their life, but as a z Minister of God: and so by consequence not murther, but an act of iustice, a Such as strike with the sword, shall perish with the sword: b that is, such as take the sword vpon their owne authoritie: Dominus iusserat, vt ferrum discipuli ferrent, non vt ferirent. But if God put a sword into their hand, then they may, then they must strike. In a word, killing is vniust, when either it is done without authoritie, or by publike authoritie vpon priuate grudge; non amore iustitiæ, sed libidine vindictæ. Concerning inward rancour and outward disdaine, in deed, word, or gesture, see the Gospell Dom. 6. post Trin.

The ſeuenth Commandement.

IN this Commandent are forbidden [c] all vnchaſte luſts, as well burning [d] within, as breaking forth,

Into { Allurements, { Ribald talke: Epheſ.4.29. / Wanton lookes: Gen.6.2.39.7. / Laſciuious attire: Eſay 3.16. } / Acts of vncleanneſſe. }

Acts of vncleanneſſe, vnnaturall: as { Committing filthineſſe with { A man of the ſame ſex: Rom.1.27. / A beaſt: Leuit.18.23. / [e] A Deuill: as Witches doe by their owne confeſſion. }

Naturall; { Adulterie: when both, or one of the parties are married: Deut. 22.22. / Fornication: betweene ſingle perſons: as { Deflouring of virgins: Deut.22.28. / Hunting of common whores: 1 Cor. 10.8. } / Inceſt: with ſuch as be within the degrees of conſanguinitie or affinitie prohibited in law: Leuit.18.6. }

Sinne in this kinde is more dangerous, then in another, becauſe a man can hardly repent heartily for it. The murtherer, and ſwearer, and theefe become many times exceeding ſorrowfull after the fact: but the wanton (as [f] Hierome notes) euen in the middeſt of his repentance ſinneth afreſh: the very conceit of his old pleaſure doth occaſion a new fault: ſo that when his deuotion ends, hee preſently begins to repent that he did repent. Example hereof Auguſtine, who being in the heat of his youth (as himſelfe [g] writes of himſelfe) begged of God earneſtly the gift of continencie: but, ſaith he, to tell the truth, I was afraid leſt he ſhould heare me too ſoone: Malebam enim expleri concupiſcentiam quàm extingui See the Goſpell. Dom.15.poſt.Trin.

The eighth Commandement.

THis ouerthroweth [h] Anabaptiſticall and Platonicall communitie; for if al things ought to be common, and nothing proper in poſſeſſion, how can one man ſteale from another? All lawes of giuing, buying, ſelling, leaſing, letting, lending, are vaine, ſi teneant omnes omnia, nemo ſuum.

A man may tranſgreſſe this Commandement in being a theefe { To himſelfe, in ſpending { Too much. / Too little. } / To other. }

Too much { Waſting more then he ſhould in gameing, diet, brauery; ſuch are arrant cutpurſes vnto themſelues. / Getting leſſe then he ſhould: Ignaui & prodigi ſunt fures, ſaith [i] Melanæthon. }

As a ſpend-all, ſo a get-nothing is a theefe to his eſtate: Pouertie comes vpon him as an armed man: Prouerbs 24.34. An idle perſon is pouerties priſoner, if he liue without a calling, pouertie hath a calling to arreſt him.

He that ſpends too little on himſelfe, as the couetous wretch, is a robber of himſelfe alſo, [k] Corpus extenuat, vt lucrum extendat: He keepes his belly thin, that his purſe may be full, he [l] cannot afford himſelfe ſo much as an egge, leſt he ſhould kill a chicke whereas a poore man doth want many things, a rich miſer wants euery thing: like Tantalus vp to the chin in water, and yet thirſtie. Secretly, which is properly called ſtealing. And this offence is manifold, for there is not only theft of the hand, but of the heart, and tongue.

[m] Lamberts Perambulatiõ of Kent, p. 27.

Couetous greedineſſe is theft in heart: for howſoeuer it be a maxime in our Law, [n] Voluntas non reputabitur pro facto, niſi in cauſa proditionis: ſed exitus in maleficys ſpectatur, & non voluntas duntaxat; yet it is a breach of this Law, couetouſly to deſire that which is not ours, albeit we ſeeke not to get it wrongfully. Their hearts, ſaith [o] Peter, are exerciſed in conetouſneſſe: and [p] Chryſoſtome plainly, The couetous man is a very theefe: fur & latro. The [q] fathers of the law write that theeues are called felones, of our antient word fell or fierce; becauſe they commit this ſinne with a cruell, fell, and miſchieuous minde: teaching vs hereby that a felonious intent is a principall in theeuery.

So flatterers and paraſites are great theeues in Court and Countrie: not onely dominorum ſuorum arriſores, ſed etiam arroſores: and therefore let a flatterer be in your Pater noſter, but not in your Creed: pray for him, but truſt him no more then a theefe.

Frauds in buying and ſelling are reduced to ſtealing, becauſe he that vſeth ſuch deceits, ſecretly taketh of his neighbour more then his due: but oppreſſions and vniuſt extortions are reduced by Diuines vnto robberie, becauſe the cruell tyrant exacteth more then his owne manifeſtly: not to pay debts, is reduced vnto both: vnto robbery, when a man to the great hinderance of his neighbour can and will not: vnto ſtealing, when he partly will and cannot: I ſay will partly; for if he deſire wholly with all his heart to pay the vtmoſt farthing, God aſſuredly will accept of votall reſtitution, as well as of actuall: and it is not a ſinne, though it be a ſore.

The ninth Commandement.

NExt the prohibition of iniuries in deed, follow the wrongs againſt our neighbour in word: Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe: and that fitly, becauſe, [u] lying is coſen germane to ſtealing. [x] Damihi mendacem, & ego oſtendam tibi furem: If thou wilt ſhew me a lyar, I will ſhew thee a theefe.

Beſide lies: euery thing whereby the credit of our neighbour is impaired, eſpecially thoſe three ſinnes of the tongue: { Contumely. Detractation. Curſing.

A contumely is an iniurious word, ſpoken with an iniurious minde, to the diſhonour of our neighbour: I ſay with an iniurious intent, otherwiſe when it is vttered by way of aduice to direct or correct, as a father ſometime ſpeaketh to his childe, or a maſter to his ſcholler, or a Paſtor to his people, as Paul: [z] Ye fooliſh Galathians: out of ſome heat, but yet not out of any hate, then it is no contumelie or ſinne.

[z] Gal. 3. 1.

Or in merriment, not in malice: (There is a time to [a] laugh) and ſo by conſequence a time to ieſt: when a wittie conceit may profit and adminiſter grace to the hearer. He that ſaid the Duke of Guiſe was the greateſt vſurer in France, be-

cauſe he turned all his eſtate into obligations, hereby gaue this honeſt aduice, that if he ſhould leaue himſelfe nothing, but onely haue many followers bound to him for his large gifts, in concluſion he ſhould finde a number of bad debtors. He that called his friend theefe, becauſe he had ſtollen away his loue, did not wrong, but commend him.

It is lawfull alſo to ieſt at the vanities of irreligious men, enemies to God and his Goſpell: as [b] Eliah did at the foppiſh idolatry of Baals Prieſts. A friend of mine ſaid of an vpſtart galliant in Court with a gingling ſpur, that he had a Church on his backe, and the bels on his heeles.

Euery lay-Papiſt muſt beleeue as the Church beleeues, albeit he know not what the Church beleeueth: he muſt alſo worſhip the conſecrated bread, and yet knoweth not whether it be conſecrated or no: [c] for to the conſecration of the hoſt, the Prieſts intention is required, which no man knowes but God, and himſelfe. So that if a man tell his popiſh acquaintance that he is a blinde buffe, to worſhip and beleeue he knowes not what, it were no contumelie; becauſe it did proceed out of zeale to God, and loue to him; onely to rectifie his error, and not to vilifie his perſon.

The ſecond fault reduced to falſe witneſſe is detractation, in ſpeaking euill of our neighbour: and it is done by reporting that which is falſe, and ſometime by telling that which is true, but ſecret: whereby the credit of our neighbour is leſſened with thoſe, to whom his ſinne was not knowne before: for as a man may flatter in abſence, namely when either the vertue is abſent, or the occaſion, and ſo the praiſe is not kindly, but forced either in truth, or in time: ſo likewiſe a man may ſlander his neighbour in ſpeaking the truth vnſeaſonably, without diſcretion out of time and place. A tale toſſed from mouth to mouth increaſeth as a ſnow-ball, which being little at the firſt, groweth to a great quantitie.

Now the backbiter is bound in reaſon and religion to reſtore the good name of his neighbour, which he by detractation hath taken away; and that is exceeding hard, for a mans honeſt fame is like the Merchants wealth, got in many yeeres, and loſt in an houre. Wherefore ſpeake well of all men alwaies, if it may be done with truth: and when it cannot, then be ſilent: or elſe interrupt euill detractation with other meet and merry communication, as [d] Sampſon at his mariage feaſt propounded a riddle to his friends, [e] hereby to ſtop the mouthes of backbiters, and to occupie their wits another way. Bernard excellently, The tale-bearer hath the deuill in his tongue, the receiuer in his eare.

The theefe doth ſend one only to the deuill, the adulterer two: but the ſlanderer hurteth three; himſelfe, the partie to whom, and the partie of whom he telleth the tale. Ter homicida (ſaith [f] Luther) vno ictu tres occidit: & vnus eſt qui loquitur, & vnum tantum verbum profert, & tamen illud vnum verbum vno in momento, multitudinis audientium dum aures inficit, animas interficit.

The third fault is maledi ction: a grieuous [h] offence, when it is ſpoken with hatred and a deſire that ſuch euill come vpon our neighbour: but when it is vttered vpon ſome ſuddaine diſdaine, without regard to that we ſpeake, it is leſſe euill, yet for all that alwayes euill: becauſe from the mouth of a Chriſtian, who is the childe of God by adoption, nothing ought to paſſe but [i] benediction.

The tenth Commandement.

THe former precepts intend thoughts and deſires, as well as act and practiſe: for the Law-giuer is a ſpirit, and therefore muſt be worſhipped in ſpirit: yet leſt we ſhould pretend ignorance, God in this Commandement giueth eſpeciall order for them. Or as [k] other; The former precepts did condemne the ſetled thought to do miſchiefe: but this, euen the firſt inclination and motion to ſinne, though a man neuer conſent, but ſnib it in the beginning: Rom. 7. 7. Thou ſhalt not luſt or deſire.

[k] Melanthon, & Caluin. Cat.

Now

Now we ſinne three wayes in this kinde:
1. By coueting the goods of our neighbour, Immoueable: as his land and houſe. Moueable: as his oxe and aſſe, &c.
2. By coueting his wife.
3. By plotting treaſon, and murther.

To couet his goods is againſt his profit, which is deare to him: to couet his wife is againſt his honour, which ought to be more deare: to couet his blood is againſt his life, which of all worldly things is moſt deare.

Whereas it is obiected, that deſire of murther is not forbidden in particular, as the deſire of theft and adulterie: for the Commaddement ſaith, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours houſe, thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbour wife: but it is not ſaid, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours blood. Anſwer is made, that a man doth not deſire any thing principally, but that which bringeth him ſome [1] good, at leaſt in appearance. And ſo he deſireth adulterie, becauſe it bringeth delight: he deſireth theft, for that it bringeth profit: but murther bringeth no good at all: and therefore it is not deſired for it ſelfe, but onely to attaine to theft, or adultery, or ſome ſuch deſignement.

So that God hauing forbidden expreſly the diſordinat deſires of delectation & gaine, conſequently forbade deſires of murther, which is not coueted but for vnlawfull profit and pleaſure. Thus perfect righteouſneſſe is fulfilled when wee wrong not our neighbour either in deed, or in word, or deſire: but contrariwiſe doe good vnto all, ſpeake well and thinke charitably of all.

Now the reaſon why the Church appoints the Decalogue to be read at the Communion, is euident: namely, becauſe the Law is a [m] ſchoolemaſter vnto Chriſt; teaching vs to [n] know ſin, and by knowing of ſinne to know our ſelues, and knowing our ſelues to renounce our ſelues, as of our ſelues vnable to doe any [o] thing, and ſo come to Chriſt, who doth ſtrengthen vs to doe all [p] things. Almightie God (ſaith [q] Luther) hath written his Law not ſo much to forbid offences to come, as to make men acknowledge their ſinnes already paſt, and now preſent: that beholding themſelues in the Lawes glaſſe, they may diſcerne their owne imperfections, and ſo flie to Chriſt, who hath fulfilled the Law, and taken away the ſinnes of the whole world. For (as the [r] reformed Churches of Scotland and Geneua ſpeake) the end of our comming to the Lords Table, is not to make proteſtation that we are iuſt, and vpright in our liues: but contrariwiſe we come to ſeeke our life and perfection in Ieſus Chriſt: being aſſuredly perſwaded that the Lord requireth on our part no other worthineſſe, but vnfainedly to confeſſe our vnworthineſſe. So that (our enemies being Iudges) it is well ordered that the Commandements are rehearſed in the miniſtration of this holy Sacrament. Let the Nouelliſts here bluſh, who [f] calumniouſly cenſure our Church for omitting in the [t] proeme of the Decalogue one halfe line: when as themſelues in their owne Communion Bookes haue left out all the whole Law. This indeed occaſioned me to remember an obſeruation of [u] Comminaus vpon the battell of Montlechery, that ſome loſt their offices for running away, which were beſtowed vpon other that fled ten leagues further. Hypocrite, firſt caſt out the beame out of thine owne eye; and then ſhalt thou ſee clearely to caſt out the mote out of thy brotehrs eye.

Let your light ſo ſhine before men, &c.

THe Lords Supper is called a ſacrifice by the learned ancient Doctors in foure reſpects:

Firſt, becauſe it is a repreſentation and memoriall of Chriſts ſacrifice on the Croſſe: 1 Cor. 11. 26. As often as yee ſhall eat this bread, and drinke this cup, yee ſhew ſhew the Lords death vntill he come. So [x] S. Ambroſe, Chriſt is daily ſacrificed in the mindes of beleeuers, as vpon an altar: Semel in cruce, quotidie in ſacramento, ſaith [y] Lombard.

Secondly, becauſe in this action we offer praiſe and thankeſgiuing vnto God, for the redemption of the world; and this is the ſacrifice of our lips, Heb.13.15.

Thirdly, becauſe euery Communicant doth offer and preſent himſelfe bodie and ſoule, a liuing, holy, acceptable ſacrifice to the Lord, Rom.12.1. The which excels the ſacrifices of the Prieſts in old time; for they did offer dead ſacrifices, but we preſent our ſelues a [z] liuely ſacrifice to God.

Fourthly, becauſe it was a [a] cuſtome in the Primitiue Church at the receiuing of this bleſſed Sacrament to giue large contribution vnto the poore, a ſacrifice well accepted of God, Hebr.13.16. Now the Church allowing and following this good old cuſtome, ſtirres vp the people to giue cheerefully by repeating ſome one or two choice ſentences of Scripture beſt fitting this occaſion, as Matth.6.19. Matth.7.12.&c.

Theſe kinds of oblation are our Churches offertorie, and vnbloudie ſacrifices [b] offered by the whole Congregation vnto the Lord: ſo farre differing from popiſh ſacrificing, as S. Pauls in London, is from S. Peters in Rome.

1 Cor. 11. 28.

THe ſumme of the Miniſters exhortation before the Communion, is contained in theſe words of Paul: Let a man therefore examine himſelfe, and ſo let him eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup.

Wherein obſerue two points: { A preparation, Let a man examine, &c. / A participation, and ſo let him eat, &c.

In the firſt note the { Parties, { Examining, a man, that is, euery man. / Examined, himſelfe. } / Parts. }

Beza tranſlates, and [c] Eraſmus expounds ἄνθρωπος, quiſque: ſo the word is vſed, Iohn 3.27. A man can receiue nothing except it be giuen him from heauen: and Ioh. 7.46. Neuer man ſpake like this. A man then in this place ſignifieth euery man, ſubiect, Soueraigne, Prieſt, people. The which obſeruation ouerthroweth vtterly [d] Romiſh implicite faith. Euery lay-man ought to turne Confeſſor, and examiner, endued with ſufficient knowledge for this heauenly buſineſſe: he muſt looke not onely thorow the ſpectacles of the Prieſt, but alſo ſee with his owne eyes, able to try himſelfe.

Himſelfe] For that is the dutie; not another, for that is a fault. We muſt not be [e] buſie Biſhops in other mens Dioceſſes, but meddle with our [f] owne buſineſſe: we muſt not breake our neighbours head with the Phariſie, but ſmite our owne breaſt with the Publican.

[g] S. Auguſtine complained of men in his time, that they were Curioſi ad cognoſcendum vitam alienam, deſidioſi ad corrigendam ſuam: and reuerend [h] Hooker, of men in our time, that their vertue is nothing but to heare gladly the reproofe of others vice: like Taylors, who meaſure; like Barbars, who cut all other except themſelues. But [i] our Sauiour Chriſt would not haue vs to gaze on the mote in our brothers eye; but rather to pull out the beame in our owne ſight. And his Apoſtle here not to prie into other, but to try our ſelues; not but that others according to their ſeuerall charge, muſt examine other, as Parents muſt examine their children, Exod.12.26,27. and Maſters muſt examine their houſhold, Gen. 18.19. and Paſtors muſt examine their Pariſhioners, as here Paul corrected and directed the Corinthians: and for this cauſe the names of all Communicants are to bee ſent vnto the Miniſter, that there may bee made tryall of all

Parents,

Parents, and Maſters, and Miniſters omit this examination, euery one muſt bee both able and willing to proue himſelfe.

The parts of examination are concerning the { Manner. / Matter.

For the manner a tryall is to be made { Vprightly. / Neceſſarily.

The former is implied in the word Examine: which notes a diligent and exact enquirie, ſuch as Lapidaries and Goldſmiths vſe to finde out true mettall from counterfeit, good from bad. As the [k] Shunamite ſought for Eliſha, [l] Marie for Chriſt, the woman for her [m] loſt groat: ſo we muſt ſearch as if wee would finde, ſearch vntill we finde. Many men examine their bad manners, as they doe their bad money, ſeeke as if they would not ſee, ſearch as if they would not vnderſtand. They decline ſinne through all the caſes (as [n] one notes) In Nominatiuo per ſuperbiam, in Genetiuo per luxuriam, in Datiuo per ſimoniam, in Accuſatiuo per detractationem, in Vocatiuo per adulationem, in Ablatiuo per rapinam: and yet they will not acknowledge their ſinnes in any caſe. When other mens examination hath found them out, excuſes are ready: [o] Non feci: ſi feci, non malè feci: ſi malè feci, non multum malè: ſi multum malè, non mala intentione; aut ſi mala intentione, tamen aliena perſuaſione. Wherefore as the [p] Prophet ſaid, If ye will aske a queſtion, aske it indeed: ſo if yee will examine your ſelues, examine earneſtly, throughly, vprightly. For examination muſt bee made neceſſarily. This we may gather out of the word therefore: whoſoeuer ſhall eat this bread, and drinke the cup of the Lord vnworthily, ſhall be guiltie of the bodie and blood of the Lord: Let a man therfore, &c.

Tryall of our ſelues then is neceſſarie, both in reſpect of our { Dutie. / Danger, if we neglect this dutie.

In reſpect of our dutie: for Chriſt in his firſt inſtitution vſed a commanding terme, Doe this. [q] Doe this in remembrance of me: ſo that it is not in our choice to doe it, or not to doe it. If any be not fit, hee muſt endeuour to make himſelfe fit: and the way to make fit, is examination: Let a man examine himſelfe therfore, &c.

Secondly, triall is neceſſary in regard of the danger, if we receiue the Lords Supper vnworthily.

Danger in reſpect of { The ſinne: verſe 27. / The puniſhment for this ſinne in { Generall: verſe 29. / Particular: verſe 30.

Now the matters in which euery Communicant muſt be examined, are ſummarily two: { Faith. / Repentance.

Theſe two (like Hippocrates twins) muſt goe together hand in hand. For there is no true repentance without faith, nor liuely faith without repentance. [r] B. Latimer ſaid well, Lady Faith is a great ſtate, hauing a Gentleman Vſher going before her, called agnitio peccatorum, and [s] great traine following after her, which are the good workes of our calling. He that ſaith he doth repent, when as he doth not beleeue, receiues the Sacrament ignorantly: and he that ſaith hee doth beleeue, when as he doth not repent, receiues the Sacrament irreuerently: both vnworthily.

The parts of Faith are { Knowledge. / Application.

Euery Communicant ought to know the three generall points of holy Religion: namely, mans
- Generation, how he was created according to [f] Gods image in [t] holineſſe and righteouſneſſe.
- Degeneration, how he fell from that eſtate, and all his [u] poſteritie with him.
- Regeneration, how hee was againe [x] reſtored and recreated by Chriſts paſſion, of which this Sacrament is a ſigne and ſeale.

In more particular, euery Communicant muſt vnderſtand the number and nature of the Sacraments. Our Sauiour Chriſt ordained in his Church onely two Sacraments, as [y] generally neceſſarie to ſaluation, that is to ſay, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord. Baptiſme is a Sacrament of initiation and inſition, aſſuring the firſt receiuing into the couenant of grace: whereby men are matriculated and [z] admitted into the congregation, and made members of Chriſt. For this cauſe the ſacred Font is placed at the very doore and entrance into the Church: but the Communion is a Sacrament of confirmation, to ſtrengthen our faith, and cheriſh grace receiued: and therefore the Lords Table by good order is placed in the beſt and higheſt roome of the Church. [a] Baptiſme muſt be receiued of one but once, becauſe we cannot be borne twice, one beginning in Chriſtianitie is enough: but the Lords Supper often, becauſe we need daily to be nouriſhed in the faith of Chriſt: once borne, fed alway.

[a] Ram. de relig. lib. 4. cap. 8.

The nature of this Sacrament is made knowne by the names in holy writ giuen vnto it:

Whereof I note principally two: the { Lords [b] Supper. / [c] Communion.

A Supper in regard of the { [d] Time, being inſtituted in the night that Chriſt was betraied, as his farewell token. / Things, becauſe it is a holy feaſt (as Auguſtine ſaid) Non dentis, ſed mentis: not ſo toothſome, as wholeſome: not corporall meat, but ſpirituall Manna.

The Lords Supper in three reſpects: { 1. Becauſe it was ordained by the Lord: 1. Cor. 11. 23. / 2 Becauſe it was inſtituted in remembrance of the Lord: Luke 22. 19. / 3. Becauſe it was in the Primitiue Church vſually receiued on the Lords day: Acts 20. 7.

[b] 1. Cor. 11. 20.
[c] 1. Cor. 10. 16.
[d] Matt. 26. 20.

It is called a Communion in reſpect of the common vnion among our ſelues, hauing at that time more ſpecially perfect peace with all men: or a Communion in reſpect of the [e] publike participation, as being a common meſſe, not a priuate Maſſe proper to one, as the Popiſh Prieſts vſe it; or a Communion, as being a ſigne and ſeale of our communion with Chriſt: for his graces are conueyed vnto vs by the preaching of the Word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments.

Hence the Sacraments (as [f] Paſchaſius obſerues) haue their name. Sacramenta dicuntur à ſecreto, eò quòd in re viſibili diuinitas intus aliquid vltra ſecretius efficit. In the words of our [g] Church: Sacraments are viſible ſignes of inuiſible grace, ordained of God as badges and ſure witneſſes of his good will towards vs. It is meet euery Chriſtian ſhould vnderſtand theſe and the like plaine principles of holy faith: but [h] exact knowledge to diſcuſſe controuerted points about the Sacraments is not required: according to that of Chryſoſtome, The table of the Lord is not prepared for chattering Iayes: but for high-towring Eagles, who flie thither where the dead body lyeth. It is not for ſubtle Sophiſters, but for ſimple beleeuers aſcending vp to Chriſt vpon the wings of faith, and therefore the Communicant muſt not onely know, but apply that in particular, which he beleeueth in generall: as that Chriſts body was crucified for him, and his bloud ſhed for him. He that vnderſtands, and beleeues, and applies theſe things, examineth his faith as he ſhould.

In our repentance we muſt examine two points eſpecially: to wit, our { Contrition for ſinne paſt. / Reſolution to preuent, ſo farre as wee can, all ſinne to come.

For the firſt, Pœnitentia eſt quaſi [i] punientia. Pœnitere (ſaith [k] Auguſtine) is pœnam tenere.

We muſt therefore weepe with Peter, and water our couch with Dauid, and put on ſackcloth with Niniueh: nay, we muſt [l] rent our heart. For a broken [m] ſpirit is an acceptable ſacrifice to the Lord. O [n] magnum donum, quod in pœnam dedit, in ſalutem vertit : peccatum triſtitiam peperit, triſtitia peccatum contriuit. As the worme bred in the tree deuoures the tree: ſo ſorrow brought into the world by ſinne, doth ouerthrow ſinne: ſo good is God to turne curſes into bleſſings, and griefe into grace. If thy heart be not throughly touched for ſinne, become ſorrie becauſe thou art no more ſorrie: reſolue to be more reſolued. For (as one wittily) factum infectum, ſi non ſit cor affectum. If Ioſeph of Arimathea wrapped the body of Chriſt in [o] cleane linnen, how dareſt thou receiue it with an vncleane ſoule? [p] If thou wilt not kiſſe a Princes hand with a foule mouth, eat not the Lords body with a foule minde. Let a man therefore examine himſelfe, &c. And ſo let him eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup. Hauing thus examined examination, I come now to the participation.

[p] Church Hom concerning the Sacraments. part. 2.

And ſo let him eat, &c.] Of which words I purpoſe to ſpeake firſt ioyntly, then ſeuerally. Conſidered ioyntly, they confute three popiſh concluſions, as firſt, the reſeruation, eleuation, circumgeſtation, adoration of the bread. Our Apoſtle ſaith here plainely, that the bread muſt be taken and eaten: [q] Ergo, not to be reſerued, nor carried about, nor lifted vp, nor kept in a boxe to bee worſhipped.

Secondly, to take, to eat, to taſte, to drinke, to doe this in remembrance of Chriſt, are actions of the liuing, onely pertaining to the liuing: and therefore the Papiſts are deceiued, holding the Maſſe to bee a propitiatory ſacrifice both for the quicke and the dead. How can the dead eat or drinke, taſte or take? [r] Ergo, neither the dutie nor the benefit belongs vnto them, but onely to thoſe aliue; who firſt examine themſelues, and after eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup.

Thirdly, the coniunction of theſe two: Let him eat of this bread and drinke of this cup, abundantly proues, that both parts of the Lords Supper ought to be miniſtred vnto all: Ergo, the Papiſts in denying the cup vnto the Laitie, wrong both God and his people, by defrauding them of this comfort. As euery one muſt examine, ſo euery one both eat, and drinke: not onely drinke, and not eat; or eat, and not drinke: but both eat, and drinke. Chriſt foreſeeing this Papiſticall error, ſaid in his firſt inſtitution, Drinke ye [s] all of it: he tooke the bread and ſaid onely, take, eat, indefinitely: [t] but when he tooke the cup, hee did adde an vniuerſall note, Bibite omnes, Drinke ye, drinke all ye.

[t] Caluin. & Marlorat. in loc. Mat.

We conclude therefore with [u] Cyprian, Adulterum eſt, impium eſt, ſacrilegum eſt, quodcunq; humano furore inſtituitur, vt diſpoſitio diuina violetur. Chriſt is the truth, and the way to the truth: Ergo, [x] non aliud fiat à nobis, quàm quod pro nobis prior fecit. Thus much of the words ioyntly. Now of euery one ſeuerally.

And ſo] Let there be firſt preparation, and then participation: when a man is thus examined, let him thus eat. Let him eat: The which are not words of permiſſion, onely leauing it to his choice, whether he will eat or not eat: but they are words of Pauls commiſſion, inſinuating that he muſt eat neceſſarily, not vpon cuſtome, but vpon conſcience. For it is not ſaid here, let him, if he haue no let at home, or occaſion of abſence abroad: if he be neither diſpleaſed with his Paſtor, nor angry with the people: but let him (without all let) examine, and then let him (without all let) eat of this bread. Eat: [y] Chriſt in his firſt inſtitution hath, take and eat. Firſt take, then eate: take not onely into your mouthes, but into your hands: [z] hereby repreſenting the ſoule and faith: for the taking of the bread and wine into our hand, ſealeth our apprehenſion of Chriſt by the finger of faith: Iohn 1.12. As many as receiued him, to them he gaue power to be the ſonnes of God: euen to them that beleeued in his name. Eating of the bread, and drinking of the wine, ſealeth our application of Chriſt incorporated into vs myſtically, 1. Cor. 10.16. For by the ſtrength of Faith we chew the cud, as it were, and make Chriſt our owne. Yet herein obſerue a great difference betweene corporall food and this heauenly bread: for the one digeſted is made like vs, but the other receiued into our ſoule maketh vs [a] like it. This action then of taking is very ſignificant, and therefore I ſee no reaſon why the Prieſt altering Chriſts ordinance, ordinance, ſhould giue the bread into the peoples mouth onely, not into their hand. Firſt, the word λαβεῖν ſignifieth properly to take with the hand. Secondly, it is againſt the rules of common ciuilitie, that men of diſcretion, ſuch as Communicants ought to be, ſhould be fed like children, hauing their meat put into their mouth. Thirdly, if this taking be not conſtrued of the hand, but of the mouth, there is an idle repetition and plaine Tautologie in the words of Chriſt: for eating notes orall receiuing, and therefore taking muſt imply manuall receiuing. Fourthly, it was the cuſtome of the Primitiue Church, as we read in [b] Euſebius and [c] Cyril. How wilt thou (ſaith [d] Ambroſe to Theodoſius) receiue the Lords body with a bloudy hand?

The [e] Papiſts anſwer, that the Church altered this cuſtome, becauſe ſome reſerued the bread for Magicall ſpels, and ſuperſtitious vſes. A ſilly ſhift, for no abuſe can take away the vſe of that which is ſimply good. The Bible muſt bee read, albeit ſome [f] peruert it to their deſtruction: the Word of God muſt bee preached, howſoeuer it be vnto ſome the ſauor of [g] death vnto death: and ſo the bread according to Chriſts inſtitution muſt be taken, albeit haply ſome keepe it to wicked and idolatrous purpoſes.

This Bread] The nice diſtinguiſhing of the Schoole is like the pilling of an onyon; they pull off ſo many skinnes, vntill at laſt there is no skinne. They turne and toſſe the words of Chriſts inſtitution, Hoc eſt corpus meum, ſo long, till they bring all that Chriſt ſaid & did at his laſt Supper vnto nothing. For ſo we read in their [h] Gloſſe, that hoc doth ſignifie nothing. Omnipotent creatures! who make of ſomething nothing: and againe of this nothing ſomething; yea Chriſt, who made all things: for by pronouncing of theſe words, hoc eſt corpus meum, they make their Maker, a dozen gods at once whith one ſentence. This, is a Pronoune demonſtratiue, non indiuiduum vagum, any thing, or a nothing. [i] Stephen Gardiner herein forgat his Grammar and Logicke too. For hoc, doth determine, and muſt, as Paul teacheth, and the circumſtances of the Goſpell import, be reſtrained vnto the bread. Ieſus tooke the bread, and when he had giuen thankes, he brake (no doubt the bread) that he tooke, and gaue to the Diſciples the ſelfe-ſame that he brake, ſaying, Take ye, eat ye this that I giue you, this is my Body. What This could our Sauiour meane, but This that he gaue, This that he brake, This that he tooke? which by the witneſſe of truth it ſelfe was bread. If the Papiſts imagine that he tooke bread, but brake it not: or brake it, but gaue it not: they make the Lords Supper a [k] merry ieſt, where the latter end ſtarteth from the beginning, and the middle from them both. Either they muſt diſſent manifeſtly from the propoſition of Chriſt, and expoſition of Paul, from all the Fathers, and ſome of their owne [l] followers: or elſe admit our interpretation, This bread is my body: and if we reſolue the words of Chriſt ſo, they cannot be proper, but figuratiue; This bread is the ſigne and ſeale of my body.

Bread.] It pleaſed our Sauiour to make bread the outward element in this holy Sacrament, for the manifold analogies betweene it and his body. Firſt, as bread is the [m] ſtrength and ſtate of our naturall life: ſo Chriſt is for our ſpirituall, being [n] all in all.

Secondly, as bread is loathed of the full ſtomacke, but moſt acceptable to the hungry ſoule; ſo Chriſt is moſt welcome vnto ſuch as [o] hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſſe.

Thirdly, as bread is vſuall and daily; ſo Chriſt ſhould be to the Chriſtian, feeding on that bread which came downe from [p] heauen, the ſoules ordinary refection.

Fourthly, as bread is made one loafe of many graines; ſo [q] we that are many are one bread, and one body, becauſe we are all partakers of one bread.

baked with extreme heat in the ouen, and all this, that it may be fit meat for our body; so Christ in his ripe age was cut downe by cruell death, his body was whipped, his flesh rent asunder, his soule was as it were [f] melted in the fiery furnace of Gods anger: and all this, that he might become food for our soule; that we might eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup. Sursum Corda.

[y] Sursum Corda seemes to be taken out of the Lamentations of Ieremy: Cap. 3. ver 14. Leuemus corda nostra cum manibus ad Dominum in cœlos: vsed in the Church at least 300. yeares before Popery was knowne in the world. For Augustine who liued within [z] 400. yeares after Christ, and the blessed Martyr Cyprian, who died [a] an. 259 make mention of it in their writings often: Cyprian in [b] ser. de orat dominic. Augustine de [c] vera religione, cap. 3. and epist. 156. and (as [d] Cassander obserues) epist. ad Dardan, & lib. de bono perseuerantiæ. Sursum corda then is no rag of Rome, no peece of Popery, but vsed in [e] all Liturgies of the ancient Church; and that which may content the Nouelist most, it was borrowed (as Master [f] Fox thinkes) not from the Latine, but from the Greeke Churches. Howsoeuer, it is exceeding fit: for Almighty God in his holy seruice requires our heart principally, [g] Son giue me thy heart: so that when we come to his Temple, specially to his table, euery one must say with [h] Dauid, I lift vp my soule to thee. For as the Church of [i] Scotland truly) the only way to receiue worthily the Lords Supper, is to lift vp our minds by faith aboue all things worldly and sensible, and thereby to enter into heauen, that we may finde and receiue Christ, where he dwelleth, a point well vrged also by our Church: Hom. concerning the worthy receiuing of the Sacrament: part the first.

The Papists entertaine this clause still in the Roman Missale, but it makes against their reall presence. For if Christs body, [k] so large in quantitie, as it was on the Crosse, be present in the Sacrament; what need any man lift vp his heart, when as he holds it in his hand Totum hoc (saith [l] Augustine) fide tenemus, oculis cordis intuemur; Dominus ascendit in cœlum, ascendat cum illo cor nostrum. His body [m] must be contained in heauen vntill the time that all things are restored: it cannot descend downe to vs, we must ascend vp to it. So Nicolaus Cabasilla writes in his exposition of the [n] Liturgie; the Priest after some speech to the people doth erect their minds, and lift vp their thoughts, and saith, Sursum corda: let vs thinke on things aboue, not on things below. They consent and say, that they lift vp their hearts thither, where their treasure is, euen to heauen, where Christ sits at the right hand of his Father.

Luke 2.14. Glory be to God on high.

THe Lords Supper is called an Eucharist, because it is a thanksgiuing to God, for giuing his Sonne to die for vs: and therefore this Hymne is so fitly sung by men on earth at the commemoration of his death, as it was by the Quier of Heauen at the celebration of his birth: for our reconciliation and peace with God,

God, is aſcribed in holy Scripture to Chriſts paſſion eſpecially: Rom. 5.10. Heb. 9.12.15.

Some make [o] three parts of this ſong, which (if you pleaſe) call the { Trebble, Glory to God on high. / Baſſe, Peace on earth. / [p] Meane, Good will toward men.

Other haue diuided it into two: { The firſt, concerning Gods glory. / The ſecond, touching our good.

[q] For peace on earth, and good will toward men are both one: becauſe our peace with God is not from our good will toward him: but altogether from his good will toward vs. It is God (ſaith [r] Paul) that maketh in you both the will and the worke: and therefore the Rhemiſh tranſlation In earth peace, to men of good will: and the Romiſh Gloſſe, that Chriſt brings no peace, but to ſuch as be of good will, are inſufficient, and condemned euen by their owne mouth: as we may reade in the Commentaries of Arboreus, Caietan, Ianſenius, Maldonatus vpon the place. Concerning other ſcholiall, or ſcholaſticall obſeruations vpon the Text, I referre the Reader vnto Beauxamis, Eraſmus, Caluin, and other learned expoſitors; eſpecially to Iacobus Perez de Valentia, who compiled a whole treatiſe on this Hymne.

It was firſt vſed in the Communion (as it is thought) by [s] Theleſphorus a good man, and a [t] glorious Martyr, anno [u] 254. Ianuar. 5. That which followeth in our Comunion Booke, We praiſe thee, we bleſſe thee, was added by that famous Biſhop [x] Hilary: ſinging it firſt in his owne Church, anno, [y] 340. and after brought into the Churches by Pope Symmachus, anno 510. the Churches of Scotland vſe the like forme of thankes at their Communion. And therefore the Noueliſt can miſlike nothing in this Hymne, but that which all other like moſt, Antiquitie.

2. Cor. 13.13.

The grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, &c.

THe [z] two fiends that torment vs, are ſinne, and a bad conſcience: grace releaſeth ſinne: peace doth quiet the conſcience. Paul therefore begins his Epiſtles with grace and peace: and the Church ends her deuotions either with the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, &c. or with the peace of God which paſſeth all vnderſtanding, &c. But becauſe there can be no peace with God, except we haue the grace of Chriſt: firſt and chiefly Paul deſireth grace, then peace: Rom. 1.7. Grace be with you and peace. Becauſe (I ſay) grace comprehends in it euery good and perfect gift, [a] by which onely, we are whatſoeuer we are; Paul doth not only begin, but end his writings alſo with this one clauſe ſpecially, Grace be with you, &c. But aboue the reſt, the concluſion of this excellent Epiſtle is moſt full: and therefore worthily receiued of our and other Churches, as the fitteſt cloſe, to ſhut vp onr publike prayers. In it obſerue Pauls affection towards the Corinthians, amplified,

With { Extention: in regard of the { Thing: The grace of Chriſt, the loue of God the communion of the holy Ghoſt. / Perſons: With you all. } / Intention: Amen. }

The worke of our ſaluation is aſcribed in our { Election, to the loue of the Father. / Redemption, to the Grace of the Sonne. / Sanctification, to the communion of the holy Ghoſt. }

So [b] S. Ambroſe doth expound this text pithily: Dilectio Dei miſit nobis Saluatorem Ieſum, cuius gratia ſaluati ſumus: vt poſſideamus hanc gratiam communicatio facit ſpiritus ſancti: God the Father ſo [c] loued the world, that he ſent his onely begotten Sonne [d] to dye for our ſinnes, and to riſe againe for our iuſtification: and [e] God the Sonne, from God the Father, ſent God the Holy Ghoſt which which cryeth in our hearts Abba Father: applying to our comfort both the loue of God, and the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

The word, God, is vſed here perſonally, not eſſentially: for the [f] Fathers on this text note the bleſſed Trinitie, that God is [g] Trinus in numero, vnus in nomine. S. Hierome thinks that Paul foreſeeing the blaſphemous Arrian hereſie, placed the ſecond Perſon in the firſt roome, God the Sonne before God the Father. [h] Other affirme, that the grace of Chriſt is named firſt, becauſe it concernes vs moſt. For albeit the loue of God in it owne nature goe before the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, chuſing vs before the foundation of the world, Ephes. 1 4. yet in our view the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt goeth before the loue of God: Rom. 5.10. We are reconciled to God, by the death of his Sonne: we feele the mercies of the one in the merits of the other.

It is a fruitfull obſeruation of [i] Martin Luther, that Chriſtian religion beginneth not at the higheſt, as other religions doe, but at the loweſt: it will haue vs to climbe vp to heauen by Iacobs ladder, whoſe feet touch the very earth. And therefore when thou art occupied in the matter of thy ſaluation, ſetting aſide all curious ſpeculations of Gods vnſearchable counſels, all cogitations of workes, of traditions, of Philoſophie, yea and of Gods law too, runne ſtraight to the manger, embrace the little babe Chriſt in thine armes, and behold him as hee was borne, ſucking, growing vp, conuerſant among men, teaching, dying, riſing againe, aſcending aboue the heauens, and hauing power aboue all things. This ſight will make thee ſhake off all terrors and errors, as the Sunne driueth away the clouds. In a diſputation with a Iew, Turke, Papiſt, Hereticke, concerning Gods infinite wiſdome, maieſtie, power; imploy all thy wit and induſtrie to be ſo profound and ſubtile as thou canſt: but in the matter of Iuſtification, wherein thou doeſt wreſtle with the law, ſinne, death, and other ſpirituall enemies; it is the beſt courſe to looke vpon no God, but Chriſt incarnate, and clothed with thine owne nature: to fixe thine eyes vpon the man Ieſus onely; who ſetteth himſelfe forth vnto thee, to be a Mediator, and ſaith, [k] Come vnto mee all yee that labour, and are heauy laden, and I will refreſh you. To behold the Lambe of God, who taketh away the ſinnes of the world: and ſo by the grace of Chriſt thou ſhalt vnderſtand the loue of God, thou ſhalt perceiue his wiſdome, power, maieſtie, ſweetned and tempered to thy capacitie: thou ſhalt finde the ſaying of [l] Paul to be moſt true, that in Chriſt are hid all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge: that Chriſt in our iuſtification is all in all; and therefore good reaſon he ſhould haue the firſt, and moſt place in this argument, that his grace ſhould be named firſt and laſt.

The loue of God, is the fountaine of all goodneſſe (as Diuines ſpeake) gratiarum gratia: from which originally proceeds euery perfect gift and grace. For Almighty God hath not elected vs in regard of our workes, or other worth: but contrariwiſe, becauſe God loued vs, we doe that which is acceptable in his ſight. I obtained mercy of the Lord (ſaith [m] Paul) to be faithfull; Vt fidelis eſſem, non quia fidelis eram, as [n] Lombard aptly.

The nature of this ſhort Treatiſe will not endure, that I ſhould wade farre into this Abyſſus. I remember [o] Pauls exclamation, O the deepneſſe of the riches both of the wiſdome and knowledge of God, how vnſearchable are his iudgments, and his waies paſt finding out! And the Gloſſe of [p] Auguſtine, Volentes diſputare de Dei profundo, merſi ſunt: Or, (as [q] other) Verſi ſunt in profundum. I come therefore to the Communion of the Holy Ghoſt: a point more comfortable, than ordinarily felt, and yet more felt than can be diſputed. It is ſaid, Galat. 4 6. God hath ſent the Spirit of his Sonne crying in our hearts Abba Father: he ſaid not calling, but crying: and Rom. 8.26. he calleth this crying vnſpeakable groaning. When a man is tempted and afflicted, he feeleth the ſtrength of his enemies, and the weakneſſe of his fleſh: he feeleth the fierie darts of Satan, the terrors of death, the wrath of God, all theſe cry out againſt him horribly: ſo that the perplexed ſoule ſees nothing but ſinne threatning, heauen thundering, the deuill roaring, the earth trembling, hell mouth open and ready to ſwallow him vp. But yet in the midſt of all theſe, Gods

Gods holy Spirit cryeth in our hearts, [r] and this cry doth outcry the clamors of the Law, the bellowes of hell, and howlings of infernall fiends: it pierceth the clouds, and aſcends vp to the eares of God, inſomuch that the bleſſed Angels ſeeme to heare nothing elſe but this cry: The Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and the [t] ſtrength of Chriſt is made perfect through our weakeneſſe. For Chriſt is moſt powerfull, when as we are moſt fearfull; euen when we can ſcarcely groane: marke the words of Paul; The Spirit maketh interceſſion for vs in our temptation; not with many words, or long prayers, he cryeth not aloud with teares, haue mercy on me O God: but onely giues a little ſound, and a feeble groaning, as, ah father: this is but one word, yet notwithſtanding comprehends all things. Indeed the mouth ſpeaketh not, but the good affection of the ſoule cryeth aloud after this manner: O Lord God of compaſſion and Father of mercies, although I am grieuouſly vexed on euery ſide with affliction and anguiſh; yet am I thy childe, and thou art my father in Chriſt. This little word, or rather no word, but a poore thought, conceiued aright, paſſeth all the flowing eloquence of Demoſthenes and Tullie, yea Tertullian and all the Orators that euer were in the world: for this matter is not expreſſed with words, but with groanings, and theſe groanings are from the bleſſed Spirit. Thus you ſee the large extent of Pauls affection, in regard of the thing wiſhed vnto the Corinthians: The grace of Chriſt, the loue of God, the communion of the Holy Ghoſt.

The ſecond extention is in regard of the perſon, be with you all: for the Paſtor muſt wiſh well, not onely to the beſt, or to the worſt, but this prayer ought to be made for euery one as well as for any one. There is none ſo bad, but hath receiued ſome grace: none ſo good, but hath need to receiue more grace. Wherefore pray we ſtill, that the grace of Chriſt may be with vs all.

The Church of England adds a third extenſion in regard of the time, for euermore: the which is implied in the Text alſo, for the Corinthians (as wee read in the [t] former Epiſtle) were Saints by calling, and ſo doubtleſſe had receiued already the grace of Chriſt, and had taſted of the loue of God, through the fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt. He doth therefore now deſire [u] that the good worke begun in them, may be perfect: [x] that the grace receiued may continue with them, and increaſe daily vnto the end, and in the end: that the loue of God which cannot be greater ſecundùm eſſentiam, may be greater ſecundùm efficientiam, appearing, growing, abounding in them more and more for euermore.

AMEN.

Amen is vſed in holy Scripture three waies (as [y] Gabriel and Gerſon ſpeake { Nominaliter. Aduerbialiter. Verbaliter.

[y] Lexicon Theol. verb. Amen.

As a Noune, for truth: Apoc. 3. 14. Theſe things ſaith Amen, the faithfull and true witneſſe: and ſo it is added in the concluſion of euery Goſpell, and of the whole Bible, as a ſeale to confirme that which is written.

In the beginning, is the firſt, Amen the laſt word of holy writ: a ſtately beginning, a ſtrange ending. For what is more ſtately than antiquitie? what more ſtrange than truth? Hereby teaching vs that the Scriptures haue vetera and vera, which are not together in any other writing. For in humane learning many things are vncertainly true, and more certainly vntrue: onely the Word of God is ſealed with Amen.

Secondly, as an Aduerb, for verily: ſo Chriſt often in the Goſpell, Amen, Amen, dico vobis.

Thirdly, as a Verb, ſignifying, ſo be it: Deut. 27. 15. Dicet omnis populus, Amen: and ſo it is vſed in Pauls prayer expounded before, and in all our Collects: inſinuating our earneſt deſire, that thoſe things which we haue faithfully asked, asked, may be effectually obtained. And this custome of answering the Minister in the Church Amen, is ancient, as it appeareth in the 1.Cor.14.16. Iustin Martyr Apolog.2. Hieron.prolog.lib.2.in epist.ad Galat. Augustin.epist.107. Vsum respondendi Amen antiquissimum esse patet, saith Bellarm. lib.2. de Missa,cap.16. Here is open Confession, I would the Church of Rome would make open restitution also. For if the people must answer the Priest Amen, then the Priest must pray to the peoples vnderstanding: and how shall they vnderstand, except Common Prayer be said in a common tongue? A conclusion agreeable not onely to the Scriptures, as Bellarmine acknowledgeth, and to the practise of the Primitiue Church, (as [z] Iustin Martyr and [a] Lyra report) and to the paternes of other Liturgies in [b] South India, [c] Moscouia, [d] Armenia, but euen to their owne constitutions, and Masse-booke: for their owne [e] Clement, and their owne Missale giue order that the people should answer the Priest in many things: and how this can be done well, if the vulgar Liturgie be not in a language vulgar, I cannot tell, Paul cannot tell.

All may see (sauing such as the prince of darkenesse hath blinded) that their owne pens haue condemned their owne prayers: euen the phrases extant yet in their Seruice-booke: Let vs pray, let vs giue thankes, we beseech, we offer, we praise, we blesse, we adore, specially the peoples answering Amen, euidently demonstrate that the publike deuotions at the first institution were common to Pastor and people: not mumbled in a corner alone by the Priest, or chaunted onely by Clerke and Priest.

Thus I haue briefly surueied all our English Commnion booke, the which (as [f] Hierome said of Iohns Apocalyps) Tot habet sacramenta, quot verba: euery [g] tittle is grounded vpon Scripture, euery Scripture well applied, euery good application agreeable to the most ancient and best reformed Liturgies in all ages.

I beseech thee therefore (good Reader) [h] marke them diligently, which cause diuision and offences contrary to the doctrine which you haue learned, and auoid them. For they that are such, serue not the Lord Iesus Christ, but their owne bellies; and with faire speech and flattering deceiue the hearts of the simple. So the God of peace shall shortly tread downe Satan vnder our feet, and in fine translate vs from this iarring on earth, vnto the well agreeing Quier of Heauen, where all sing in vnitie and vniformitie; Blessing, and glory, and wisedome, and thanks, and honour, and power, and might, be vnto our God for euermore.

AMEN.

THE FIRST SVNDAY IN ADVENT.

The Epistle. Rom. 13. 8. to the end

Owe nothing to any man but this, that yee loue one another, &c.

IT is a good obseruation of [a] Tertullian, that heretikes are wont first to perswade, then to teach: on the contrary, that Orthodoxes vse first to teach, and then to perswade: the which is Saint Pauls ordinarie method, first monere, then mouere. hinderance. The word of an honest man ought to bee so currant as his coyne. [l] Pomponius an heathen man is reported to haue beene so constant, as he neuer made lye himselfe, nor could suffer a lye in other: euery Christian, and a [m] gentleman, albeit not a Christian, ought to bee iust in all his words, as well as righteous in all his wayes. It is found counsell in affaires of the world; Fast binde, fast finde: Plus enim creditur annulis quàm animis: as Seneca wittily: For the seales of men are more regarded then their soules; and yet ipse dixit of a Christian Pythagoras, is so sufficient, as Quod scripsi scripsi, of a Iewish Pilate.

Debts ex commisso bee manifold: some by borrowing, some by buying, some by secret fraud, some by violent oppression. It is not a fault simply to borrow, for then there could be no letting, no lending, no trading in the world: then onely debt is deadly sinne, when a man hath neither means nor meaning to repay. Psal. 37.12. The wicked borroweth and payeth not againe.

Some men hold restitution a point of Poperie: [n] borrowing by Caluin, and paying by the Bible: but Bishop [o] Latimer auoweth vpon his credit, that in this all writers agree both old and new, that restitution is necessary to saluation: [p] either restitution open or secret, or else hell: It is easie to shew that in a particular account, which he deliuered in a grosse summe: first it was a receiued opinion among the Fathers in the dayes of Augustine. [q] Non remittitur peccatum nisi restituatur ablatum: after entertained of the best [r] Ciuilians: and all the Canonists and Schoolemen without exception: and still embraced of our learned Protestant Diuines; Illyricus, Brentius, Aretius; in the exposition of the words of [s] Zacheus, If I haue taken from any man by forged cauillation, I restore him foure fold: [t] Melancton, [u] Zanchius, [x] Perkins: and all that vnderstand any thing at all. For no man except a new man is saued, hee must repent and bee borne againe: Now where there is vnfained repentance, there is contrition for sinne; where contrition for sinne, there detestation of sinne; where detestation of sinne, there followeth [y] amendment of life.

Zache, renued in mind was altered in manners: [z] he that stole must steale no more: such then as detaine the goods of other vniustly without satisfaction or restitution, are not sorry, but [a] reioyce rather in doing of euill. As [b] Augustine sweetly, Pœnitentia non agitur, sed fingitur. I conclude therefore this argument in the words of [c] Lactantius: Apud bonos iudices, satis habent firmitatis, vel testimonia sine argumentis, vel argumenta sine testimonys; nos tamen non alterutro contenti, cum suppetat nobis vtrumque, ne cui peruersè ingenioso, aut non intelligendi, aut contra disserendi locum relinquamus.

2. We must pay fully: owe nothing. Many men are willing to pay some part of their debts, but they cannot endure to restore all: they will not compound, except the creditor will take ten shillings in the pound: a common, but not a commendable course, for a mite is debt so well as a million; tàm, albeit not tantum; so good a debt, how scouer not so great a debt: if we must owe nothing, then there must be full payment of euery thing. If we cannot pay, God assuredly will accept of votall restitution as well as of actuall: of that which is in [d] affect, as if it had beene in effect. As [e] Paul sheweth in the like case: For if there bee first a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not: [f] Illud pro facto reputat Deus, quod homo quidem verè voluit, sed non valuit adimplere.

3. We must pay generally: owe nothing to any: whether he be friend or foe, rich or poore, stranger or neighbour: restore all to all. If any man corrupting or corrupted in secular offices, hath iniured many whom hee doth not know; [g] then his best course is to restore to God, that is, to the Church and to the poore. Touching these and the like questions of debt, the learned may further examine [h] Thomas, [i] Caietan, [k] Aragon, [l] Emanuel Sa, with many moe: but the best Schooleman in this argument is thine owne conscience:

ence: For [m] whatsoeuer is not of faith is sinne. [n] That is, all thou condemnest in thine heart for sinne, to thee is sinne: satisfie then all other so farre, that thou mayest satisfie thy selfe, owe nothing to any.

Yet this precept hath his except; But this, that yee loue one another: here then obserue first a difference [o] betweene ciuill debts and religious. A ciuill debt once paied is no more due: but charity being payed is still due, [p] debetur etiam reddita; when a man dischargeth other debts, [q] accedit ad eum cui datur, sed ab eo recedit à quo datur. But in paying the debt of loue, the more we giue, the more we haue; Reddendo multiplicatur: habendo enim redditur, non carendo; & cum reddi non possit nisi habeatur, nec haberi potest nisi reddatur. Imò etiam cùm redditur ab homine, crescit in homine. Et tanto maior acquiritur qui tanto pluribus redditur: As Augustine doth excellently glosse this Text: peruse the cited Epistle, for it is short and sweet: of wordly wealth it may bee said truely, bonum quô communius eô minus: but in spirituall riches it is quite contrary, bonum quô communius eô maius: or as the [r] Philosopher, eô melius, in the word of [s] Salomon, He that scattereth, increaseth: in this except then, I note with [t] Gorran,

The { Matter, / Manner, / Priuiledge, } in the word { diligatis. / inuicem. / nisi. }

The matter is to loue: the manner mutually to loue: the priuiledge continually to loue, Owe nothing but loue: for he that loueth another fulfilleth the law. This is the first reason inforcing the former exhortation; and it is taken from the worthinesse of the thing. Loue is the fulfilling of all the law; which hee proues by this induction: Thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steale, thou shalt not beare false witnesse, thou shalt not lust: and if there bee any other Commandement, it is all comprehended in this saying: namely, Loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Loue doth no euill vnto his neighbour: in deed, forbidden in the sixth, seuenth and eighth Commandements: in word, forbidden in the ninth: in thought, forbidden in the tenth. Loue then is the complement of the whole law concerning our dutie to God and man. [u] For our loue to man ariseth originally from our loue to God: [x] Amicum in Domino, inimicum pro Domino: Wee loue our friend in the Lord: our foe for the Lord. This (saith [y] Luther) is the shortest and longest Diuinity: the shortest as touching the words and sentence: but as touching the vse and practise it is more large, more long, more profound, and more high then the whole world. I shall often handle this common place, especially Epistle on Quinquagesima Sunday.

I come now to the second argument, from the fitnesse of the time: verse 11. This also we know the season, how that it is time, that we should awake out of sleepe: for now is our saluation neerer, &c. The summe of it is, [z] that wee must be more studious in performing our dutie now than heretofore when wee did first beleeue: for wee must goe forward and grow vpward: from grace to grace, from vertue to vertue, [a] till we be of full growth in Christ Iesus: or as it is here, till we haue put on the Lord Iesus. A [b] violent motion is quicke in the beginning, but slow in the end: a stone cast vpward, is then most weake when it is most high; but a naturall motion is slow in the beginning, but quicker in the end: for if a man from a Tower cast a stone downeward, the neerer to the Center, the quicker is the motion: and therefore [c] when a man at his first conuersion is exceeding quicke, but afterward waxeth euery day slower and slower in the wayes of the Lord, his motion is not naturall and kinde, but forged and forced: otherwise the longer hee liueth, and the neerer he comes to the marke, the more swiftly would hee run, the more vehemently contend for that [d] euerlasting Crowne, which hee shall obtaine at his [e] races end.

life present; and by day the world to come: in this life many things are hidden as in the darke, but at the last and dreadfull day, the bookes and regilters of all our actions shall be laid open, and all things appeare naked as they are, to God, men, Angels, diuels. If we make but twelue houres in our night, and six ages in the world, as vsually Diuines account; then fiue thousand yeeres, that is, ten houres of the night were past, when Paul wrote this: and since that almost sixteene hundred yeeres, that is, an houre and a halfe and a quarter; so that now there can remaine but some few minutes, and then the terrible day of the Lord will come, When g the heauens shall passe away with a noise, and the elements shall melt with heat, and the earth with the workes therein shall be burnt vp. Wherefore seeing the end of this night, and beginning of that day is at hand, let vs cast away the workes of darkenesse, &c.

Let vs walke honestly, &c.] That is, comely: night-walkers are negligent in their habits, an old gowne will serue their turne, without ruff or cuff, or other handsome trimme. But in the day men are ashamed, except they bee in some good fashion according to their quality. Seeing then the night is past, and the day is come, let vs put off our night clothes, and put on our apparell for the day, so walking as we care not who seeth vs in all comelinesse and honesty. [t] Inſtit. lib. 3. cap. 4.

The Church, as Paul, meanes too much eating and drinking, for it is lawfull to eat all manner of meat, whether it bee fleſh or fiſh. [u] But there bee certaine hedges ouer which wee may not leape: The firſt hedge is Leuit. 19. 26. Thou ſhalt not eat the fleſh with the bloud: that is to ſay, raw fleſh: for if we ſhould ordinarily deuoure raw fleſh, it would ingender in vs a certaine cruelty, ſo that at length wee ſhould eat one another, as [x] Diuines expound that place. We may not be Canibals or man-eaters, againſt this ſinne God hath ſet an high hedge, Thou ſhalt not kill: extreame famine made [y] mothers murtherers, and turned the ſanctuary of life into the ſhambles of death: extreame neceſſity breakes all hedges of nurture and nature: but in ordinary courſe, man is no meat for man: but as [z] Ignatius ſaid, onely manchet for God, a ſeruice and ſacrifice for his maker. Happily ſome will ſay, well then, if I deuoure not mans fleſh, I may eat whatſoeuer I liſt, howſoeuer I get it. No, God hath ſet a ſecond hedge; Thou ſhalt not ſteale: thou mayeſt not take thy neighbours oxe out of his ſtall, nor his ſheepe out of his fold, nor his fiſh out of his poole, but thou muſt feed on thine owne meat bought into thine owne houſe, or brought vp in thine houſe, on that onely which is giuen or gotten honeſtly.

The [g] particular lawes of Princes grounded vpon the generall lawes of God, euen in things indifferent, makes our obedience not indifferent but neceſſary. Concerning drunkennesse and the rest, often elsewhere. Yet by the way note the craftinesse of the Deuill, and vnhappinesse of sinne, which seldome or neuer commeth alone; it is vnlike the Raile, which flieth solitary, and in this respect most like the Partridge, who calles one another till they make a couey. First, Paul brings in sinne by the brace, gluttony and drunkennesse, chambering and wantonnesse, strife and enuying; then as it were by the whole couey, for all these birds of a feather flie together; immoderate diet begets chambering, chambering wantonnesse, wantonnesse strife, strife enuying; thus sinne doth first couple, then increase. This text ought to be regarded of vs the more because it was the very place to which Augustine that renowned Doctor by a voice from heauen was directed at his first conuersion, as himselfe witnesseth, *Lib.*8. *confess. cap.*12.

CHRIST is [n] Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and ending, wherefore the Church allotting a seuerall Scripture for euery seuerall Sunday throughout the whole yeere, [o] beginnes and ends with the comming of Christ: for the conclusion of the last Gospell appointed for the last Sunday, is, Of a truth, this is the same Prophet that should come into the world; and the first sentence in the first Gospell for the first Sunday, Behold, thy King commeth vnto thee. Wherein the Church imitated the method of Gods owne Spirit: for as the first prophecie mentioned in the old Testament, is, The seed of the woman shall bruise the Serpents head: and the first historie deliuered in the new Testament is, The booke of the generation of Iesus Christ; so the first Gospell on the first Dominicall, according to the Churches account is Aduentuall, a Scripture describing Christ and his kingdome, fitting the Text vnto the time: teaching vs hereby two things especially: first, what manner of person the Messias is who doth come, secondly, what manner of persons wee should be now he is come.

In the former part obserue two points, a { Preface, All this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of by the Prophet: vers 4. / Prophecie, taken out of Zach.9.9. Tell the daughter of Sion, &c.

All this was done that it might be fulfilled] An vsuall phrase with our Euangelist, as *Cap.*1.22. *Cap.*8.17. *Cap.*27.35. It doth insinuate the sweet harmonie betweene the Prophets and Apostles, as [p] Numenius said Plato was nothing else but Moses translated out of Hebrew into Greeke, and Ascham, that Virgil is nothing else but Homer turned out of Greeke into Latine, and as the Nouelists affirme, that our Communion booke is nothing else but the Romane Missale and Portuis thrust out of Latine into English, and as Diuines haue censured Cyprian to be nothing else but Tertullian in a more familiar and elegant stile: so the new Testament is nothing else as it were, but an exposition of the old. That difference which [q] Zeno put betweene Logicke and Rhetoricke, Diuines vsually make betweene the Law and the Gospell, the Law like the fist shut, the Gospell like the hand open. [r] Euangelium reuelata Lex, Lex occultum Euangelium: The Gospell a reuealed Law, the Law a hidden Gospell.

This harmoniacall consent may serue to confound our aduersaries, and to comfort our selues. It doth abundantly confute obstinate Iewes, who expect another Messias to come, conceiting as yet all things not to be done in the Gospel, which was said of him in the Law, so that whereas the great question of the world is, Who is that Christ? and the great question of the Church, Who is that Antichrist? the Iewish Rabbins are ignorant in both.

Secondly, this harmony conuinceth all such [f] Heretikes, as hold, two sundry disagreeing Gods to be the authors of the two Testaments, one of the Law, another of the Gospell.

It affordeth also comfort, first in generall it may perswade the conscience that the Bible is the booke of God. For if Ptolomee was astonished at the 72. Interpreters, because being placed in sundry roomes, and neuer conferring nor seeing one another, did notwithstanding write the same not onely for sense of matter, but in sound of words vpon the selfe-same Text, as [t] Iustin Martyr, and [u] Augustine report; then how should wee bee moued with the most admirable diuine concordance betweene the Prophets and Apostles, who writing the Word of God in diuers places, at diuers times, vpon diuers occasions, doe notwithstanding agree so generall, [x] that they seeme not diuers pen-men, but rather indeede onely diuers pens of one and the same writer?

In more particular, it may strengthen our faith in the gracious promises of Almighty God, hee speakes the word, and it is done: commands, and it is effected: Heauen and earth shall passe, but not one iot of his word shall perish: he promised by Zacharie that the Messias of the world should come, and he tels vs here by Matthew that he is come: All this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophet: Behold thy King commeth vnto thee. Thus much of the Preface generally, now to sift the words seuerally.

That, is taken here, non [y] causaliter, sed consecutiuè, not for an efficient cause, but rather for a consequence and euent. Christ did not thus ride into Hierusalem because Zachary foretold it, but Zachary foretold it because Christ would thus ride: Christ being the complement of the Prophets, and end of the Law, yet the word That, insinuates (as [z] Chrysostome notes) the finall cause why Christ did thus ride, namely, to certifie the Iewes how that himselfe onely, was that King, of whom their Prophet Zachary did thus speake, that none but he was the King of the Iewes, and Messias of the world.

[z] Hom. 37. in Matth.

Fulfilled] A prophecie may be said to be fulfilled [a] foure waies especially: 1. When the selfe-same thing comes to passe which was literally deliuered in the prophecie. So S. Matth. cap. 1. 22. saith, [b] Esayes prophecie, Behold a virgin shall conceiue, &c. was fulfilled by Mary, who brought forth a Sonne, &c.

[b] Esay 7. 14.

2. When the thing allegorically signified is fulfilled, as Exod. 12. 46. it is said of the Paschall Lambes, Ye shall not breake a bone thereof: yet S. Iohn, cap. 19 36. affirmes this to be fulfilled in Christ: The souldiers brake not his legs, that the Scripture should be fulfilled, Not a bone of him shall be broken.

3. When as neither the thing literally nor allegorically meant, but some other like is done: so Christ, Matth. 15. tels the people in his time, that the words of Esay, This people draweth neere to me with their mouthes, &c. were fulfilled fulfilled in him: O hypocrites, Esay prophecied well of you, that is, of such as are like to you.

4. When as it is daily more and more fulfilled, as Iames 2.23. the Scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham beleeued God. Abraham assuredly beleeued God before, but his offering vp of Isaac was a greater probate of his faith: then the Scripture was fulfilled, that is, more and more fulfilled, when Abraham thus farre trusted in God. Now Christ fulfilled Zacharies saying in a literall and plaine sense, for he sent for an Asse and rode thereon into Hierusalem, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophet, Reioyce ô daughter of Sion, for behold thy King commeth, &c.

S. Iohn and S. Matthew relate not the precise text of Zachary, but keeping the sense, they somewhat alter the words. On the contrary, blasphemous Heretikes and Atheists vse to keepe the words of Scripture, but altogether to change the sense. Children full fed often play with their meat: so Lucianists of our time play with the food of their soule, making the Bible their babble. The Lord who will not suffer his name to be taken in vaine, mend or end them.

As for Heretikes, it is alway their custome to make the Scriptures a shipmans hose, wreathing and wresting them euery way to serue their turne. [c] Non ad materiam scripturas, sed materiam ad scripturas excogitant: First they make their Sermon, and then they looke for a text.

Herein the Papists of latter time most offend, who doe not onely faine [d] new Fathers, and falsifie the old [e] Doctors, putting out, putting in, chopping and changing as shall best fit their purpose; so that the Fathers (as Reuerend [f] Iewel said) are no Fathers, but their children, no Doctors, but their schollers, vttering not their owne minde, but what the Papists inforce them to speake: they doe not, I say, wrong humane authors onely, but also presume to censure and construe Gods owne bookes as they list, as [g] Augustine said of Faustus the Manichee; Legant qui volunt, & inuenient aut falli imprudenter, aut fallere imprudenter. Hence [h] kill and eat to Peter, is a [i] warrant for the Pope to depose Princes. It is written, [k] Thou shalt goe vpon the Lion and the Adder, the yong Lion and the Dragon shalt thou tread vnder thy feete [l] therefore the Pope may tread vpon the Emperors necke.

[m] God made two great lights in the firmament, that is, two great dignities in the Church, the Priest, and the Prince: but that which ruleth the day, to wit, spirituall things, is the greater; that which ruleth carnall things is the lesser: as Innocentius the third disputes in the [n] Decretals: and their [o] Glosse further addes out of Ptolomie, that the Sunne containes the bignesse of the Moone seuen thousand seuen hundred fortie foure times, and so many degrees iumpe is euery Prelate aboue euery Prince. Sometime they cite the beginning without the end, sometime the end without the beginning, sometime they take the words against the meaning, sometime they make a meaning against the words, and so they doe not receiue, but giue the Gospell, as [p] Maldonate fitly: not admit the old Scripture, but vpon the point coine a new: for in controuerted places, either they suppresse the words, or else not expresse the sense: as if a man should picke away the corne, and giue vs the chaffe, or conuey away the iewels, and throw vs the bag. The blessed Euangelists had warrant from God, and we warrant from them to quote Scripture, sometime more fully for explication, and sometime more shortly for breuitie, yet without alteration of the sense, though there be some little alteration of the sentence. [q] Marlorats annotation is good, that our Euangelist and other doe not alway repeat the very words in the Prophets and the Law, that wee might hereby take occasion to peruse the Text and to conferre place with place. Let vs then examine the words in Zachary, which are these; Reioyce greatly ô daughter Sion, shout for ioy o daughter Hierusalem: Behold thy King commeth vnto thee.

They containe two remarkable points: an
- Exultation: Reioyce greatly, &c.
- Exaltation, or commendation of Christ, as a reason of this exceeding ioy: Behold, thy King commeth vnto thee, iust, meeke, &c.

In the former obserue the
- Persons
  - Exhorting
    - Principall, God: for the word of the Lord came to Zacharie, Cap. 1. vers. 1. this then is not the word of man, but the voice of God.
    - Instrumentall: Zacharie.
  - Exhorted, Hierusalem.
- Act, Reioyce.

In that Zacharie was Gods organ, marke the worthinesse of holy Prophets, as being the very tongues and pens of the blessed Spirit: and this dignitie belongeth also to their successors, Apostles, and other Preachers of the Word; for S. Matthew speakes in the plurall number, dicite, tell yee; [r] concluding the Prophets and Preachers, whose office is to tell Hierusalem that her King and Sauiour is come into the world to seeke and saue that which is lost.

Almighty God hath had in all ages, either Patriarkes, or Prophets, or Apostles, or Preachers, a Moses, or an Elias, a Zacharie, or a Paul, or an Athanasius, or an Augustine, or a Luther, or a Iewel, by whom hee spake to his beloued Spouse comfortably, Reioyce greatly daughter Sion: especially the Lord vseth to chuse Zacharies, that is, such as are mindfull of God, such as delight in the Law of the Lord, and exercise themselues therein day and night.

The persons exhorted are, daughter Sion, and daughter Hierusalem, that is, according to the vulgar Hebraisme, Sion and Hierusalem, as the Sonne of man, for man, and Sonne of floore, for floore, Esay 21. 10. and Psal. 72. 4. the children of the poore, for the poore, as Augustine vpon that place; so [s] daughter Sion, daughter Babylon, daughter Hierusalem, for Sion, Babylon, and Hierusalem; a phrase not strange to the [t] Poet, who called the Grecians —Δῖοι Ἀχαιοῖ.

Now Hierusalem was the Metropolis of the Iewes, and Sion an eminent Mount adioyning to Hierusalem, and at this time the Iewes were the [u] people of God, and Hierusalem the [x] Citie of God. [y] At Salem was his Tabernacle, and his dwelling in Sion. Whereas therefore Saint Matthew, Tell yee the daughter of Sion, he meaneth, [z] vsing a synecdoche, Hierusalem. And whereas Zacharie names Hierusalem, hee [a] meaneth, the Church of God ouer the face of the whole earth, of which Hierusalem is a figure, and so the Text is to bee construed typically, not topically; for this ioy concernes the Gentile so well as the Iew, the one as the roote, the other as the branch, as Paul sheweth in his Epistle to the Rom. chap. 11. Indeed Christ is the glory of his people Israel, but hee is the light of the Gentiles, illuminating all such as sit in darknesse, and in the shadow of death.

Here then obserue, that Christ is the Churches ioy, and only the Churches ioy: dumbe Idols are the Gentiles ioy: Mahumet is the Turkes ioy: Circumcision is the Iewes ioy: Antichrist is the Babylonians ioy: the Deuill Calicutes ioy: but onely Christ is our ioy: We [b] will reioyce and be glad in thee: [c] I am my beloued, and my beloued is mine: Christ is so much the Churches, as that he is none others ioy: for as [d] Cyprian and other Catholike Doctors; He that hath not the Church for his Mother, hath not God for his Father: and hee that hath not God for his Father, hath not Christ for his Sauiour. [e] Per portam Ecclesiæ intramus in portam Paradisi: No Church, no Christ; no Christ, no ioy.

This exultation appertaines onely to the Church: He that is not a sonne of Sion, a citizen of Hierusalem, is in the [f] gall of bitternesse, and hath no part nor portion in this happinesse.

Now concerning the act, the matter is, to reioyce.

The manner, greatly to reioyce, with iubilation and ſhouting.

It is a receiued opinion in the world, that religion doth dull our wits, and daunt our ſpirits, as if mirth and miſchiefe went alway togither: but it is taught and felt in Chriſts ſchoole, that none can be ſo ioyfull as the faithfull, that there is not ſo merry a land as the holy land, and therefore Zacharie doth double his exhortation, Reioyce greatly, ſhout for ioy: and [g] Zophony doth triple it, Reioyce O daughter Sion, be yee ioyfull O Iſrael, be glad with all thine heart, O daughter Hieruſalem: Exulta, lætare, iubila.

[g] Cap.3.14.

Now iubilation, as the [h] Fathers obſerue, is ſo great a ioy, that it can neither bee ſmothered nor vttered: [i] Hilaris cum pondere virtus. In the words of Chriſt, [k] My yoke is eaſie, my burden is light. A new yoke is heauy, but when it is worne and dryed it waxeth eaſie: Chriſt therefore did firſt weare and beare this yoke, that it might bee ſeaſoned and made light for vs: hee commanded vs to faſt, and himſelfe did faſt: hee commanded vs to pray, and himſelfe did often pray: he commanded vs to forgiue one another, and himſelfe pardoned. Againe, when he ſaith, My yoke is ſweet, and my burthen is light, he doth inſinuate, that the yokes of other are bitter, and their burdens heauy: that it is a ſorie ſeruice to be Satans vaſſall, or the worlds hireling, ſo that the good man takes more delight in performing his dutie, than the wicked can in all his villanies and vanities. I was glad, ſaith [l] Dauid, when they ſaid vnto me, wee will goe into the houſe of the Lord. And Pſal 84.2. My ſoule hath a longing deſire to enter into the Courts of the Lord. And Pſal. 81. Sing we merrily to God, &c.

An vpright Chriſtian is a Muſician, a Phyſitian, a Lawyer, a Diuine to himſelfe: for what is ſweeter Muſicke than the witneſſe of a [m] good conſcience? What is better Phyſicke than [n] abſtinere & ſuſtinere: good diet and good quiet? what deeper counſell in Law, [o] than in hauing nothing to poſſeſſe all things? and what ſounder Diuinitie, [p] than to know God, and whom he hath ſent, Ieſus Chriſt? On the contrary, the wicked is [q] wearied in his waues, and diſcontented in his courſes. A malicious man is a murtherer of himſelfe, the prodigall man a theefe to himſelfe, the voluptuous man a witch to himſelfe, the couetous man a deuill to himſelfe, the drunkard all theſe to himſelfe, a murtherer to his bodie, a theefe to his purſe, a witch to his wit, a deuill to his ſoule. Hitherto concerning the Prophets exultation: his exaltation followeth, Ecce Rex tuus, &c. The word Behold in the Bible is like Iohn the Baptiſt, alway the fore-runner of ſome excellent thing: and indeed all our comfort conſiſts in this one ſweet ſentence, Behold thy King commeth vnto thee.

A tyrant doth rob and spoyle the people, but the Messias is Iesus, a Sauiour of his people, Matth. 1. 21.

A tyrant is a wolfe to scatter and destroy the sheepe; but Christ is the good shepheard, who gaue his life for the sheepe, Ioh. 10. 11.

Thy] [x] Promised vnto thee, borne of thee, bred vp with thee, flesh of thy flesh, and bone of thy bone: not euery ones King, for Satan is Prince of the world; but thy King, for he is God of [y] Israel: his comming was sufficient for the whole world, but efficient onely for Sion: or thy King, because it is not enough to confesse in generall, that Christ is a King; for the Deuill himselfe beleeues the [z] Maior of the Gospell: but the daughter of Sion must assume and beleeue the Minor, that Christ is her King, Esay 9. 6. To vs a Childe is borne, to vs a Sonne is giuen. There is great diuinitie, saith [a] Luther, in pronounes: a great emphasis in nobis and noster, as [b] Bullinger and Caluin note.

Commeth] [c] Christ is the way, we [d] wanderers out of the way: [e] so that if the way had not found vs, we neuer should or could haue found the way, [f] nec opibus, nec operibus, nec opera.

Vnto thee] [g] Tibi si credis, contra te si non credis: if incredulous, against thee: but if beleeuing, for thee: for thy, not his good, he [h] gaue himselfe for thee: [i] Nascens se dedit in socium, conuescens in cibum, moriens in pretium, regnans in præmium. See Epist. Dom. 3. Quadragesi.

What could haue beene said lesse, and yet what canst thou wish for more? For if Christ be a King, then he is able: if thine, then willing: if he come, hee respects not his paine: if hee come vnto thee, he regards not his profit: and therefore reioyce daughter Sion, shout for ioy daughter Hierusalem. These Glosses are common in the Fathers and Friers, and I shall often touch vpon them, especially Epistle and Gospell on Christmas day.

The second part of this Gospell insinuates how we must entertaine Christ in our { Thoughts. Words. Deeds.

For the first: we must beleeue Christ to be that Iesus, verse 11. that great Prophet, who is the Messias and Sauiour of the world.

For the second: we must professe and confesse this faith, hauing Hosanna in our mouths, and crying, Blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lord, Hosanna in the highest, vers. 9.

For the third: we must spread our garments in the way, cut downe branches from the trees, and straw them in the passage, verse 8. [k] that is, forsake all and follow Christ, profering and offering our selues wholly to his seruice: or, as the Epistle doth expound the Gospell, seeing our saluation is neere, the night past, and the day come, let vs cast away the workes of darknesse, and put on the armour of light, &c.

I am occasioned here iustly to direct their ignorance who doe not vnderstand, and correct their obstinacie who will not vnderstand the wisdome of the Church, so fitly disposing of the Gospels and Epistles, as that often the one may serue for a Commentarie to the other. As here Saint Matthew, Behold thy King commeth: And S. Paul, Our saluation is nigh, and the day is come. S. Paul doth aduise, not to make prouision for the flesh: and S. Matthew reports, how the people accompanying Christ, spread their garments in the way.

S. Paul commands loue in all men, S. Matthew commends loue in these men, who gaue such entertainment vnto Christ.

The whole Gospell is a [l] liuely picture of the Church, in which are foure sorts of persons especially:

1. Christ, who is King and head, verse 5. and 12.

2. Prophets, who loose men from their sinnes, and bring them vnto Christ, verse 2. and 7.

3. Auditors, who beleeue that Christ is the Messias, openly professing this faith, Hosanna to the sonne of Dauid, verse 9. and manifesting this faith also by their

The Epistle. Rom. 15. 4.

Whatsoeuer things are written aforetime, they are written for our learning; &c.

THis Scripture containes in it three things concerning the Scripture:

What { it is written. } Shewing the { authoritie.
When { aforetime. } Scriptures { antiquitie.
Why { for our learning. } { vtilitie.

For the first: things onely told, passing thorow many mouthes, are easily mistold: it is long ere we get them, and we soone forget them. Almighty God therefore commanded that his Law should be written in bookes, and ingrauen in stone, that the syllables thereof might alway be in our eyes, so well as the sound in our eares, and that for two causes especially:

1. That the godly man might [m] exercise himselfe therein day and night.
2. That the wicked might neither [n] adde to it, nor detract from it.

In like manner, albeit the [o] sound of the thundring Apostles went out thorow all the earth, and their words vnto the ends of the world: yet the Spirit of wisedome thought it meet that there should be a treatise written of [p] all that Christ did and said: and that [q] from point to point: entituled, [r] The booke of the generation of Iesus Christ. The Scripture then is a Bible, because written: and the Bible κατ' ἐξοχὴν, in many respects excelling all other bookes, especially for the maker and matter, in so much that Saint Paul saith, [s] If an Angell from heauen preach otherwise, let him be accursed. And [t] Iustin Martyr goes yet further: If Christ himselfe should preach another God, or another Gospell, I would not beleeue him: Ipse non crederem Domino Iesu.

This doctrine makes against vnwritten verities of Papists, and fond reuelations of [u] Anabaptists, and factious interpretations of Schismatikes, and impudent conceits of [x] Libertines; all which equall their own fantasies with the Scriptures authority.

The Papists and Schismatickes are all for a speaking Sripture: the Libertines and Anabaptists are are all for an infused Scripture: the true Catholikes onely for the written Scripture; [y] to the Law and to the Testimonie. [z] Thy word is a lanterne vnto my feet, and a light vnto my pathes.

The second point to bee considered is, that γραφαὶ are παλαιαὶ, Scriptures written aforetime, being the first booke so well as the best booke: for as [a] Tertullian was wont to call Praxeas, hesternum Praxean: so wee may terme the most ancient Poets and Philosophers, in comparison of Moses, vpstart writers. [b] Omnia Græcorum sunt noua & heri. As Galaton painted Homer vomiting, Reliquos verò poetas ea quæ ipse euomuissent hauricntes: to signifie, saith [c] Ælian, that he was the first Poet, and all other, as well Greeke as Latine, but his apes. In like manner Moses is called by [d] Theodoret, Oceanus Theologiæ, the sea of Diuinitie, from whom all other writers as riuers are deriued. The which point as it is excellently confirmed by Theodoret, [e] Clemens, [f] Iosephus, and others, so it is ingenuously confessed euen by the heathen Historiographers: [g] Eupolemus lib. de Iudæ regibus, auoweth Moses to bee the first wise man: [h] Plato, that a barbarous Egyptian was the first inuenter of Arts; [i] Appion, Ptolomey, Palæmon, haue granted the same: and vpon the point, Strabo, Plinie, Cornelius

Cornelius Tacitus, and others, as Ficinus reports, lib. de religione Christiana, cap. 26. To demonstrate this more particularly; The Troian warre is the most ancient subiect of humane historie: but Troy was taken in the dayes of [k] Dauid, about the yeere of the world, [l] 2788. and Homer flourished [m] anno 3000. whereas Moses was borne [n] anno 2373.

Secondly, this θεοπνευστον [o] confutes the Marcionites and Manichees, and all such as reiect the old Testament. For the place, to which the text hath reference, is taken out of the 69. Psalme, verse 9. That the Scriptures of Moses and the Prophets are written for our instruction, it is plaine by Christs iunction, [p] Search the Scriptures: as also by that of our Apostle, 1. Cor. 10. These things hapned vnto them for ensamples: and were written to admonish vs, vpon whom the ends of the world are come. If all little histories, then much more the great mysteries are our schoolemasters vnto Christ: Let vs examine therefore the third obseruable point, concerning the Scriptures vtilitie; Whatsoeuer things are written aforetime, they are written for our learning. The Scripture (saith Paul) is the peoples instruction: the Scripture, say the [q] Papists, in the vulgar tongue, is the peoples destruction. The Scripture, saith [r] Paul, doth make the man of God absolute: the Scripture, say the Papists, in a knowne language, makes men hereticall and dissolute; but the Bible makes men heretickes, as the Sunne makes men blind: and therefore [s] Wickliffe truly; To condemne the Word of God, translated in any language for heresie, is to make God an hereticke.

Not to presse this place nor vrge any other Scripture, wee may beate the Rhemish and Romish in this controuersie with their owne weapons, Antiquity and Custome. For it is [t] acknowledged that the Christians in old time read the Bible to their great edification and increase of faith, in their mother tongue. The [u] Armenians had the Psalter, and some other pieces of Scripture translated by Saint Chrysostome: The Sclauonians by Saint Hierome: the Goths by Vulpilas, and that before hee was an Arrian: The Italians three hundred yeeres since by Iames Archbishop of Genua: and the Bible was in French also two hundred yeeres agoe. Besides these, the [x] Syrians, Arabians, Æthiopians, had of ancient time the Scriptures in their seuerall languages; as it is manifest by those portions of them, which are at this day brought from their countries into this part of the world.

To speake of our owne Countrey: venerable Beda did translate the whole Bible into the [y] Saxon tongue, and the Gospell of Saint Iohn into English. King [z] Alfred also considering the great ignorance that was in his Kingdome, translated both the Testaments into his natiue language. Queene Anne, wife to Richard the second, had Scriptures translated in the vulgar, as Thomas Arundel, then Archbishop of Yorke, and Chancellor of England, mentioned at her funerall Sermon, Anno [a] 1394.

Moreouer, in a Parliament of this King Richard, there was a bill put in to disannull the Bible translated into English, vnto which Iohn Duke of Lancaster answered, and said; Wee will not be the refuse of all men: other nations haue Gods lawes in their owne language. Thomas Arundell, as we read in the constitutions of [b] Linwood, being translated vnto the See of Canterburie, made strait prouision in a Councell holden at Oxford, that no version set out by Wickliffe or his adherents should bee suffered, being not approued by the Diocesan.

It is apparant then out of our owne Chronicles, that the Bible was turned into the mother tongue before and after the Conquest, before and after the time of Wickliffe, before and after the daies of Luther: and all this paine was vndertaken by good and holy men, that the people of God reading and vnderstanding the Scripture, through patience and comfort of the same, might haue certaine hope of another life.

As then I condemne the malice of Papists in forbidding, so likewise the negligence of carnall Goſpellers, in forbearing to read thoſe things aforetime written for our learning. Our Forefathers heretofore ſpared neither coſt nor paine: they ventured their crownes and their heads too for the new Teſtament in Engliſh, tranſlated by Maſter Tyndall: and when they could not heare the Goſpell in the Church publikely, they receiued much comfort by reading in their houſes priuately: the very children became fathers vnto their parents, and begat them in Chriſt, euen by reading a few plaine Chapters vnto them in a corner: but in our time, when euery ſhop hath Bibles of diuers tranſlations, editions, volumes, annotations, the number of thoſe who can read is but ſmall, the number of thoſe who doe read is leſſe, the number of thoſe who read as they ſhould, leaſt of all. If a learned Clerke ſhould pen a treatiſe for thy particular inſtruction, thou wouldeſt inſtantly with all diligence peruſe it. If a Nobleman ſhould ſend thee gracious letters concerning thy preferment, thou wouldeſt inſtantly with all diligence peruſe it. If thy father, or ſome other friend, taking a iourney into a farre Countrey, ſhould pen his Will, and leaue it in thine hands and cuſtodie, thou wouldeſt hold it as a great token of his loue. Behold, the Bible is written by Wiſdome it ſelfe for our learning, that we may bee perfect vnto all good workes. It is Gods [c] Epiſtle, and Letters Patent, wherein are granted vnto vs many gracious immunities and priuiledges: it is his Teſtament wherein all his will is reuealed, whatſoeuer he would haue done or vndone: and therefore let vs pray with the Church, that we may in ſuch wiſe read holy Scriptures, heare, marke, learne, and inwardly digeſt them, that by patience and comfort of Gods holy Word, we may embrace and euer hold faſt the hope of euerlaſting life, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

He came among men in time paſt, when as the Word was made [i] fleſh and dwelt among vs: hee comes into men in the preſent by his grace and holy Spirit, Apoc. 3. 20. Behold I ſtand at the doore and knocke. He ſhall in the future come againſt men, to iudge both the quicke and the dead: but the Sonne of Man hath but two commings in the forme of man: his firſt comming in great meekneſſe, his ſecond in exceeding maieſtie. At his firſt comming he rode vpon an Aſſe: in his ſecond (as it is here ſaid) he ſhall ride vpon the clouds. In his firſt comming hee came to be iudged: in his ſecond he comes to iudge. In his firſt comming the people did triumph and reioyce, crying Hoſanna: but in his ſecond comming the people ſhall bee at their wits end for feare, and for looking after thoſe things which ſhall come on the world.

In that therefore the Church hath adioyned this Goſpell of his ſecond comming vnto that other of his firſt comming, it doth teach all Teachers this leſſon, that their ſong bee like Dauids, of [k] iudgement and mercy; that in all their Sermons they mingle faith and feare; [l] that they preach Chriſt to bee a Iudge ſo well as an Aduocate. This method Chriſt himſelfe did vſe, who did as well expound the Law, as propound the Goſpell; who denounced woe to the proud Phariſees, and pronounced bleſſedneſſe to the poore in ſpirit; [m] who powred wine and oyle into the wounds of him that was halfe dead: oyle which is ſupple, wine which is ſharpe: and when hee departed he gaue to the hoſt two pence, [n] that is, to the Preachers who take charge of him, the two Teſtaments, and willed them to temper and apply theſe two till hee come againe, that thinking on the Goſpell wee might neuer deſpaire, and thinking on the Law we might neuer preſume: that looking vpon Chriſts firſt comming, we might reioyce; and expecting his ſecond comming, we might feare, becauſe there ſhall be ſignes in the Sunne and in the Moone, &c.

[n] Theophylact. in 10. Luk.

In handling whereof I will not trouble you with idle curioſities: onely note two plaine points eſpecially,

To wit, the { Certaintie / Vncertaintie } of Chriſts ſecond comming.

The certaintie, that he ſhall come: the vncertaintie, when he ſhall come.

The certaintie is declared here by
- Words:
  - Affirmed barely, verſe 27. They ſhall ſee the Sonne of man come in a cloud, &c.
  - Enforced with an aſſeueration, verſ. 22. Verily I ſay vnto you, &c. adding further a peremptorie concluſion, verſe 33. Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe away, but my words ſhall not paſſe away.
- Wonders, verſe 27. There ſhall be ſignes, &c.

The words are ſpoken by Chriſt, as it is apparent, verſe 8. Now Chriſt is truth: Ergo, this prophecie cannot bee falſe. That which hee foretold touching Hieruſalem in this Capter, is in euery particular come to paſſe: why then ſhould this prophecie bee thought vntrue concerning the worlds deſtruction, when as that other was true concerning Hieruſalems deſolation?

Zacharie foretold that the Meſſias in his firſt comming ſhould in meekneſſe ride vpon an Aſſe, and, as [o] Saint Matthew reports, all that was done: behold here a greater than Zacharie, tels vs that the Meſſias in his ſecond comming ſhall ride vpon the clouds: and ſhall we doubt of his word, who is that eternall Word? Shall wee beleeue Zacharie, who was but one of the ſmall Prophets, and ſhall we diſtruſt him who is that great Prophet? Ioh 6.14.

But becauſe men will not beleeue him vpon his bare word, who made all the world with his word, Pſal. 33.9. He ſpake, and it was done: hee doth vſe an oath and earneſt aſſeueration in the 32. verſe, Verily I ſay vnto you, &c. Becauſe there is none greater than himſelfe, hee doth ſweare by himſelfe, Truth doth proteſt by Truth, This generation ſhall not paſſe, till all be fulfilled.

The word generation hath perplexed as well old as new writers exceedingly. Sometime generation in Scripture ſignifieth an age: As [p] one generation paſſeth, and another commeth: and [q] the truth of the Lord endureth from generation to generation, that is, euer, from age to age. Now [r] generation in this acception is an hundred yeeres. So Neſtor is ſaid to liue τριῶν γενεῶν, three ages, that is, three hundred yeeres: and therefore ſome Diuines haue referred this vnto the deſtruction of Hieruſalem onely, which hapned within an hundred yeeres after this prophecie: ſo learned [s] Eraſmus and Beza conſtrue the place, both of them, interpreting the word, ætas: and the Tranſlators of Geneua following them in our leſſer Engliſh Bible, This age ſhall not paſſe: but but as well the translation as obseruation is defectiue, because Christ saith here, This generation shall not passe, till all these things be done, מזה הדור, not onely those which concerne the desolation of Hierusalem, but all those likewise which concerne the worlds end.

[t] Other by this generation vnderstand the nation of the Iewes, as Luke 17.25. The Sonne of man must be reproued of this generation: and Matth. 23.36. All these things shall come vpon this generation: that is, this nation.

S. [u] Hierom by generation vnderstands all mankind, as if Christ should say, the generation of men shall continue till all be fulfilled, and then in fine they shall acknowledge that I spake the truth.

[x] Chrysostome, [y] Theophylact, Euthymius, expound this of that generation onely [z] which seeke God; of Gods elect and faithfull people, as if Christ should speake thus; Albeit there be signes in heauen, and troubles on earth, yet [a] hell gates shall not preuaile against the Church: [b] I am with you alway, saith Christ, vntill the end of the world. The generation of such as beleeue in mee shall not passe, till all this be fulfilled: and therefore let none of my followers bee discouraged, but rather lift vp their heads, in that their redemption is so neere. This exposition I take to bee both pertinent and profitable, because Christ in this Chapter had foretold, that his Disciples should be persecuted and brought before Kings and Princes for professing his Gospell: verse 12. Yet this generation shall not passe, but there shall bee a Church alway to confesse the faith in despight of the deuill, [c] The Church one day shall passe too, but not till these things be done, then in the end it shall inherit a better possession in Gods own kingdome without end.

[d] Other by generation vnderstand all that time betweene Christs first comming and his last; for the whole world being diuided into three generations, a time before the Law, a time vnder the Law, a time after the Law: the time of the Gospell is Hora nouissima, the last houre: 1. Epist. Iohn 2. 18. and, We are they vpon whom the ends of the world are come: 1. Cor. 10.11. so that ye shall not looke for another Gospell or another change; for the preaching of this Gospell and the world shall end together.

[e] Other by generation vnderstand not onely the Iewes or the Christians, or all men onely, but the whole vniuersall world, termed elsewhere the Creature. This generation, that is, this world, in which all things are generated, shall not end till these signes, forerunners of it ruine, shall come to passe. So Christ interprets himselfe in the verse following, Heauen and earth shall passe, but my words shall not passe away. That is, howsoeuer the earth bee moueable, and the powers of heauen shake: though both waxe old as doth a garment, and all things in them are subiect to muration and change, yet [f] Christ is yesterday, and to day, the same also for euer: so that if you will credit Christ, either vpon your owne reason and experience, or vpon his word and oath, beleeue this also, that he shall come riding on the clouds with great power and glory to iudge both the quicke and dead.

Secondly, Christs comming to iudgement is shewed heere by wonders in heauen, in earth, and in the sea, which shall bee like harbingers of that dreadfull and terrible day: There shall be signes in the Sunne, and in the Moone, and in the earth: the people shall be at their wits end through despaire: the sea and the waters shall roare, &c.

Euery man is desirous to buy the Kalender, that at the beginning of the yeere hee may know what will happen in the end: Merchants and Husbandmen especially, that they may see this yeere what dearth, or death, or other accidents are likely to ensue the next yeere. [g] Behold here Christs Prognostication, foretelling by signes in the Sunne, and in the Moone, and in the Stars, what shall come to passe in the end of our yeeres, as also what shall betide vs in the new yeare, the world to come. The [h] Mathematicians of the world neuer mentioned or dreamed of an vniuersall eclipse of the Sunne and Moone together, ther, onely Christs Almanacke reports this. I purpose not in particular to discusse any curious question, but onely to note in generall, that these wonders in heauen, and extraordinary troubles on earth, are manifest forerunners of the worlds ruine, that as we know Summer is neere when the trees bud, so when we see these things come to passe, we may be sure that the kingdome of God is nigh: for as a man that is dying hath many fantasies, euen so, saith Chrysostome, the world declining shall haue manifold errors, in so much if it were possible Gods elect should be deceiued, Matth. 24. 24.

Aristotle could not conceiue the world should haue an end, because he thought and taught it had no beginning: but diuine Plato who liued in Egypt, and read (as it is [i] supposed) the bookes of Moses, acknowledged the worlds creation, and so subscribed to the worlds destruction, holding this axiome, Quod oritur, moritur, That which hath a beginning, hath an end, whatsoeuer hath an end, hath a beginning; the which is to be construed of compounded elementary substances, subiect to generation and corruption, as all things in this world are. For as we read in Scripture, Some things haue a beginning, but no end, as Angels, and the soules of men.

Some things haue no beginning, but yet haue an end, as Gods eternall decrees.

One thing, to wit, Ens Entium, Almighty God, hath neither beginning nor end: [k] who onely hath immortality of all other things: the [l] first and the last: and yet in himselfe there is neither first nor last.

[k] 1. Tim. 6 16

Some things haue both a beginning and end, as the world, which had a creation, and is subiect to corruption. [m] The world passeth away, and the glory thereof, and then when as the powers of heauen shall be shaken, and the [n] element shall melt with heat, and the earth with the workes that are therein shall be burnt vp, then the Sonne of man shall come in a cloud with power and great glory.

[m] 1. Ioh. 2. 17.
[n] 2. Pet 3. 10.

Now this certainty of Christs comming to iudgement affordeth abundant matter of { Comfort to the godly. / Terror to the wicked. / Instruction to both.

Comfort to Gods elect: for when these things come to passe, then, saith Christ in 28. verse, Lift vp your heads, for your redemption draweth neere. Now you are prosecuted and persecuted, deliuered vp to the Synagogues, and cast into prison, but at that great assise there shall be a generall goale deliuery, and you that haue done good, shall goe into euerlasting ioy, and your enemies who haue done euill, into euerlasting fire. Here yee mourne, but hereafter all teares shall be wiped from your eyes: here yee sow in hope, but then ye shall reape with ioy: when as yee shall see the Sonne of man comming in the clouds, &c. As God is the God of comfort, so his booke is the booke of comfort: Whatsoeuer things are written aforetime, they are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might haue hope.

The very soule of all the Bible is the Gospell: and the summe of all the Gospell is the Creed: and the maine point of all the Creed is that article concerning our resurrection and hope of eternall glory, when Christ shall appeare. The Church then hath well annexed that Epistle to this Gospell, as a consolation against desolation. By the booke of comfort, we know that our Redeemer liueth, and that he will come againe to iudge and reuenge our cause.

We beleeue that an eternall kingdome was secretly granted vnto vs in our election, openly promised in our vocation, sealed in our iustification, and that possession shall be giuen in our glorification: when as the iudge of the world shall say, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit ye the kingdome prepared for you from the foundations of the world. ° When the Lord himselfe shall descend from heauen with a shout, and with the voice of the Archangell, and with the Trumpet of God; we shall be caught vp in the clouds to meet him, and so shall euer bee with him.

° 1. Thess. 4 16

And therefore pray we daily, Thy kingdome come: Come Lord Iesus, come quickly. Amen.

Now as this is comfortable to good men, so most terrible to the wicked: as Christ, verse 26. Their hearts shall faile them for feare. They [p] shall seeke death in those daies and shall not find it. And, as it is Apocal. 6. 16. They shall say to the mountaines and rockes, fall on vs, and hide vs from the presence of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lambe. This hath beene their day, wherein so farre as they could they haue done their will; the next is the Lords day, wherein they must suffer his will; [q] a day of anger, a day of trouble and heauinesse; a day of destruction and desolation; a day of obscuritie and darknesse; a day of clouds and blackenesse. The reprobate shall see the sonne of man in the clouds aboue, to condemne them: beneath, hell mouth open ready to deuoure them: before, the deuils hailing them: behind, the Saints and all their deerest friends forsaking them: on the left hand, their sinnes accusing them: on the right, iustice threatning them: on all sides, the whole world made a bone-fire terrifying them; to goe forward, insupportable; to goe backe, impossible; to turne aside, vnauaileable: no maruell then if at the worlds end, men be at their wits end.

[q] Zeph 1. 15.

Thirdly, this administreth instruction vnto all: for as it is in the Epistle, Whatsoeuer things are written aforetime, are written for our instruction. And this is so good a lesson, that if wee could obserue it well, wee should neede no more teaching: so saith the Wiseman, [r] Remember the last things, and thou shalt neuer doe amisse.

[r] Eccles. 7. 36.

The last things are foure: { Death. / Iudgement. / Heauen. / Hell.

But the chiefe is iudgement: for all the rest attend it. Death is vsher to iudgement going before; Heauen and Hell executioners following after. Death would not be so fearefull, if iudgement did not follow: Hell would not be so painfull, if iudgement went not before: without it Heauen would not bee desired, nor Hell feared. He then that remembers the last day, remembers in it all the last things: and hee that remembers the last things, cannot doe amisse. Wherefore let vs euer embrace that godly meditation of S. Hierome: Whether I eat or drinke, or whatsoeuer I doe else, I thinke I heare the last trumpe: Arise yee dead and come vnto iudgment. The consideration of the worlds destruction is a sufficient instruction to keepe good men in honest courses, and to terrifie bad men from euill waies. Italians, in a great thunder, vse to ring their bels, and discharge their cannon shot, that the roring of the one, may lessen the terror of the other. [t] In like sort Satan hangs tinckling cymbals on our eares; and delights vs with the vanities and musicke of the world, that we may forget the sound of the last trumpe, and so that [t] day bee seene, before foreseene of most.

As it is certaine that Christ shall come; so most vncertaine when hee shall come: for he speakes of the time not definitely, but indefinitely: vers. 25. Then there shall bee signes: vers. 27. Then shall they see the sonne of man comming in a cloud: vers. 28. When these things come to passe, then looke vp, for your redemption draweth neere. But how neere now? [u] no man or Angell can tell. [x] Esay saw God in his throne, and the Seraphims stood vpon it, couering his face with two wings, and his feet with two wings: his face, [y] keeping vs from the secrets of Gods eternall predestination in the beginning: his feet, not disclosing when he will come to iudge the world in the end.

The certainty then of this vncertainty, may teach vs not to be [z] curious or carelesse; not curious, for why should wee presume to know more then other men? more then all men? more then Angels? more then Christ himselfe? It is a kinde of sacriledge, saith [a] Saluianus, to breake into Gods holy place, and prie into his secret Sanctuary, and to know more then hee would haue vs to know.

Christs Apostles were his Secretaries, his especiall fauourites and followers, from whom hee kept nothing which was for their good, and yet hee said vnto them, [b] It is not for you to know the times of the seasons, which the Father hath put in his owne power. The glorious Angels abound with much knowledge, naturall, experimentall, reuealed, hauing farre better meanes of knowledge then wee: for as much as we know the Creator by the creatures; whereas they know the creatures by the Creator. [c] Opus habet humana anima, quasi quodam vehiculo Creaturæ, vt ad cognitionem Creatoris assurgat. Cùm è contrà longè perfectius angelica natura in Creatore notitiam habet creaturæ: Angels alway [d] behold the face of God in heauen, which as in a glasse they see much more then is possible for vs on earth to discerne. Let not then an heauy lumpe of clay presume to know more then heauens heralds: and yet Christ, to satisfie further our curiosity, saith in the thirteenth of Marke, that himselfe knowes not that day and houre. Now [e] the disciple is not aboue his master, nor the seruant aboue his Lord: It is enough for the disciple to be as his master is, and the seruant as his Lord. He is a foole that will be wiser then Wisedome it selfe: but Christ as man was either ignorant of it, or else had no commission to reueale it: or as [f] Aquine, Dicitur nescire, quia non facit scire: Hee is said himselfe not to know, because he [g] would not haue vs to know. [k] Secret things belong to the Lord; reuealed things vnto vs.

Secondly, this vncertainty of Christs second comming, may teach vs not to be careless: Nam ideo latet vltimus dies, vt obseruetur omnis dies: God would haue vs ignorant of the last day, that we might bee vigilant euery day. This vse Christ makes in the words immediatly following my text: and Matth. 24 42. and Mark. 13.33. It behoueth vs, vpon whom the ends of the world are come, to be more watchfull, because Satan is growne more wrathfull, Apocal. 12.12.

2 Διδασκαλικῶς, by way of direction, He that iudgeth is the Lord, and therefore iudge nothing before the time, verſe 5.

Let a man] Whereas the Corinthians aſcribed either too much or too little to their Teachers, our Apoſtle ſhewes a [p] meane, Let a man this wiſe, &c. neither magnifying them as Chriſt, for they are not Maſters but Miniſters, and yet not vilifying them as ordinary ſeruants in Gods houſe, for they are ſtewards, and that of Gods owne ſecrets.

Albeit Paul [q] plant, and Apollos water, onely God giueth increaſe. Paul [r] planted in preaching, Apollos watered in baptiſing: ſome plant by their words, other water by their workes; ſome plant by doctrine, other water by their exhortation: ſome plant by ſpeaking, other water by writing, but in all God is all.

[q] 1. Cor 3. 6.

He that planteth is nothing, he that watereth is nothing, [s] that is, no great thing, no principall agent, but a ſubordinate inſtrument: wherefore let not a man boaſt in men, whether it be Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death; whether they bee things preſent, or things to come, euen all are yours, and yee Chriſts, and Chriſt Gods. If then the Preachers are yours, and you are Chriſts, and Chriſt Gods, [t] as of him, and through him, and for him are all things, ſo vnto him, and not vnto men, giue all the praiſe and glory.

[t] Rom. 11. 36.

Let a man eſteeme vs not as Chriſt, but as the Miniſters of Chriſt, not as Lords, but as ſtewards in Gods houſe: now ſtewards adminiſter not their owne goods but their maſters, and one day muſt account for them, and therefore ye muſt haue, and we behaue our ſelues as accountants. [u] Antichriſt then is not the Vicar of God, but a factor of Satan, in preaching his owne Decrees, and equalling them with the diuine Law.

[u] Luther poſtil. maior in loc.

But albeit Preachers are ſeruants, yet are they not meane, but high ſtewards: and this is an exceeding great dignity to bee Chriſts mouth, Chriſts voyce, Chriſts meſſengers, Chriſts Angels, in ſo much as [x] he that receiueth them, receiueth him, and he that deſpiſeth them, deſpiſeth him, as ambaſſadors ſpeaking from him, and for him, as our Apoſtle [y] elſew here. They be not only common ambaſſadors, but legati à latere, ſtewards of his hidden ſecrets: not onely diſpenſatores miniſteriorum, as in the vulgar Latine; but [z] according to the originall, myſteriorum, adminiſters of his Sacraments, which are myſteries, and Preachers of his faith, which is a deepe ſecret, 1. Tim. 3. 16. of all other the greateſt: and yet it is the [a] Miniſters proper office, with Iohn Baptiſt to ſhew the Lambe of God, which taketh away the ſinnes of the word.

It is a good obſeruation, that the Lawyer ought to begin with reaſon, and ſo deſcend to common experience and authority. The Phyſician he muſt begin with experience, and ſo come to reaſon and authority: but the Diuine muſt begin with authority, and ſo proceede to reaſon and experience.

And therefore ſo long as the Preachers deliuer the the wholsome words of our Lord Ieſus, [d] or doctrine which is according to his words, you muſt entertaine them as Angels of God, euen as Chriſt Ieſus; honouring their place, and reuerencing their perſons. And this I take to be the pith of the firſt part,

In the ſecond, Saint Paul teacheth how we muſt not iudge: firſt hee reports, then reproues their fault. His report is in theſe words: [e] Hîc iam quæritur, &c. [f] Ἐνθάδε νῦν ἐστι: [g] Here among you Corinthians it is diſcuſſed and diſputed who is a faithfull Miniſter, and who is vnfaithfull.

And herein they wrong both God, his Word, and his Miniſters: God, to whom onely iudgement belongs in this caſe. Some peraduenture may iudge of the Miniſters eloquence; many of his induſtrie, but none of his faithfulneſſe: which is the [h] chiefe thing required in a ſteward. A man may bee fruitfull and yet not faithfull; an inſtrument to ſaue other, and yet bee condemned himſelfe: for hee may preach Chriſt, not for Chriſt, but happily for other reſpects: as the fornicator makes delectation his end, not generation; ſo the Preacher, [i] adulterans verbum, as it is in the vulgar, intends not to get children in Chriſt vnto God, but gaine or glory to himſelfe. Yee know the men, ye know not their mind: ye ſee their fact, not their faith; onely God knowes the ſecrets of all hearts.

Secondly, it is an iniury to Gods Word, in hauing the faith of our glorious Lord Ieſus Chriſt in reſpect of perſons, Iames 2. 1. It is not any who, who may either priuiledge any error, or preiudice a truth: if another Goſpell, hold him accurſed, although the Miniſter bee an Angell: if a truth, doe as they ſay, though the teacher bee a deuill: poiſon in a golden cup is as hurtfull as in an earthen pot: wine in a ſiluer bowle no better then in a wooden diſh. When one ſaith, I am Pauls, and another, I am Apollos, are yee not [k] carnall? Is not this groſſe carnality, to ſet vp Idols in the Church, and to worſhip them in ſtead of God?

Thirdly, this is an indignitie to the Preachers, in that artleſſe men will take vpon them to iudge of Art. By the [l] lawes of the land, a perſon occupying the craft of a Butcher, may not vſe the occupation of a Tanner; and a Brewer may not deale in the occupation of a Cooper: Quod medicorum eſt promittunt medici, tractant fabrilia fabri. None preſcribe phyſicke but ſuch as are Doctors, at leaſt practitioners in the facultie: none plead at the common barre, but ſuch as are learned in the law: yet euery one, as Hierome complaines in an Epiſtle to Paulinus, takes vpon him exact knowledge in Theologie, and will teach both Clerke and Prieſt what they ſhould ſay, what they ſhould doe. So that often it fareth with Preachers, as it doth alway with fiſh, none ſo welcome as new come: If a ſtranger happily come among vs, albeit hee bee neuer ſo weake for his learning, neuer ſo wicked for his liuing; yet all the country muſt gad after him, and neglect their owne Paſtors: [m] as Chriſt in the Goſpell, A Prophet is not honoured in his owne citie, and in his owne houſe. This was a foule fault in Corinth: Apollos and Cephas and Paul were deſpiſed, while falſe teachers were deified. Indeed Paul writes in the third Chapter of this Epiſtle, as if ſome followed him, and other Apollos: himſelfe for his plaine doctrine, and Apollos for his excellent eloquence. But in the ſixth verſe of this Chapter he ſaith, hee applied thoſe things vnto himſelfe, and Apollos figuratiuely; [n] meaning that Peter and Apollos and himſelfe were neglected, and other vpſtart ſeducers onely regarded: he did vſe the names of Gods Apoſtles in his cenſure for the benefit of the Corinthians: For your ſake, that ye might learne by vs that no man preſume aboue that which is written, and that one ſwell not againſt another for any mans cauſe.

So men in our dayes are too partiall in hearing and cenſuring their Teachers: as one ſaid, Auditories are like Faires; the Pedler and the Ballad-monger hath more company then the graue rich Merchant: Children and fooles hang vpon them who ſell toyes, and neglect thoſe who haue their ſhops ſtuft with good good commodities: and this assuredly doth discourage many Pastors learned and profitable. For euery man hath not a magnanimous spirit, spernere se sperni, to tell his auditory with Paul, I passe very little to be iudged of you. For so this fault is reproued in the third verse.

The false teachers had extolled themselues and disgraced him; affirming [o] that his bodily presence was weake, and his speech of no value, Saint Paul therefore hauing the testimonie of a good conscience, resolutely tels the Corinthians, I little passe to be iudged of them, or you, or any man: Hee [p] saith not, I esteeme not at all; but I little regard: that is, not so much respect your iudgement, as that I should be discouraged in doing my duty. The witnesse of conscience is more comfortable then the vulgar breath: in comparison of the one, I little prize the other. Or as [q] Gorran: It were a great thing to be iudged of such as are spirituall; but it is a very small thing to bee iudged of you, who are thus carnall. As [r] Seneca: Malè de me loquuntur, sed mali; monerer si de me Marcus Cato, si Lælius sapiens, si duo Scipiones ista loquerentur: nunc malis displicere laudari est.

Either of mans iudgement.] Our Apostle wils vs to rebuke with all long suffering and doctrine. Now himselfe is a patterne of his owne precept: for lest he should seeme too bitter in chiding the Corinthians, and despising their iudgement; he doth in this clause somewhat qualifie his speech, insinuating that hee doth except against all others iudgement, so well as theirs. Happily some will obiect, it is vnciuill and vnchristian, not to regard what men speake of vs: As we must haue care of our conscience, so likewise of our credit:

It is good in our courses to gaine the fore-game; for it is exceeding hard to play an after-game of reputation. Answer is made, that albeit Paul esteemed little their iudgement in regard of [t] himselfe, as expecting the praise of God, and hauing a good certificat from his owne conscience; yet in respect of other who might hereby be scandalized, and so the Gospell hindred, hee was assuredly grieued, and therefore reproues here their fault boldly, that they might repent heartily: To me it is little, but vnto other it is a great scandall, that I should be thus abused and neglected of you.

I iudge not mine owne selfe.] I know more by my selfe then you or any man else: and yet I cannot iudge my selfe, therefore much lesse ought ye to iudge me. This seemes contradictory to that of [u] Paul: If we would iudge our selues we should not be iudged, I answer with [x] Aquine, that there is a three-fold iudgement:

1. Discussionis.
2. Condemnationis.
3. Absolutionis.

Euery man may, ye must iudge himselfe with the two former; hee must examine himselfe, and vpon examination altogether condemne himselfe. Euery man ought daily to commune with his owne heart, and to search out his spirit, Psal. 77. 6. Scopebam spiritum, I did as it were sweepe my soule: [y] Diligenter attende, quantum proficias vel quantum deficias: Examine thy selfe whether thou hast gone forward or backward in the waies of the Lord. Summon thy selfe, as it were before another, and so sift the whole course of thy life, wherein thou hast offended in thought, word, deed; by sinnes of omission, or commission, against God, thy neighbour, and thy selfe. Iudge thine owne selfe in secret before thy selfe, and thou shalt not bee condemned at the last day before all the world. Doe this, saith [z] Bernard, Si non semper, aut sæpè, saltem interdum: If not alwaies, or often, at least sometime: especially, saith our Apostle, when yee come to receiue the blessed Sacrament of our Lords Supper: Let a man examine himselfe, and so let him eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup.

The second kinde of iudgement is of condemnation. So [a] Iob: I will reprone my waies in his sight. [b] If I would iustifie my selfe, mine owne mouth shall condemne condemne me. So [c] Dauid: Enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant, for in thy ſight ſhall no man liuing be iuſtified. And Saint [d] Iohn: If we ſay we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues, and the truth of God is not in vs.

A Chriſtian in this world is [e] mundus & mundandus: cleane in part, and in part to be made cleane: [f] all his perfection conſiſts in acknowledging his imperfection; all his righteouſneſſe in [g] forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, rather then in perfection of vertue. Yea but, ſay the Pelagians, and after them the Papiſts, Elizabeth and Zacharie were iuſt, obſeruing all the Commandements and ordinances of the Lord, Luk. 1.6. Iob an vpright man departing from euill, and preſeruing his innocency, Iob 2. 3. In Dauid no wickedneſſe, Pſalm. 17. 3. and heere Paul, I know nothing by my ſelfe.

I anſwer to the firſt: If Zacharie was a Prieſt, then a ſinner: for as we read, Heb. 7.27. the Prieſts manner was firſt to offer ſacrifice for his owne ſinnes, and then for the peoples. If then Zacharie did ſacrifice, he had ſinne, and ſinne is a tranſgreſſion of the Law: ſo that he did not exactly keepe the whole Law, but himſelfe and his wife ſo farre obſerued the Commandements, as that they were blameleſſe in the worlds eie: [h] no man could iuſtly condemne them for doing vniuſtly.

But as [i] Auguſtine ſaid, Væ etiam laudabili vitæ hominum, ſi remota miſericordia, diſcutias eam: Woe to the commendable life of man, if God ſet mercy aſide in iudging of it.

Euen their owne [k] Bernard confeſſeth ingenuouſly, that if the Lord ſhould take a ſtrait account of vs his ſtewards, it were impoſſible that any ſhould anſwer the thouſandth, yea the leaſt part of his debt, nec milleſimæ nec minimæ parti.

For the commendation of Iob, it is not ſimple, but comparatiue: There was none like him on the earth; at leaſt none ſo righteous in that part of the earth in the land of Vz. [l] It was a great praiſe to be ſo good among that people, who were ſo bad. According to the meaſure of humane perfection Almighty God hath giuen him ſo great teſtimony of righteouſneſſe, ſaith [m] Auguſtine: Haſt thou not conſidered my ſeruant Iob? how none is like him in the earth, an vpright and iuſt man, one that feareth God, and eſchueth euill. But himſelfe is afraid of himſelfe: Verebar omnia opera mea: So the Romiſh tranſlation hath it: I was afraid of all my workes, Iob 9.28. And in the ſecond verſe of the ſame Chapter: How ſhall a man be iuſtified before God? and in the third verſe: If I contend with him, I ſhall not be able to anſwer him one for a thouſand.

Now for Dauid, his praiſe was not generall, but particular and partiall. There was no wickedneſſe found in him, [n] that is, no plot or practiſe againſt Saul; whereof hee was accuſed vniuſtly: but otherwiſe in other things, his ſinnes were ſo many, and thoſe ſo heauy, that hee crieth out in the 38. Pſalme, Put me not to rebuke, O Lord, in thine anger, &c. Dauid was no traytor, but Dauid was an adulterer, and a cruell murtherer: He turned from nothing the Lord commanded him all the daies of his life, ſaue only in the matter of Vriah the Hittite, 1. Kings 15. 5.

What, had Dauid no fault elſe, but onely that againſt Vriah? Yes ſurely, Dauid was [o] conceiued in ſinne, and ſhapen in wickedneſſe. As hee was the ſonne of many yeares, ſo the father of many ſinnes. In his priuate conuerſation he did ſo much offend, as that hee ſaith in the 130. Pſalme, If thou O Lord be extreame to marke what is done amiſſe, oh Lord who may abide it? That text then is to bee conſtrued of his publike gouernment, as the circumſtances import; as hee was a King, the Scripture giueth him this commendation, that, excepting the matter of Vriah, hee gaue no publike ſcandall in the whole time of his raigne. Dauid was in many things a bad man, but in moſt things a good King.

So likewiſe this ſpeech of Paul, I know nothing by my ſelfe, is not [p] generall, extended to the whole courſe of his life, but particular touching his Apoſtleſhip.

Apoſtleſhip. No Biſhop [q] Latimer ſaid: As for ſedition, for ought that I know, me thinks I ſhould not need Chriſt: if I might ſo ſay. Paul knew nothing, that is no vnfaithfulneſſe in exerciſing his miniſtery; which hee did vtter here, not to iuſtifie himſelfe, as it is apparent in the next clauſe, but to glorifie God. As we find in the fifteenth chapter of this Epiſtle, verſe 9. I am the leaſt of the Apoſtles, not worthy to bee called an Apoſtle, becauſe I perſecuted the Church of God: but by the grace of God I am that I am, and his grace was not in vaine, for I laboured more abundantly then them all; yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me. Saint Paul then, aſſiſted with Gods eſpeciall grace, found nothing in himſelfe to condemne himſelfe, for his vnfaithfulneſſe in preaching: but in other actions hee was ſo buffeted with Satan, and ouerladen as it were with his infirmities, as that he grieuouſly [r] complaineth: O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliuer me from the body of this death? Hee that cals himſelfe in [ſ] one place the leaſt Saint, in [t] another acknowlegeth himſelfe the greateſt ſinner. But what neede we looke any further? He that here ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, ſaith alſo, yet herein am I not iuſtified: as I doe not condemne, ſo not abſolue my ſelfe. The Papiſt then in citing this text, hath loſt a pound to gaine a penie: For although a man doe all that hee can, hee is ſtill an vnprofitable ſeruant. I know no vnfaithfulneſſe in mee, yet I am not hereby iuſtified: for, as [u] Gorran and Aquine note, Paul might haue many ſecret ſinnes vnknowne to himſelfe: according to that of [x] Dauid; Who can tell how often hee offendeth? O cleanſe thou me from my ſecret faults. Euery way of a man (ſaith [y] Salomon) is right in his owne eie: but the Lord pondereth the heart: and who can ſay, [z] I haue made mine heart cleane? Or, as [a] our Diuines expound it, howſoeuer Paul was faithfull in his office, yet his and all our good workes are ſtained with ſome blemiſh.

There was iniquity in the holy ſacrifices of the children of Iſrael: but their high Prieſt did beare their iniquity to make the offering acceptable before the Lord: Exod. 28. 38. There is vnholineſſe in our holieſt actions, but Chriſt our high Prieſt hath borne the iniquity: and they are accepted of God in him not by themſelues or their owne perfection, but as perfumed with the ſweet incenſe of Chriſts obedience: who to make both vs and them acceptable, gaue himſelfe an offering and a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſauour to God: Ephe. 5. 2. The Goſpell. MATTH. 11. 2. vnto 11th.

When Iohn in priſon heard the workes of Chriſt.

THis Goſpell hath two principall parts: { A queſtion moued by Saint Iohn Baptiſt, in the 2. 3. verſes. / An anſwer made by our Sauiour Chriſt in the reſt.

In the queſtion foure things are regarded: { 1. The place where: in priſon. / 2. The time when, he heard the workes of Chriſt. / 3. The meſſengers: he ſent two of his Diſciples. / 4. The meſſage: Art thou he that ſhall come, &c.

Chriſts anſwer concerneth either the { Meſſage / or / Perſon } of Iohn.

That which concerned the meſſage of Iohn, he deliuered vnto the meſſengers: verſe 4, 5, 6. Goe and ſhew Iohn what ye haue heard and ſeene.

That which concerned the perſon of Iohn, hee deliuered vnto the multitude when the diſciples of Iohn were departed: verſe 7, 8, 9, 10.

Wherein

Wherein obſerue theſe three circumſtances:
1. When: After Iohns diſciples were gone, auoiding hereby all flatterie.
2. To whom: To the multitude, confirming in them a reuerend opinion of Iohn.
3. What: his ſpeech altogether tended vnto the praiſe of Iohn.

And it is partly Negatiue, ſhewing what he was not for his life, verſe 7 8. Affirmatiue, ſhewing what he was for his office, verſe 9. 10.

This I take to be this Goſpels anatome and epitome.

When Iohn, in priſon.] [b] Many are the troubles of the righteous. If they were many, and not troubles, then as it is in the prouerbe, the more the merrier: or if they were troubles, and not many, then the fewer the better cheere. But it hath pleaſed Almighty God to couple them both together, in nature troubles, in number many, that thorow many tribulations wee might enter into the kingdome of God, Act. 14. 22.

[b] Pſal. 34. 18.

Some therefore are touched in their reputation, as Suſanna; ſome croſſed in their children. as Ely; ſome perſecuted by their enemies, as Dauid; ſome wronged by their friends, as Ioſeph; ſome tormented in their body, as Lazarus; ſome ſuffer loſſe of goods, as Iob; ſome reſtrained of their libertie, as here Iohn in priſon. As Naples is called in [c] hiſtorie, the butt, and Millaine the bale of fortune; ſo the good man is the butt of the wicked, whereat he ſhoots his ſharpeſt head arrowes: and therefore we muſt put on Gods armour, following S. Iohns example. When we are in priſon, or in any other affliction, we muſt not flie to witches, or relie too much on men, but immediatly ſend to Chriſt; I ſay ſend two meſſengers vnto God, our almes and our praiers: for they will doe our errand for vs, as they did for Cornelius, Act. 10. 4.

[c] Ortelius.

Not to follow the common poſtils in this argument, I note out of theſe two circumſtances, of place and time, two commendable vertues in Iohn, to wit, his diſcretion and humilitie. The diſciples of Iohn held their maſter a greater Prophet then Chriſt: albeit he told them plainly, that he was not worthy to vnlie the latchet of Chriſts ſhooe, Matth. 3. 11. Behold then his exceeding wiſdome, who ſent his diſciples vnto Chriſt, when himſelfe was moſt abaſed in regard of his preſent impriſonment, and imminent death, and when Chriſt on the other ſide was moſt famous for his wondrous workes and ſtrange miracles: When Iohn being in priſon, heard the workes of Chriſt, he ſent two of his diſciples vnto him.

The Diſciples of Iohn had three faults, as wee finde in the Goſpell:
Enuie: [d] Behold, he that was with thee beyond Iordan baptizeth, and all men follow him.
Ignorance: ſuppoſing [e] Iohn to be Chriſt.
Incredulitie: ioyning with the Phariſies againſt Chriſt, ſaying, [f] Why doe we and the Phariſies faſt oft, and thy diſciples faſt not?

[d] Iohn 3. 26.
[f] Matth 9 14.

Now in [g] Chriſts ſchoole there were three perfections oppoſite to theſe three defects: Examples of humilitie againſt enuie: words of wiſdome againſt ignorance: works of wonder againſt incredulitie. Iohn therefore ſent his diſciples vnto Chriſt, that ſeeing his humilitie, their enuie might be leſſened; that hearing his wiſdome, their ignorance might be rectified; that wondring at his works, their incredulitie might be confounded: and becauſe [h] faith is the mother of all vertues, and infidelitie the nurſe of all wickedneſſe, the Baptiſt then ſent his diſciples, when he heard of the great works of Chriſt; that going, they might ſee; ſeeing, wonder; wondring, beleeue; beleeuing, be ſaued.

[g] Iacob. de vorag ſer. 1. Dom. 3. Aduent.
[h] Clem. Strom. 2.

A good example for all [i] Preachers to follow; that they take their hint, and beſt opportunitie to benefit their auditors. Euery Paſtor is a ſteward in Gods houſe; and a ſteward muſt not only prouide meat enough, but alſo prepare it in due ſeaſon: otherwiſe, ſaith [k] Bernard, it is not diſpenſatio, but diſſipatio.

[i] Marlorat ex Caluin. in loc.
[k] De Conſid. li. 3.

This ought to be their firſt and laſt [l] care: for Iohn in priſon euen at deaths doore was moſt carefull to commend his ſchollers vnto the beſt Tutor: and this patterne fits all Parents, as well as Preachers. In a word, all [m] ſuperiours that they bee watchfull, for the good of ſuch as are vnder them. [n] If there be any that prouideth not for his owne, and namely for them of his houſhold, he denieth the faith, and is worſe then an Infidell. If ſuch as neglect their families in temporall things, bee worſe then Infidels; how bad are they who neglect them in ſpirituall things, vſing no paines in their life, nor care at their death; that their ſeruants and children after their departure, may be brought vp in inſtruction and information of the Lord?

But that which is eſpecially noted out of thoſe circumſtances, is Iohns humility, who was not vaine-glorious, or factious, or any way deſirous to draw Diſciples after him, but rather to ſend them vnto other, who could better inſtruct them. If all our Preachers were like Iohn, there would be much leſſe diuiſion, and much more deuotion in the Church. An itching Shepheard muſt neceſſarily make a ſcabby Sheepe.

He ſent.] When the Paſtor is reſtrained of his liberty, let him not ceaſe to prouide for his Flock: when the Maſter of the family cannot come to Church himſelfe, let him ſend his ſeruants vnto Chriſt.

Two.] For mutuall ſociety, becauſe [o] two are better then one: if one fall, the other may lift him vp; if one forget, the other may remember: and yet not moe then two, leſt turba ſhould proue turbulenta, leſt many heads ſhould make many Creeds. [p] As Ioſuah ſent two to ſpie the promiſed Land; ſo Iohn ſent two to ſpie the promiſed Lord.

Art thou hee that ſhall come.] At the firſt ſight hereof ſome may ſuppoſe that Iohn did doubt, whether Chriſt was the true Meſſias or no: for otherwiſe he would neuer haue ſent his Diſciples with this queſtion; Art thou hee that ſhalt come, &c. But if you call to minde that which is written before; that Iohn baptized Chriſt in Iordan, and how he ſaw the holy Ghoſt deſcending vpon him, and how he pointed him out with the finger, This is the Lambe of God. Or if you ſhall aduiſedly conſider what followeth after this queſtion of Iohn in this preſent Chapter, what honorable teſtimony Chriſt gaue of him, that he was not a reed ſhaken with the winde; that is, an inconſtant man, one that preached Chriſt to be come, and now to make queſtion of his comming: that he was a Prophet, yea more then a Prophet: if, I ſay, we note the Text either precedent or conſequent, it will appeare more manifeſt then light at noon, that Iohn himſelfe did no way doubt of Chriſt: and therefore to let paſſe all other expoſitions, I follow with the whole ſtreame of [q] late writers, that old interpretation of S. [r] Hierome, [s] Chryſoſtome, [t] Theophylact, Euthymius, Hilary, [u] Rupertus, all which are of this opinion, that Iohn Baptiſt made not this doubt in regard of himſelfe, but in the behalfe of his doubting Diſciples, as yet not throughly perſwaded that Chriſt was the Sauiour of the world: and therefore did he ſend them vnto Chriſt, that by occaſion of Chriſts anſwer, hearing his words, and ſeeing his wonders, they might be fully ſatisfied, and in fine ſaued.

A candle being put in a cloſe roome, will ſhew forth it ſelfe thorow the little cranies of the wals, and chinkes of the window. Iohn was a [x] burning and ſhining lampe: and therefore though he was ſhut vp in priſon, yet notwithſtanding ſhined in his humility, wiſedome, loue, zeale before men, euen like the Sunne giuing the greateſt glimpſe at his going downe.

Go and tell Iohn.] Why tell Iohn? He knew before that Chriſt was the Meſſias: he might haue ſaid rather; I tell you; not, Goe you and ſhew Iohn: [y] but Chriſt would take no notice of their vnbeleefe, leſt he ſhould ſhame and diſcourage them too much.

What you haue heard and ſeene.] What you haue heard of others, and ſeene your ſelues: for as S. [z] Luke reports at that very time before their eyes, for our Sauiour cured many of their ſickneſſes and plagues, and of euill ſpirits, and vnto many many blinde men he gaue ſight: as if he ſhould reaſon thus; I haue made the premiſes; it remaineth only that ye gather the concluſion: [a] hee that enlighteneth the eyes of the blinde, and openeth the eares of the deafe, and [b] bindeth vp the broken hearted, and preacheth good tidings vnto the poore, &c. hee is aſſuredly the Meſſias of the world: But I doe all theſe; therefore goe tell Iohn what yee haue heard and ſeene, the blinde receiue their ſight, the lame walke, &c. Ye know the tree by his fruit. [c] Non ex foliis, non ex floribus, ſed ex fructibus. Here then we may learne to teach ignorant people with our workes as well as our words, that all men may ſee, ſo well as heare what we are.

Yea, but why did he not ſhew them in plaine termes, but demonſtrate by miracle, that he was the Meſſias? He told the woman of [e] Samaria before ſhe did aske: why then did he not tell them when they did aske? Chryſoſtome giues this reaſon; becauſe Chriſt knew the woman of Samaria would eaſily beleeue, therefore he vſed a bare word onely: but the Diſciples of Iohn were hard of beleefe, and therefore hee thought it beſt to teach them by workes, and not by words: [f] I haue greater witneſſe then the witneſſe of Iohn; for the workes which the Father hath giuen me to finiſh, the ſame workes that I doe, beare witneſſe of mee, that the Father hath ſent mee. Wherefore, [g] though yee beleeue not me, yet beleeue the workes: Goe ſhew what ye haue ſeene; the blinde receiue their ſight, the lame walke, the leapers are cleanſed, and the deafe heare, the dead are raiſed vp, &c. Theſe [h] workes which I haue done, the like whereof were neuer done, teſtifie that I am hee who ſhould come: and ſo will your maſter Iohn, that hee looke for no other. This anſwer was thought ſufficient by Chriſt, which is wiſedome it ſelfe: Goe and ſhew Iohn the things that yee haue heard and ſeene. But if Chriſt now will finde any faith among our Atheiſts, hee had need to come with new miracles, I might haue ſaid with more then miracles, leſt our ſearching wits finde the reaſon of them: or otherwiſe conclude them to be but our ignorance of the cauſe. Men and gods, as it is in the fable of the golden chaine, were not able to draw Iupiter downe to the earth, and yet Iupiter was able to draw them vp to heauen: ſo wee muſt ſubmit our reaſon vnto faith, and not faith vnto reaſon.

And as they departed, Ieſus began to ſay vnto the people.] This part of our Sauiours anſwer concernes the commendation of Iohn: if [i] Alexander the great accounted Achilles happy for that hee had ſo good a trumpeter of his honor as Homer, what an exceeding glory was it for the Baptiſt to bee thus extolled by Chriſt, who being truth it ſelfe would not flatter, and could not lie?

[k] Diuines out of theſe circumſtances of perſons and time, note Chriſts wiſdome and ſinceritie; wiſdome, who did not magnifie Iohn before thoſe who did already praiſe him too much: his ſinceritie, that would not flatter him before his owne Diſciples, albeit hee did extoll him before the people, when they wre gone. It is an old ſaying of [l] Gregorie: Plus nocet lingua adulatoris, quam gladius perſecutoris; The word of the flatterer hurts more then the ſword of the perſecuter.

A malicious enemy doth often good by telling vs of our vices, but a fawning friend wrongs vs in telling vs of our vertues: either commending that which we haue not, or too much extolling that which we haue: the which is termed in the Canon law, ſimonia linguæ, verball ſimonie. [m] Salt was vſed in the legall ſacrifices, but not honie, that our lips may offer vp acceptable ſacrifice to God. Wee muſt haue ſalt in our [n] ſpeech, and not honie complements, as being more deſirous to correct our acquaintance wiſely, then to flatter them baſely.

[o] Si dona non ſunt dona, quæ dant hoſtium:
Nec verba quæ dant verba, ſed ſunt verbera.

The Paraſite, ſaith the [p] Poet, hath bread in one hand, and a ſtone in the other; vſing as the Iewes did Chriſt; carrie vs vp to the top of an hill, and then caſt vs downe headloug. [q] Chriſt therefore rebuked the Phariſies before their face, face, but commended Iohn behind his backe, not to his owne, but to the people, leſt they ſhould entertaine an ill conceit of him who was a Preacher and a Prophet: and here by the way note, that the difference betweene the Diſciples of Chriſt and Iohn in matter of ceremonies, as faſting and waſhing of hands, made no ſchiſme in the Church; but Iohn gaue this teſtimonie of Chriſt, that hee was not worthie to looſe the latchet of his ſhooe: and Chriſt here commends highly both the carriage and calling of Iohn; affirming of the one, that hee was not an inconſtant or vaine man; of the other, that he was a Prophet and more then a Prophet. There are three kinds of Prophets, according to the three-fold diſtinction of time: ſome write of things paſt, as Moſes: In the beginning God created,&c. penning an hexameron many yeares after the world was made: ſome of things to come, ſo Chriſt was foretold by the mouth of all his holy Prophets euer ſince the world began: ſome of things preſent, as Zacharias in his ſong; Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, for hee hath viſited and redeemed his people: Chriſt being then conceiued had begun his viſitation. And ſuch a Prophet was old Simeon at Chriſts Circumciſion: Mine eyes haue ſeene thy ſaluation. Now Iohn is more then any of theſe, becauſe hee is all theſe; prophecying of things paſt, I am the voice of him that cryeth in the wilderneſſe, opening an old text of [r] Eſay: prophecying of things preſent, Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world: prophecying of things to come, Repent, for the kingdome of God is at hand.

Secondly, Iohn is more then a Prophet; for whereas other prophecied onely in their life, Iohn was a Prophet in his mothers belly before hee was borne: for [s] when Elizabeth heard the ſalutation of Mary, the babe ſprang in her wombe; the which was ſo ſenſible a prophecie, that Elizabeth inſtantly called Mary the mother of our Lord.

[s] Luk.1.41.

Thirdly, Iohn was greater then the Prophets vnder the Law, becauſe they prophecied of Chriſt to come, but Iohn bare record that hee was come, being, as [t] Diuines haue termed him, a midling, betweene a Prophet and an Apoſtle: a Propheticall Apoſtle, and an Apoſtolicall Prophet: [u] Limes inter vtrumque conſtitutus, in quo deſinerent vetera, & noua inciperent: The Baptiſt then is more then a Prophet, in pointing him out with the finger, who is the very center of all the Prophets aime.

Fourthly, greater then a Prophet, [x] in that hee baptiſed the Lord of the Prophets.

But what need wee looke any further, when as our Sauiour in the very next verſe giues a ſufficient reaſon of this aſſertion out of the Prophet [y] Malachie: This is hee of whom it is written, Behold I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, &c. [z] Other Prophets are ſent to men, but Iohn to God, from God the Father to God the Sonne: Behold, ſaith God the Father, I ſend mine Angell before thee, &c.

Chriſt in all his Sermons vſually cited text for the proofe of his doctrine: ſo Iohn the Baptiſt; I am the voice of a cryer, as ſaith the Prophet Eſay: So Saint Peter, This is that which was ſpoken by the Prophet Ioel: ſo Saint Paul buildeth all his exhortations and concluſions vpon euidence of holy writ; teaching vs hereby, that howſoeuer the deſcant bee fetched out of the ſchoole, yet the grounds of all our preaching muſt be taken out of Gods owne Booke. Beleeue this, for it is written: do this, for it is written. [a] Audi, dicit Dominus, non dicit Donatus, aut Rogatus, aut Vincentius, aut Hilarius, aut Auguſtinus, ſed dicit Dominus. Expound one text by comparing it with another; for the Prophets are [b] commentaries vpon Moſes, and the Goſpell is a ſhort expoſition of both: and that you may the better performe this, examine the queſtions, harmonies, concordances, annotations, gloſſes of the learned Doctors in Chriſts Church from time to time: for it was an impudent ſpeech of Abelardus, Omnes ſic, ſed ego non ſic: and worthily cenſured by [c] Bernard: Os talia loquens fuſtibus inſtius tunderetur, quàm rationibus refelleretur. For as the Word of God was not penned in old time, ſo likewiſe not to bee conſtrued in our time by any priuate ſpirit, 2. Pet. 1. 20, 21.

Behold I ſend my meſſenger.] Our Euangeliſt reports this as ſpoken by God the Father, but the Prophet as ſpoken by the Sonne: Behold, I will ſend my meſſenger, and hee ſhall prepare the way before mee. This altering of the perſons hath troubled Interpreters a little: [d] ſome therefore thus, I ſend my meſſenger before my face; that is, before my Son, Heb. 1. 3. This obſeruation is true, but not pertinent: [e] for to ſend a meſſenger before a mans face, is nothing elſe but to ſend a meſſenger before him, as Hab. 3. 5. Before him went the Peſtilence: and Ieremie Lament. 1. 5. Her children are gone into captiuitie before the enemie: Ante faciem tribulantis; and ſo Chriſt expounds it here, before thy face, that is, before thee.

Now for the changing of the perſons, it is vſuall in the Bible: Saint [f] Peter affirmes that the Word of God was written by the holy Ghoſt; but Saint Paul ſaith, Heb. 1. 1. that God the Father in old time ſpake by the Prophets. [g] Eſay doth aſcribe this vnto the Sonne; My people ſhall know my name, in that day they ſhall know that I am he who ſent to them: and the reaſon hereof is plaine; becauſe all the workes of the ſacred Trinitie, quoad extra, bee common vnto all the three perſons, and ſo God the Father, and God the Sonne, and God the Holy Ghoſt, ſend. The perſons diuerſitie then alters not the ſacred Identitie: but as [h] Interpreters obſerue, that text of Malachie compared with this of Matthew, proue notably that God the Father and God the Sonne are all one, their power equall, their Maieſtie coeternall.

My meſſenger.] In the vulgar Latine, Angelum meum: [i] Origen therefore thought Iohn was an Angell; but other Expoſitors more fitly, that the Baptiſt was Angelus officio, non naturâ; ſo Malachie cals other Prophets, Angels, in his 2. chap. 7. The Prieſts lips ſhall preſerue knowledge, and they ſhall ſeeke the Law at his mouth, for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts: Angelus Domini: ſo Preachers are called [k] Angels in the New Teſtament, that is, meſſengers and ambaſſadors of God; and here the Goſpell agrees with the Epiſtle. This is a patterne of Saint Pauls precept: Preachers are to bee reſpected as the Miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of God, for God ſaith of Iohn the Baptiſt, Behold I ſend my meſſenger, &c.

Happily ſome will obiect, if ordinarie Prophets are called Angels, how doth this teſtimonie proue Iohn to bee more then a Prophet? Anſwer is made by Zacharie, [l] that Iohn is κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Prophet, and here by Matthew, that Angell, as it were bedell or gentleman vſher vnto Chriſt. As then in a ſolemne triumph they be moſt honoured, who goe next before the King; ſo Iohn being next vnto Chriſt, euen before his face, is greater then they who went farre off: hee was the voice, Chriſt the word: now the word and the voice are ſo neere, that Iohn was taken for Chriſt. Againe, Iohn may bee called that Angell, in [m] regard of his carriage ſo well as his calling; for albeit hee did no miracle, yet, as [n] one ſaid, his whole life was a perpetuall miracle: firſt his conception was wonderfull; begotten, ſaith [o] Ambroſe, with praier: Non tam complexibus quàm orationibus: An Angell from Heauen auoucheth as much in the firſt of Luke, verſ. 13. Feare not Zacharie, for thy praier is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth ſhall beare thee a ſonne, and thou ſhalt call his name Iohn. It was another miracle, that a babe which could not ſpeake, yea, that was vnborne, began to execute his angelicall office, and to ſhew that Chriſt was neere: that dumbe Zacharie ſhould propheſie, was a third wonder at his circumciſion; and ſo the whole life of Iohn was very ſtrange, liuing in the wildernesſe more like an Angell then a man: and in a word, thoſe things which are commendable in other ſeuerally, were found in him all iointly, being a Prophet, Euangeliſt, Confeſſor, Virgin, Martyr: liuing and dying in the truth and for the truth. I know not (as [p] Ambroſe ſpeakes) whether his birth, or death, or life was more wonderfull.

How Iohn doth prepare the way before Chriſt, is ſhewed in the Goſpell on next Sunday; yet obſerue thus much in generall, that it is the Miniſters office to ſhew men the right way to ſaluation, and to bring them vnto God: our Sauiour hath promiſed to come vnto men; it is our duty therefore to knocke at the doores of your heart, by preaching faith and repentance, to prepare the way for our maſter, that when himſelfe knocks he may be let in, and ſo ſup with you, and dwell with you, and you with him euermore. Amen.

The Epiſtle. PHIL. 4. 4. vnto verſe 8th.

Reioyce in the Lord alwayes: againe, I ſay reioyce.

A Text of reioycing againſt the time of reioycing: whereby the Church intimates how we ſhould ſpend our Chriſtmas enſuing; not in glutonie and drunkenneſſe, in chambering and wantonneſſe, doing the deuill more ſeruice in the twelue dayes, then in all the twelue moneths: but rather [q] in Pſalmes, and hymnes, and ſpirituall ſongs, making melody in our hearts vnto the Lord: I ſay the Church allotting this Scripture for this Sunday, teacheth vs how this holy time ſhould bee well imployed, not in vnholineſſe and mad merriments among lords of miſrule, but in good offices of religion, as it becomes the ſeruants of him who is the God of order: obſeruing this Feſtiuall in honour of Ieſus, not Iacchus; alway praiſing our heauenly Father, in louing vs ſo well as to ſend his Sonne to ſaue his ſeruants; and leſt wee ſhould erre in our ſpirituall reuels, obſerue in this Epiſtle both

The { Matter / Manner } of our ioy.

The matter and obiect of our ioy: reioyce in the Lord.

The manner: how { Long; alway reioyce. / Much; againe and againe reioyce. }

It is an old rule in [r] Philoſophie, and it is true in Diuinitie, that affections of the minde, as, anger, feare, delight, &c. are in their owne nature neither abſolutely good, nor ſimply euill, but either good or bad, as their obiect is good or bad. As for example, to bee angry or not angry, is indifferent: Bee angry, and ſinne not, ſaith [f] Paul; there is a good anger. Whoſoeuer is angry with his brother vnaduiſedly (ſaith [t] Chriſt) is in danger of iudgement; there is a bad anger. So Matt. 10. 28. Feare not them that kill the body, and are not able to kill the ſoule: but rather feare him which is able to deſtroy both ſoule and body in hell. So likewiſe to reioyce, or not to reioyce, in it ſelfe is neither abſolutely diſgracefull, nor altogether commendable: we may not reioyce in the toyes of the world, in frowardneſſe, or doing euill: ſaith [u] Salomon: Non in vitijs, non in dinitijs, ſaith [x] Bernard: [y] Woe be to you that thus laugh, for ye ſhall waile and weepe: but we may delight in the Lord, ſaith Dauid. Reioyce in Chriſt, ſaith Marie: then our ioy is good, when as our ioyes obiect is good, yea God; as Paul here; Reioyce in the Lord.

As ſorrow is a ſtraitning of the heart, for ſome ill: ſo ioy the dilating of the heart for ſome good, either in poſſeſſion or expectation. Now Chriſt is our chiefe good; as being author of all grace in this life, and all glory in the next: and [z] therefore wee muſt chiefly reioyce in him, and in other things onely for him: in him, as the donor of euery good and perfect gift: for him, that is, according to his will: as the phraſe is vſed, 1 Cor. 7. 39. If her husband be dead, ſhee is at libertie to marrie with whom ſhee will, onely in the Lord.

So then we may reioyce in other things; for the Lord as in the Lord: wee may reioyce in our ſelues, as being the Lords; and in other, becauſe they reioyce in the Lord, Pſal. 16. 3. All my delight is vpon the Saints that are in the earth, and vpon ſuch as excell in vertue: So likewiſe wee may reioyce with the the [a] wife of our youth, and diſport our ſelues in good company: we may make Chriſt mas pies, and Harueſt dinners: in a word, reioyce in euery thing which may further our ſpirituall reioycing in the Lord. But [b] whether we eat, or drinke, or whatſoeuer we doe elſe, all muſt be done to the honor and glory of God. Reioyce in the Lord alwaies: and againe I ſay reioyce.

Yea but Chriſt, Mat.5.4. Bleſſed are they that mourne: Luk.6.21. Bleſſed are they that weepe. [c] This reioycing is not contrary to that mourning: for ſuch as mourne are bleſſed in being comforted: and comforted by reioycing in the Lord. Reioyce, ſaith [d] Chriſt, in that day and be glad, when any ſhall hate you for my ſake; the which his Apoſtles accordingly fulfilled, Acts 5.41. They departed from the Councell reioycing, that they were counted worthy to ſuffer rebuke for his Name: that Chriſt would vſe them as his [e] buckler: and Rom.5.2. We reioyce in tribulations. The Father of mercies and God of all conſolation comforteth vs in all our afflictions: [f] As the ſufferings of Chriſt abound in vs, ſo our conſolation aboundeth through Chriſt. [g] He doth appoint comfort to ſuch as mourne in Sion: hee doth giue beauty for aſhes, oyle of ioy for ſorrow, the garment of gladneſſe for the ſpirit of heauineſſe: ſo that a martyr when hee is moſt mournfull, is mirthfull: hee ſpeakes of his tormentor, as [h] Socrates of Anitus; and [i] Petus of Nero the tyrant, Occidere me poteſt, ladere verò non poteſt: He may well kill me, but hee ſhall neuer ill me. Nihil crus ſentit in neruo, cùm manus eſt in cœlo, ſaith [k] Tertullian: Euery cut is a wide mouth to praiſe Chriſt, as the Martyr [l] Romanus ſweetly:

Tot ecce laudant ora quot ſunt vulnera.
Grates tibi ô præfecte magnas debeo,
Quò multa pandens ora, iam Chriſtum loquor.

Bleſſed are they that die for the Lord, becauſe they reioyce in the Lord. No loſſe, no croſſe can interrupt our ſpirituall ioy: for as it followeth in the text to be conſidered, it muſt be continuall, alway reioyce. The Chriſtian muſt keepe Chriſtmas all his life, though not in his hall, yet in his heart: alwaies in his minde, albeit not alway with his mouth.

It is a true rule deliuered in the ſchoole, that Gods affirmatiue lawes [m] obligant ſemper, ſed non ad ſemper: ad ſemper velle, but not ad ſemper agere; requiring diſpoſition perpetuall; and practiſe ſo often as occaſion is offered. Holy, iuſt, valiant men are they who can whenſoeuer they will, and will whenſoeuer they ought, execute what their ſeuerall imperfections import. There is a time for all things, and therefore ſeuerall duties ought to bee diſcharged in ſeuerall ſeaſons. He that ſaith here, reioyce alway, ſaith in another place, [n] pray continually, and in all things giue thankes: and therefore wee need not alwaies actually pray, nor actually giue thankes, nor actually reioyce, in word and outward geſture, but as opportunity ſhall require. If then as time, neuer a better time, then this holy time: neuer greater cauſe to [o] ſhout out for ioy, then now, for that our King comes vnto vs: it is our bounden duty alwaies intentionally; but at this time with Pſalmes and ſongs actually. No ſin, no ſorrow muſt hinder our ſpirituall reioycing For in all our aduerſity God is euen at hand; [p] not onely nigh in his Maieſtie, [q] though doubtleſſe hee bee not farre from euery one of vs, but alſo nigh in his mercy, Pſalme 145. 18. The Lord is nigh vnto all them that call vpon him. [r] A very preſent helpe in trouble. Yea the Lords ſecond comming is at [s] hand, when as he ſhall iudge and reuenge our cauſe; rewarding vs with eternall happineſſe, and puniſhing our aduerſaries with euerlaſting fire: and therefore reioyce alwaies in all things: I ſay, reioyce in the Lord, for we cannot alway reioyce in the things of this life. [t] The world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof, but Chriſt is euermore the ſame: the beginning and end of all other things, himſelfe without either beginning or end; if then our ioyes obiect bee God, it may bee continuall: but if fixed on earthly things, expoſed to manifold changes and chances, it muſt neceſſarily bee mutable. the [x] Poet truly Gaudia principium noſtri ſunt ſæpè doloris. [y] Euen in laughing the heart is ſorrowfull, and the end of mirth is heauineſſe. The world is a ſea of glaſſe, Apocal.4.6. [z] bri.tle as glaſſe, tumultuous as the ſea: but hee that reioyceth in the Lord, is like [a] mount Sion which ſtandeth faſt for euer. If then any deſire to reioyce alway, let him reioyce in the Lord.

And againe I ſay, reioyce.] The [b] troubles of this life are ſo great, and our patience ſo little, that Paul doubleth his exhortation [c] to preſſe the duty, and expreſſe our dulneſſe: and indeed our reioycing cannot bee continued, except it be multiplied againe and againe: reioyce therefore for mercies already receiued, and againe, reioyce for mercies hereafter promiſed. For receiued grace: firſt, for thy creation: Almighty God might haue made thee a dull Aſſe, a venemous Serpent, an vglie Toade; whereas he created thee according to his owne Image and ſimilitude, as it were diuinitatis epitome. For the world is Gods booke, and man is Index of that booke, or a commentary vpon that text: reioyce therefore in the Lord, and ſay with [d] Dauid; What is man that thou art ſo mindfull of him, or the Son of man, that thou ſhouldeſt viſit him? Thou haſt crowned him with worſhip and glory: thou makeſt him to haue dominion of the workes of thy hands, and thou haſt put all things in ſubiection vnder his feet, as a ladder whereby men might aſcend to the conſideration of thy greatneſſe and goodneſſe.

For thy preſeruation, he might haue denied thee ſight, as hee did to Bartimeus, or made thee deafe or dumbe, or a cripple, as wee read of many in the Goſpell, and daily ſee many crying and dying in our ſtreets. If the Lord of hoſts had not beene thy guard, all other creatures his ſouldiers would haue banded themſelues againſt thee; fire would haue deuoured thee, water would haue drowned thee, mother earth would open and ſwallow thee quicke; [e] the ſtone out of the wall, the beame out of the timber would fight againſt thee: but [f] hee hath giuen his Angels charge ouer thee, to keepe thee in all thy waies: he doth defend thee vnder his wings, and [g] bleſſe thy going forth, and thy comming home; bleſſe the fruit of thy body, the fruit of thy ground, the fruit of thy cattell; euery way ſo bleſſe thee, that thou maiſt alway reioyce in the Lord.

For thy redemption, at this feſtiuall eſpecially; conſider with [h] Bernard, Quis eſt qui venit, vnde, quò, ad quid, quando, quâ: meditate on Gods vnſpeakeable loue, who ſent his Sonne, his firſt begotten, onely begotten Sonne, whom hee loued as himſelfe. The very [i] character and brightneſſe of his glory to deliuer vs his ſeruants, vndutifull as vnprofitable, from the hands of all our enemies. If thou haſt any feeling of theſe myſteries, any faith, be it ſo ſmall as a graine of muſtard ſeed, euermore reioyce in the Lord.

For thy ſanctification alſo: many men in a reprobate ſenſe doe not call vpon God; cannot call vpon God. Whereas hee hath giuen thee grace to pray with the congregation publikely, with thine owne familie priuately, with thy ſelfe ſecretly; giuing thee grace to feele thy ſinnes, and to be ſorry for the ſame: reioyce for theſe good benefits in poſſeſſion; and againe reioyce for thoſe mercies of God in expectation; for that [k] moſt excellent and eternall weight of glory, which he hath [l] laid vp, and in that day will giue to ſuch as loue his appearing. Let vs euermore reioyce in this [m] hope, ſaying with [n] Habacuk, I will reioyce in the Lord, I will ioy in the God of my ſaluation.

Faith is the mother of our reioycing in the Lord: for Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts by [o] faith, and faith is by [p] hearing of the word: ſpirituall ioy then is increaſed by reading, hearing, meditating on holy Scriptures. The Goſpell. IOHN 1. 19. vnto 28.

This is the record of Iohn, When the Iewes ſent Prieſts and Leuites from Ieruſalem to aske him; What art thou?

THis Goſpell is a dialogue betweene certaine Prieſts and Iohn the Baptiſt. The Prieſts inquire after his perſon and place, cariage and calling. Their interrogatories are fiue: the which are anſwered by Saint Iohn ſeuerally; ſhewing, and that directly, both what hee was not, as alſo what hee was; not Chriſt, not Elias, not the Prophet; but the voyce of a Crier in the wildernesſe.

The firſt queſtion is, Who art thou? [t] Quis ego ſum? is the queſtion of a good man; Tu quis es? of an enuious. Hee that hath a bad houſe gads abroad. The wicked are [u] buſie Biſhops in other mens dioceſſes. A true ſaying in it ſelfe, but vpon this text a falſe gloſſe: for it belonged vnto the [x] Prieſts office to manage the buſineſſe of the Church, and exactly to know what euery Prophet was. And albeit Euthymius is of opinion, that the Iewes herein malitiouſly diſabled their knowledge: yet it is more probable that they made this queſtion to ſee whether he was Chriſt. For as wee read, Luk. 3. 15. All men muſed in their hearts of Iohn, if he were not the Chriſt: and our [y] Sauiour told the Iewes plainely, that they for a time reioyced more in Iohn, who was but a candle, then in himſelfe who was the Sun of righteouſneſſe, and light of the world: and albeit theſe meſſengers vttered not ſo much in word, yet aſſuredly they harboured ſuch a conceit in their hearts, therefore Iohn anſwering their [z] intention, rather then their queſtion acknowledged ingenuouſly, that he was not the Chriſt.

In which anſwer, obſerue the matter and the manner. In the matter hee confeſſeth the truth, denying himſelfe, where note his [a] modeſty; and acknowledging Chriſt to be the Meſſias; where note his [b] conſtancie. Fortè (ſaith [c] Gregorie) graue non eſt gloriam & honorem non petere, ſed valde graue eſt non eum ſuſcipere cùm offertur. It was then great humility to refuſe this honor, which not onely the people, but alſo the Prieſts, as it ſhould ſeeme, were ready to caſt vpon him: hereby teaching vs, in all our actions, to ſeeke, not our owne, but Gods glory, ſaying with this holy Baptiſt, [d] He muſt increaſe, but wee muſt decreaſe. The conſtant reſolution of Iohn is alſo remarkeable, confeſſing Chriſt freely, not onely before the multitude, but alſo before the Leuites and Phariſies, men of great learning, and no leſſe place in the Church, and ſuch as hee might well ſuſpect would call his preaching into queſtion.

But the manner of his confeſſion exceeds far the matter: hee confeſſed and denied not, and ſaid plainly, I am not Chriſt. The which words are not ſuperfluous and idle, for euery title of the Scriptures hath his worth and weight. Such repetitions are vſuall in the Bible, to ſet out things more fully, as [e] vanitie of vanities, vanitie of vanities, and all is vanitie. [f] Returne, returne, O Shulamite returne, returne. [g] O earth, earth, earth, heare the word of the Lord. By this iteration then of one and the ſame thing, S. Iohn ſhewed how vnwilling he was to to rob Christ of that honour, which onely belonged vnto him. When [h] Cornelius fell downe at Peters feete, and would haue worshipped him, Peter instantly tooke him vp, saying; Stand vp, for euen I my selfe am a man. When the men of [i] Lystra would haue sacrificed vnto Paul and Barnabas, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying, Wee are euen men, subiect to the like passions that yee be. When that other Iohn would haue worshipped the glorious Angell, who shewed him his reuelation, hee said vnto Iohn, [k] See thou doe it not, for I am thy fellow-seruant: so carefull are Gods children in all ages to giue God the things appertaining to God; honour to whom honour, feare to whom feare, diuine worship to whom diuine worship belongeth. Here wee may iustly condemne the Papists, in giuing that kinde of [l] worship to the crosse, which is onely due to Christ. If a man should aske them whether the crucifix were Christ, I hope they would answer with Iohn, and denie, and confesse plainly that it is not the Christ. Giue then to the crucifix, the respect due to the crucifix, reseruing to the crucified that honour which onely belongs to the crucified.

If a man should aske the bread in the Sacrament, what art thou? it would answer plainly with Iohn, in such language as it can, I am not the Christ; approuing it selfe to our sight and taste, that it is a morsell of bread, a creature, not a Creator, and therefore not to be worshipped and adored as God. If good men on earth, and glorious Angels in heauen, haue refused alway to bee reputed Christ; what shameless Idolaters are they, who say, here is Christ, and there is Christ; this is Christ, and that is Christ?

The second question is, Art thou Elias? To which Iohn answers, No. Yet [m] Christ saith, he is that Elias. An [n] Angell from heauen hath answered this obiection, Luk. 1.17. Iohn Baptist is Elias in power, not in person, indued with the like temperance, like wisdome, like courage. Now the Pharisies imagined that Elias [o] himselfe should come, not another in the spirit of Elias; and therefore Iohn according to their meaning, answered truly, that hee was not Elias. m Matt.11.14.

o Malac.4.5.

The third question is, Art thou a Prophet? To which Iohn answered also negatiuely. Christ said, he was more then a Prophet: himselfe that hee was lesse then a Prophet.

There are three degrees of humilitie:
1. To submit our selues vnto our betters.
2. To giue place to equalls.
3. To yeeld vnto inferiours.

All these were found in Iohn: he submitted himselfe to superiors, affirming that he was not Christ: he gaue place to equalls, answering that hee was not Elias: he did yeeld to his inferiors, in saying he was not a Prophet. [p] Yea but Iohn out of his humilitie must not tell an vntruth: his father Zacharias in the Benedictus, calls him the Prophet of the most high; and Christ, more then a Prophet. [q] Chrysostome, [r] Theophylact, Euthymius, and other Greeke Fathers are of opinion, that the Pharisies imagined Iohn to bee that Prophet spoken of by Moses, Deut.18.15. The Lord thy God will raise vp vnto thee a Prophet like vnto me from among you, euen of thy brethren, vnto him ye shall hearken. [s] The which text must be construed either of the whole Colledge of Prophets, or else of Christ, the chiefe of the Prophets: and therefore Iohn answered directly, that hee was not that Prophet, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Prophet. [t] Rupertus and other Latine Doctors affirme, that the Pharisies in this interrogatorie desired to know whether his office were like that of Esay, Ieremias, Amos, and the olde Prophets: vnto which Iohn might answer well, that he was not such a Prophet; for their office was to foreshew Christ by some workes, or foretell him by ſome words; vel dictis præſignare, vel factis præfigurare, ſaith Rupertus. But Iohns ambaſſage was not to foretell that Chriſt ſhould come, but plainely to tell that Chriſt was come. Thou ſhalt be called the Prophet of the moſt high: not as to prefigure, but to goe before the face of the Lord A Prophet is a Preacher of the Goſpell, not as a Prieſt of the Law.

Hitherto Iohn Baptiſt anſwers negatiuely, ſhewing what hee was not, neither Chriſt, nor Elias, nor a Prophet. Wherein hee did not ſatisfie the meſſengers of the Iewes fully. That therefore they might returne a more perfect anſwer, they further importune and preſſe him, to know what he was; What ſaieſt thou of thy ſelfe? The which is the fourth interrogatorie. To this Iohn affirmatiuely, declaring what he was: I am the voice of a Crier, &c.

There were two chiefe prophecies of him: one, that he ſhould be that Angell of the Lord; and this, that hee ſhould be the voice of a Crier in the wilderneſſe. Here then [a] Interpreters obſerue Iohns humilitie, giuing himſelfe the meaneſt title; not Chriſt, not an Angell, not a Prophet, but onely vox clamantis, &c. [x] Wherein he liuely deſcribeth a good Preacher of the Goſpel: he muſt be the voice of a Crier in the wilderneſſe, to make ſtrait the way for the Lord.

[x] Culman. con 2. Dom. 4. Aduent.

The Word of God is a Proclamation in writing, common to all, and the Miniſter is the voice of the Crier to giue notice to the people, that the matter of the proclamation concerneth them and euery one of them: Acts 13. 26. Men and brethren, and whoſoeuer among you feareth God, to you is the word of this ſaluation ſent: To [y] you God raiſed vp his Sonne Ieſus, and hath ſent him to bleſſe you by turning euery one of you from your iniquities.

[y] Acts 3.26.

Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh: A Preacher therefore muſt crie from the bottome of his heart; the which is prefigured, Ezekiel 3.1. Sonne of man, eat this roll, and goe and ſpeake vnto the houſe of Iſrael. Vtter nothing to the people, but that which thou haſt firſt digeſted thy ſelfe.

The voice.] A word is firſt conceiued in the heart, then vttered by the voice; yet we heare the voice before we know the word: ſo Chriſt the eternall Word was before Iohn and all other Preachers. In the beginning was the Word, and that beginning was before all beginning: yet the world knew not the Word, till it was preached by the voice of men and Angels: albeit the word in it ſelfe bee before the voice, yet vnto vs the voice goeth before the Word: [z] He that commeth after me was before mee. Chriſt then is the Word; and euery Preacher of Chriſt is a voice; the which one word confounds all ſuch as being called thereunto, doe neglect their dutie of preaching. In euery voyce, eſpecially a Church voyce, three commendable qualities are required; that it be cleere, ſweet, and high.

Cleere: for as Hierome ſaid, Omnia in ſacerdote debent eſſe vocalia: All things in a Diuine ſhould preach: his apparell preach, his diet preach, his whole life preach: [a] An example in word, in conuerſation, in ſpirit, in faith, in pureneſſe. Such a voice was the Baptiſt; his preaching was of repentance, and hee liued as a penitent: as he did boldly ſpeake the truth, ſo conſtantly ſuffer for the truth: on the contrary, bad manners and falſe doctrine make harſh and hoarſe the loud voyce.

[a] 1. Tim. 4.12.

Couetous Iudas had a hoarſe voyce: filthy Nicholas an hoarſe voyce: Simon Magus an hoarſe voyce: Peter in denying his Maſter, through extreame coldneſſe of feare, had an hoarſe voyce too for a time. Manicheus, Arius, Pelagius, all Hereticall, Schiſmaticall, Atheiſticall teachers are hoarſe voyces in Gods quier.

Ille ſolus prædicat viua voce, qui prædicat vita & voce.

Secondly, the Church voyce muſt be ſweet: euery ſeed is not to bee ſowne at euery ſeaſon, in euery ground: and ſo it is in Gods husbandrie: The voyce therefore muſt [b] aright diuide the word which it ſings and ſayes; obſeruing time, time, and keeping it ſelfe in tune, ſpeaking to the proud boldly, to the meeke mildly, to all wiſely. The bels hung on [c] Aarons garment were of pure gold, hereby ſignifying that Aarons voyce ſhould be no ſounding braſſe, nor iarring cymball, but a ſweet ring, proouing ſweetly, reprooving ſweetly, confuting errour ſweetly, confirming the truth ſweetly; running ouer all the changes of Gods ring, mentioned, 2. Tim. 4. without any iarre or falſe ſtroke ſweetly. Such a voyce was Iohn the Baptiſt, rebuking [d] Herod, hardened in his wickedneſſe, rufly: taking vp the diſſembling [e] Phariſies bitterly; ſpeaking to his owne diſciples gently, ſinging to euery one the true note fitly: and this, as [f] Dauid ſpeakes, is to charme wiſely.

[e] Matth. 7. 3.

[f] Pſal. 58. 5.

Thirdly, the Church voyce muſt be high, and that in regard of the { Matter, of which / Men, to which } he ſpeakes.

And ſuch a voice was the Baptiſt alſo. Firſt for the matter, he reached many ſtreines neuer ſung before: Repent, ſaith he, for the kingdome of heauen is at hand. This note was neuer heard of the people, nor ſung by the Prieſts in old time. Iohn being more then a Prophet, exalted his voice aboue the Prophets. and in a plaine ſong, without any crotchets, preached him who is higher then the higheſt.

Secondly, in regard of the men, to whom he ſpake: For, as it followeth in the next word, he was the voyce of a Cryer. Now men vſe to crie aloud,

[g] Either { When they ſpeake to men which are a farre off. / When they ſpeake to men which are deafe. / When they are angry. }

[g] Thom. Caten. in 3. Matth. ex Riban. & Beauxamis Har. Tom. 1. fol. 100

Sinners are farre off from God, and exceeding deafe: and therefore we muſt be angry crying aloud, and lifting vp our voyce like a [h] Trumpet, ſhewing the people their tranſgreſſions, and to the houſe of Iacob their ſinnes.

[h] Eſay 58. 1.

Firſt, ſinners are farre off, as it is ſaid of the [i] prodigall childe gone into a farre countrie, like [k] loſt ſheepe, ſtraied out of Gods paſtures into Satans incloſures: and therefore it is our office not onely to whiſtle, but alſo to crie: Returne, returne, ô Shulamite, returne, returne.

[i] Luke 15. 13.

[k] Eſay 53. 6.

Non tellus cymbam, tellurem cymba relinquit.

God doth not go from man, but man from God. He that ſaileth nigh a rock, thinketh the rocke runs from the ſhip, when as indeed the ſhip rides, and the rocke ſtands ſtill: euen ſo wee leaue the wayes of the Lord, and runne our owne courſes, and then we complaine that God is farre from vs, and that our crie comes not nigh him. It is true that God is [l] farre off from the wicked, not becauſe he is moueable, for he is euer the ſame, but becauſe they be wandring: yet they cannot flie from his [m] preſence. The further from Eaſt, the neerer vnto the Weſt: the more they go from Gods grace, the neerer his iuſtice: [n] ſaluation is farre from the wicked, but iudgement hangs ouer their heads. It is our dutie therefore to recall men, à Deo irato ad Deum placatum, from God as an angrie Iudge, to God as a mercifull Father. If we draw neere to God, [o] hee will draw neere to vs: as the good Father of the prodigall ſonne, when he perceiued him a farre off, he had compaſſion, and ran, and fell on his necke, and kiſſed him. It is ſaid in the text, that the ſonne did go to his father; but the father ran to meet his ſonne. The fathers compaſſion and mercy, was greater then the ſonnes paſſion and miſery.

Secondly, ſinners are deafe, and therefore we neede to cry aloud. Some will heare, but with one eare, like [p] Malchus in the Goſpell, hauing their right eare cut off, and only bringing their left eare to the ſermon, miſconſtruing all things ſiniſterly: Some ſtop both their eares; like the deafe adder, refuſing to heare the voice of the charmer, charme he neuer ſo wiſely: Pſalme 58. 5. Marſus hee ſhould bee brought forth into the light: ſo worldly men ſtop one eare with earth, that is, with couetouſneſſe; and the other with their taile, that is, hope of long life. [r] Ieremy therefore crieth: O earth, earth, earth. O vnhappy caitiue, thou that haſt nothing but earth in thy mouth, euer talking of worldly wealth: thou haſt nothing but earth in thy minde, euer plotting how to ioyne houſe to houſe, and field to field; nothing but earth in thine hands, euer buſied about the trifles of this life; heare the word of the Lord, which [f] chargeth thee not to truſt in vncertaine riches, but in the liuing God: and that thou bee rich in good workes, euermore ready to diſtribute while thou haſt time; ſtop not thine eare from the crie of the poore with hope of long life, but remember what Iob ſaith in his 21. Chapter, verſe. 13. They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and ſuddenly they goe downe to hell. [t] O foole this night will they fetch away thy ſoule from thee, then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt prouided?

Thirdly, men ſpeake aloud, when as they be angry: ſo the Preacher ought to be zealous in the cauſe of God, euermore diſpleaſed with the ſinnes of his people, ſaying with [u] Dauid; Doe not I hate them, O Lord, who hate thee? and am not I grieued with thoſe that riſe vp againſt thee? Such a crier was Saint Peter, telling Simon the Sorcerer that he was in the [x] gall of bitterneſſe and bond of iniquity. Such a crier was Paul, taking vp Elymas; [y] O full of miſchiefe, the childe of the deuill, and enemy of all righteouſneſſe, &c. Such a crier was [z] Polycarpus, who told Marcion that he was the deuils darling. And ſuch a crier euery Diuine ſhould bee, as a Simon helping to beare the croſſe of the diſtreſſed; and a [a] Barnabas which is the ſonne of conſolation: ſo like Iames and Iohn, ſtiled in [b] Scripture Bonarges, which is ſonnes of thunder: as [c] Ambroſe fitly, vox and clamor muſt goe together, the voyce preach faith, the cry repentance; the voyce comfort, the cry threaten; the voyce ſing mercy, the cry ſound iudgement: ſo moſt [d] Interpreters expound vox clamantis, according to the vulgar Hebraiſme, vox clamans. Yet it is a good obſeruation of [e] other, that Iohn is not the crier, but the voyce of the crier: for it is Chriſt who cryeth in Preachers, he ſpeakes by the [f] mouth of all his holy Prophets: he cryeth, O yee [g] fooliſh, how long will ye loue fooliſhneſſe? he cryeth, Repent for the kingdome of God is at hand: he cryeth, Come vnto me all ye that are wearied and laden, and I will refreſh you. To day then if ye will heare his voyce harden not your hearts, but ſuffer the words of exhortation and doctrine: be mooued at his cry, leſt he deſpiſe your call. As he ſaith in the firſt of the Prouerbs: Becauſe I haue called, and yee haue refuſed, I haue ſtretched out mine hand, and none would regard: therefore they ſhall call vpon me, but I will not anſwer: they ſhall ſeeke me earely, but they ſhall not finde me. Thinke on this all yee that forget God, yee that ſuffer Chriſt to ſtand and knock, and cry at the doore of your hearts, and yet you will not let him in.

In the wilderneſſe] That is, in the world a deſert of goodneſſe, wherein the Preacher muſt fight with beaſts, as [h] Paul at Epheſus in the ſhapes of men, crying vnto rauening wolues, couetous foxes, roaring lyons, &c. Heere is the place where he muſt cry: for in heauen there is no crying, but all ſinging, and in hell there is no crying, to take heed of woe; but howling and crying for woe; while then you are in the [i] way, while it is called to [k] day, giue eare to the voyce of the Crier.

Or in the wilderneſſe.] That is, [l] Ieruſalem; out of order as a deſert: or in the wilderneſſe: that is, among the [m] Gentiles and deſolate people, ſtrangers from the common-wealth of Iſrael, and aliants from the couenants of promiſe before Chriſts comming. but now the [n] deſolate hath more children then the married wife. The Gentyles heretofore were without an husband, and the ſynagogue of the Iewes had God for her loue; but now contrariwiſe the Church conuerted to the faith, beares moe children vnto God then euer the ſynagogue did. The voyce of the Cryer ſhall gather and call ſo many ſheepe

The end of our preaching is not to make way for our ſelues and our owne preferment, but for our Maſter and his glory: Make ſtraight the way of the Lord, as ſaith the Prophet Eſay. Wherefore leauing all other expoſitions, I come to the Prophets interpretation, as it is recorded in his 40. Chapter, at the 3. and 4. verſes. *A voyce crieth in the wilderneſſe, prepare yee the way of the Lord: make ſtraight in the deſert a path for our God. s Hyperius in loc. Eſaiæ. t Thomas catēn. in 3. Matth. ex Chryſoſt.

Now theſe things are to bee conſtrued in a s ſpirituall ſenſe. For t as kings in their ſolemne progreſſes haue their wayes leuelled and ſtraightned againſt their comming into the country: ſo the Preachers as harbingers and ſumners of Chriſt, ought to prepare the people, that he may come vnto them, as about this time hee came vnto them. Preſumption and pride make mountaines and hills in Chriſts way; deſperation holes in Chriſts way; vaineglory makes crooked the way: couetous cares are briers and buſhes in the way: noiſome luſts makes foule the way: wherefore the voice of the Crier in the wilderneſſe muſt digge downe the mountaines, exalt the valleys, ſtub vp the briers, make ſmooth the rough, rectifie the crooked. Behold, ſaith God to the u Prophet, I haue ſet thee ouer the nations, and ouer the kingdomes, to plucke vp, and to roote out, and to deſtroy and ouerthrow, to build and to plant. The which x Text is wreſted by the Papiſts exceedingly, to proue that the Pope hath authority to depoſe Princes, and diſpoſe of their crownes at his pleaſure. But God expounds himſelfe in the words immediately before: I haue made thee a Prophet, and put my words into thy mouth: a Preacher with words in his mouth, not a Magiſtrate with a ſword in his hand: and therefore their owne y gloſſographer interprets it thus: I haue appointed thee to roote vp; that is, to roote vp vices, to beate downe hereſies, and to build vp vertues. And z Theodoret; To root vp kingdomes is nothing elſe but to denounce Gods heauy iudgements againſt them: As Hierome; To caſt them downe by the word of Almighty God. Vt facias opus prophetæ, ſarculo, non ſceptro, opus eſt tibi, ſaith a Bernard; That thou maiſt do the worke of a Prophet, thou muſt haue a weeding hooke, not a ſceptre: And as b Gregory notes aptly, the Prophet is willed here firſt to root vp and after to plant; becauſe the foundation of truth is neuer well laid, except, the frame of errour bee firſt ſubuerted: at the firſt wee muſt caſt downe the mountaines by the preaching of the Law; then exalt the valleys by the preaching of the Goſpel. Such a voyce was the Prophet c Nathan: at the firſt he did caſt downe the mountaine, the preſumptuous hypocriſie of King Dauid, rebuking him for his ſinnes, and thundring out iudgements for the ſame: but when hee ſaw this huge mountaine caſt downe, when Dauid was vnder foote, deiected in ſpirit, crying out, I haue ſinned againſt the Lord; Nathan presently raiseth vp this valley, saying, The Lord hath taken away thy sinne. This course [d] S. Peter vsed in his first Sermon, in the beginning whereof he charged the Iewes with their sinnes: but so soone as they were pricked in their hearts, and said, Men and brethren what shall we doe? S. Peter presently lifteth them vp againe by preaching Christ for the remission of sinnes. And well might Iohn call himselfe such a voyce, for all his preaching stood vpon two leggs, repentance and faith, [e] digging downe the mountaines by the one, and [f] raising vp the vallies by the other.

[f] Ioh.1.29.

The great Doctor hauing heauen for his chaire, earth for his Schoole, the whole Bible for his Text, and the whole world for his audience, began this method in the first Sermon that euer was made, Genes.3 Adam by following his new Schoolemaster the deuill, waxed proud, and began to grow so big as a mountaine: God therefore doth first cast him downe, shewing the greatnesse of his fault, and then he raiseth him vp againe, by promising that thee seed of the woman should bruise the Serpents head. Seeing then we haue both precept and and patterne from God himselfe, let vs bee followers of him as deare children, pulling downe the mighty from their seats, and exalting the humble and meek. To begin with the first:

There are two sorts of mountaines: { One assuming too much vnto themselues, out of their owne merit. / The other presuming too much vpon Gods mercy.

Euery man is naturally like Simon the Sorcerer, Act. 8. conceiting himselfe to be some great man: as Martin [g] Luther said, All of vs haue a Pope bred in vs; an opinion of our owne workes: albeit there bee in vs no reall vertue, no true substance; yet, Narcissus-like, wee are inamourd with our owne shadowes: and this is the [h] Serpents head, the beginning of all euill. Omnium iniustiarum est ferè sola causa iustitia. Wherefore wee must labour euery day to digge downe this high mountaine: we must descend that we may [i] ascend: as we fell by ascending, so we must be raised by descending. Beda wrote of the Publicane: Appropinquare noluit ad Deum, vt appropinquaret ad illum. He that will not be a mountaine in Christs way, must not bee a mount-banke of his owne vertue, but leuell himselfe euen with the ground, [k] working his saluation in feare and trembling

The second kinde of mountaines are such as raise themselues vpon meere presumption of mercy, boasting of a shorter cut to heauen then either the good workes of Papists, or good words of Puritans, abusing that sweet Text of [l] Paul; Where sinne aboundeth, there grace super-aboundeth. Indeed where sinne is [m] felt and grieued for, there Gods grace is greater then our sinne, [n] both in imputation and effect: for our sinnes are finite, whereas his goodnesse is infinite, the salue is greater then the sore. [o] Non peccantis merito, sed superuenientis auxilio. But when we draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as with cart-ropes; when we speake good of euill, and euill of good; when as without any remorse wee sinne presumptuously; when as wee fall not forward as Abraham and Ezekiel, but backward as old [p] Eli, and the [q] Iewes who tooke Christ; then assuredly the more sinne, the lesse grace. Shall wee continue still in sinne that grace may abound? God forbid. Yea God hath forbidden it, enioyning vs to be holy as he is holy, that being deliuered out of the hands of all our enemies, we might serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of our life.

[q] Ioh.18.6.

A man is deiected and made a valley two wayes: in regard of his { Great faults. / Little faith.

The voyce of the Crier must pronounce Gods Proclamation and generall pardon for the one, and apply it in particular for the strengthening of the other.

The fifth and last question of the Pharisies is: Why baptizest thou then, if thou bee be not the Christ, neither Elias, nor the Prophet? Vnto which Iohn answered; I baptize with water, &c.

This last interrogatorie was the first in their intention: [r] for the Pharisees had a tradition, that none might baptize but Christ, or some great Prophet, and therefore they did first aske craftily whether hee were Christ, or a Prophet: and then hauing [s] vndermined him thorowly, with what authority doest thou baptize? being neither Christ, nor Elias, nor a Prophet? S. Iohns answere is opposite, but apposite. [t] I am a Minister, but not a Messias; I giue the outward signe, but Christ is hee who doth giue the inward grace: I baptize you with water, [u] but he that commeth after mee shall baptize you with the holy Ghost and fire. [x] In which hee compareth the ministry of man with the power of God; the outward baptisme with the spirituall baptisme: whereof the first is done by the hand of man, the other is peculiar onely to Christ. [y] The comparison is not as the Papists imagine, betweene the baptisme of Iohn and Christ, but betweene the person of Iohn and Christ: for the baptisme of Iohn and Christ are one, both in effect and authority: for Iohns baptisme was not of his owne deuising, but of Gods institution: as hee sheweth his commission in the first of Ioh. 33. Hee that sent mee to baptize with water, &c. a Text which hath made [z] Bellarmine contradict himselfe twice in one page. For whereas he first had set downe peremptorily that Iohn instituted his owne baptisme; now he confesseth honestly that God was author of it for the matter in generall, but not for the manner in particular: and yet after long search hee cannot finde in what rite Iohns baptisme differs from Christs.

It is an axiome deliuered in their owne [a] schoole, that there are but two things essentiall in Baptisme, verbum & elementum, the outward element of water, and inuocation of the blessed Trinitie. So S. [b] Aug. Accedit verbum ad elementum & fit sacramentum: Other things are required in a Sacrament circumstantially, not substantially. Now Bellarmine out of this Text grants that Iohn vsed the right element: for hee saith, I baptize you with water: and out of [c] Ambrose cites against himselfe, that Iohn inuocated the sacred Trinitie, Father, Sonne and holy Ghost: Ergo, the baptisme of Iohn and Christ are one for essence: so likewise one in effect, for Iohn preached the baptisme of repentance [d] for the remission of sins: Ergo, forgiuenesse of sinnes is by the baptisme of Iohn, so well as by the baptisme of the blessed Apostles: as [e] Augustine, [f] Basil, [g] Gregory Nyssen: cut of that Text obserue: neither doth the [h] Cardinal disauow their glosse, though the Councell of [i] Trent hath denounced anathema to such as hold baptismum Ioannis habuisse eandem vim cum baptismo Christi: let Matthaus Tortus, if hee can vnloose this wedge for his Master. I feare that ouerthwart Diuine so little that I say with Luther; Hunc nodum neq; soluunt, neq; soluent vnquam omnes papicolæ in vnum Chaos confusi. The Scripture makes no difference betweene Iohns and our baptisme: but this only; [k] that we baptise in Christum passum & resuscitatum; whereas Iohn baptised [l] in Christum passurum & resurrecturum. See *Epist. The Epistle. GALAT. 4. 1. bis v. 8

I say, that the heire so long as hee is a child differeth not from a seruant, &c.

IGnorant people behold rather an [m] Image well painted, then a booke well written, and are sooner perswaded with plaine similitudes and familiar examples, then with subtill reasons and accurate discourses. Our Apostle therefore after hee had vsed for his purpose (namely, to prooue that iustification is not by the Law, but by faith in Christ) the comparison of a mans a mans will, of the prison, of the Schoolemaster in the former Chapter, addes also this of an heire; wherein as in euery similitude two points are remarkeable: the { Proposition: verse 12. / Reddition in the rest.

In which our twofold estate must be considered, of { Thraldome, vnder Moses. / Freedome, by Christ, when the Lawes tyrannicall gouernment ends: and that is,

Two manner of wayes, as [a] Interpreters out of the Text: { 1. By the comming of Christ in the flesh once at the fulnesse of time; verse 4.5. / 2. By the comming of Christ in the spirit daily: verse 6.7.

In his first comming note the {
- Fact: verse 4. and in it the {
  - Giuer: God, whose good will appears in bestowing on vs his Sonne: { Fitly: when the time was full come. / Freely: for hee was not bought or stolne, but sent.
  - Gift: Christ described here by his { Diuinity: his Sonne. / Humanity: made of a woman. / Humility: bond to the Law.
- Effect: verse 5. to redeeme them which were bound vnto the law, &c.

[a] Luther. in loc.

The heire as long as he is a child.] This comparison is taken out of the Roman law, by which it is ordeined that a pupill, albeit he be Lord of all his fathers inheritance, should bee kept vnder tutors and gouernours, vntill hee come to full age; to wit, vnder tutors till [o] fourteene yeeres, vnder Curators vntill [p] fiue and twenty. [q] Tutores dantur impuberibus, Curatores puberibus. Tutors are guardians of the pupils [r] person principally: so called, [s] Quasi tuitiores atq; defensores; but [t] Curators are factors especially for his goods and estate.

Now the Ward, during the time of his minoritie, suffers much bondage; differing saith Paul, nothing from a seruant; nothing in respect of any present possession, or actuall administration of his owne estate, but very much in respect of his right and property, being [u] dominus habitu: non vsu: as hauing [x] free hold in law, though as yet not free hold in deed: and so the Ward doth differ from the slaue; who was in old time no [y] person in law, but a meere chattell, and as it were of the nature of [z] cattell.

It was in Pauls age then a great slauery to bee a pupill. And [a] Bishop Latimer complained of late, that there was not a schoole for the Wards, so well as a Court: a schoole for their learning, so well as a Court for their lands. It should seeme Guardians in his dayes vsed yong Noble men not as Lords, but as seruants; as Paul here, &c.

In like manner, when we were little children in our nonage we were heires hauing the promise of an eternall inheritance to come, which should bee giuen vnto vs by the seed of [b] Abraham: that is to say, by Christ, in whom all nations should be blessed; but because the fulnesse of time was not yet come, Moses our tutor and gouernor held vs in bondage. The law doth threaten, accuse, condemne, so long as we be children in vnderstanding, dwarfes in faith, ignorant of Christ. Saint Paul cals the law rudiments of the world; not only [c] because it is our first [d] schoolemaster, and A, B, C, to Christ, but [e] because it leaues a man in the world, and prepares not a way for him to heauen. I kill not, I steale not, I commit not adultery: this outward honest conuersation is not the kingdome of Christ, but the righteousnesse of the world.

The law when it is in his principall vse, cannot iustifie, but accuse, terrifie, condemne.

condemne. Now these are things of the world, which because it is the kingdome of the deuill, is nothing else but a puddle of sinne, death, hell, and of all euill: and so the whole Law, especially the ceremoniall, are [f] beggerly rudiments of the world.

[f] Gal. 4. 9.

I speake not this to disgrace the Law, neither doth Paul so meane; for it is holy, righteous, spirituall, diuine: but because Paul is in the matter of iustification, it is, as [g] Luther obserues, exceeding necessary, that he should speake of the Law as of a very contemptible thing. Wherefore, when Satan assaults thee with the terrors of the Law, banish that stutting and stammering Moses farre from thee: let him vtterly be suspected as an heretick, or as an excommunicate person, worse then the Pope, worse then the deuill himselfe, quoth Luther: but out of the matter of iustification, and conflict of conscience, reuerence Moses as a great Prophet, as a man of God, euen as God.

[g] Vbi supra.

In the ciuill life Moses and Christ agree: for our Sauiour said, hee came not to destroy, but to [h] fulfill the law; but in the spirituall life, the one cannot abide the other: for [i] no man is iustified by the law; but the iust shall liue by faith. And therefore when Christ is present, the Law must depart out of the conscience, and leaue the bed, which is so [k] strait that it cannot hold two, to Christ alone. Let him onely raigne in righteousnesse, in peace, ioy, life, that the soule may sleepe and repose it selfe in the multitude of his mercies sweetly without any terror of the law, sinne, death, hell. And thus you see the law tyrannizeth ouer our consciences, as the cruell Tutor doth ouer his vnfortunate Ward, till God in fulnesse of time giueth vs freedome by Christ.

[h] Matt. 5 17.
[i] Gal. 3. 11.
[k] Esay 28. 20.

When the time was full come.] Not by fatall necessitie, but by Gods appointment. For there is a time for all things, and Almighty God doth all things in his due time; he created and redeemed vs in his due time, preserueth, iustifieth sanctifieth in his due time, and he will also glorifie vs in his due time.

Now the comming of Christ in the flesh, is called the fulnesse of time for many respects: as,

[l] Ioh. 1. 16.
[m] 2. Cor. 1. 20.

1. For the [l] fulnesse of grace receiued by his comming.
2. Because Christ is the fulfilling of the [m] promises of God, as being in him, yea and amen.

[n] Rom. 10. 4.
[o] Luk. 1 70.
[p] 1. Cor 10 11.
[q] Aquin. in loc.

3. Because the [n] Law and the [o] Prophets are fulfilled in him.
4. Because the times from Christ are the [p] ends of the world, and it was fit hee should come so late, when the time was full, for [q] two reasons especially:

1. Because Christ is a Lord, yea the Lord, and therefore most meet there should bee great preparation, and long expectation of so puissant a person.

[*] Matt 9. 12. The whole need not a Physitian.

2. Because Christ is the grand Physitian of the world, and therefore very requisite all sinners, his patients, should thorowly [*] feele their sickenesse and misery, before he came to visit and redeeme them; vt conuincerentur homines de morbo vt quantum ad defectum scientia in lege naturæ, & quantum ad defectum virtutis in lege scripta.

His Sonne] God is Father of { All men, and all things, by creation generally. / His elect, by adoption specially. / Christ, by nature, singularly. See before, the Creed: Art. His onely Sonne.

Made of a woman.] In expounding this clause, we must take heede of sundry wicked heresies, on the left hand, and on the right. On the left; first, of [r] Paulus Samosatenus, and [s] Photinus, affirming that Christ had his being and beginning from his mother Mary: whereas the Scripture teacheth plainely, that Christ was made of the seed of Dauid according to the [t] flesh: not according to his person, for that is eternall. In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and that Word was God. Againe, we must take heed of [u] Cerinthus holding that Christ was not conceiued of the Holy Ghost, but begot

begot of Ioseph: Mary is called a woman, not a virgin. [x] Our answer is, that a woman in Scripture doth not alway signifie the maried, or one that hath knowne a man: but sometime it doth onely denotate the sex, as Gen.3.12. The woman which thou gauest to be with me, she gaue me of the tree, and I did eat. Eua must needs be a virgin, because so soone as she was made, she was maried: and yet the Text calls her woman at that time, when there could be no time for man to corrupt her.

On the right hand we must shun the rockes of Valentinus and Nestorius: of [y] Valentinus who taught, Christ had not his body from Mary, but that hee brought it with him from heauen, and passed thorow the wombe of the Virgin, as water through a conduit pipe: contrary to the Text here; made of a woman. [z] Ex muliere, non in muliere: not in a woman, but of a woman. And the proposition [a] ex, notes the matter, as an house is made of timber and stone; bread is made of wheat; wine of grapes: and therefore Christ had the materials of his body from Mary: so some copies haue it here, [b] γενόμενον not γενέσθαι. Yet Christ had not his formale principium of Mary, for the holy Ghost was agent in his wonderfull conception: and therefore fitly said here, to be borne, or as we read, to be made; not begotten of a woman.

By this also we may shun Nestorius his rocke, who thought Mary might not be called the mother of the Sonne of God: for the Text is plaine; God sent his Sonne made of a woman: Ergo, the Sonne of God was the sonne of Mary. For the confutation of this error, the famous Councell of Ephesus, was assembled, wherein it was [c] concluded, and that in the first Canon, that Mary should bee called the mother of God. See before, the Creed; Art. Borne of the Virgin Mary.

Bond to the Law.] Though hee were Lord of the Law, yet made hee himselfe subiect to the Law, circumcised according to the Law, and presented in the Temple; according to the law; yea, it executed vpon him all the iurisdiction it had ouer vs. It doth by good right accuse, conuince, condemne vs. For alas, all of vs are [d] sinners, and by nature the children of [e] wrath: but Christ did no sinne, neither was there [f] guile found in his mouth: yet notwithstanding the Law was no lesse cruell against this innocent and blessed lambe, then it was against vs cursed and damnable sinners: yea much more rigorous. For it made him guiltie before God of all the sinnes of the whole world. It terrified and oppressed him with such an heauinesse of spirit, that hee sweat bloud; and in fine, condemned him to death, euen the death of the Crosse. Thus Christ was made bond vnto the law, to redeeme them which were bound vnto the law: for he died for our sinnes, and endured all this for our sakes; and so being vnder the law, conquered the law by a [g] double right: first, as the Sonne of God, and Lord of the law: secondly, in our person, which is as much as if our selues had ouercome the law; for his victory is ours.

And therefore remember alway this sweet and comfortable Text in the midst of all dangers, all assaults of tyrants, all temptations of Satan, in the houre of death especially, saying to the law; Thou hast no power ouer me; for God the Father hath sent his Sonne to redeeme me from thy bondage; thou doest accuse, terrifie, condemne in vaine: for I will [h] creepe into the hole which bloudy Longinus made with his speare in my Sauiours side. There will I hide my selfe from all my foes; I will plunge my conscience in his wounds, death, victorious resurrection, glorious ascension, besides him I will see nothing, I will heare nothing. [i] The sting of death is sinne, and the strength of sinne is the law. But thankes be vnto God, which hath giuen vs victory through our Lord Iesus Christ.

[k] The Nouelists exception against our translating naturall sonnes, is idle: for our Communion booke doth not call vs naturall sonnes, as Christ is Gods naturall Sonne by eternall generation: but as it were naturalized by spirituall regeneration, adopted through election and grace: so Paul elsewhere termeth termeth vs [l] Coheires with Christ. Neither doth this paraphrase wrong the Patriarkes before the law, nor the Prophets vnder the law: for as I haue noted out of Martin Luther; Christ who came in the flesh once, comes in the spirit daily, crying Abba Father, as it followeth in the Text: he is one [m] yesterday, and to day, and shall bee the same for euer. Yesterday, before the time of his comming in the flesh: to day, now he is reuealed in fulnesse of time: For euer the same Lambe of God, [n] slaine from the beginning of the world. The [o] Fathers then had Christ in spirit; which holy spirit made them free from the bondage of the law: so that they and we are saued by one and the same grace, by one and the same faith in one and the same [p] Christ.

How the blessed Spirit cryeth in our hearts, assuring our spirit that wee are the children of God; helping our infirmities, and making request for vs with sighes, which cannot be expressed; see before, The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, &c. This Epistle doth accord with the Gospell, which intimates in particular, how Christ became the Sonne of man, that he might make vs the sonnes of God: how Christ is Iesus and Emanuel. Both fit the time, that in the midst of Christmas our soule might magnifie the Lord, and our spirit reioyce in God our Sauiour: who was made of a woman, and made bond vnto the Law: to redeeme those who were bound vnto the Law: that we might be sonnes and heires of God through him.

Inprimis occurrit libri conſideratio, Βιβλος γενεσεως: cauſæ verò quæ ſanctiſſimos Euangeleſtas ad ſcribendum impulêre, partim communes, partim ſpeciales.

1. Vt credamus Chriſtum; & hæc dicitur hiſtorica fides: ita Lucas in prologo: Viſum eſt mihi (præſtantiſſime Theophile) omnia altè repetita ordine ad te ſcribere, vt cognoſcas eorum verborum de quibus eruditus es hiſtoricam veritatem.

2. Vt credamus in Chriſtum & hæc niſi Satanæ tentationibus [z] cedat & cadat, ſalutifica fides eſt. Ita Ioannes Euangelij cap. 20. verſe 31. Hæc ſcripta ſunt vt credatis Ieſum eſſe Chriſtum illum, & vt credentes vitam habeatis in nomine eius. Has rationes (etſi non habeantur apud Matthæum & Marcum) omnibus Euangeliſtis fuiſſe communes apparet, quia mens omnium eadem, idem ſpiritus, cor vnum, via vna.

Speciales autem, quæ ſingulis occaſionem Euangelium ſcribendi dedêre, partim colliguntur è { Scriptura. / Coniectura.

E ſcriptura: Lucas enim, cap. 1. verſ. 1. ſignificat ſe ad hiſtoriam componendam impulſum, quòd intellexerat conatos eſſe multos Euangelium texere qui parùm fideliter id præſtitiſſent. πολλοὶ ἐπεχείρησαν πολλοὶ, non [a] Matthæus, non Marcus; [b] ſed Appelles, vt Beda; Baſilides, vt Ambroſius: Merinthus, vt memorat Epiphanius: alia ferebantur etiam eo tempore euangelia [c] Nazarenorum, Matthiæ, Nicodemi, Thomæ, quæ poſtea velut apochrypha reiecit Eccleſia, ἐπεχείρησαν, conati ſunt, ſed quod conati minimè perfecerunt: vt [d] Origenes, [e] Ambroſius, [f] Auguſtinus annotârunt.

E coniectura: Ioannes ab Epiſcopis Aſiæ rogatus, Euangelicam narrationem aduerſus Hæreticos exarauit. Cum enim Ebionæi, Cerinthiani, Nicolaitæ diuinitatem Chriſti iamiam negarent, videratque cateros Euangeliſtas in ea confirmanda minus olei poſuiſſe; ad eam potiſſimùm probandam Euangelium ſibi ſcribendum exiſtimauit: vt Irenæus lib. 3. cap. 11. Epiphanius hæreſi 51. Hieronymus in [g] catalogo: nec non Auguſtinus in proœmio expoſitionis in Ioannem, & reliqui fere omnes theologici tractatores.

Matthæus autem iſte noſter [k] Hebræorum cauſa ſuam contexuit hiſtoriam. Cum enim illis diu prædicâſſet, & iam ad Æthiopes tranſiturus erat, Hebraico ſermone deſcripſit Euangelium, vt haberent certam non modo narrationem, ſed quaſi [l] *methodum vniuerſæ religionis Chriſtianæ. Si quis adhuc desiderat plura de rationibus Matthæi, quare scripserit, de loco vbi scripserit, de tempore quando scripserit, adeat [t] ille bibliothecam Sixti Senen. & hæc omnia disceptantes copiosissimè Magdeburgenses, cent. 1. lib. 2. in vita Matt. Cæsarem Baronium, Eccleſiast. annalium, Tom. 1. fol. 283. Alphonſ. Toſtatum, in prolog. Matth, quæſt. 2. Atque sic accepistis (amplissimi viri) quo consilio Matthæus [f] prædicandi munere non contentus, etiam scriptis ad posteros transmittere voluerit hunc librum de generatione Iesu Christi; omnem scilicet mouebat lapidem vt non modo viuus, sed etiam [t] mortuus ædificet Hierosolymam sanctam Dei ciuitatem, vt quemadmodum ad mortuos (teſtante [u] Petro) prædicatum erat euangelium, ita etiam per mortuos annunciaretur. Hæc ego explicatè, vos vt placuerit applicate: vel ipsum biblij nomen apud Academicos excitat attentionem; cui magis arridet biber quàm liber, indignus nomine Academici, cui magis alius quis quàm iste liber, indignus nomine Christiani.

Ineptè Stancarus apud [x] Bellarminum; Plus valet vnus Petrus Lombardus quàm centum Lutheri, ducenti Melanæthones, tercenti Bullingeri quadringenti Petri Martyres, quingenti Caluini, Rectiùs ego, Plus est in vnâ sententiolâ aurei huius enchiridij, quàm in omnibus Liuij, Platonis, Plutarchi, Demoſthenis, addo Tullij, Ariſtotelis, Theophraſti spaciosis voluminibus. Incomparabiliter pulchrior est hæc Margarita Christianorum, quàm Helena Græcorum, vt olim [y] Auguſtinus Hieronymo.

Quemadmodum per se facundi si cum Cicerone conferantur protinus obtumescunt: ita cæteri doctores cum Hieronymo compositi vix sapere, vix loqui vix viuere videantur, vt [z] Erasmus scripsit egregius ille prosopolatra: verum si comparentur vni Matthæo, sancti spiritus amanuensi, separatim singuli, coniunctim vniuersi, vel ipsi Patres velut infantuli conticescunt, vt aliquando Lutherus, Ego non curo mille Auguſtinos, mille Cyprianos, mille Eccleſias.

Imò fatentur, è pontificijs nonnulli, [a] Gerſon scilicet doctissimus ille cancellarius Parisiensis, & illustrissimus Ioannes Picus Mirandulanus, ampiecti ſe magis opinionem hominis laici, Idiotæ, infantuli ſcripturam adferentis, quàm ipſius ſummi Pontificis iudicium aut vniuerſalis concilij decretum, quod nullum habeat in verbo Dei fundamentum. Hæc veriora sunt quàm vt negari possint, notiora quàm vt tractari debeant. Ad reliqua pergo.

Βίβλος γενέσεως,] Ista vox generatio mire doctorum exercuit ingenia: quidam enim existimant hunc non esse titulum libri sed initium tantummodò genealogiæ Christi: Alij putant esse titulum, sed vniuerso libri argumento non conuenire: Alij & titulum, & totius titulum, & totam Euangelij summam in se complecti.

Negantes titulum interpretantur βίβλον, narrationem, catalogum siue recensionem, vt Gen. 5. 1. Hic eſt liber generationis Adam: id eſt, hæc eſt narratio genealogiæ ab Adam ductæ. Sic in harmonia Caluinus, in annotationibus Beza, in expositione ecclesiastica super Matthæum Auguſtinus Marloratus. Alij concedunt esse titulum libri, sed ad totum non extendi: nam vt Moses inscripsit pentateuchi volumen, Librum geneſeos, cùm agat de rerum generatione solo capite primo; vel, vt rectius Alij, [b] Bereſith, quia primum erat illius libri verbum: Ita Matthæus Hebraicè scribens, Hebræorum more nomen imposuit libro ex eo quod refertur in exordio, scilicet ex genealogia, βίβλον γενέσεως appellauit: [c] huic expositioni fauet authorum pars & maior & melior.

Nonnulli tamen affirmant hunc & esse titulum, & non vnam modo partem, sed integrum Euangelij argumentum declarare. Nam vt [d] Sixtus Senensis colligit è Rabinis, Hebræa vox qua Matthæus vtitur hoc in loco significat non solùm generationem, sed etiam totum vitæ cursum; vt Geneſ 6. 9. At obijci solet, inconuenienter hoc dici proprium, & singulare nomen illud de quo Propheta, Vocabitur nouum nomen, cùm in veteri Testamento pluribus fuerit impositum.

Respondet i Aquinas appositè, nomen Iesu alijs conuenire secundum aliquam particularem & temporalem salutem: sed secundum vniuersalem & spiritualem hoc nomen esse proprium Christo, qui saluum facit populum suum à peccatis eorum, vt Matthæus interpretatur, huius capituli vers. 21.

Iesus enim Naue, Iesus Sydrach, Iesus Iosedech, Typi tantummodo fuêrunt huius nostri Iesu. Intellexerat hoc qui non vidit omnia sanctus Bernardus; Alia nomina (inquit) sunt Maiestatis; at Iesus est nomen misericordiæ. Nam esse Dei verbum esse filium, esse Dei Christum, ad eius præcipue gloriam pertinet. At nomen Iesu saluatorem sonat: quo quidem & illius gloria & salus nostra continetur. Ideoque meritò quidem ex Ecclesiæ instituto ad hoc salutare nomen assurgimus, & genua flectimus; at hoc non ad syllabicam compositionem, sed ad saluificam expositionem, diuini diuini numinis maiestatem reuerentes & pro salute nobis per sacrum illud [n] nomen impensa gratias exhibentes: Hoc siquidem nomen est super omne nomen, ad quod omne genu flectatur cælestium, terrestrium, infernorum. Ad Philippenses 2. vers. 10.

Prima, quòd his potissimùm promissio venturi Messiæ facta fuerit: Abrahamo, Gen. 22. vers. 18. In semine tuo benedicentur omnes Gentes terræ: quod Apostolus intelligendum esse de Christo clarè docet ad Galatas 3. 16. Abrahamo dictæ sunt promissiones, & semini eius; non dicit & seminibus, quasi in multis, sed quasi in vno, & semini tuo, qui est Christus.

Dauidi verò iurauit Dominus: De fructu ventris tui ponam super sedem tuam, Psal. 132. 11. Vnde populus Iudæorum vt regem honorificè susc ipientes vndique clamabat, acclamabat; Hosanna filio Dauid. Acquiescunt in hac expositione Chrysostomus, Hieronymus, Ambrosius, Irenæus.

Secunda ratio, quia Christus erat rex, sacerdos, & Propheta. Dauid autem rex & Propheta. sacerdos Abraham, vtpote cui dixerat Dominus, Sume mihi vaccam triennem, & arietem annorum trium: turturē quoqu. & columbam, Gen. 15. 9.

Tertia ratio; quoniam in Abrahamo primo incepit circumcisio: in Dauid autem maximè manifesta Dei electio: Secundum illud, [x] Elegi virum iuxta cor meum. Vtrinsque proinde filius specialissimè dicitur à Matthæo Christus, vt ostendatur esse in salutem & circumcisioni & electioni Gentilium: Ita Patres, ita scholastici docuêre: verùm si liceret vestra bona cum venia meam hîc interponere sententiam; ego fortasse dicerem Abrahamum & Dauidem specialiter in hoc Euangelicæ structuræ frontispicio collocari, quia duæ sunt principales Euangelij partes, fides & pœnitentia. Eminebat in Abrahamo fides, in Dauide pœnitentia: quemadmodum itaque Christus secundum carnalem generationem; ita Christianus secundum spiritualem regenerationem habendus est filius Dauid, filius Abraham.

The Epistle. Rom. 12. 1. And ye. 6.th

I beseech you brethren by the mercifulnesse of God, that you make your bodies a quicke sacrifice, &c.

IT is well obserued by [l] Chrysostome, that all the sacred Epistles of this Apostle stand vpon two legs especially;

To wit, { Explications: or doctrines of holy faith.
Applications: or exhortations to godly life.

The former Chapters are spent in dogmaticall conclusions appertaining to beleefe. The [m] residue containe morall instructions of honest conuersation and loue: wherein our Apostle teacheth, how wee should behaue our selues to God and man; and that by [n] precept and patterne. By precept, in the 12.13.14.15. Chapters: by patterne, in the 16. Chapter.

This Scripture shewes how we must demeane our selues to [o] God, in { Body: vers. 1 Make your bodies a quicke sacrifice &c. Soule: verse 2. Fashion not your selues like vnto this world, but be yee changed by the renewing of your minde.

I beseech you brethren.] Two things induce men especially to suffer the words of exhortation: opportunitie, and importunitie: The worth of the matter, and zealous affection of the speaker. Saint Paul makes his louing affection manifest in these sweet termes; I beseech you brethren by the mercifulnesse of God. He might haue commanded, as he told [p] Philemon; but for loues sake, he doth rather intreat.

God the Father appeared in a [q] still and soft voice; God the Sonne was not a tiger, but a [r] lambe: God the holy Ghost came downe, not in the forme of a vulture, but in the shape of a [s] doue: signifying hereby, that Preachers ought to vse gentle meanes in winning men vnto God; herein resembling the good mother which hath [t] vbera and verbera, a teat so well as a rod: a dug to restore such as feele their sinne with the spirit of meekenesse: Gal.6.1. but a rod to whip the careleſse and senseleſse, lest they grow too wanton. And therefore Saint Paul, who doth here beseech the Romans out of his loue; doth adiure them also by the mercifulnesse of God: that is, as [u] some construe it, I beseech you by mine Apostolicall authoritie, committed vnto me by Gods especiall mercy, 1. Cor. 7.25. as himselfe expounds himselfe in the third verse of this Chapter: I say through the grace that is giuen to me: where the Greeke verbe [x] λέγω, may be translated, I command: or, By the mercifulnesse of God shewed vnto you: for as God is more bountifull, so you must bee more dutifull. Wee may not sinne, that grace may abound; but on the contrary, because the grace of God, that bringeth saluation vnto all men, hath appeared, it teacheth vs to denie vngodlinesse and worldly lusts, and that we should liue soberly and righteously and godly in this present world.

The mercies of God to me, the mercies of God to you, be many and manifest. I beseech you therefore by the riches of his abundant mercy, make your bodies a quicke sacrifice, &c.

Thus you see the zealous earnestnesse of the speaker: I come now to the worthinesse of the matter, concerning the Romans, and in them our selues, as much as the saluation of our soules. I beseech you therefore marke what the Spirit writeth, and first obserue Pauls order: [y] After iustification hee speakes of sanctification: herein intimating that good workes, as [z] Augustine said; Non præcedunt iustificandum, sed sequuntur iustificatum: Not goe before, but after iustification. [a] As the wheele turneth round, not to the end that it may bee made round, but because it is first made round, therefore it turneth round: so men are sanctified, because first iustified; not iustified, because first sanctified. As Aulus Fuluius when hee tooke his sonne in the conspiconspiracie with Cataline, said: Ego te non Catilinæ genui, sed patriæ. So God hath not begotten vs in Christ, that we should follow that arch-traitor Satan; but serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of our life: making our selues a quicke sacrifice, &c.

There are two kindes of sacrifices: { Expiatorie, for sinne; which we cannot offer. See Epist. Dom. 3. Quadragesimæ. / Gratulatorie, of thankes and praise, which we can and must offer:

[b] Aquin. in loc. And hereof there are [b] three kindes, according to the three sorts of goods; of the { World. / Minde. / Body.

1. We must offer our goods of the world, Heb. 13.16. To doe good and distribute forget not; for with such sacrifices is God pleased. [c] Hee that hath mercie vpon the poore, lendeth vnto the Lord.

[c] Prou. 19. 17

2. Wee must offer to the Lord the goods of our minde, by deuotion and contrition, Psal. 51.17. The sacrifice of God is a troubled spirit; a broken and contrite heart, O God, shalt thou not despise. When by diuine meditation and deuote prayer, we beat downe the proud conceits of our rebellious hearts, we kill, and offer vp as it were our sonne Isaac; that which is most neere, most deere vnto vs.

3. We must offer to the Lord the goods of our body; which are done { Patiendo, by dying for the Lord. / Faciendo, by doing that which is acceptable to the Lord.

Martyrdome is such a pleasing sacrifice, that as Ambrose said of his sister: Appellabo martyrem, & prædicabo satis: I will call her Martyr, and then I shall be sure to commend her enough. See Epist. on S. Steuens day.

[d] Rom. 6. 13. S. Paul here meanes a sacrifice by doing; [d] Giue your members as weapons of righteousnesse to God. For as Christ offered vp himselfe for vs; so wee made conformable, should offer vp our selues vnto him. [e] Mart. in loc. Interpreters obserue a great emphasis in the word hostia, deriued, as Ouid noteth, ab hostibus.

Victima quæ dextra cecidit victrice, vocatur;
Hostibus à domitis hostia nomen habet.

And therefore seeing Christ hath deliuered vs from the hands of all our enemies, it is our dutie to sacrifice perpetually to him, our selues and our soules, and so liue to him who died for vs.

[f] Gorran. in loc. Lest we should erre in our offering, S. Paul shewes all the [f] causes: { Efficient: our selues. / Materiall: our bodies. / Formall: quicke and holy. / Finall: acceptable to God.

[g] Aquin. & Martyr. Or (as [g] other obserue) S. Paul sets downe foure properties of a sacrifice: { 1. Sound and quicke. / 2. Sanctified and holy. / 3. Pleasing. / 4. Reasonable.

First, our sacrifice must be sound and quicke; not blinde, not lame, not feeble, Malach. 1.8. Wee must not offer to the deuill our youthfull yeeres, and lay our old bones vpon Gods altar: his sacrifice must bee the fattest, and the faire st; he must haue both head and hinder parts: hereby signifying that we must remember our Creator in the daies of our nonage, so well as in the daies of our dotage: for if we deferre our offering till the last houre, when sickenesse the bailiffe of death hath arrested vs, and paine, sickenesse attendant dulled our senses, it cannot be called a quicke, but a sicke; not a liuing, but a dead offering. That our sacrifice therefore may be quicke, let vs, I beseech you, begin quickly to dedicate our selues vnto God.

[h] Martyr. in loc. Or quicke.] That is, [h] willing: for those things are said to be quicke, which moue of themselues; and those dead, which doe not moue, but by some outward violence: wee may not then bee stockes and blockes in Gods holy seruice, ſeruice, doing no good but vpon conſtraint of law, and penaltie of ſtatute: ſuch oblations are not acceptable, becauſe they be not quicke. The Lord loueth a cheerefull giuer and thankſgiuer. Nothing is done well, but that only which is done with our will, freely, readily, liuely.

Or quicke.] That is, quickned through faith: for as the ſoule is the life of the body, ſo faith is the life of the ſoule; without which hee that liueth is dead; [i] for the iuſt doth liue by faith, Hic ſitus eſt Vacia (ſaid Seneca, when he paſſed by the ground of that voluptuous Epicure) Vacia lieth here dead and buried: and [k] ſo Paul of a widow liuing in pleaſure; Shee is dead euen while ſhe doth liue. That our ſacrifice therefore may be liuing, it muſt proceed from a faith that is liuely.

Or liuing.] That is, a [l] continuall ſacrifice. The ſacrifices of the Iewes haue now their end; but the ſacrifices of Chriſtians are without end. We muſt alway [m] giue thankes, and [n] alwaies pray. The fire on our altar muſt neuer goe out, our ſacrifice neuer die.

In the Law beaſts appointed for ſacrifice were firſt ſlaine, and then offered; and that for two cauſes eſpecially: firſt, (as [o] Ambroſe notes) to put the ſacrificer in minde what he deſerued by ſinne; namely, death: and ſecondly, becauſe thoſe bloudy ſacrifices were Types of Chriſts death on the Croſſe, which is the propitiation for our ſinnes. In like manner euery Chriſtian ſacrifice muſt be dead to the world that he may liue to God; [p] mortifying his earthly members, and [q] crucifying his carnall affections, that he may become a [r] new creature in Chriſt.

As death depriues a man of naturall life, ſo mortification deſtroyes the body of ſinne, which is the ſenſuall life: Moriatur ergo ne moriatur, mutetur homo ne damnetur (quoth [s] Auguſtine:) Wee muſt die for a time in this life, leſt we die for euer in the next life. We muſt riſe againe with Chriſt, ſaith [t] Paul. Now a man muſt be dead before he can riſe againe: firſt, [u] grafted with Chriſt to the ſimilitude of his death, and after to the ſimilitude of his reſurrection. He that liued ill, and now demeanes himſelfe well, is riſen againe from the death of ſinne, to the life of grace; mortified, and yet a liuing ſacrifice; the [x] more mortified, the more liuing. Rom. 8. 13. If ye mortifie the deeds of the body by the ſpirit, ye ſhall liue.

This killing of our beaſtly deſires is very fit, whether we conſider our ſelues, [y] as - Men.
- Ciuill men.
- Chriſtian men.
- Eminent men.

As men; that we may lead our life not according to ſenſe, but according to reaſon: otherwiſe wee ſhould bee rather ſenſuall beaſts, then reaſonable men.

As ciuill men; that wee may not liue according to luſt, but according to law; though not according to conſcience, yet according to cuſtome, that we breake not the ſtatutes, and diſturbe not the Common-wealth wherein wee liue. The Philoſophers in old time comprehended all points of mortification in theſe two words, ſuſtine & abſtine.

As Chriſtian men; [z] for he that will be Chriſts Diſciple, muſt denie himſelfe: abnegare ſuos, ſua, ſe. [a] The kingdome of heauen ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force: that is, by mortification and daily fighting againſt the luſts of the fleſh; as [b] Baſil, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Hierome, Gregorie, Theophylact, Euthymius expound it.

Laſt of all, yet moſt of all, mortification is neceſſary for eminent perſons, either in the Miniſterie or Magiſtracie. For great ones ought eſpecially to bee good. Their ſacrifice muſt be moſt quicke, that they may bee paternes vnto other; as it were walking ſtatutes, and talking lawes to the people.

Holy.] The ſecond thing required in our ſacrifice: ſo we read, Leuit. 22. that vnhallowed and vncleane perſons ought not to touch the things of the Lord. [c] Yee shall be holy, for I the Lord am holy; [d] this is the will of God, euen our sanctification.

The word ἁγία is deriued, as [e] Plato notes, of the priuatiue particle α and γαῖα, signifying that holy things are not infected with the corruptions and filth of the world; when our throat is an open sepulchre, when our mouth is full of cursing and bitternesse, when our feet are swift to shed bloud, when our bodies are sinkes of sinne, we cannot be an holy sacrifice: for the Law is plaine, [f] Yee shall not offer any thing that hath a blemish, not a beast that is scabbed, not a bullocke nor a sheepe that hath a member lacking. The drunkard then, that is ἀκέφαλος, without his head (as Clemens Alexandrinus termed him) and the coward who wants an heart, and the rotten adulterer, whose body is neither holy nor whole, is no sacrifice for the Lord.

The Latines haue deduced the word sanctum of sancire, [g] quasi sancitum; hereby teaching vs that our sacrifice must be constant and continuall. That by-word, A young Saint, an old Deuill, is a wry-word; for we must be good in our youth, better in our manhood, best of all in our old age: we must grow from grace to grace, till we be of full growth in Christ; dedicating all that is within vs, all that is without vs, all that is about vs, vnto the seruice of God.

Seruius expounding the words of [h] Virgil; Qui fœdera numine sancit, affirmes that sanctum is sanguine consecratum: and so must our sacrifice be consecrated and dipped in Christs bloud, in whom onely God is well pleased: and therefore, as it followeth in the Text, if holy, then acceptable.

Now that it may bee well accepted of God, [i] two things are required especially: 1. That it be grounded vpon his word. 2. That it be performed in faith.

[k] Obedience is better than sacrifice: no sacrifice then is pleasing to God, except it be done according to his will: inuocation of Saints, adoration of the consecrated host, administration of the Sacraments vnder one kinde, diuine seruice in an vnknowne tongue; praying to the dead, mumbling of Masses, iumbling of beads, worshipping of Images, and other like trash; which are the very Diana of the Romish Religion, haue no foundation in holy Scripture; not built vpon the Rocke Christ, but vpon the sands of humane braines, and therefore not acceptable, but abominable to the Lord. A new religion is no religion: [l] to deuise phantasies of God, is as bad as to say, there is no God.

Againe, courses of life not warranted by Gods owne booke, such as are rather [m] auocations from God and goodnesse, than vocations, as ordinarie cheating, brotheldrie, coniuring, and all other vnlawfull occupations or professions, are not a sweet sauour to God, but altogether stinking in his nostrels: If wee will haue our sacrifice acceptable, they must be first holy. So diuine [n] Plato, Whatsoeuer is good and holy, that is accepted of God.

Secondly, sacrifice must be performed in faith, otherwise though it bee warranted by Gods owne word, it is not acceptable: prayer, receiuing of the Sacraments, hearing of the Scriptures, &c. are holy sacrifices, and yet not pleasing God, if done without faith. As our Apostle, *Rom.*14.23. Whatsoeuer is not of faith, is sinne; that is, whatsoeuer is against our [o] conscience: so when the Recusant comes to Church against his conscience, to satisfie the law of man, not to certifie his loue to God, it is not an acceptable sacrifice. If a man be a Lawyer, a Physitian, a Merchant, a Souldier, against his conscience, though his calling be neuer so good, yet his oblation is bad.

Or as [p] other expound that Text more fitly: whatsoeuer is not done in a good assurance, that God for Christs sake will accept of it and vs, it is sinne. Christians are [q] Priests offering spirituall sacrifices acceptable to God by Iesus Christ. [r] All good workes without faith in him, are like the course of an horse that runneth out of the way, which taketh great labour but to no purpose. For vnbeleeuing Gentiles and misbeleeuing heretikes, albeit they be neuer so wittie, neuer so vertuous, are no sweet sauour to the Lord.

Reasonable] We reade in the [f] Law, that euery sacrifice was seasoned with salt: now salt mystically notes discretion; as Coloss.4.6. Let your speech be gracious alwayes and powdered with salt: that is, with wisedome and sobrietie. When Paul then exhorteth vs to giue our bodies a reasonable sacrifice, [t] his meaning is, that all things must bee done in order, comely, discreetely. The Prouerbe is good, An ownce of discretion is worth a pound of learning. for as zeale without knowledge is blinde, quo vehementius irruit eo grauius corruit: so knowledge without discretion is lame, like a sword in a mad mans hand, able to do much, apt to doe nothing: [u] Tolle hanc, & virtus vitium erit. Hee that will fast, must fast with discretion, [x] hee must so mortifie that he doe not kill his owne flesh. He that giueth almes to the poore, must doe it with discretion; omni petenti, non omnia petenti, quoth [y] Augustine; to euery one that doth aske, but not euery thing that hee doth aske: so likewise pray with discretion, obseruing place and time; [z] place, lest thou bee reputed an hypocrite; time, lest accounted an heretike; like the [a] Psalliamsts and Euchitai.

[b] Other expound the word reasonable as opposite to the Iewes oblations. As if Paul should speake thus: In the Law dead beasts; but in the Gospel reasonable liuing men are to be sacrificed vnto God. Euery Christian is a sacrificer, euery lay man a priest, but the pastor is a priest of priests, one that sacrificeth his people by teaching, and exhorting them to giue vp their bodies, a quicke and holy sacrifice to the Lord. I am (saith [c] Paul) the minister of Iesus Christ toward the Gentiles ministring the Gospel of God, that the offering vp of the Gentiles might bee acceptable, being sanctified by the holy Ghost.

Hitherto concerning the first generall branch of S. Pauls exhortation. Now as Musitians doe not onely teach their schollers what they shall sing, but also what they shall not sing, that they may follow that which is good, and eschue that which is euill: so Paul doth not onely shew what wee must doe, but also what we must not doe: Fashion not your selues like vnto this world.

World vsed in the worse sense signifieth either the wicked men of the world; or else the vaine things of the world: the wicked men, as Iohn 12. 31. the deuill is termed the Prince of the world, that is, of the wicked in the world, who make themselues his vassals, by yeelding to his temptations, according to that of [d] Paul: He is our master to whom wee submit our selues as seruants. It is not Satans power that he doth thus dominere in the Church: for he was [e] bound and [f] cast out of the Church; but it is the weakenesse and wickednesse of men, who loose him and open the gate when he was shut out; admitting him as a Lord of misrule, ruling and ouerruling those who are children of disobedience: Ephes.2.2.

Secondly, the word World taken in a bad and more strict sense, signifies the pomps and vanities of the world. As 1. Epist. Ioh.2. 15. Loue not the world, neither the things of the world: that is, as himselfe construeth himselfe, the lust of the flesh and pride of life.

According to both acceptions it may be well expounded in this Text; as if S. Paul should say, Brethren I beseech you by the tender mercies of God, that yee fashion not your selues, either according to the wicked men, or according to the vaine things of this world.

For the first: Two things occasion fashion in the world

Multitude: for as Cyprian said; Incipit esse licitum quod solet esse publicum. Custome is not only another nurture, but as it were another nature. And, as the Lawyers speake: Quod est consuetum præsumitur esse iustum: That which is done by many, is thought at length lawfull in any.

Greatnesse: for as [g] Paterculus writes; Imperio maximus exemplo maior: he that is highest, hath alway most followers. Augustus, a learned Prince, filled the Empire with schollers: Tiberius, with dissemblers: Constantine, with Christians: Iulian, with Atheists.

So that Paul vnderstanding how prone men are to follow fashions, aduiseth vs here, not to conforme our selues according to the world.

In complement of courtesies and common ciuilities, it is not amisse to follow either the most or the best.

In matter of Church orders and ceremonies, it is [h] insolent singularity not to fashion our selues according to that which is enioyned by the best, and vsed by the most; yea euen in the maine points of holy religion; If the great bee good, and the most, best, we may follow both.

But Saint Pauls meaning is, that wee may not follow wicked men in their wickednesse, nor worldly men in their worldlinesse, nor good men but in that they are good: as he saith elsewhere, [i] Be yee followers of mee, as I am of Christ: for as in imitation oratorie, there are two sorts of examples; one necessary to be followed alwayes in all things; as Demosthenes among the Grecians, and Tully among the Latines: another to bee followed in some things, and at some times, as Poets and Historiographers: Euen so there are two sorts of examples in Christian imitation: the one necessary, which is Christ the way, the truth, and the life: [k] Via in exemplo, veritas in promisso, vita in præmio: The truth in his learning, the way for his liuing; as the [l] Fathers vsually glosse that place. The other are to bee followed in some things, and at some time; as Paul, Peter, Augustine, Chrysostome, Nazianzen, and other blessed Saints of God; whose liues and lines are so farre forth to be followed, as they swarue not from our chiefe copy Christ. In sinne we may not follow the good; much lesse the wicked of the world, be they neuer so many, neuer so mighty: we may not bee drunken, because it is the fashion among the most; nor liue lasciuiously, because commonly great ones are wantons. In this poynt the Scriptures are plaine and peremptory. [m] The gate is wide, and way broad, that leadeth to destruction, and many goe in thereat: Ergo, wee must not follow the most. [n] Doe any of the Rulers beleeue in Christ? Ergo, wee must not fashion our selues according to the greatest.

In the old world many were drowned, onely [o] Noah and his family saued: in Sodome many wicked beasts destroyed, onely [p] Lot and his house deliuered: there were two malefactors hanged, one Christ crucified; two extremes, one vertue; many thornes, one lilie; Cant. 2 2. Like a lilie among the thornes, so is my loue among the daughters.

It is said, Apoc 20.12. that at the last day the bookes shall bee opened, and another booke which is the booke of life. Where some note, that the booke wherein Gods elect are registred, is but one; but the bookes of the reprobate are many. The number of fooles is infinite; but Gods people, which are truly wise, a [q] little flocke. Christendome is the least part of the world: they that professe Christ aright, are the least part of Christendome; and of this little part, many bee called, but few chosen; [r] professing they know God in their words, but denying him in their workes: arrant heretickes, as one wittily, not disputing against religion, but liuing contrary to religion; marching vnder Christs colours, and yet fashioning themselues according to the world.

Here some will obiect: If I fashion not my selfe like the world, I shall bee played vpon, and made a very [s] Tabret: I shall become the by-word and song of the people.

First, according to the rules of reason, hee is base that dependeth on vulgar breath.

Secondly, it is an axiome in the [a] Bible, that amity with the world is enmitie with God. [b] Hee that is a paraſite to men, is not the ſeruant of Chriſt, It is an vnhappie thing to conuerſe with vngodly wretches in the tents [c] of Kedar; [d] to bee brother vnto the Dragons, and companions to the Oſtriches. Yet Noah muſt not follow the faſhions of the old world: Lot muſt not follow the faſhions of Sodome: Iob muſt not follow the faſhions of Vz: we muſt not follow the faſhions of our corrupt age; but as [e] Paul exhorteth, in the midſt of a crooked and naughty generation, wee muſt be pure and blameleſſe, ſhining euen as lights in the world, ſtriuing euermore to walke in the narrow path, and enter in at the ſtrait gate.

Againe, we may not conforme our ſelues according to the greateſt: Ego & rex meus, is no good plea, when God ſhall reckon with vs at the laſt and dreadfull day. Some men are ſo much at other mens ſeruice, that they neglect altogether Gods ſeruice. That thou didſt follow ſuch a Lord, and humour ſuch a Gentleman; that there were better men in the company when thou didſt this villany; that vanity will not goe for a currant excuſe: when Almighty God ſhall come to iudgement, then ſcepters and ſepulchers ſhall be all one; Princes and peſants ſhall be fellowes.

As in Cheſſe-play, ſo long as the game is in playing, all the men ſtand in their order, and are reſpected according to their place: firſt, the King; then, the Queene; then, the Biſhops; after them, the Knights; and laſt of all, the common Souldier: but when once the game is ended, and the table taken away, then all are confuſedly tumbled into a bag, and happily the King is loweſt, and the pawne vpmoſt. Euen ſo is it with vs in this life; the world is a huge theater or ſtage, wherein ſome play the parts of Kings; other, of Biſhops; ſome, Lords; many, Knights; other, Yeomen: but when our Lord ſhall come with his Angels to iudge the world, all are alike. For if great men and meane perſons are in the ſame ſinne, they ſhall be bound together, and caſt as a fagot into hell fire. And therefore let vs not faſhion our ſelues according to the wicked, whether Prince or people.

Secondly, we muſt not faſhion our ſelues according to the vanities of the world, and that for two cauſes eſpecially.

1. Becauſe they be tranſitory: where note the worlds mortality.
2. Becauſe they be not ſatisfactory: where note the ſoules immortality.

For the firſt, all the things of this world are of ſuch a faſhion, as that either they will leaue vs, or elſe wee muſt leaue them. They leaue vs; All riches haue their [f] wings, and make their flight like an Eagle. We leaue them; As the [g] Partridge gathereth the yong, which ſhee hath not brought forth: ſo hee that getteth riches, and not by right, ſhall leaue them in the midſt of his dayes, and at his end ſhall be a foole.

[f] Pro. 23.5.
[g] Ier. 17.11.

The Partridge, as Ambroſe writes in his 48. Epiſtle, maketh a neſt of eggs, which ſhee laied not; but ſo ſoone as the birds are hatched, the true mother cals them all away from the ſtepmother. So it is, ſaith Ieremy, with the couetous man, incubat auro, like a brood gooſe, or as a hen that ſits; incubo (for ſo the Latines terme him) he keepes his neſt and ſits as it were brooding, but when his chickens are hatched, he heares a voice from heauen; O foole, this night will they fetch away thy ſoule from thee: and then, whoſe ſhall theſe things bee which thou haſt prouided? Indeed many men reputed him wiſe while hee liued; but at his end, when by the finger of God, wee ſee that his goods are otherwiſe diſpoſed, either excheated to the King, or reſtored to the true maſters; or elſe by ſome ſmall error in his will, caried away by thoſe whom hee neuer loued: at his end, when euery Partridge ſhall call his yong, then then those that are wise, shall account him a very foole: [h] Loe, this is the man that tooke not God for his strength, but trusted in the multitude of his vncertaine riches, and strengthened himselfe in his wickednesse. And therefore loue not the world, neither the things of the world; for the world passeth away, and the lust thereof, being onely certaine in being vncertaine.

Secondly, things of this world are not satisfactory, they doe not fill and content the mind of man. [i] The eye cannot be satisfied with seeing, nor the eare filled with hearing: all things haue an emptinesse and extreame vanitie, purchasing vnto the possessors nothing but anguish and vexation of spirit: and the reason hereof, as [k] Vivaldus obserues, is, because the heart of man is made like a triangle, and the world round as a circle. Now a circle cannot fill a triangle, but there will be some corner empty.

There is nothing can fill the mind of man, but the blessed Trinity, when God the Father, the most ancient of daies, shall fill our memory; God the Son, who is wisedome it selfe, shall fill our vnderstanding: God the holy Ghost, who is contentation and loue, shall sit in our will; then all the powers of our mind will be at rest, when as they shall inioy him who made them. But the things of this world afford no perfect and absolute contentment; and therefore, ne vos configurate seculo isti, fit not your selues according to the worlds figure, which is a circle; but be ye renewed in your minde, which is a triangle, representing the sacred Trinitie.

Take a view with the Wiseman of all worldly things: in briefe, doth any pleasure satisfie? No: pleasure is like lightning: [l] Simul oritur & moritur; it is sweet but short; like hauking, much cost and care for a little sport.

The prodigall childe wasted both goods and body, yet could not haue enough, at the last not enough [m] hogs meat.

[n] Virgo formosa superne
Desinit in turpem piscem malesuada voluptas.

Doth learning, that incomparable treasure of the mind, satisfie? No: The more a man knoweth, the more hee knoweth that he doth not know: so that as [o] Salomon said; He that increaseth knowledge, doth increase sorrow.

Doth honour content a man? No: The poore labourer would be written Yeoman; the Yeoman after a few deare yeeres is a Gentleman; the Gentleman must be a Knight; the Knight, a Lord; the Baron, an Earle; the Count, a Duke; the Duke, a King; the King would Cæsar be; and what then, is the worlds Emperor content? No.

[p] Vnus Pelleo iuueni non sufficit orbis,
Æstuat infœlix angusto limine mundi.

One world is not enough for Alexander, and therefore he weeps, and is [q] discontent: as if he wanted elbow roome.

In the state Ecclesiasticall, the begging Frier would be Prior; the Prior, an Abbat; the Lord Abbat, a Bishop; the Bishop, an Archbishop; the Metropolitane, a Cardinall; the Cardinall, Pope; the Pope, a God: nay that is not enough, aboue all that is called God: 2. Thess 2. 4. This made [r] Bernard wonder, O ambitio ambientium crux: how dost thou paine, yet pleasure all men!

Doe riches content? No: the more men haue, the more men craue; and that which is worst of all, they are the greatest beggers, when they haue most of all. [s] Hee that loueth siluer, shall not bee satisfied with siluer. As the poore man crieth out, Quid faciam quia non habeo? so [t] the couetous wretch as fast complaineth, Quid faciam quia habeo? Luk. 12. 17.

Those drinkes are best that soonest extinguish thirst; and those meates, which in least quantitie doe longest resist hunger: but here the more a man doth drinke, the more thirste; so strange in some is this thirst, that it maketh them digge the pits, and painfully draw the water, and after, will not suffer them to drinke. This, saith [u] Salomon, is an euill sickneſſe, and a great great vanitie, when a man shall haue riches, and treasure, and honour, and want power and grace to ioy in them.

Thus you see, the world is like a butterflie with painted wings; vel sequendo labimur, vel assequendo ladimur; either we faile in pursuing it, or else when we haue caught it, it is so vaine, that it giueth no contentment. [x] Herein is the true difference betweene earthly things and heauenly things: the one are desired much, but being obtained, they content little: the other are desired little, but once gained, satisfie much: and therefore, Lay not vp treasure vpon earth, where the moth and canker corrupt, and where theeues dig thorow and steale, for these things are neither [y] vera nor vestra; but lay vp treasure for your selues in heauen. If ye will not heare the words of Scripture, behold the workes of nature: mans heart is broad aboue, narrow beneath; open at the top, close below: to signifie that we should inlarge and spread our affections tow ard heauen and heauenly things, and draw them to as narrow a point as possibly we can, concerning earth and earthly things; and so by the fashion of our heart, we may learne not to follow the fashion of the world.

Be ye changed by the renewing of your minde.] Wee are formed by God, deformed by Satan, transformed by grace;

The Gospell. Luke 2. 42.

The father and mother of Iesus went to Hierusalem after the custome of the feast day, &c.

THis Gospell is a [z] direction how Parents ought to carry themselues toward their children, and how children also should demeane themselues toward their parents: the one, by the practise of Ioseph and Mary: the other, by the patterne of our Sauiour Iesus Christ.

[z] Iansen. Concord. cap. 12.

Parents care touching their children concernes their { Soule. Bodie.

Their soule: that they be brought vp in [a] instruction and information of the Lord; [b] that is, in godlinesse and ciuilitie: by the one they shall keepe a good conscience before God: by the other they shall obtaine a good report among men: the which two, conscience and credit, must chiefly bee sought after in this life.

For the body: Parents ought to [c] prouide competent sustenance and maintenance; guarding their persons, and regarding their estates: all which is performed here by Ioseph and Mary toward Christ.

[c] 1. Tim. 5. 8.

First, for the soules institution; they did instruct him by precept and example: precept, bringing him to the Temple, that he might be taught; and that not onely this once, but often, as often as law did require. So [d] Iuuencus expressly:

This should [e] teach all Parents, how to teach their children; especially, that they send them vnto the publike Catechising in the Church, and that according to [f] Canon and custome: for the common Catechisme, which Authoritie commands, is fit and full, as containing all the vertues necessarie to saluation, and the meanes whereby those vertues are receiued and conserued.

The Creed is neceſſary for faith; as teaching vs what we haue to beleeue. The Pater noſter is neceſſary for hope; teaching vs what we are to deſire. The ten Commandements are neceſſary for charitie, teaching vs what we haue to doe. The Sacraments are inſtruments of grace, by which thoſe vertues are conueyed vnto vs, and continued in vs. As to build an houſe, it is requiſite, firſt to place the foundation, then to raiſe the walls, and laſt of all to couer it with the roofe: ſo ſaith [g] Auguſtine, to make in our ſoules the building of eternall ſaluation, wee need the foundation of faith, the walls of hope, the roofe of charitie. The tooles as it were wherewith all theſe be wrought, are the ſacred Word and bleſſed Sacraments; our Catechiſme then in briefe comprehending all theſe matters and all theſe meanes; and ſtanding vpon the ſame leggs eſpecially, with the [h] Geneuian and [i] Romane Catechiſme, cannot bee diſtaſted either of Accuſant or Recuſant out of deuotion and pietie, but out of faction and malice: well, or rather ill, each may ſay with the [k] Poet.

Non amo te Sabidi, nec poſſum dicere quare:
Hoc tantùm poſſum dicere, non amo te.

Their deuotion is ſeene in { Going vp to Hieruſalem, after the cuſtome of the feaſt.
{ Tarrying there, fulfilling the daies.

S. Paul exhorts vs to pray at all [o] times, and in all [p] places: for the whole world is Gods vniuerſall, and as it were Cathedrall Church; and euery particular Chriſtian is as it were his priuate Chappell, and Temple: Daniel prayed in the Lions denne, Ionas in the Whales belly, Iob on the dunghill, and the theefe on the Croſſe; yet the Lord heard their prayers, and granted their requeſts. It is lawfull then in priuate to pray when and where we ſhall iudge moſt meete: but God for his publike worſhip hath in all ages aſſigned certaine times, and certaine places. The moſt ſpeciall time is his Sabbath, and the moſt ſpeciall place the Temple: ſo we finde precept and practiſe. Precept, [q] My houſe ſhall bee called the houſe of prayer; the which is repeated by Chriſt in three Euangeliſts.

Practiſe: The Publican and the Phariſie went vp into the Temple to pray, Luke 18. Anna prayed in the Temple, Luk. 2. Peter and Iohn went vp into the Temple at the houre of prayer, Act. 3. Chriſt himſelfe daily teaching in the Temple, Luk. 19.

After Chriſt, by reaſon of the great perſecution, the Chriſtians aſſembled not in the fitteſt, but in the ſafeſt places: in proceſſe of time they did erect Oratories; not in any ſumptuous or ſtately manner, [r] which neither was poſſible by reaſon of the Churches pouertie, nor plauſible in regard of the worlds enuie: but at length when Almighty God ſtirred vp religious Kings and Queenes, as [s] nurſing fathers and nurſing mothers of the Church, that which which the Christians before either could not, or durst not doe, was with all alacritie performed; in all places Temples were built; no cost spared, nothing too deare which that way should be spent: sacrilegious wretches are not now more desirous to pull downe, then those deuout professors were to set vp Churches.

Now one chiefe cause why God in all ages would bee serued in publike Temples, is, that his Church might be distinguished from the Conuenticles of Heretikes and Schismatikes, that as all of vs acknowledge one God, and one Christ, so all of vs might haue one [t] faith, and one baptisme, and vniformity in doctrine, and a conformitie in outward ceremonies, for the better deliuering of this doctrine.

[t] Ephes. 4. 5.

The parents of Christ did therefore well in [u] ioyning themselues vnto the congregation, and obseruing the publike ceremonies of the Church. At that time the Temple was made a den of theeues; and yet Ioseph and Mary ioyne with the Church in the publike worship of God: [x] whose example doth exceedingly crosse the practise of Brownists and all other recusants, who refuse to communicate with vs in our Temples; because some things, as they pretend, are amisse. Ioseph and Mary tooke part with Gods Priests and people in that which was good, and as for the rest, they did not meddle further then their place required. They went this long iourney to satisfie the law; as also by their good example to stirr vp other, to reuerence the publike ceremonies and ministrie.

By the law, men only were bound to keepe the generall solemne feasts, as wee read, Exod. 23. and Deut. 16. 16. Three times in the yeere shall all the males appeare before the Lord thy God in the place where hee shall chuse: so that Mary went not vp to Hierusalem as compelled by the law, but only carried with pure deuotion to God, and vnfained loue to her husband and child.

Here then is a notable relique for women to behold; Mary free by the letter of the law, by the custome of the countrey, dwelling at Nazareth, a great way from Hierusalem, did notwithstanding euery yeere goe with her husband vnto the feast of the Passeouer. In our time many women vnlike this good Lady, will be content euen on the Lords day, to toyle at home about their own businesse, and gad abroad to meddle with others businesse, rather then they will accompany their good husband Ioseph, and their towardly sonne Iesus vnto Gods house.

And when they had fulfilled the daies.] That is, whole [y] seuen daies, according to the custome. They came with the first, and went home with the last. Worldly men for their honour, will ride post to the Court, to be knighted with the first; for their profit at mill and market first; for their pleasure, at the play first; at hunting first; first at any merry meeting: but as for the Church, they thinke they come too soone, and stay too long: winter daies are too short for hunting, sommer daies too short for hawking; yet one houre of seuen daies is thought long that is spent in Gods holy worship: as [z] one wittily; Long Sermons, and short Sermons please best: and yet if we looke not with the spectacles of the world, but with the eyes of faith discerning all things aright, wee shall finde that there is no such honour, as to be Gods seruant, no such gaine as godlinesse, no such pleasure as a good conscience.

Thus you see Christ was instructed by good lessons and life: so that if Iesus had not beene Iesus, to bee saued, and not a Sauiour; hee might haue sayd of his mother Mary, which [d] Augustine writes of his mother Monica: Maiori sollicitudine me parturiebat spiritu, quàm carne pepererat; [e] parturiuit carne, vt in hanc temporalem nascerer; corde, vt in æternam lucem renascerer.

Now for his body; when he was missing, Ioseph and Mary sought him instantly with all diligence till hee was found: Behold thy father and I haue sought thee weeping. Where literally note Maries humble carriage toward her husband Ioseph, and the care of them both ouer Christ their child. The dutifull respect of Mary toward Ioseph is obserued [f] ex ordine verborum; in that shee saith, thy father and I, not, I and thy father. As Cardinall Woolsies stile, Ego & Rex meus, I and my king, is insupportable in the Politikes; so, I and my husband insufferable in the Oeconomicks. It was [g] Assuerus his edict, and it is Gods law, that all women both great and small shall giue their husbands honour, and that euery man shall beare rule in his owne house: for the man is the wiues [h] head, and the wife is her husbands subiect: Subdita eris sub potestate viri: Thou shalt be subiect to thine husband, and he shall rule ouer thee, Gen. 3. 16. So that a woman murthering her husband, is accounted by the [i] Ciuill lawes a paricide, by the [k] statutes of our land a traitor.

The next remarkable point is the ioynt care of them both ouer Iesus: Thy father and I haue sought thee weeping. As Paul said to [l] Timothie, so wee to euery father, serua depositum, keepe that which is committed to thee. Haue a tender eye ouer thy child, which is a pledge of Gods goodnesse, and that happily which may moue the more, flesh of thy flesh, and bone of thy bone; not onely a liuely picture, but a liuing and a walking image of thy selfe. Barren Sara was so glad of a child, that shee called her only sonne, [m] Isacke, that is, laughter. How wicked then is that parent, who neglecteth his owne flesh, his owne child, which is a token from heauen, and ordinarily the best monument of himselfe after death on earth?

As this example concernes the naturall father, so like wise the ciuill and ecclesiasticall: for, incuria præpositi, iniuria depositi; detrimentum pecoris ignominia pastoris, &c. Pastor and Prince must seeke the good of such as are vnder them, as Ioseph and Marie did Christ, with carefull hearts, &c. In a [o] mysticall sense these words insinuate, when, where, and how Christ is to be found of vs.

1. When? On the third day.
2. Where? In the Temple.
3. How? { Socialiter; in vnitie; thy father and I. / Desiderabiliter; with an earnest desire to finde. / Lachrymabiliter; with teares: haue sought thee sorrowing.

First, Christ is to be found on the third day: vers. 46. It came to passe three daies after, that they found him in the Temple. The first day was the time before the law, in which, as [p] Christ told his Apostles, all the Patriarks and holy fathers desired to see the things which they saw, and could not see them; and to heare the things which they heard and could not heare them.

The second day was the time vnder the law, when also the Priests and Prophets expected Christ, but they could not finde him: therefore the Prophet Esay crieth out in his 64. Chapter, Oh that thou wouldest breake the heauens and come downe.

The third day is the present time; this acceptable time of grace; wherein Christ is to be found: [q] hora est nunc; the houre is now. Therefore to day, while it is to day seeke the Lord euen while he may be found; call vpon him while hee is neere; for the next day, which is the fourth day, is the time after death, and [r] then he cannot be found or sought.

Ioseph and Mary could not finde Christ among their kinsfolke, &c. [t] Non humana cognatione, nec cognitione comprehenditur: Hee that will finde Christ, must forsake friends, [s] forget his owne people, and his fathers house. They found him in Ierusalem, [u] that is, in the Church among the faithfull: not among barbarous Heathens, or blasphemous heretikes; his dwelling is at Sion, there you may finde him among the Doctors in the Temple: [x] not in the the market, not in the tauerne, but in the Temple, [y] for hee is to be found in his word, in his Sacraments, among the Doctors and Preachers. If this leſſon often taught, were once learned, it would make you to frequent Gods houſe more diligently, thirſt after his word more greedily, reſpect Chriſts ambaſſadours more reuerently.

The third point to be conſidered is, how Chriſt is to be found: Socialiter, in vnitie, pater tuus & ego. God is loue, and his followers are the children of peace, and his Miniſters the meſſengers of peace, his doctrine the doctrine of peace: and therefore if wee will finde him, wee muſt follow the [z] truth in loue.

God ſaid to the ſerpent: [a] I will put enmitie betweene thee and the woman, and betweene thy ſeede and her ſeede. But if we ſeeke Chriſt in contention, all the feud is among our ſelues, and not betweene Satan and vs. [b] Odium in nos ipſos conuertimus: all our fight is againſt our friends, and not againſt our foes.

Againe, wee muſt ſeeke Chriſt earneſtly: Quærebamus te & nihil extra te; Ieſus for Ieſus: and laſtly, we muſt ſeeke Chriſt, lachrymabiliter ſorrowing.

Now Mary did feare for three cauſes as interpreters obſerue:

1. [c] Leſt Chriſt ſhould leaue her, and aſcend to his Father in heauen.
2. [d] Leſt he ſhould fall into the hands of perſecutors.
3. [e] Leſt he ſhould forſake the Iewes, and goe to ſome other nation.

So we muſt ſeeke Chriſt with three ſorts of teares: of
- Deuotion; leſt he withdraw his gracious countenance from vs.
- Contrition, when he doth abſent himſelfe for a time.
- Compaſſion, when any member of his is afflicted and perſecuted.

And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, & was obedient to them.]

As the former part of this Goſpell is a paterne for parents how they ſhould inſtruct their children; ſo this latter is a glaſſe for children, how they ſhould obey their parents; Omnis enim actio Chriſti, inſtructio Chriſtiani: For euery line of Chriſt is a copy for a Chriſtian. In that therefore the Lord of all ſubmitted himſelfe to the gouernment of his ſuppoſed father, and vnderling mother, as [f] Hierome notably, Venerabatur matrem, cuius ipſe erat pater; colebat nutricium, quem nutriuerat; and that for the ſpace of thirty yeeres, executing filiall and œconomicall duties in their houſe; what doth he but teach obedience to ſuperiors? eſpecially that children ſhould honour their father and mother, albeit they be neuer ſo meane; for this ſubiection is a [g] vertue, not a weakeneſſe.

If parents inioyne things vnlawfull, and contrary to Scripture, then, as expoſitours vpon this text commonly note, wee muſt preferre our Father in heauen before our fathers on earth, and ſay with Chriſt, How happened it that yee ſought me? wiſt yee not that I muſt goe about Gods buſineſſe? Otherwiſe we muſt not offend them ſo much as with [h] a wrie looke. See decalog. com. 5.

The dutifull child ſhall [i] proſper as Chriſt, in fauour with God and men: but graceleſſe [k] Cham ſhall be curſed; rebellious [l] Abſalon; diſobedient [m] Phineas and Hophni ſhall not liue out halfe their daies. It was [n] Gods law, that the ſtubborne child ſhould bee ſtoned to death openly, that all might heare and feare. By the [o] common lawes, he that murthers his parent, is reputed a pety traitor. By the [p] Ciuill lawes in old time, an offender in that kinde was ſowed in a ſacke, with a dogge, a cocke, a viper, and an ape, and ſo caſt into ſome deepe water, as vnworthy to reape the benefit of any element. For ſo [q] Tullie doth excellently gloſſe that law: Vt qui eum necâſſet, vnde ipſe natus eſſet, careret iis rebus omnibus, ex quibus omnia nata eſſe dicuntur. Etenim quid eſt tám commune, quàm ſpiritus vivis? terra mortuis? mare fluctuantibus? littus iectis? Ita viuunt, dum poſſunt, vt ducere animam de cœlo non poſſint: ita moriuntur, vt eorum oſſa terra non tangat: ita iactantur fluctibus, vt nunquam abluantur:

It is [r] probable, that Christ submitting himselfe to Ioseph, vsed his occupation, but what it was, I cannot shew: you need not know. Saint Hilary thinks he was a Smith; Hugo, that he was a Mason: most Diuines, that hee was a Carpenter. So [r] Iustin Martyr, and other ancient Doctors haue gathered out of Matth, 13. 55. Marke 6. 3. See Sixt. Senens. bibliothec. lib. 6. annot. 62. Baron. annal. Tom. 1. ann. 12. Iansen. concord. cap. 54. Maldonat. & Khemis. in Matth 13. 55.

Now then in that Christ exercised a mechanicall trade, we may [t] learne that a poore man may serue God, and often doe much good in an honest occupation: the text saith, Iesus prospered in wisedome and in fauour with God and men. Hee was a lambe, and therefore the bigger the better: but the wicked are [u] goats and [x] therefore the longer they liue, the worse they are.

Mary kept all these sayings together in her heart.] It was well shee layd them vp, better that shee kept them, best of all that shee kept them all. Let vs also lay these things vp in our secret treasurie, that being inwardly grafted in our hearts, they may bring forth in vs the fruit of good liuing.

This Gospell is well fitted to the day: for after the celebration of Christs birth, circumcision, Epiphany; what should follow but his first manifestation in the Temple, and then on the text dominicall his first miracle wrought in Cana of Galile.

The Gospell and Epistle concord: [y] for what Christ doth in the one, is a patterne of that Paul saith in the other. Paul doth require; first, that we should offer our selues a quicke sacrifice to God; and then, according to the measure of grace, that we should become seruiceable to men, euery one among our selues one anothers members: euen so Christ here did first dedicate himselfe to God, in celebrating the Passeouer; in hearing the Doctors, in disputing about religion, in neglecting his acquaintance, to doe the businesse of his Father in heauen: and then, he went with his parents, and came to Nazareth, and was obedient to them.

Or (as [z] other obserue) the Gospell and Epistle both insinuate, that two things are requisite to saluation, humilitas mentis, munditia Carnis.

For the first, Pauls precept is, that no man stand high in his owne conceit, but so iudge of himselfe, that hee bee gentle and sober, as a member helping other. And Christs patterne is; he became subiect to Ioseph, and Mary, though he was Lord of all.

For the second, Pauls precept is; Offer your bodies a quicke sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God. And Christs patterne is; he did the businesse of God in the Temple, neglecting the pleasures of the flesh among his friends and acquaintance. Sweet Iesus indow vs plentifully with thy grace, that wee may thus preach and practise; that following thee, who art the way, wee may come to thee which art the life. Amen.

The Epistle. Rom. 12. 6.

Seeing that we haue diuerse gifts according to the grace that is giuen vnto vs, &c.

[a] Luther is of opinion, that this Epistle should be capite breuior, & fine prolixior; shorter in the beginning, longer at the end. For the beginning apperteines vnto the conclusion of the Epistle for Sunday before; and the end to be the beginning of the Epistle for Sunday following: yet so, that it may be both read and expounded as a text absolute in it selfe. The summe whereof is, that we must imploy and improue the manifold gifts of God vnto the glory of his name, and good of his people.

This

This exhortation is inferred vpon a familiar compariſon vſed in the words immediately before: for as we haue many members in one body, and all members haue not one office; ſo we being many, are one body in Chriſt, and euery man among our ſelues one anothers members. In which obſerue foure inſtructions.

Firſt, as the members are not made by their owne vertue, but created by Gods almighty power, before they could execute any function in the body; not members becauſe working, but on the contrary; working becauſe members: in like ſort, Chriſtians are not members of Chriſt through their owne good workes, but they doe good workes, becauſe they be members, and inſerted into Chriſt: as the tree brings forth the fruit, and not the fruit the tree. The Papiſts then in their works of congruitie, run too much vpon the figure called ὕστερον πρότερον, ſetting the cart before the horſe, merit before mercie. Potes ate deficere (ſaith [b] Auguſtine) ſed teipſum reficere non potes; ille reficit, qui te fecit.

[b] In Pſal. 94.

Secondly, the members are well [c] content with their ſeuerall offices and place; the foote is not grieued at the heads ſupremacy, neither doth the noſe maligne the eye, nor eye couet to be tongue, but euery one performes his function without any faction: euen ſo wee which are members of Chriſts myſticall body, muſt be content with our [d] vocation and calling, neither enuying ſuch as are aboue, nor deſpiſing ſuch as are vnder vs. [e] Although there be diuerſities of gifts, yet but one ſpirit: diuerſities of adminiſtrations, yet but one Lord. diuerſities of operations, yet but one God, who worketh all in all.

[d] 1. Cor. 7. 20.

[e] 1. Cor. 12. 4.

Are all Apoſtles? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? haue all the gift of healing? doe all ſpeake with tongues? doe all interpret? It is God who worketh all in all; communicating indifferently ſpirituall life to all his members; inſomuch as the leaſt is a member of his body ſo well as the greateſt. In this reſpect all parts art peeres.

Albeit (I ſay) there be diuerſe gifts, and diuerſe meaſures of gifts, and ſo by conſequence for faſhion and function an imparity; yet becauſe they be [f] donatiues, grants, and graces, as it is ſaid heere, the mighty may not ſcorne the meane, nor the meane enuy the mighty, no part muſt be pert. [g] For what haſt thou that thou haſt not receiued? He that appointed thee mouth or eye, might haue made thee foot or hand. Againe, no member ought to mutter againſt head or fellow; for the myſticall body of Chriſt is all faire: [h] Tota pulchra es amica mea: now beauty conſiſts in variety of colours, and in a concinne diſpoſition of ſundry different parts. [i] If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the ſmelling? But God hath in a moſt ſweet order, diſpoſed the members euery one of them in the body: firſt, Apoſtles; ſecondly, Prophets; thirdly, teachers; then, workers of miracles; after that, the gift of healing; helpers, gouernours, diuerſities of tongues.

He then that affects in the Church an hotch potch parity, martyrs, and marres Chriſts body, which is, σῶμα συναρμολογούμενον, &c. a body fitly knit together by euery ioynt: Epheſians 4. 16.

Thirdly, there is a ſympathy betweene the members of the naturall body; [k] for if one ſuffer, all ſuffer with it, if one member be had in honour, all the members reioice with it. So Paul in this Scripture: Be merry with them that be merry, weepe with them that weepe. Paine is often leſſened by pity; paſſion is releeued in one by compaſſion of many. [l] Minus fit quod patitur vnum membrum, ſi compatiantur alia membra: nec ipſa mali reuelatio fit per communionem cladis, ſed per ſolationem charitatis; vt quamuis aly ferendo patiuntur, aly cognoſcendo compatiuntur: Communis fit tamen tribulatio, quibus probatio, ſpes, delectio, ſpirituſque communis eſt. He that hath not this fellow-feeling, may ſuſpect worthily that he is not a liuely member of Chriſt; for his body is coupled, and knit together throughout euery ioynt, wherewith one miniſtreth to another. If then wee doe not [m] beare one anothers burthen, and feele one anothers misery, we are not knit together by the sinewes of loue: and if not knit to the body, no part of the body.

Fourthly, there is no dead or idle member in the body, but euery one helpes another, and is seruiceable for the good of the whole: the eye doth direct the head, and the hand guard the eye; the nose smells for all, tongue speakes for all, hand workes for all. [n] The eye cannot say to the hand, I haue no need of thee; nor the hand againe to the feet, I haue no need of you: but euery part seekes anothers, and not his owne good.

In like sort, the wise Counseller must see for all; the tall Souldier fight for all: the iudicious clerke write for all: as [o] Occam said vnto the Emperour Lewis; If you will defend me with your Sword, I will defend you with my pen. Seeing we haue diuerse gifts, according to the grace giuen vnto vs; if a man haue the gift of prophecy, let him haue it, &c.

If any man haue the gift of prophecy, let him haue it agreeing to the faith.]

A Prophet in old time foretold things to come: but vnder the Gospell a [q] Prophet is he that interprets the Prophets; he that shewes Christ is come, spoken of by the mouth of all his holy Prophets euer since the world began. A Preacher is a Prophet, as the word is vsed, 1. Cor. 14. 1. and 1. Cor. 13. we know in part, we prophecy in part. A Preacher then must teach agreeing to the faith; that is, according to the Scripture, which is a rule of faith: or according to the [r] Creede, which is an abridgement of that rule; for [t] other foundation can no man lay, then that which is layd, Christ Iesus.

[t] 1. Cor. 3. 11.

He that will edifie Gods house, must build vpon Christ, and square all his doctrines according to the rule of truth. [v] If any man speake, let him talke as the words of God. It is not said here, that a Prophet ought to vse no booke but the Bible; no Commentarie but the Creed; for that is too spirituall (as [x] Marlorate notes.) He that will preach agreeing to the Scripture, must reade the best expositors of the Scripture: for, as [y] Bernard said, all bookes are written for the bettering of the conscience, which is the booke of the soule: so we must examine all bookes, especially treatises of Diuinity, for the better vnderstanding of this one booke, which is κατ' ἐξοχὴν the booke.

Neither is it said heere, that the Prophet in the pulpit must speake nothing beside plaine text, but only that he must exercise his gift according to faiths analogie, κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως, teaching the wholesome words of Christ, and [z] consenting to the doctrine which is agreeable to godlinesse: for whatsoeuer is deduced out of Gods booke by necessarie consequence, must be receiued as his word; let him that hath the gift of prophecie, haue it agreeing to the faith.

Mariage is a sacrament, and yet a sacrilege. So [t] Bellarmine plainly, Coniugia post solennia vota, non connubia, sed sacrilegia: so the rest of that vnchast generation generally, such as vow, first chastitie, then marry; begin in the spirit, and end in the flesh: mad men (saith [u] Luther) not vnderstanding what is the spirit, or what is the flesh. For in single life to burne with lust, and when one concubine will not serue, to commit villanie with many strumpets, are manifest workes of the flesh: on the contrary, for a man to loue his owne wife to gouerne his familie, to bring vp his children in instruction and information of the Lord, are fruits of the spirit.

1. The occasion of the miracle; want of wine at a wedding, described by circumstances of
   - Time: the third day.
   - Place: in Cana a towne of Galile.
   - Persons:
     - Guests, inuited, as Christ and his disciples.
     - [c] Gossips, comming of their owne accord, to further and helpe the businesse.

2. Certaine passages of speech vpon this occasion, betweene Christ and his mother: verse 3. 4.
3. The miracle it selfe: verse 6. 7. 8. 9.
4. The consequent and effect of the miracle: verse 11.

And the third day.] These circumstances of time, place, persons, are set downe to confirme the truth of the miracle. The time was the third day: [d] mystically there are three dayes of the world: the first, before the law: the second, vnder the law: the third, after the law. The world was instructed before the law by the Patriarches example: by the writings of the Prophets vnder the law: but in the third day, which is the Gospels acceptable time, by Christ and his miracles. Or literally, the third day from his being in the wildernesse, as Euthymius; or, the third day after his conference with Nathaniel, as [e] Epiphanius; or, the third day after he came into Galile, as Iansenius. I like the conceit of [f] Rupertus, affirming, that the Coniunction [and] doth send the reader to that which is said before, to wit, in the first Chapter, vers. 35. The next day Iohn stood, and two of his disciples, &c. This is the first day. The second day is mentioned in the 43. verse, The day following Iesus would goe into Galile. Now the third day this mariage was in Cana So [g] soone then as Christ had called his disciples, he presently begins to manifest himselfe, both in his words, and in his workes: and because this was his first miracle, wee [h] should giue the greater attention to it.

There was a mariage.] [i] This insinuates, it was a solemne meeting, not a clandestine mariage; done not in a corner secretly, but after a publike fashion, with consent of parents and friends openly. Such was the custome in old time: Tobith 7. Iudges 14. where Samsons mariage feast is said to continue seuen daies: and it is well retained in our age; the [k] Church appoynting that all mariages ought to be performed with the good will of friends in the most publike place, at the most publike time, betweene eight and twelue in the forenoone; the which is a renewed old canon of the Councell of [l] Arls, and of [m] Euaristus, Bishop of Rome, writing thus vnto the Prelates of Africa: Non fieri legitima matrimonia, nisi ab his qui super ipsam faminam dominationem habent; & à quibus custodiatur, petatur; à parentibus autem sponsetur, legibus dotetur suo tempore, sacerdotaliter cum precibus benedicatur: aliter præsumpta non coniugia, sed adulteria, &c.

In Cana a Citie of Galile.] There were [n] two Canaes, one called Cana the greater, neere the coasts of Tyrus and Sidon, Iosua 19. 28. from whence the good Cananite woman came: Mat. 15. 22. This other was Cana the lesser, neere Nazareth, from whence Simon the Cananite: Mat. 10 4.

[n] Hier. in loc. Hebraic. Tom. 3. fol. 278.

Cana signifieth zeale; Galile, transmigration. [o] Hereby signifying typically, that Christ delights in their company, who be feruent in deuotion, and are willing to passe from things earthly, to things heauenly: or insinuating, that matrimoniall loue shall only continue but in this our pilgrimage; for in heauen, we shall neither marie wiues, neither haue wiues bestowed in mariage: Matth. 22. 30.

[o] Beda vbi supra.

Some note that Galile signifieth rotation: intimating the mutable changes and chances in this estate. Concerning this, and the like, I send the reader to Bibliothec. concion. Tom. 1. fol. 217.

If I durst venture vpon any mysticall exposition, it should be this; A mariage ought to be made in Cana of Galile: that is, in an honest desire to flee flee fornication, and to poſſeſſe our veſſels in chaſtity, to paſſe from Sodome to Cana.

The mother of Ieſus.] Not as other writers vſually, the virgin: or as other Euangeliſts, Mary; but the mother of Ieſus. Becauſe the ſeeds of Apollinariſts, Valentinians and other heretikes, denying Chriſts humanity, were ſowen in S. Iohns age.

Was there.] Cana was nere Nazareth, and it is thought probable by moſt interpreters as well old as new, that either the bridegroome, or the bride, was coſen to [p] Marie; ſo that vpon neighbourhood and affinity ſhee came to this wedding, as a fauourer, and furtherer of the buſineſſe: [q] otherwiſe Mary was no buſy body, nor pratling idle goſſip [r] gadding from houſe to houſe. We read only that ſhee viſited her coſen [s] Elizabeth, and here was preſent at the mariage feaſt of another eſpeciall friend, who was deare in blood, and neere in place.

And Ieſus was called alſo and his diſciples.] [t] This example may teach all inuiters, eſpecially parents, to bid ſuch gueſts vnto their childrens mariage dinner, as are modeſt and religious. At ſuch meetings vſually wild wantons are beſt welcome. Graue perſons are for a funerall, mad merry people for a wedding: if Chriſt preach, or ſober Mary be preſent, all the ſport is ſpilt. Theſe are ſpots in your loue-feaſts, as S. Iude ſpeakes: innite ſuch men as Chriſt, ſuch women as Marie, who may be paternes vnto the new married of lowly and louely carriage.

Secondly, this example of Chriſt, of the Virgin, of the Diſciples, is a ſufficient [v] warrant for men to call, and for men to come vnto neighbourly meetings, and friendly feaſts, as occaſion is offered. It is written of Philip [x] Melanthon that great Diuine, that he was exceeding courteous in this kind; often inuited, often inuiting. Reioice with them that reioice, ſaith Paul: We may be merry (ſaith [y] Luther) at a feaſt, and recreate our ſelues with pleaſant talke; which may feede the minde, as meate doth the maw. See Luther. poſtil. maior. in loc.

But wee muſt auoyd in our merriments all drunkenneſſe and ſurfetting: [z] There was ſo little wine prepared for this feaſt, that the pots were empty, before the pates were full: ſuch a neceſſarie want, as that Chriſt miraculouſly ſupplied it.

[a] Eccleſiaſtes hath pronounced a woe to that land whoſe Princes eate in the morning: [b] that is, by ſurfetting and riot deuoure their eſtate ſo ſoone as it comes into their hands; euen in the morne of their youth, and afterward liue by baſe courſes in their afternoone. What a woe then hangs ouer that countrey, where both Princes and people too, riſe vp early to follow drunkenneſſe? when a man of meane quality will waſte ſo much vpon his wedding dinner, as might haue fed him and his all the yeere; and ſo much vpon his wedding garment, as happily might haue clothed him all his life. Surely the deuill danceth at ſuch a marriage, Chriſt is not preſent.

Chriſt is inuited vnto a wedding [c] two waies: by {Prayer. / Good intentions in that enterpriſe.}

Firſt by prayer, as yong Tobith and Sara, who being together in the bride-chamber, and, as the [d] ſtory ſaith, in the bride-bed, roſe againe to begge a bleſſing of God after this ſort: Bleſſed art thou O God of our fathers, &c, and ſhee ſaid with him, Amen.

Euery regenerate man is [e] Gods houſe; and Gods houſe is called the houſe of [f] prayer. I know that text is expounded by [g] Chriſt of the Temple materiall; yet it may not vnfitly be conſtrued of the Temple [h] myſticall. If then euery good man be a prieſt, as [i] S. Peter calls him; a Church, as [k] S. Paul termes him, it is meet he ſhould vndertake no buſineſſe, eſpecially ſuch a maine matter as mariage, without often and hearty prayer.

Secondly,

Secondly, Christ is called to our wedding by good intentions, in this enterprise; which are principally three:
1. Auoyding of fornication: 1. Cor. 7. 2.
2. Procreation of children: Gen. 1. 28. to bee brought vp in instruction, and information of the Lord: Ephes. 4. 6.
3. Mutuall consolation and comfort: Gen. 2. 18

If a man in the feare of God, vndertake this honourable estate, for these good ends, he calls as it were Christ and God to his wedding: but he that marrieth vnaduisedly, lightly, wantonly, like bruit beasts hauing no vnderstanding, doth inuite Satan and his reuellers, and then no maruell if that which was ordained for his helpe, turne to his hurt. For in this the philosopher truly: Corruptio optimi pessima:

And his Disciples.] [l] Christ was inuited for his mothers sake, the Disciples for Christ. They went but inuited.

Here I might remember [m] S. Hieromes aduice to Nepotian: Conuiuia tibi sunt vitanda secularium; & maximè eorum qui honoribus tument. Facilè contemnitur clericus qui sæpe vocatus ad prandium, ire non recusat: nunquam petentes raro accipiamus rogati.

[n] Epiphanius is of opinion that Ioseph was dead before this time, because there is no mention made of him in the Gospell, after his going vp to Hierusalem at the Passeouer, Luke 2. therefore no maruell if he were not bid with Christ and his Disciples.

Diuines haue rendred sundry reasons, why Christ and his company being inuited came to this wedding.

First (as our [o] Church doth speake) to beautifie with his presence this holy calling: [p] Confirmare voluit, quod ipse fecit, nuptias: [q] and it was exceeding fit that Christ should worke his miracle, for the confirmation of Gods first ordinance.

Secondly, to manifest his [r] humility, vouchsafing to visit the meanest.

Thirdly, to certifie the spirituall mariage betweene the Church and himselfe: Seuerus Antiochenus orat. 161. vt citatur in Græc. caten. & á Maldonat. in loc.

Fourthly, that he might act this miracle at this solemne celebritie: [s] Miraculi potiùs quod acturus erat, quàm conuiuij gratiâ profectus.

Wee cannot now feast Christ in his person; but wee may feede him in his ministers, in his members. Inuite therefore the good man, and the poore man, as [t] Iob saith, If I haue eaten my morsels alone, and the fatherlesse haue not eaten thereof. As [v] Amos complained of the rich gluttons in his time, deuouring the Lambes of the flocke, and calues out of the stall; drinking wine in bowls, and anointing themselus with the chiefest ointments, and singing to the viole: but no man (saith the Prophet) is sorry for the affliction of Ioseph. If thou wilt feast Christ, inuite the Disciples, inuite Mary, the fatherlesse, the widdow: for he protests openly; [x] whatsoeuer is done vnto the least of my brethren, is done vnto mee.

And when the wine failed.] Want at a wedding [y] doth intimate the discontentment and vanitie of earthly pleasure, that euen in laughing the heart is sorrowfull, and the end of mirth is heauinesse: Prouerbs 14. 13. Eccesiastes 2. 1.

We need not dispute curiously [z] whether this want was occasioned either by the pouertie of the parties inuiting, or by the riotous intemperance of the guests inuited, or by the lauish negligence of the seruitors, or by the multitude of acquaintance, who came, not called, as it is vsuall at such meetings: it is enough for vs to know that it came to passe by Gods all-seeing prouidence, that our Sauiour might manifest his glorie. For, as it is sayd of him that was borne blinde, Iohn 9. Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the workes of God should be shewed on him: so neither the master of the feast, nor the guests, nor the seruants offended in that the wine failed; only this happened for our good, and Christs glory.

They

They haue no wine.] [a] This speech is grounded vpon faith, hope and charitie. Faith, in that shee beleeued Christ was able: hope, being throughly perswaded Christ was willing miraculously to supply this want.: Her words are but three vinum non habent: an indicatiue short narration; not an optatiue long oration. Hereby teaching vs, that albeit in regard of our miserie, nothing can be sayd too much; yet in respect of Christs mercie, one word is enough, as being more willing to releeue then we to request.

Lastly, this is a demonstration of her charitie; [b] being solicitous for her good friends, accounting their want her woe. [c] For if one member of Christs mysticall body suffer, all suffer with it: and therefore the good Virgin out of [d] sympathy, perceiuing the wine would faile, cried vnto her sonne, they haue no wine.

Shee could not but be full of pitty, who carried in her wombe nine moneths the God of compassion. If a man hold an apple in his hand all the forenoone, he will smell of it all the afternoone. Mary did inwombe the father of mercies: her bowels therefore must needs be very compassionate. [e] Nam & ante mentem repleuit quàm ventrem, & cùm processit ex vtero, non recessit ab animo. As Mary to Christ, they haue no wine; so I to you, the poore haue no corne. For their supply (God be thanked) as yet we need no miracle, but onely your mercie. [f] S. Peter said to the begging cripple: Siluer and gold haue I none but such as I haue that giue I thee. In the Name of Iesus Christ rise vp and walke. But our [g] liues if not our lips, vtter the contrary; compassion and pittie haue wee none, but goods and corne which we haue giue we not.

[h] Iulius Cæsar gloried in nothing so much as in pardoning his enemies, and gratifying his friends. Hee did beleeue as a Pagan, but worke as a Christian: but I feare [i] many beleeue like Christians, but liue like Pagans.

The subtill disputant presseth his aduersarie with two premisses, that hee may bring him to an absurd conclusion. Satan is the most cunning sophister, hee doth præmittere duo, delicias & diuitias. Now we must denie the first proposition flatly, and distinguish of the second. And this distinction must be a diuision, and this diuision Christs diuision: [k] Diuide pauperibus, Giue to the poore.

Master [l] Tyndall being a diligent Preacher, and a great student, allotted two dayes in euery weeke, monday, and saturday, to visit the sicke and to releeue the poore, which he termed his owne dayes of pastime; a sweet recreation (as [m] Ambrose speakes) in alieno remedio vulnera sua curare: To benefit our selues in helping other. In our time we want such women as Mary, such men as Tyndall, &c.

If any shall demand how Mary came by this faith, hope, charitie? how shee beleeued Christ to be God, and able to doe wonders? Answere is made, first, that shee might vnderstand this by [n] diuine reuelation: for Gabriel an harbinger of heauen told so much vnto her: [o] He shall be great, and shall be called the Sonne of the most high: and he shall raigne ouer the house of Iacob for euer, and of his kingdome shall be no end.

Secondly, [p] by the preaching of Iohn the Baptist, openly proclaiming Christ to be the Lambe of God who takes away the sinnes of the world.

Thirdly, by the diligent obseruation of Christs doctrine both abroad and at home: for the text saith in the second of S. Luke, that Mary kept all those sayings and pondered them in her heart. Where by the way note, what an excellent thing it is to marke the words of the Preacher, and safely to lay them vp in our heart as in a treasure house, that as occasion is offered at any time, they may be ready for our vse.

What haue I doe with thee.] [q] There is some difference betweene the Protestants and Papists about this answer, which seemes exceeding hard and harsh. I will therefore follow S. [r] Augustines exposition, as an indifferent Iudge betweene both: Operaturus facta diuina non agnoscit viscera humana.

What haue I to doe with thee?] To wit, in this buſineſſe. I had mine humane weakeneſſe from thee: but to worke miracles is a diuine power; and therefore why ſhould I reſpect my mother in matters appertaining to the commiſſion of my Father? as it is in this daies Epiſtle; Let him that hath an office wait on his office. Hence we may learne, that reſpect of kindred ought not to bee the principall motion in doing our dutie, but Gods glory; neglecting [f] father and mother, wife and children, brethren and ſiſters, and our owne life, to doe the will of our heauenly father. [t] Pietatis genus eſt impium eſſe pro domino.

Secondly, this doth ſhew that [v] God defers our ſuits vntill his good houre.

Thirdly, Chriſt anſwered roughly, leſt we ſhould account his mother our mediatrix and aduocate. For [x] hee foreſaw the ſuperſtition of popery, making Mary the Queene of heauen, and aſſigning greater dignity to the mother, then to the Sonne. For whereas Gods kingdome conſiſts of his iuſtice and mercie the [y] Papiſts attribute the greateſt part, which is mercie, to Mary, making her high Chanceller, and Chriſt, as it were chiefe Iuſtice: ſo that a poore client may well [z] appeale from the tribunall of God, to the court of our Lady. The whole Church doth ſing.

O woman.] Hence the Montanists and Valentinians absurdly gather, that Christ was not the Sonne of Mary: yet (as [q] Augustine notes) euen the same Euangelist in the same place, cals her againe and againe, the mother of Iesus. Our Sauiour happily called her woman, not mother, [r] to signifie that hee was greater then her child; that his elect people might acknowledge him to bee the Sonne of God; as they knew he was the sonne of Mary: or [s] woman, because then a widow.

Mine houre is not yet come.] [t] Some read this clause with an interrogation; Is not mine houre yet come? Am I not yet of sufficient yeeres and discretion, to manage my businesse without your direction? The houre is now come wherein you must obay my commands, as I haue submitted my selfe heretofore to yours.

[v] Other interpret this of his passion, according to that of our euangelist, chapter 7. 30. No man layd hands on him, because his houre was not yet come. As if Christs meaning were this: In miracles acted by the finger of God, I haue nothing to doe with thee: but when my weake flesh which I tooke from thee, shall be crucified, in that houre I will acknowledge you to be my mother. And so we read, Iohn 19. 25. Then stood by the crosse of Iesus, his mother: and when Iesus saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loued, he said vnto his mother; Woman, behold thy Sonne.

But it is expounded most aptly, that it was not as yet an [x] opportune time to worke the miracle, [y] because the want of wine was not generally perceiued and manifested. It is Gods houre when wee most need. [z] Cum omne carnale concilium & auxilium cessauerint: when all men and meanes are wanting, [a] God is a present helpe in trouble.

This one clause then [b] insinuates our Sauiours
- Power.
- Prouidence.
- Wisedome.
- Pitie.
- Pietie.

Power.] For no man hath an houre. [c] Times and seasons are put in Gods owne power onely. Whereas therefore Christ saith, Mine houre; he doth euidently demonstrate, that he is creator of yeeres, and eternall [d] clok-keeper of time.

Prouidence.] For it came not to passe by fate or fortune, but by disposition diuine; [e] determining from all eternitie, both what, when, and where Christ should suffer and doe.

Wisedome.] Performing this act of wonder in the right quando, when it might procure the greatest good to men, and glory to God.

Pitie.] For hereby the new maried conceiued hope, that he would releeue their want in his good houre.

Pietie.] Toward his mother; not absolutely denying, but only deferring her suit for a time. Nondum venit: It shall come, though as yet not come.

His mother said vnto the ministers, Whatsoeuer hee saith vnto you doe it.] Shee was not offended or discouraged with Christs answere, but beleeued his word, and submitted her selfe to his will: a notable president of [f] faith and [g] obedience; teaching vs in all afflictions of body and soule, wholly to stay our selues vpon his gratious promises. In a word, it is [h] a good rule to be followed in all things; heare him; in all the workes of thy calling, whatsoeuer he saith vnto thee, doe it; not onely beleeue, [i] but doe.

And there were standing there six water-potts of stone.] The relation of the miracle it selfe containes in it a most liuely [k] picture of the Church militant, subiect euen in her greatest happinesse to much want and woe: but Christ that keepes Israel doth neither slumber nor sleepe; he knowes her workes, and in the midst of her wants, euen when she thinkes her selfe forsaken, heares her prayers and turnes her water into wine, giuing her a garment of gladnesse for the spirit of heauinesse.

The Fathers and Friers abound with other allegories. He that liſt may read *Auguſt. tract. 9. in Ioan. Bernard. ſer. 2. poſt octau. Epiphan. Rupert. comment. in Ioan lib. 2. Luther poſtil. maior. I did alway thinke of gloſſes, as [l] Auguſtine of graces: Alter aliquando fructuoſus eſt donis pancioribus, ſed potioribus, alter inferioribus ſed pluribus: One man edifieth his hearers with many, though meane notes; another with few, but fit; ſhort, but ſweet. I paſſe therefore from the miracle, to the conſequent and effect.

The which is twofold: { 1. The manifeſtation of Chriſts glory. 2. The confirmation of his Diſciples faith.

Chriſt in his morals inſtructed vs to liue well; in his miracles to beleeue well. And therefore this fact increaſing the Diſciples faith, and illuſtrating his honor, Omne tulit punctum, quia miſcuit vtile dulci.

The Epiſtle. Rom. 12. 16.

Bee not wiſe in your owne opinion, &c.

SAint Paul exhorts vs in this Epiſtle, not to hurt, but rather helpe our enemies.

Not to hurt by { Concealing that which is good; as, { Wiſedome: Be not wiſe in your owne opinion. Sanctimony: Prouide things honeſt in the ſight of all men. / Rendring that which is euill: verſe. 17. Recompence no man euill for euill: and verſ. 19. Auenge not your ſelues, &c.

But to helpe by preſeruing { Peace: verſ. 18. If it be poſſible, liue peaceably with all men. verſ. 20. If thine enemie hunger; feed him. / Patience: verſ. 21. Bee not ouercome of euill, but ouercome euill with good.

Be not wiſe.] Not in your ſelues, nor onely wiſe to your ſelues: not in your ſelues and [m] owne conceit. [n] If any man among you ſeeme to be wiſe, let him be a foole, that hee may bee wiſe. [o] Seeſt thou a man haſtie in his matters and haughty; there is more hope of a foole, then of him. It is [p] recorded as a great fault in Charles, Duke of Burgundie, that hee ſeldome asked, neuer followed the counſell of other. On the contrary, Moſes, a man [q] learned in all wiſedome of the Ægyptians, and mighty both in words and deeds, obeyed the voyce of his father in law Iethro, doing according to his aduiſe: Exod. 18. 24. Saul harkned vnto the counſell of his ſeruant: 1. Sam. 9. Agamemnon in Homer, wiſhed for ten Neſtors. [r] Alexander ſeuerus neuer determined any thing of moment, without twelue or twenty iudicious Lawyers. It is a great part of wiſedome, yea the firſt entrie to knowledge, [s] ſcire quod neſcias; not to bee too wiſe, or in our opinion ſo wiſe, that wee neglect others helpe. The Pope in this reſpect (as [t] Roderigo, Biſhop of Zamora well obſerues) is moſt vnfortunate. For though hee hath all things at command, yet euermore ſtands in need of one thing, to wit, a faithfull counſeller.

The Romans at this time being Lords of the world, were puffed vp exceedingly with the greatneſſe of their gifts, and largeneſſe of their Empire: Paul therefore did often (as Chryſoſtome notes) inculcate this exhortation, in this Chapter twice, that it might be remembred once.

The men of England, yea the women of England, abuſing the great light of the Goſpell, and long peace, are growne ſo wiſe, that many will take vpon them to teach euen their moſt learned teachers: and therefore we muſt againe and againe preach and preſſe this one leſſon: Be not wiſe in your owne opinion. Let no man preſume to know more then is meet for him to know; but ſo iudge of himselfe that he be gentle and sober, according as God hath dealt to euery man the measure of faith

Or as [u] other expound it; Be not wise to your selues: but as [x] Salomon speakes Let thy fountaines flow forth, and the riuers of waters in the streets: according to the measure of grace, proceeding from the fountaine of goodnesse, communicate thy wisdome to other, hid not thy talent.

To one is giuen by the Spirit the word of wisdome, [y] tanquam luminare maius; vnto another the word of knowledge, tanquam luminare minus; vnto another prophecie, vnto another faith, vnto another diuersitie of language, tanquam stellæ, as starres in the firmament of the Church. Our light then must shine before men, and we must wast our selues for the good of such as are in Gods house. The [z] candle must not be put vnder a bushell, but on a candlestieke. Scire tuum nihil est, nisi te scire hoc sciat alter. If thou wilt be onely wise to thy selfe, thou shalt at last turne foole. For as water standing still is soone puddle: [a] so the gifts of the minde not imployed are impaired. [b] Africanus said truly, that vse begat wisdome:

Vsus me genuit, mater peperit memoria.

Let vs not then inclose truth and the knowledge thereof, it is common. If wee make it priuate, we shall bee depriued of it. As [c] Augustine sweetly: Non licet habere priuatam, ne priuemur eâ. [d] When Christ ascended vp on high, hee gaue gifts to men, among other the gift of [e] wisdome, for the gathering together of the Saints, for the worke of the ministrie, for the building vp of his mysticall body. Wisedome then is not giuen only for thy selfe, but for other, among the rest [f] euen for thine enemies, that the Lord God might dwell among them.

Secondly, we may not conceale our sanctimonie. Prouide things honest in the sight of all men.] as Paul expounds Paul. [g] Giue none offence neither to the Iewes nor to the Grecians, nor to the Church of God. [h] For as a man must haue care of his conscience before God; so likewise of his credit before men.

Some prouide thungs honest

- Before men, but not before God, as the vaine-glorious hypocrites, Herod within, Iohn without, painted tombes, as Christ aptly: Sepulchra quasi semipulchra, exteriùs nitida, interiùs fœtida.
- Before God, but not before men; as the malecõtẽt, & vndiscreet professor, by whose euill exãple the name of God is often [i] blasphemed.
- Neither before God nor men: as the shamelesse ruffins and Atheists of the world, whose [k] glory is their shame, [l] delighting in doing euill, and boasting of iniquitie; reputing dishonestie no dishonour, but the top of their gallantry. So Saint [m] Augustine writes of himselfe before he was Saint: Vbi non superat quô admissô æquarer perditis, fingebam me fecisse, quod non feceram, ne viderer abiectior, quô eram innocentior.
- Both before God and men; as [n] Elizabeth and Zacharie, who were iust before God, and vnreproueable before men: so must euery Christian abstaine, so farr as he can, [o] from all appearance of euill: [p] yet this honest care of our carriage must not be to please men, but only to praise God. As S. [q] Peter interprets S. Paul: Haue your conuersation honest, that they which speake euill of you, as of euill doers, may by your good workes, which they shall see, glorifie God in the day of the visitatiõ. Let your light (saith Christ) shine before men; not only that they may see your good works, but also that seeing, they may glorifie your father which is in heauen. [r] Vt hoc ipsum quod homo per bona opera placet hominibus, non ibi finẽ cõstituat vt hominibus placeat, sed referat hoc ad laudem Dei, & propterea placeat hominibus, vt in illo glorificetur Deus.

As we may not conceale from our enemie wisdome and knowledge which are good: so much lesse render euill. Recompence to no man euill for euill.] A Magistrate may punish a malefactor, and so pro malo culpæ, render malũ pœnæ.

[s] But this is not to recompence euill for euill, but good for euill: becauſe corrections are directions, as well to the ſeer as ſufferer: [t] the fleſh is deſtroyed, that the ſpirit may be ſaued. A Magiſtrate then may render euill for euill: but a priuate man out of a priuate grudge, may not auenge himſelfe, but rather giue place to wrath.

The which may be conſtrued of { Our owne wrath. / Aduerſaries anger. / Gods iudgement.

Of our owne wrath, as [u] Ambroſe: reſiſte iræ, ſi potes; cede ſi non potes. An haſtie [x] colerick man is like one that dwelles in a thatched houſe, who being rich in the morne, through ſudden fire is a begger ere night. It is extreame folly to doe any thing in furie; but wiſdome to giue place and ſpace to wrath. It was an excellent decree of [y] Theodoſius, enacted by the counſell of S. Ambroſe, that execution after a ſeuere ſentence ſhould be deferred thirty daies: vt ira decocta, durior emendari poſſit ſententia, that all heat of contention allaied, if need require, the ſeueritie of the cenſure might be qualified and moderated.

Secondly, this may be conſtrued of our [z] aduerſaries anger: for as [a] thunder and gunnes hurt not any thing which yeelds vnto their furie, but onely that which is hard and ſtiffe; ſo the raging and roaring of our foes are beſt quelled by patience. Turne to the brauling curre, and he will be more fierce; but ride on neglecting him, and he will ſoone be quiet. You may turne the prouerbe:

Veterem iniuriam ferendo vitas nouam.

Thirdly, this may be conſtrued of Gods iudgement, and that [b] moſt fitly: for to God onely vengeance belongs, and he will auenge our cauſe. The malicious man in reuiling thee, doth [c] treaſure vp wrath againſt the day of wrath, and therefor giue place to Gods wrath: [d] Caſt all your care on him for hee careth for you.

Yea, but may wee not complaine to the Magiſtrate for redreſſe of iniuries? Yes ſurely, for he is Gods liuetenant on earth, and therefore the vulgar Latine, voſmet ipſos defendentes, is inſufficient, [e] as our Diuines haue well obſerued: and the Rhemiſts haue well mended it, reading as wee doe, reuenge, or, auenge not your ſelues. For wee may be ſo wiſe as ſerpents in defending our ſelues, howſoeuer ſo innocent as doues in offending other. [f] He that commits his cauſe to the Magiſtrate, giues place to diuine iudgement: for all ſuperiour powers are [g] Gods ordinance: but whoſoeuer auengeth his owne quarrell, ſteps into the Princes chair of eſtate, yea Gods owne ſeate, dethroning both, and ſo diſturbs heauen and earth.

Here then is no place for duell; a fault (as it is vſed in England, the Low-Countries, eſpecially [h] France, for euery punctilio of honour falſly ſo called) againſt not only the rules of reaſon and religion (as [i] Bernard notably: Quis hic tam ſtupendus error, quis furor hic tám non ferendus, nullis ſtipendijs militare niſi aut mortis aut criminis? Nam occiſor lethaliter peccat, & occiſus æternaliter perit) but euen againſt the principles of that art.

As a Chriſtan may warre in [k] loue, ſo a Chriſtian muſt iarre in loue; ſo contend with his aduerſary before the lawfull Iudge, that the partie caſt in the ſuit may be bettered, if not in his money, yet in his manners, and Satan only conquered: [l] Vt qui vincitur, ſimul vincat; & vnus tantummodò vincatur Diabolus. [m] Otherwiſe when we ſue for our right out of rancor and malice, wee commit not our caſe to God and his deputie the Prince, but make them both our deputies, our inſtruments of reuenge; the which is ſuch an horrible crime, that Paul calls it a myſterie of iniquitie, 2. Theſſ. 2. 7. I ſay, this ſecret exalting of our ſelues aboue all that is called God, vſing Soueraignes as ſeruants in our priuate quarrels, is to play the Deuill and the Pope.

Wee may not then diſſemblingly, but ſimply giue place to wrath. An hard ſaying, and therefore Paul doth [n] ſweeten it with a louing tearme, ἀγαπητοί, dearly beloued: as if he ſhould ſpeake thus, It is my loue, that I write ſo much againſt malice:

malice; not for your hurt, but for your eternall good. If you will not beleeue me, beleeue God himselfe, who saith in his holy [o] word, Vengeance is mine I will repay saith the Lord.

God doth reuenge the quarrell of his children vpon the wicked in this, and in the world to come. In this life, so the children who mocked his Prophet Elisha, were rent in peeces with beares, 2. King. 2. So when Hierusalem had killed the Prophets, and stoned such as preached vnto her, Almighty God was wroth, and sent for his warriers, and destroyed those murtherers, and burnt vp their city: Matth. 22. 7.

[p] Three shamelesse ruffins accused Narcyssus, a reuerend and holy Bishop, of a most hainous crime, confirming their accusation with imprecation: the first wished if it were not so, that he were burnt: the second, that he might die of the iaundise: the third, that he might lose his eyes. And afterward in processe of time, the first had his house set on fire in the night, and he with all his family was burnt: the second had the iaundise from the crowne of his head, to the sole of his foote, whereof he died vncomfortably: the third, seeing what was befallen these twaine, repented, and confessed the conspiracy; yet for all that hee lost his eyes.

[q] Earle Godwin swearing at table before the King, that hee did not murther Alfred, after many words in excusing himselfe, said; so mought I safely swallow this morsell of bread, as I am guiltlesse of the deed. But so soone as he had receiued the bread, forthwith he was choaked.

What need we looke so farr? The confounding of the Spanish Armado, the defeating of so many cruell treasons against our late Queene of blessed memorie; the frustrating of that hellish Gunpowder treason, are plaine demonstrations that vengeance is Gods, and he will repay; that he doth [r] plead the cause of his seruants, against such as striue with them, and fight against such as fight against them.

Againe, God rewards the wicked in the world to come; Depart from me yee cursed into euerlasting fire, prepared for the deuill and his Angels. For I was an hungred, and yee gaue me no meat; I thirsted, and yee gaue me no drinke, &c. [t] If they shall be punished who did no good, how shall they be tormented who render euill to the members of Christ; If negligent Dives bee tortured in hell, for omitting only the workes of mercie, what shall become of violent Dives, for committing the workes of cruelty?

[t] Some sinners are punished only in this life, as poore Lazarus, and that incestuous Corinthian. Other onely in the life to come, As the rich Glutton, who while he liued, had the world at will. Other are both tortured in this life and tormented in the next; as the filthy Sodomites, who for their burning lust, had here sulphureum ignem, and shall haue there, gehennalem ignem. Or as Saluianus, lib. 1 de gubernat. Dei, God sent vpon them in this life, Gehennam è cœlo.

Wherefore seeing Almighty God doth reuenge our quarrell, either immediatly by himselfe, or mediatly by his ministers and warriers, euen all his creatures in heauen and earth; it is both faithlesse and fruitlesse for our selues to right our selues. It is faithlesse not to beleeue that the Lord will deale with vs [u] according to his word, who promised by the mouth of his holy [x] Prophet: With thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the vngodly. Fruitlesse, for as much as it is a [y] fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God, whose little finger is heauier then our whole hand.

If it be possible, so much as in you is, liue peaceably with all men.] We must seeke peace, yet vnder these conditions; If it be possible, and as much as in vs is. For wee cannot haue peace with some men; and wee may not haue peace in some matters. See ser. on the first lesson for the next Sunday, ioyned to the Gospell and Epistle.

By the ciuill lawes, he that bequeathes a man nouriſhment, intends he ſhould haue bed and boord, apparell and dwelling. [a] Alimentis legatis, cibaria & veſtitus & habitatio debentur. [b] In like ſort, God inioyning vs in his Teſtament and laſt will to feed our enemies, includes alſo, that we muſt harbour them, and cloath them, and according to their ſeuerall neceſſities, euery way releeue them.

In ſo doing thou ſhalt heape cooles of fire vpon his head.] I finde [c] two conſtructions of theſe words; one bad, another good. It is a ſenſleſſe ſenſe, to ſay by well doing, thine enemie not deſcruing it, thou ſhalt heape coales of fire vpon his head; encreaſe Gods heauy iudgements againſt him. Our Apoſtles intent is to mooue men vnto charitable workes euen toward their enemies: hereby to doe them good and to purpoſe the ſame. But if that were the meaning, Paul ſhould teach vs how to be reuenged; and in ſhew of doing kindneſſe, to worke miſchiefe, pretending good, intending euill.

The better conſtruction is; In ſo doing thou ſhalt either confound, or conuert thine aduerſary. [d] Confound him in his conſcience, making him acknowledge, that thou art more religious, and more nobly minded then himſelfe. So when Saul vnderſtood of Dauids honeſt and honourable carriage toward him, inſtantly brake forth into this ingenuous confeſſion; [e] thou art more righteous then I, for thou haſt rendred mee good, and I haue rendred thee euill. Or elſe thou ſhalt [f] conuert him to thy ſelfe. For [g] loue is ſtrong as death, the coales thereof are fiery coales and a vehement flame. There is no greater prouocation to loue, then preuention in loue. [h] Nimis enim durus animus, qui delectionem, etſi nolebat impendere, nolit rependere. Kinde reſpect to thy foe, ſhall blow the coales of his affection, and inflame his loue toward thee.

Behold a leper.] In Chriſt, preaching and practiſe meet togither. So ſoone as he had ſaid well, [s] he proceeds for the confirmation of his doctrine to do well; acting good workes and great workes: good workes of mercy, great workes of miracle; of mercy in helping, of mercy in healing a leprous man preſent, and a palſie man abſent. Intimating hereby, that it is not enough to talke of Gods wayes, except we walke in his paths; and manifeſting himſelfe to the world, that hee was the Meſſias of the world. deafe to heare, the lame to goe. I cure all kinde of diſeaſes, euen with the leaſt touch of my finger, and leaſt breath of my mouth. I heale the Leper, I heare the Centurion.

The leper was a Iew, the Centurion a Gentile; the leper poore, the Centurion rich; the leper a man of peace, the Centurion a man of warr. [x] Inſinuating hereby, that God is no [y] accepter of perſons; but that his benefits indifferently belong to men of all nations and all faſhions.

In the leper 2. things are remarkable: the { Weakneſſe of his body: ſicke, and ſicke of a leproſie. / Vertues of his minde: { Faith. / Adoration. / Wiſdome. / Patience. / Confeſſion.

In Chriſt alſo two things are to bee conſidered: his { Mercy; that would ſo readily. / Might; that could ſo eaſily cure this diſtreſſed lazer.

A leper.] All weakeneſſe originally proceeds from [c] wickedneſſe; [d] either from ſome defect in our conception, or diſorder in our converſation: as Mephiboſheth had [e] his lamneſſe by falling from his nurſe; ſo euery man his ſickneſſe by falling from the Lord. Chriſt, who was free from ſinne, was alſo free from ſickneſſe: but vnto men, carying about them bodies of ſinne, diſeaſes are as it were a [f] ſermon from heauen, wherein Almighty God accuſeth of ſinnes, and ſhewes his wrath againſt ſinners.

But the condition of a leper, as we reade in the [g] law, was of all other ſicke, moſt inſupportable. Firſt he muſt liue alone, ſeparated from the fellowſhip of Gods people, as vnworthy to come into cleane company. Secondly, he did weare foure markes to be knowne by; his garments torne, his head bare, his mouth couered, and he muſt cry; I am vncleane, I am vncleane. For griefe whereof, aſſuredly ſome pined away; being forlorne in their ſorrow, deſtitute of all good comfort and company. Yet this leper indued with a liuely faith, is not hopeleſſe, howſoeuer hapleſſe. For he comes, and ſaith vnto the great Phiſitian of the world; Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me cleane: though hee knew that his ſickneſſe in the worlds eye was incurable, yet he did beleeue that vnto God nothing is impoſſible. He felt his owne miſerie to be great, yet hoped Chriſts mercy was more great: and therefore comes vnto him (as [h] Ludolphus aptly) Non tam paſſibus corporis quàm fide cordis: If thou wilt, thou canſt. A ſtrong faith in a weake body.

[g] Leuit. 13.

Faith comes by [i] hearing: and the reaſon why this leper extraordinarily deſired to heare Chriſt, and heare of Chriſt, was his vncleane diſeaſe: [k] ſo that the weakeneſſe of his body, brought him vnto the Phyſitian of his ſoule. Note then here with [l] Paul, that all things happen for the good of ſuch as are good. It was good for Dauid that he was in trouble; good for [m] Naaman that he was a leper; for his vncleaneſſe brought him vnto the Prophet, and the Prophet brought him vnto the ſauing knowledge of the true God. It was good for Paul that hee was buffeted by Satan, for otherwiſe peraduenture through abundance of reuelations he would haue buffeted God.

Of all herbes in the garden (as one wittily) Rew is the herbe of grace. Many times our woe doth occaſion our weale: for as pride doth breed ſores of ſalues, ſo faith on the contrary doth often make ſalues of ſores, altogether renouncing her owne merit, and wholly relying vpon Chriſts mercy. Tanto deſiderantius ad Chriſtum contendit, quod ſuam indignitatem & immunditiam probè ſentiret:

ſentiret: as [n] Luther and [o] Ferus accord in this; and that ſo truly, that as a Papiſt ſaid; if Bonauentura had not beene a Romiſh Saint, hee would haue beene reputed an aſſe: ſo the Proteſtant, if Ferus had not beene a Romiſh aſſe, hee might haue proued in the Church a renowned Saint.

The ſecond vertue to bee conſidered as a fruit of his faith, is adoration; [p] a ſpirituall fee for a ſpirituall phyſitian: as the bodily Doctor muſt be payed, ſo the ghoſtly prayed. He therefore worſhips Chriſt, and that with all humbleneſſe of { Thought. Word. Deed.

He comes to Chriſt as a vaſſall to his Lord: Domine non tanquam ad dominum titularem, ſed tanquam ad dominum tutelarem: If thou wilt thou canſt. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh: and therefore beleeuing in his heart that Chriſt was the Lord, willing and able to helpe, confeſſeth it alſo with his mouth: If it be for my good, I am ſure thou wilt: and I beleeue thou canſt; attributing all to Chriſts might and mercie, nothing to his owne either worth or woe.

Vttering this alſo with humble geſture. For, as S. [q] Marke reports, hee kneeled, and as Saint [r] Luke, he fell on his face: teaching vs in prayer to fall downe and kneele before the Lord our maker. Hee that worſhips God irreuerently, ſhewes himſelfe not a Chriſtian, but a [s] Manichee: [t] who thought God made the ſoule, but not the body.

Thirdly, note the lepers wiſdome, who did obſerue circumſtances of { [*] Place: not preſſing to Chriſt on the mount but expecting him in the valley. Time: not interrupting Chriſt in his ſermon, or diſturbing his auditory. Perſon: ſpeaking in a ſuccinct ſtile.

[*] Chryſoſt. & Theophylact. in loc.

Lord if thou wilt thou canſt make me cleane. Giuing vs to vnderſtand, that in ſuing vnto men which are wiſe, and in praying God who is wiſedome, wee need not vſe many, but pithy words. See Goſpell, Dom. 2 quadrageſ.

The fourth vertue is his patience, who was content notwithſtanding his extreame miſery, to ſtay Gods leiſure, and Chriſts pleaſure: [u] Firſt, ſeeking the kingdome of God, and then deſiring that other things might be caſt vpon him. [x] In the firſt place giuing God glory, Lord if thou wilt, thou canſt. In the ſecond, praying for his owne good: Make me cleane; not as I will, but as thou wilt O Lord: preſcribing neither the time when, nor place where, nor manner how, but referring all to Chriſt, poſſeſſing his ſoule with patience.

[x] Ferus. ſer. 5. in loc.

The laſt vertue to be regarded in this leper, is confeſſion. He knew the Phariſees hated and perſecuted all ſuch as confeſſed Chriſt: yet hee calls him Lord, and worſhips him as a Lord, and proclaimes him in the preſence of much people to be the Lord. It is well [y] obſerued, that Gods omnipotent power and infinite mercies are the two wings of our deuotion, whereby faith in the midſt of all trouble mounts into heauen. Here the leper acknowledgeth openly Chriſts omnipotency: [z] for he ſaith not, intreat God to make me cleane, but, if thou wilt, thou thy ſelfe canſt; and therefore thou art the very Chriſt: neither doth hee [a] doubt of his mercie, [b] for he ſaith not make me cleane, but, if thou wilt, make me cleane. [c] It is enough to ſhew my need, I commit the reſt to thy cure, to thy care. Thou canſt doe whatſoeuer thou wilt, and thou wilt doe that which ſhall be moſt for my good and thy glory.

This may teach vs how to confeſſe our wickedneſſe to God, as alſo to profeſſe his goodneſſe vnto men. Our wickedneſſe vnto God: for as Seneca truly, Prima ſanitatis pars eſt velle ſanari: The firſt ſtep vnto health is to bee deſirous of helpe. [d] Ipſe ſibi denegat curam, qui ſuam medico non publicat cauſam. Our ſinnes are a ſpirituall vncleaneſſe and leproſie, defiling the whole body, making our eies to luſt, our mouth to curſe, our tongue to lie, our throat an open ſepulchre, our hands nimble to ſteale, our feet ſwift to ſhed bloud. It is therefore neceſſary neceſſarie we ſhould manifeſt vnto Chriſt our ſores, that he may ſee them, and ſearch them, and ſalue t hem.

Againe, by this example we may learne to profeſſe the faith of Chriſt openly, though [c] the Kings of the earth ſtand vp, and the rulers take counſell againſt the Lord, and againſt his anointed. Other happily thinke ſo, but dare not ſay ſo. Some peraduenture ſay ſo, though they thinke not ſo: but I beleeue as I ſpeake, and ſpeake as I beleeue: Lord if thou wilt, thou canſt make me cleane.

[c] Pſal. 2. 2.

Hitherto concerning the Patient: I come now to the Phyſitian, in whom two things are obſeruable:

1. His mercy, who would ſo readily.
2. His might, who could ſo eaſily cure ſuch an incurable leproſie.

And Ieſus put forth his hand.] He granted that cheerfully, which the leper deſired earneſtly. The leper ſaid, If thou wilt, and Chriſt anſwereth, I will; and as I will, I ſay, be thou cleane; and as I ſay, I doe; his leproſie was immediatly cleanſed: he ſpake the word, and it was done; he commanded and it was effected, euen with little mouing of his lips, and touch of his finger.

Here then is comfort for the diſtreſſed ſoule: The leper cals, and Chriſt heales him; the Centurion comes and Chriſt helps him. Other Phyſitians are deceiued often themſelues, and often deceiue others; and therefore we venture much, when we truſt them a little. The beſt phyſick (as one ſaid) is to take no phyſicke: but if we commit our cauſe to this heauenly Doctor, our venture is without all peraduenture: for he cureth all that [f] calleth vpon him, and [g] eaſeth all that come vnto him.

[f] Pſal. 50 15.
[g] Mat. 11. 28.

Ieſus put forth his hand and touched him.] [h] Extendens manum ſuum] quod fuit liberalitatis contra auaros: tetigit eum] quod fuit humilitatis contra ſuperbos: dicens volo] quod fuit pietatis contra inuidos: mundare] quod fuit poteſtatis contra incredulos.

[h] Ludolph. vbi ſupra.

It was vnlawfull to touch a leper, as we finde, Leuit. 14 In that therefore Chriſt touched here this leper, he ſhewes himſelfe to be greater then Moſes, aboue the law. When Eliſha cured Naaman, he did not put his hand on the place becauſe he was ſubiect vnto the law; but Chriſt touched this leper as being Soueraigne of the law. So Chryſoſtome, Ambroſe, Theophylact Ludolphus, and almoſt all other vpon the place.

Secondly, note with [i] Melanchthon, that morall duties are to be preferred before ceremoniall offices; and therefore Chriſt neglects a ceremonie to ſaue his brother, and that according to Gods owne commandement, [k] I will haue mercie not ſacrifice. The beſt gloſſe vpon the Goſpel is faith, & the beſt expoſition of the law is loue. [l] Chriſt therefore did offend the ſound of the law, but not the ſence.

[i] Poſtil. in loc.
[k] Oſee 6. 6.
[l] Thomas ex Chryſoſt. in loc.

Thirdly, this intimates that Chriſt was homo verus, and yet not homo merus; a very man in touching, but more then a meere man in healing with a touch. [m] Ambroſe pithily: Volo dicit propter Fotinum imperat propter Arium, tangit propter Manichæum. He did touch the leper to confute Manichæus, denying him to be the very man; hee did vſe the imperatiue moode, be thou cleane, to confound Arius, denying him to be very God.

[m] Lib. 5. in Luc. cap. 1

Fourthly, obſerue with [n] Cyrillus of Alexandria, the precious neſſe of Chriſts humanity, the which vnited to the Godhead, is the ſole ſalue of all our ſores; his rags are our robes, his crying our reioicing, his death our life, his incarnation our ſaluation

[n] Maldonat. in loc.

Fifthly, with [o] Aquine, to demonſtrate that himſelfe and none other cured him, becauſe himſelfe and none other touched him.

[o] Ex Chryſoſt. & Ianſen. concor. cap. 44.

Sixthly, with [p] Caluin and Marlorat, Chriſts humilitie, who did vouchſafe not onely to talke with the leper, but alſo to touch the leper. [q] According to this example, wee muſt learne not to loath any Lazarus, as the rich Glutton in the Goſpell, but rather (as it is reported of [r] Elizabeth, the Kings daughter of Hungary) to make medecines for his maladies, and plaiſters for his wounds: in humanity to releeue the diſtreſſed, in humilitie to kiſſe the very feet of the poore.

As

As Christ ſtretched out his hand to the leper, [f] ſo we ſhould put forth our hand to the needy. Let not thine hand (ſaith the [t] wiſe man) be ſtretched out to receiue and ſhut when thou ſhouldeſt giue.

Laſtly, with [u] Tertullian and [x] other, how Chriſt in this action reſpected not the letter but the meaning, which is the ſoule of the law. The Scriptures are not [y] in ſuperficie, ſed in medulla; non in verborum folijs, ſed in radice rationis.

Now the reaſon of the law forbidding the cleane to touch the vncleane, was, leſt hereby they ſhould be polluted. But Chriſt could not be thus infected; he therefore touched the leper, not to receiue hurt, but to giue helpe: ſo the text of [z] Paul is to be conſtrued; hos denita.

The Nouice may not be familiar with an old ſubtill fox; but a iudicious Diuine may conferr with an heretike, not to peruert himſelfe, but to conuert his aduerſary: Chriſt may touch a leper, if it be to heale him; and the Miniſter of Chriſt may teach an heretike, if it be to win him, and not to wound the truth.

I will be thou cleane.] I will. ([a] If God will) is the ſtile of man: our will being ſubordinate to Gods eternall decrees, in [b] whom we liue, and moue, and haue our being. But, I will, is the ſtile of God onely, who doth whatſoeuer pleaſeth him, in heauen, in earth, in ſea: Pſal. 135. 6. The commanding terme then, I will, and imperatiue moode, be thou cleane, (except we read the text with the ſpectacles of Arius) [c] euidently proue, that Chriſt is God Almighty.

And immediately his leproſie was cleanſed.] This amplifieth exceedingly Chriſts greatneſſe and goodneſſe: firſt, in that he cured this vncleane perſon thorowly, then in that he cured him quickly; for in all our ſuits vnto men, wee deſire two things eſpecially, that they deale ſoundly and roundly. Chriſt dealt ſo ſoundly with this leper, as that he did expoſe his cure to the cenſures euen of his aduerſaries the Prieſts, of all, moſt ready to cauill at his cariage, and mocke his miracle: ſo roundly, ſo ſpeedily, that whereas ordinary phyſicke muſt haue time for operation, his extraordinary medicine wrought, as the text ſaith, immediatly, inſtantly.

Ieſus ſaid vnto him, tell no man.] S. [d] Marke reports, that this leper inſtantly publiſhed the matter, & that in ſuch ſort, that Ieſus could not openly enter into the citie, but was without in deſert places, and yet people came to him from euery quarter. Here then a queſtion is made, whether it was a fault in the leper or no, thus to divulge the miracle? For [e] Eſay would haue men declare Gods works among the people. [f] Dauid wiſhed often, O that men would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe. And Chriſt himſelfe ſaid vnto another, whom he cured in the 5. of S. Marke; Goe thy way home to thy friends, and ſhew them what great things the Lord hath done to thee. [g] Ludolphus anſwers by diſtinction, affirming that there is triplex præceptum, { Cautelæ. / Probationis. / Obedientiæ. }

Or, as [h] other, { Obligationis. / Tentationis. / Inſtructionis. }

All the poſitiue lawes of God are obligatory; the commandements affirmatiue binde ſemper, and the negatiue ſemper, & ad ſemper. The probatory precepts are to trie vs only. So God [i] commands Abraham to kill Iſaac, intending hereby not to deſtroy the ſonne, but to trie the father. Admonitory precepts; as here Chriſt commanded the leper to tell no man: hereby teaching vs in him to ſhun vaine-glory; for ſo moſt Interpreters expound it.

This diſtinction is inſufficient; as hauing no firme ground in the Bible. For when Almighty God inioynes a particular command, for the triall of his people, contrary to the generall ſcope of his law, he doth at that inſtant [k] diſpenſe with the generall, and the particular only binds: as in the ſacrificing of Iſaac, Offer thy Sonne, was an exemption at that time from the law, Thou ſhalt not kill.

And as for admonitory precepts, how did this leper infallibly know, that Chriſts

Christs command, tell no man, was rather an instruction for other, then a prohibition vnto himselfe? Wherefore seeing all Christs iniunctions binde, I subscribe vnto their opinion, [l] who thinke this leper offended in publishing abroad Christs benefit, notwithstanding he did it affectionately, and zealously. For we must giue thankes vnto God, not as wee will, but as hee will: Deuteronomie 4. 1. Iohn 2. 5.

Hence wee may learne to temper our zeale with knowledge and obedience: for [m] obedience is better then sacrifice.

[m] 1. Sam. 15. 22

If any demand, why Christ would haue this miracle concealed: I answere with [n] Paul; O man, who art thou which disputes against God? [o] If thou dispute with him, thou canst not answere one thing of a thousand: but he can render a thousand answers vnto this friuilous obiection. As first, that there is a time for all things; a time wherein, Christ would be thorowly knowne, and a time wherein he would not be knowne, because his houre was not yet come.

[n] Rom. 9. 20.
[o] Iob. 9. 3.

Secondly, [p] Non erat necesse, vt sermone iactaret, quod corpore præferebat: It was needlesse to publish the miracle, seeing his whole body made cleane, was as it were turned all tongue to tell it.

[p] Hieron. in loc.

Thirdly, it was absurd, that the leper should boast he was cleane, before hee was iudged to bee cleane. Therefore Christ saith in the next clause, Goe and shew thy selfe vnto the Priest: and then being adiudged cleane, tell whom thou wilt.

Shew thy selfe vnto the Priest.] Interpreters obserue diuerse reasons of this command. First, to [q] confirme the truth of the miracle, when as the leper according to law shall be iudged cleane.

Secondly, that the leper might enioy the [r] benefit of his cure: for he might not enter into the Citie, [s] before the Priest had pronounced him cleane.

[s] Leuit. 14.

Thirdly, to [t] condemne the Priests, who taught, that Christ was not an obseruer, but rather a transgressor of the Law.

[t] Hieron. in loc.

Fourthly, that as the law doth witnesse of Christ, and all the sacrifices are types of Christ: [u] so likewise the Priests, expounders of the law, might also witnesse, that Christ is the true Messias of the world; that seeing this miracle, they might beleeue; or in not beleeuing, bee left inexcusable.

[u] Idem Ibidem.

Fifthly, to [x] magnifie the calling and office of the Priests, howsouer they were wicked wretches. Hereby teaching vs, not to vilifie that holy profession for the faults and infirmities of some Iudas crept in among the twelue.

[x] Melanct. hon. in loc. & Ludolph. vbi supr.

Lastly, by this example, instructing vs to doe the greatest right vnto those who doe vs the most wrong. Goe to the Priests, albeit they bee my mortall enemies, and doe that respect, which is incident to their places and persons.

Here the Gospell and Epistle meet. Christ did not render euill for euill, but ouercome euill with goodnesse: prouiding things honest, not onely before God, but also in the sight of all men; auenging not himselfe, but giuing place to wrath, hauing peace so farr as might be with all men.

The [y] Papists vpon this clause build auricular particular confession vnto the Priest. The leper ought to shew himselfe vnto the Priest of the old Testament: Ergo, the sinner infected with spirituall leprosie must confesse himselfe vnto the Priest of the new Testament.

[y] Coster. con. 3. Acost. con. 2. in loc, &c.

Answere is made, that an argument drawne from allegories and similitudes is of little or no force, except it be seconded by some other euident text, whose naturall and proper sense is agreeable therevnto: but there is no such place, which either expresseth or implieth auricular popish confession, and therefore quod non lego, non credo.

[z] Iewel defence of Apol. fol. 151.

[z] M. Harding saith, that auricular confession is Gods ordinance: but when he comes vnto the point, his onely confirmation is his owne bare affirmation: Wee tell them that confession is an institution of God, and not of man: as if his tale should stand for Gospell, in whom are found so many legends, and legions of lies.

[a] Panormitan confesseth honestly, that it is not a diuine constitution, but an humane tradition: and [b] Maldonate writes plainly, that many Catholickes are of the same opinion, as namely Scotus among the Schoolemen, and the expounders of Gratian among the Canonists.

If then a tradition, of what antiquitie? Beatus Rhenanus a popish Doctor anoweth in his [c] notes vpon Tertullians booke de Pœnitentiâ, that this kinde of confessing was vnknowne in the daies of Tertullian, who liued about three hundred yeeres after Christ: and it is noted in the glosse vpon the [d] Decrees, and by [e] Peter Lombard, that it was not vsed in Saint Ambrose time, who liued foure hundred yeeres after Christ. [f] Erasmus an indifferent man, affirmes peremptorily, that this manner of confessing to the Priest secretly, was not as yet ordained in Hieromes age. The Greeke Church, as [g] Theodorus writes, hath no such custome. [h] M. Harding himselfe is constrained against his will, to confesse that the termes of auricular and secret confession are seldome mentioned in the Fathers. [i] A greater clerke then he, saith neuer in old time.

Wee may then iustifie Caluins challenge, lib. 3. institut, cap. 4. sect. 7. that auricular Popish confession was not practised in the Church vntill twelue hundred yeeres after Christ, instituted first in the Lateran Councell, vnder Innocentius the third.

Wee read that there was in the [k] Primitiue Church, a godly discipline, that such persons as were notorious sinners, were put to open penance, and that by the direction of the Bishop or Pastor: [l] and such as voluntarily desired to make publike satisfaction for their offences, vsed to come vnto the Bishops and Priests, as vnto the mouth of the congregation. But this confession was not constrained, but voluntarie; not priuate, but publike: yet hence the Priests abusing the peoples weakenesse, tooke their hint, to bring in auricular confession vpon perill of damnation. A cunning inuention to discouer the mysteries of all states, and all men, and to inrich that couetous and ambitious sea: for confessions euermore make worke for Indulgences, and Indulgences are a great supporter of the triple crowne.

The Papists in this case flie from the Scriptures vnto the Councells, from the Councels vnto the Fathers, and from the Fathers vnto their last starting hole, miracles. Auricular Confession is Gods ordinance (saith [m] Bellarmine) because God hath wrought many miracles at auricular Confession. It is answered aptly, that Dauid saith not, thy wonder, but thy word is a lanterne. Scripture without miracles are a good warrant; but miracles without text, are insufficient: for they were wrought by false Prophets in [n] old time, by false Teachers in [o] our dayes.

It is obserued by Tully, that bad Orators in stead of reasons vse exclamations: and so Bellarmine, for want of arguments, is faine to tell a tale or two related by Bonaventura, Antoninus, and our good Countriman Alanus Copus; all which is no more, but aske my fellow whether I be a theefe.

That priuate confession, as it is vsed among the Papists, is neither necessary nor [p] possible; see Caluin. Institut. lib. 3. cap. 4. Iewel defence Apolog. part. 2. cap. 7. diuision 2. D. Morton, Apolog. catholic. part. 2. cap. 64. Master White, way to the true Church, pag. 157. 226. 227.

Offer the gift. For the [q] labourer is worthy of his hire. This is a witnesse to the Priests, [r] that is, their right and due by law. Yea though the Priest doe not labour, yet we must giue vnto Cæsar the things which belong vnto Cæsar, and vnto God the things which appertaine to God: the publike Ministrie must bee maintained, although the Ministers be neuer so weake, neuer so wicked.

In it obserue the - Fact of Christ:
  - Performing that fully, which the Centurion desired faithfully; his seruant was healed in the same houre: ver. 13.
  - Promising further also, that other Gentiles, euen from all the quarters of the world, shall come vnto him, and rest with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob in the kingdome of heaven: vers. 11.
- Faith of the Centurion:
  - Perswading Christ to cure his seruant: verse. 5. 6.
  - Disswading Christ to come into his house, because it was vnfit / vnnecessary.

Vnfit: I am not worthy that thou shouldest come vnder my roofe. Surely this Captaine was a man of great worth, a deuout man, [f] for hee builded a Synagogue; a good man to the Common-weale wherein hee lived, one that loued the nation of the Iewes, a man of such a faith, as that Christ found none so great in all Israel, vers. 10. a louing master to his seruants, as this act declares a man of command and authority, vers. 9. yet this great Worthy confesseth himselfe vnworthy; like the wheate eare which hangs it head downe lowest, when it hath most corne. By this example learne lowlinesse of minde. When the Sun is right ouer our heads, our shadowes are most short; euen so when wee haue the greatest grace, wee must make the least shew.

[f] Luke 7. 5.

Vnnecessarie; because Christ can helpe the distressed onely with his word, [t] euen one word, which he proues à minori ad maius: [u] I am a man vnder the authority of another, &c. I am a man, but thou art God; I am vnder another, but thou art Lord of all; I haue souldiers obedient to me. For albeit vsually men of that profession are rude, yet, I say to one goe and hee goeth,; vnto another come, and hee commeth; and therefore Sickenesse, which is thy [x] souldier, if thou speake the word onely, will depart: say to the palsie goe, and it will goe; say to thy seruant, Health, come and, it will come.

I haue not found so great faith.] He might haue remembred in this noble Captaine, bounty, loue, deuotion, humilitie; but he commends faith most of all, as being indeed the ground of all; without which one vertue the rest are sinne: Rom. 14. 23. Heb. 11. 6.

The Epistle. Rom. 13. 1. vnto v. 8

Let euery soule submit himselfe, &c.

This Epistle consists of three parts; a
- Proposition: Let euery soule submit himselfe to the authority of the higher powers.
- Reason: for there is no power but of God, &c.
- Conclusion: wherefore yee must needs obey, giuing to euery man his dutie; tribute to whom tribute, &c.

The proposition is peremptory, deliuered not narratiuely, reporting what other hold meet; but positiuely, importing what God would haue done, not aduised only by Paul, but deuised euen by Christ, as a command, in imperatiue termes expressly; Let euery soule be subiect. In which,

obserue the Qualitie / Equality of this dutie,
- To submit our selues.
- Belonging indifferently to all; Let euery soule, &c.

First of the last, according to the words order in the text.

Let euery soule.] [y] That is, euery man: putting the principall part for the whole. So Gen. 46. 27. All the soules of the house of Iacob, which came into Egypt, are seuenty: that is, as Moses expounds himselfe, Deut. 10. 22. seuentie persons. If any demand, why Paul said not; Let euery body, but euery soule; [z] Diuines answer fitly, fitly, to ſignifie, that wee muſt obey, not in outward ſhewes onely, but in truth and in deed: Omnis anima quoniam ex animo: [a] Not with eye ſernice, but in ſinglenesſe of heart.

This vniuerſall note confutes as well the ſeditious Papiſt, as the tumultuous Anabaptiſt. The Papiſt exempting Clergie men from this obedience to ſecular powers: a doctrine not heard in the Church a [b] thouſand yeeres after Chriſt.

[c] Bernard out of this place reaſoneth thus with an Archbiſhop of France: Let euery ſoule be ſubiect: if euery, then yours: I pray, who doth except you Biſhops? Si quis tentat excipere, conatur decipere. So Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, vpon this Text expreſly: Clergie men are not excepted; Ergo, not exempted.

[d] Gregorie the Great, one of the moſt learned Popes, alleageth this gloſſe; Power (ſaith hee) ouer all men is giuen to my Lord Mauritius the Emperor, from heauen: and leſt any ſhould imagine Prieſts exempted, hee ſaith in the ſame place, to the ſame Prince; Sacerdotes meos tuæ manui commiſi: and epiſt. lib. 2, epiſt. 103. Chriſt hath appointed Mauritius to be ruler, not ouer ſouldiers onely, but ouer Prieſts alſo.

[e] Iuſtitian, who fauoured the Church, and of all other Emperors inlarged moſt the priuiledges of Churchmen, inacted this law; Let no Biſhop be brought, or preſented againſt his will, before the Captaine or ciuill Iudge, vnleſſe the Prince ſhall ſo command.

Our Sauiour Chriſt, the beſt Interpreter of Gods law, doth ſhew both by precept and practiſe, that Clergie men owe ſubiection and loyaltie to the ciuill Magiſtrate: ſo [f] Bernard writes; Howſoeuer you Biſhops hold your ſelues free, yet Chriſt alitèr iuſſit, alitér geſſit. He taught otherwiſe, Luke 20.25. ſpeaking vnto prieſts; Giue to Caſar the things which are Caſars. He wrought otherwiſe: for being a Prieſt and a Prophet, he ſubmitteth himſelfe to the Roman Magiſtrate, [g] confeſſing the Preſidents power to be from heauen.

His Apoſtles did tread in their Maſters ſteps: Act. 25. Paul appealed vnto Cæſar, and appeared before Cæſar, as his lawfull gouernor. Saint Iude deteſted them for falſe Prophets, who deſpiſed gouernement, and ſpake ill of thoſe that are in authority. [h] Saint Peter exhorted all men to ſubmit themſelues vnto Gods ordinance, whether it be to the King, as to the ſuperiour, or vnto the gouernours, as vnto them that are ſent of him for the puniſhment of euill doers, and for the praiſe of them that doe well.

I will not write Iliads after Homer, nor diſpute this point after thoſe reuerend Fathers of incomparable iudgement and induſtry, Iewel, Bilſon, Andrewes; in diſpari genere par laus. Each of them haue fought the battle of the Lord valiantly: the firſt with a ſword; the two latter haue ſtabbed the Popes ſupremacy with a dagger, euen to death.

Secondly, Libertines and Anabaptiſts are confounded by this vniuerſalitie, [i] who thinke themſelues free from all lawes. In Germany they would haue framed a Politike body, like the body of Poliphemus, without his eye; or like the confuſed Chaos in old time, when height and depth light and darkeneſſe were mingled together. Our Apoſtle teacheth here, that ſome muſt bee ſubiect, other ſoueraigne; ſome low, ſome high: ſome rule, ſome obey popular equality is the greateſt inequality, voyd of all name, nurture, and nature, of a common weale.

The ground on [k] which Anabaptiſts haue framed their anarchie, is Iam. 2.1. My brethren, haue not the faith of our Lord Ieſus in reſpect of perſons. If no reſpect of perſons, no diſtinction; if no diſtinction, why ſhould there bee difference betweene bond and free, Prince and people? Anſwer is made, that S. Iames ſaith not; haue no reſpect of perſons; but, Haue not the faith of Chriſt in reſpect of perſon; as he doth interpret himſelfe in the verſe following; he ſpeakes of grace, not of place. All men are fellowes in regard of the common faith, and ſpirituall grace: but all men are not fellowes in reſpect of authority and place; for ſome be parents, other children; ſome maſters, other ſeruants; ſome commoners, other commanders.

Beaſts and Deuills obſerue order. [l] Rex vnus eſt apibus, & dux vnus in gregibus. Among Bees there is one maſter; among flocks of ſheepe, one Bellwether. The Cranes haue their Captaine; [m] Quem ordine literato ſequuntur Albeit the Graſhopper hath no king, [n] yet goe they forth all by bands. In hell, which is the kingdome of confuſion, there is a diſtinction of perſons and order; otherwiſe [o] Belzebub could not be chiefe of deuills.

The Libertines haue wreſted alſo that text of Paul, 1. Tim. 1. 9. The law is not giuen vnto the iuſt or righteous man: Ergo, good men are exempted from obedience to lawes. [p] It is anſwered aptly, that the iuſt man doth well not for feare of puniſhment, as compelled by law, but of grace and meere loue toward God and goodneſſe: virtutis amore. Iuſto lex non eſt poſita, [q] neque ad condemnationem neque ad coactionem: Albeit there were no King, nor law to command him, he would be a King and a law to himſelfe, obeying higher powers of his owne accord, with all his heart and ſoule. Thus euery perſon, as well Chriſtian as Heathen, Eccleſiaſticall as Laicke, muſt ſubmit himſelfe to ſuperior powers.

Submit himſelfe] To be ſubiect, is to ſuffer the Princes will to be done, aut á nobis, aut de nobis, either of vs, or on vs: of vs, when he commands for truth; on vs, when he commands againſt the truth: either we muſt be patients, or agents: agents, when he is good and Godly; patients, when he is tyrannous and wicked. Wee muſt vſe not a ſword, but a buckler againſt a bad Prince. Saint Paul here doth not ſay; let euery ſoule be ſubiect to Chriſtian and vertuous gouernors, but [r] indefinitely to Potentates, in that they bee Potentates; as Saint [s] Peter expreſly: not onely to the good and curteous, but alſo to the froward.

If Peter and Paul enioyned all men in their time, to ſubmit themſelues vnto gouernors, albeit they were worſhippers of deuills, and cruell perſecutors of Chriſtians; how much more ſhould we now reſpect and honor religious Kings, which are defenders of the faith, and nurſing Fathers vnto the Church? as [t] Caſar Baronius hath well obſerued againſt the bloudy practiſes of turbulent ſtatizing Ieſuits.

I haue read and heard, that the Ieſuits are deſirous to purge Saint Pauls Epiſtles, eſpecially this to the Romans, as being herein more Lutheran then Catholicke, This text of all other, Omnis anima poteſtatibus ſublimioribus ſubdita ſit, is much againſt their humor and honor. How Pope [u] Boniface the eight, and [x] other Papiſts haue wronged this Scripture, both in their precepts and practiſes, is ſeene of all Chriſtian people, felt of all Proteſtant Princes.

Higher powers] [y] not higheſt onely, for wee muſt obey the [z] ſubordinate Magiſtrate ſo well as the ſupreme. So that that this propoſition hath three large extenſions; euery ſoule, in euery thing, muſt ſubiect himſelfe to euery ſuperiour. Be wiſe now therefore o yee Kings: vnderſtand yee that are Iudges of the earth, how the Church of Rome doth leſſen all this extent.

Clergie men are exempted; Ergo, not euery ſoule. Cauſes eccleſiaſticall are excepted; Ergo, not in euery thing. The Pope may depoſe what higher powers he liſt; Ergo, not to euery ſuperior, but only to thoſe whom his holineſſe doth not curſe. Thus ſome Princes onely may command ſome men onely, in ſome matters onely: whereas Paul here; Let euery ſoule ſubmit himſelfe to the authority of the higher powers, &c.

For there is no power.] The reaſon is threefold, drawne from the threefold good:

honesto, which Paul shewes à [a] Bonitate { ordinantis; there is no power but of God. / ordinationis; the powers are ordained, or ordered.

Ab malum: resist, is euill: culpæ; whosoeuer resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God. / pœnæ; they that resist, shall receiue to themselues damnation.

Ab vtili, for, to: submit our selues is good, because the Magistrate is the Minister of God for our good, for the good of peace, protection, iustice, religion, and the like. For this cause we pay tribute, quia ministri Dei sunt in hoc ipsum seruientes.

iucundo, we must obey for conscience: the which vnto the disobedient, is a perpetuall hell; but vnto such as obey Gods ordinance, is a continuall feast.

No power but of God.] An argument from the Author of authority; all higher powers are from the highest power, vnto whom all creatures must be subiect. It happeneth often that potens, the ruler, is not of God: [b] Ipsi regnauerunt & non per me: They haue set vp Kings, but not by me; they haue made Princes, and I knew it not. [c] And the manner of getting kingdomes is not alwaies of God. [d] Alexander 6. obtained the Popedome by giuing himselfe to the deuill. [e] Phocas by sedition got his Empire. [f] Richard 3. came to the Crowne of England by butchering his Nephewes, and other of the blood Royall; yet the power it selfe is euer from God: [g] By mee Kings raigne. [h] Thou couldest haue no power (saith Christ to Pilate) except it were giuen thee from aboue.

The powers that be, are ordained of God. [i] Insinuating that the Magistrate is not from God, after any common manner as all things are, but after a more speciall fashion ordained. The Lord is the God of order, and order is the good of euery creature, with whom it is better not to be, then to be out of order.

Whosoeuer therefore resisteth.] If there be no power but of God, and nothing done by God but in order; he that resisteth authority, resisteth Gods ordinance. So the Lord himselfe sayd to [k] Samuel: They haue not cast thee away, but they haue cast me away, that I should not raigne ouer them. And hee might haue sayd of Princes as he doth of Preachers, [l] hee that despiseth you, despiseth me. For he sayd of both; [m] Ego dixi, dij estis. As God is a great King, so a King is as it were a little God. He therefore that resisteth the Prince, resisteth him that sent him, almighty God the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: 1. Tim. 6. 15.

There are [n] two binders of the conscience: 1. Proper, Gods law. 2. Improper, mans law.

Gods holy word hath absolute and soueraigne power to binde the conscience, For God is Lord of conscience, creating it, and gouerning it, and onely knowing it.

The lawes of men improperly binde conscience, not by their owne vertue, but by the power of Gods law which here and elsewhere commands obedience to Princes. He therefore that willingly with a disloyall minde breakes any wholsome lawes of men, is guilty of sinne before God: [o] Non enim habenda sunt pro traditionibus humanis, quandoquidem fundata sunt in generali mandato & liquidam habent approbationem, quasi ex ore Christi. So Saint [p] Augustine notably: Hoc iubent Imperatores, quod iubet & Christus, quia cum bonum iubent, per illos non iubet, nisi Christus.

They that resist shall receiue to themselues damnation.] It may be construed [q] either of temporall punishment, or eternall iudgement, of temporall, [r] for the wrath of a King is like the roaring of a Lion: he that prouoketh him vnto anger sinneth against his owne soule.

By the [s] lawes of England a traitor conuicted and attainted, hath his iudgement to be drawne from his prison to the place of execution, as being vnworthy to tread any more vpon mother earth; and that backward with his head head downward, for that he hath been retrograde to naturall courſes; after hanged vp by the necke betweene heauen and earth, as deemed vnworthy of both: his priuie parts are cut off, as being vnprofitably begotten, and vnfit to leaue any generation after him; his bowels and entrals burned, which inwardly had conceiued and concealed ſuch horrible treaſon; then his head cut off, which imagined the miſchiefe: laſt of all, his whole body quartered, and made a prey for the birds of the aire, as one ſayd of a Romiſh treacherous Ieſuite:

Sic bene paſcit aues, qui male panit oues.

How Rebels haue ruinated vtterly themſelues, and their families, all Hiſtories are full of [t] tragicall examples: acquirunt ſibi damnationem, as it is in the vulgar; they doe not onely receiue, but pull vpon themſelues heauy iudgements.

Againe this may be conſtrued of eternall damnation, 'as is manifeſt in [u] Chore Dathan, and the reſt of that conſpiracy, who went downe quicke to hell. If murther be fitly termed a crying ſin, then treaſon may well be called a roaring ſinne.

For as he that robs a Scholler is ſayd to rob many; ſo the traitor that murthers a Prince, kills many, ſometime the whole State; the which aſſuredly cries aloud to the Lord, in ſuch ſort, that it awaketh him, and often calls him to ſpeedie iudgement.

He is the Miniſter of God for thy wealth] [x] If he be a good Prince, cauſa eſt, he is the cauſe of thy good, temporall and eternall; if an euill Prince, he is an occaſion of thine eternall good, by thy temporall euill. [y] Si bonus, nutritor eſt tuus; ſi malus, tentator tuus eſt: If a good King, he is thy nurſe, receiue thy nouriſhment with obedience; if euill, he is thy tempter, receiue thy tryall with patience. So there is no reſiſtance, either thou muſt obey good Gouernors, willingly, or endure bad tyrants patiently.

Magiſtrates are Gods Miniſters: ergo, ſubordinate to God. If then higher Powers enioyne things againſt him, [z] who is higher than the higheſt, It is better [a] to obey God than men. Hic (ſaith Auguſtine) contemne poteſtatem, timendo poteſtatem: In that thou feareſt Gods power, feare not mans power: as Iulians ſouldiers would not worſhip Idols at his command, yet when he led them againſt an enemie, they obeyed moſt readily: * Diſtinguebant Dominum temporalem á domino æterno, & tamen ſubditi erant propter dominum æternum. As all power is from God, ſo for God: and therefore when the Prince commands againſt truth, it is our duty to be patient, and not agent.

For this cauſe pay yee tribute.] Subſidies are the Kings ſtipend or pay: for he is the miniſter of God, and great ſeruant of the State. So S. Paul expreſly, Seruing for the ſame purpoſe; not to take his owne eaſe, [c] but to wake when other ſleepe; taking ſuch care, that all men elſe may liue without care. Magna ſeruitus eſt magna fortuna: [d] nam ipſi Cæſari cui omnia licent, propter hoc ipſum multa non licent. [e] Eraſmus wittily: Miſeros eſſe Principes, ſi intelligant ſua mala, miſeriores ſi non intelligant. A Prince muſt be like Iob, [f] eyes to the blind, & feete to the lame. [g] Be yee wiſe therefore, yee Kings, Intelligite Reges. Intelligere eſt intus legere; they muſt not altogether hang vpon the almes-basket of their Councell, but vnderſtand of themſelues in ſome meaſure thoſe things which concerne their places: Erudimini qui, quia iudicatis.

Wherefore yee muſt needs obey] Becauſe all powers are of God; becauſe they bring with them the good of order; becauſe it is a ſin to diſobey; becauſe iudgment temporall and eternall accompany this ſinne; becauſe gouernement is the meane of our weale, becauſe Kings are hired by tribute to ſerue their ſeruants, and care for their ſubiects. It is neceſſary we ſhould obey, both ex neceſſitate finis & præcepti; for hereby we ſhall doe that which is acceptable to God, and profitable to our ſelues: acceptable to God, enioyning obedience; profitable to our ſelues: enioying the good of gouernment, [h] that wee may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all Godlineſſe and honeſtie.

Not onely for feare of vengeance, but alſo becauſe of conſcience] Thus all muſt obey, bad men for feare, good men for loue. The Kings Bench compels the one, one, for hee beareth not the ſword in vaine; but the Chancery moues the other: and therefore the Papiſts and Schiſmatikes are not good men, in pretending conſcience for their diſobedience to the Ciuill magiſtrate. For as a learned [i] Father of our Church obſerues excellently: Tutâ conſcientiâ præſtari poſſunt, quæ propter conſcientiam præſtanda ſunt: A man may doe that with a ſafe conſcience, which he muſt doe for conſcience.

Tribute to whom tribute] Soueraigne Sublimities on earth are Gods among men, in reſpect of their attributes and tributes. [k] Almighty God himſelfe expects and receiues at our hands his immediate rents, as prayer and thankſgiuing; the reſt as tithes and tributes hee doth accept, being faithfully payed vnto his Stewards and Vice-gerents. It is very remarkable that our Sauiour neuer did any miracle about honour or money, [l] except that one for giuing tribute to Cæſar. [m] For, we muſt giue to Cæſar, the things which appertaine to Cæſar, honor to whom honor, tribute to whom tribute: but how much, is not defined by Chriſt or Paul. They leaue that (as [n] Biſhop Latimer obſerues) to Cæſars Councell for to determine. Wherefore let all ſuch as are in commiſſion for the ſubſidie, remember that excellent ſpeech of [o] Saluianus: Illud indignius & pœnalius, quòd omnium onus non omnes ſuſtinet, imò quod pauperculos homines tributa diuitum premunt, & infirmiores ferunt ſarcinas fortiorum, res diuerſiſſimas diſſimilimaſq; patiuntur inuidiam & egeſtatem; inuidia eſt enim in ſolutione; egeſtas in facultate.

The Goſpell. Matth. 8. 23. vnto ye end

And when hee entred into a ſhip, his diſciples followed him, &c.

Saint Matthew reports in this Scripture two miracles, one wrought by Chriſt in the water, another on the land.

The firſt is both an { Hiſtorie. / Myſtarie.

The word of God is a [p] two edged ſword; hauing one edge, ſaith [q] Tertullian in the ſenſe of the matter; and another in the ſound of the words; or (as [r] Ludouicus Viues obſerueth) being ſharpe in a literall expoſition, and ſharpe in an allegoricall ſenſe. Moſt Interpreters therefore note that the ſhip here mentioned, is a type of the [s] Church militant, toſſed in the world, [t] which is moſt like the ſea, with ſtormes of perſecution, vntill Chriſt the Maſter of the ſhip, (who ſeemes to ſleepe for a time) doth awake by the prayers of paſſengers, and makes a calme.

In the ſtory two things are to be conſidered eſpecially: the { ſhipping / ſailing } of Chriſt.

In his ſhipping two points obſeruable: { 1. That he entred himſelfe. / 2. That his diſciples followed him. }

In ſailing two principall occurrences are to be noted alſo: the { raging / ſtilling } of a tempeſt.

The tempeſt is ſayd here to be { Sudden; Behold there aroſe. / Great: ſo that the ſhip was couered with waues: and Chriſt (who was to comfort and helpe all) was aſleepe. }

In the ſtilling of the tempeſt foure things are regardable:
1. Chriſt awaketh: his diſciples came, and awoke him, ſaying, Maſter ſaue vs, &c.
2. The Diſciples are rebuked: Why are yee fearefull, O yee of little faith?
3. The tempeſt calmed: He rebuked the windes and the ſea.
4. The beholders of this miracle wondred, ſaying, What manner of man is this, &c.

Ieſus entred into a ſhip.] As the ſuperſtitious [u] Papiſts in latter dayes aſſigned ſeuerall Saints for ſeuerall ſeruices; as Apollonia for the tooth-ach; for hogs, Saint Anthonie; for horſes, Saint Loy; for Souldiers, Saint Maurice; for Seamen, Saint

S. Matthew verſ. 18. of this chapter, and S. Marke, chap. 4. verſ. 36. intimate another reaſon why Chriſt entred into the ſhip: namely, to ſhun the multitudes of people: for as the Sun, though a moſt glorious creature, [e] oculus mundi, the worlds eye, is regarded little, becauſe it ſhineth euery day; ſo Miniſters, the [f] light of the world, are ecclipſed much by the groſſe interpoſition of earth. It is true that familiaritie breeds contempt, and as true, [g] cuius perſona deſpicitur, eius prædicatio contemnitur; and therefore, [h] Clergie-men, as Chriſt here, muſt vpon occaſions often withdraw themſelues à turbâ turbulentâ.

[i] Bartholomæus Anglicus mentioneth a Lake in Ireland, in which if a ſtaffe be pight, and tarrieth any long time therein, the part that is in the earth, is turned to iron, and the part in the water ſtone, onely the part aboue the water remaines in his owne kinde. So it is with Aarons rod, and with the Crozier ſtaffe; if it ſticke long in the common puddle, it will not diuide the waters aright, but become ſo ruſty as iron, ſo ſtony, as flint; onely that rod is like it ſelfe, which is aboue the waters, aboue the ſtreame, aboue the people. The vulgar is like Tapeſtrie, the further, the fairer, but the neerer you come, the worſe they are. He that is pinned as a cogniſance to the towne-coat, and depends vpon the common ſleeue, [k] pendet magis arbore quàm qui pendet ab altâ, is as baſe as a ſigne that hangs on a painted may-pole. Paul then had a good cauſe to deſire that he might be deliuered from [l] vnreaſonable men; and Chriſt here, to decline troubleſome troopes, entring into a ſhip with his Diſciples.

[l] 2 Theſ. 3. 2. ἀτόπων καὶ πονηρῶν.

Our Sauiour Chriſt could haue walked on the water, as he did, Matth. 14. or elſe dried vp the water, as he did for the children of Iſraell, Exod. 14. but he did neither; for if he ſhould haue haue vſed his omnipotent power in euery thing as God, no body would haue beleeued him to be man; he did therefore take this courſe in the whole courſe of his life, to manifeſt both. If he were not God, whom did [m] Gabriel call Lord? If not man, whom did Mary beare in her wombe? If not God, whom did the [n] wiſemen worſhip? If a man, whom did [o] Ioſeph circumciſe? If not God, who promiſed [p] Paradiſe to the theefe? If not man, who hanged on the Croſſe? [q] If not God who rebuked the windes and the Seas? If not man, who ſlept in the ſhip? If not God, who raiſed the tempeſt? If not man, who went into this barke.

His Diſciples followed him. A ſhip, as [r] Hilarie notes, doth fitly reſemble the Church of Chriſt: for as a ſhip is ſmall in the foredecke, broad in the middle, little in the ſterne: ſo the Church in her beginning and infancy, was very little; in her middle age flouriſhing, but in her old age, her company ſhall be ſo ſmall and her beleefe ſo weake, that when the Sonne of God ſhall come to iudge the ſonnes of men, he ſhall ſcarſe finde any faith on earth, Luk. 18. 8.

It

It is [f] obſeruable, that Chriſt and his Diſciples ſailed all in one ſhip: he did enter in firſt, and his Diſciples followed. [t] Vnus mundus docet vnum eſſe Deum: The world being but one, teacheth vs that there is but one God; one God, that there is but one Church; one Church, one truth: and therefore as the Church is called by [u] Paul, Columna veritatis; ſo by Salomon, Columba vnitatis. Cant. 6. 8. My Doue is alone.

Noahs Arke repreſents the [x] Church: all in the Arke were ſaued, all out of the Arke periſhed. All that continue with Chriſt, in his ſhip are ſecure, though the Sea make a noiſe, and the ſtormes ariſe: but he that vtterly forſakes the ſhip, and ſwims either in the cockboat of Heretickes, or vpon the windy bladders of his owne conceits, ſhall neuer touch the land of the liuing. As in Salomons Temple there were three roomes, the porch, the body, the ſanctum ſanctorum; ſo likewiſe in Chriſtianity, we cannot enter into the holieſt of holy, but by the Church, nor into the Church, but by the porch of Baptiſme. Firſt there muſt be ſhipping; then, ſailing; laſt of all, arriuing. Firſt, we muſt be ſhipt with Chriſt in baptiſme; after, ſaile with him in the Pinneſſe of the Church, or elſe we ſhall neuer anchor in the hauen of happineſſe.

S. Matthew doth vſe the word follow, ſignanter; inſinuating, that all Chriſts Diſciples ought to follow him, as himſelfe ſaith: [y] If any will be my Diſciple let him forſake himſelfe, and take vp his croſſe, and follow me.

Some in their high-towring thoughts and immoderate zeale, runne before Chriſt, as [z] Iames and Iohn: other goe cheeke by iole with him, as Pelagians, and all ſuch as mingle their merit with Chriſts mercy, making him but halfe a Mediator, mediatum, dimidiatum mediatorem. Other follow Chriſt, but a far off, as Peter, Mat. 26. 58. Other follow Chriſt neere, but not for Chriſt, not for loue but for loaues, as the people, Ioh. 6. 26. Few follow him in a troubleſome ſea, as the Diſciples here.

[a] The people followed him in the plaine, not vp to the mountaine, nor into the Sea: but Chriſt leauing the multitude, would haue his company toſſed in the waues of affliction, [b] leſt they ſhould be puffed vp with preſumption and pride.

[c] Apollonius writes of certaine people that could ſee nothing in the day, but all in the night. In like manner many men are ſo blinded with the ſun-ſhine of proſperity, that they ſee nothing belonging vnto their good; but in the winter night of miſerie, [d] ſchola crucis, ſchola lucis: no ſuch ſchoole-houſe as the croſſe-houſe. The [e] Paſſieman lying in his bed, deſired to be brought vnto Chriſt. [f] Ptolomeus Philadelphus, being ſo ſickly, that he could not follow worldly delights as he was wont, gaue himſelfe to reading, and builded that his renowned Library. The Diſciples here ſeeing the wonders of the deepe, and dangers of the ſea, were humbled in feare, and raiſed vp in faith.

And behold there aroſe a great tempeſt.] Vntill Chriſt was in the ſhip, there was noe ſtorme. While men haue [g] pillowes ſowed vnder their elbowes, all is peace; [g] but ſo ſoone as Chriſt rebukes the world of ſinne, [h] The wicked are like the raging Sea, that cannot reſt, whoſe waters caſt vp dirt and mire.

Iohn Baptiſt raiſed ſuch a ſtorme by preaching againſt Herod, that it coſt him his head. When Paul preached at Athens, Corinth, Epheſus, &c. there followed alway tumults and vprores among the people. When Luther firſt preached the Goſpell, inſtantly there was great thundring from Rome, a great tempeſt in Germanie, France, England, Scotland, and in the whole Chriſtian world, which all the Popes Bulls and Calues too, could not appeaſe.

This ſtorme was not by chance, but raiſed by [i] Gods prouidence, who brings the windes out of his treaſures, Pſal. 135. 7. and the tempeſt was ſo great, that the miracle might be great: the greater the tempeſt, the greater was the tryal of the Diſciples faith.

In ſo much that the ſhip was couered with waues] The Church is often in danger, [l] but it cannot be drowned; [m] hell gates cannot ouercome it. Robur fidei concuſſum, non excuſſum. Albeit Satan goe about daily like a roaring Lion ſeeking seeking whom he may deuoure, yet there shall be some still. whom he shall not deuoure.

He was asleepe.] [o] Hee that keepeth Israel doth neither slumber nor sleepe. Hee did sleepe as man, but watch as God. [p] I sleepe, but mine heart waketh. [q] He seemes only to sleepe, that wee might wake: [r] nobis dormit Iesus, nobis surgit á somno. [s] Christus videtur non attendere, patientiam bonorum, patientiam impiorum expectans. He doth as it were neglect vs for a time, for the greater manifestation of his [t] power, and our patience.

His disciples came to him and awoke him. Almighty God likes in our necessitie this importunitie: Psal. 50. 15. Call vpon me in the time of trouble. Psal, 91. 15. He shall call vpon me, and I will heare him. And therefore learne by this example, [u] to come to Christ, to cry to Christ in all extremity, renouncing your selues, and relying vpon him only: Master saue vs, or else we perish.

He sayd vnto them why are yee fearefull, o yee of little faith?] [x] It was great faith in that they followed Christ into the ship; but little faith in that they feared.

[y] He saith not, O yee of faith, but O yee of little faith. It was impossible to come vnto God, and call vpon Christ without faith; in saying, wee perish, they shewed infidelitie; but in praying, saue vs, they manifested faith.

Againe, hee doth not say: [z] yee of little courage, or yee of little charity: but yee of little faith: because faith is the ground of all other vertues, and in [a] aduersity most vsefull. If we beleeue that Christ is our Captaine in the ship with vs, who can be against vs? And therefore Paul, Ephes. 6. 16. Aboue all, put on the shield of faith, wherewith ye may quench all the fiery darts of the Deuill.

Then hee arose and rebuked the winds and the Sea.] Christ reprehends the disciples a little, but instantly grants their requests: his reprehensions had not so much sting as [b] honie, for a great calme followed a little chiding: [c] at his word the stormy winde ariseth, which lifteth vp the waues of the sea: They are carried vp to heauen, and downe againe to the deepe: their soule melteth away because of the trouble. They reele to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end. But when they crye to the Lord in their trouble, he deliuereth them out of their distresse: for he maketh the storme to cease, so that the waues thereof are still.

A great calme followed a great tempest: [d] Decet enim magnum magna facere Christ spake but one word to the violent windes and vnruly seas, and they both obeyed his command. [e] He doth at sundry times and in diuers manners speake to vs, and yet wee will not harken vnto his voice. [f] The spectators of this act might therefore wonder to see the senslesse water and weather obey more then man, indued with reason and religion.

The men maruelled.] [g] Ideo premantur iusti, vt pressi clament, clamantes exaudiantur, exauditi glorificent Deum; A great storme caused in the disciples a great feare: great feare, great deuotion: great deuotion occasioned Christ to worke this great miracle, this great miracle moued this great admiration: What is this man that commands as a God.

And when he was come to the other side.] Two points are to be considered in this miracle principally: the

- Gratiousnesse of Christ, in curing two possessed of deuills.
- Vngratiousnesse of the Gergesites, preferring a peece of bacon before the Gospell, hoggs before Christ. Such as respect their tithe pigge, more then their Pastor, are Gergesites and deserue that Christ should depart out of their coasts.

I will not in particular examine these, but in stead thereof, insert a few notes vpon the last verse of the first Chapter, appointed to be read at morning prayer this Sunday: preached at Pauls Crosse. Ian. 29. 1608.

Esay. 57. 21.

There is no peace to the wicked, ſaith my God.

THis text is a proclamation of warre againſt the wicked, enemies to God and his Goſpell, wherein obſerue the { Thing proclaimed: No peace to the wicked. An heauy doome, whether we conſider the time, the matter, or the men: for there is no time, no peace, no wicked, if impenitent, excepted.

Perſon proclaiming: the { Prophet, as Herald. / Lord, as chiefe Commander, { Able to make this warre, becauſe God. / Willing to maintaine this warr, becauſe my God.

This ſentence would not be ſo grieuous, if it were not ſo generall, if any wicked man at any time could enioy any kinde of peace: but the propoſition is an vniuerſall negatiue; Non eſt pax impijs.

Our and other tranſlations haue it not in the time paſt, non erat, there was no peace; nor in the future, non erit, there ſhall be no peace; but in the preſent, there is no peace. Or as it is in the originall indefinitely without a verbe, naming no time, that we might feare this iudgement at all times: [h] Cognatum, imo innatum omni ſceleri ſceleris ſupplicium. In the words of S. [i] Paul, the wages of ſinne is death; as the worke is ready, ſo the pay preſent, nec auſertur, nec defertur; if impietie, no impunitie; When ſinne is [k] finiſhed, it hath his hire; [l] ſcelus aliquis tutum, nemo ſecurum tulit.

If we conſider a wicked man out of [m] Chriſt, he hath neither here peace of grace, nor hereafter peace of glory; but as he paſſeth from ſinne to ſinne, hee goeth as it were from deuill to deuill, euen from hell to hell, from the flaſhes to the flame, from hell internall, to hell eternall.

As this includes all time, ſo likewiſe excludes all peace. For albeit [n] Harding found a great difference betweene no bread, and not bread; yet Interpreters here make no difference betweene not peace, and no peace. For the wicked haue no peace with man, no peace with God, no peace with themſelues. None with man: for it is ſayd in the verſe before my text, The wicked are like the raging ſea, whoſe waters caſt vp dirt and mire. They are of their owne nature turbulent; but if wee ſtirre them a little, then they fume and fome like the ſea, both actiue (ſaith [o] Muſculus) and paſſiue, being neither peace-makers nor peace-takers.

For nature and Scripture tell vs plainly, that righteouſneſſe is elder ſiſter to peace. So ſayd [p] Ariſtotle Natures chiefe Secretarie, that agreement in euill is not loue, but conſpiracy. So Dauid, a man after Gods owne heart, and a penner of Gods owne will, [*] iuſtitia & pax oſculatæ ſunt; righteouſneſſe and peace haue kiſſed each other. As [q] Auguſtine vpon the place, fiat iuſtitia & habebis pacem, if thou wilt haue peace, worke righteouſneſſe; firſt eſchew euill, and doe good, then ſeeke peace, and inſue it: Pſal. 34. 13. Nay, you need not ſeeke it, for it will finde you; peace will come of it ſelfe to kiſſe righteouſneſſe. On the contrary, no truth no mercy; where there is no loue of good, there can bee no good of loue; no true friendſhip, except it be [q] Chriſti glutino copulata, glewed together in Chriſt; a man can hardly be a true friend to any, that is not firſt truly friend to truth it ſelfe.

It was an excellent ſpeech of [r] Conſtantius. How can they bee faithfull vnto their Prince, who are perfidious and vnfaithfull vnto their God? I tell thee ſaith [s] Auguſtine to Martianus, albeit you were mine old acquaintance, yet neuer my friend vntill you were my louer in Chriſt.

And therefore when [t] Iehoram ſayd vnto Iehu. Is it peace, Iehu replied; what peace, while the whoredomes of thy mother Iezabel, and her witchcrafts, are yet in great number? What [u] fellowſhip hath righteouſneſſe with vnrighteouſneſſe; what what communion hath light with darkeneſſe? what concord hath Chriſt with Beliall? as Iſmael that was borne after the fleſh, perſecuted Iſaac that was borne after the ſpirit, euen ſo it is now, ſaith Paul, Galat. 4. 29. The [x] Dragon and his Armie, will fight againſt Michael and his Angells.

It is then an idle phantaſie to dreame of an vnity with the Papiſts, of an vniformity with the Schiſmatickes: for ſo long as the one is an enemy to truth, and the other an enemie to peace; ſo long as both are ſet on miſchiefe, combined in faction, howſoeuer different in faith, I muſt tell you from Eſay, and Eſay from the Lord, There is no peace to the wicked.

Pax noſtra bellum contra Satanum (ſaith [y] Tertullian) our peace is a continuall warfare againſt Satan and his complices. As Chriſt, ſo the [z] Church muſt ſuffer, and ouercome in medio inimicorum, in the midſt of of all our enemies. Pſal. 110. 2. The builder of Gods houſe muſt haue a trowell in one hand, and a ſword in another, Nehem. 4. 17.

And here let not the carnall Goſpeller hold himſelfe exempted, in being of no ſide: for pax, (as the [a] Schoole ſpeakes) is tranquillitas ordinata: Goodneſſe is εὐταξία, wickedneſſe: ἀταξία: where there is no order, there can be no peace, but a Babel of confuſion: howſoeuer worldlings account the drunkard a good-fellow, the fornicator a kinde man, the flaterer a louing ſoule; yet the truth is, there is no peace in things that are wicked, and therefore no peace with men that are wicked. And as they can haue no peace with the godly, ſo but little agreement among themſelues: [b] Ephraim is againſt Manaſſes, and Manaſſes againſt Ephraim, and both againſt Iuda. The Phariſees againſt the Sadduces, and the Sadduces againſt the Phariſees; both againſt Chriſt. The Pelagians againſt the Manichees, add the Manichees againſt the Pelagians; both againſt the Catholikes. The Pope againſt the Turke, the Turke againſt the Pope, and both againſt the truth.

All the vices are iarring in extremity, couetouſneſſe fighting againſt prodigality, baſeneſſe againſt pride, raſhneſſe againſt daſtardy; nay, many times, [c] Ægyptians are ſet againſt Ægyptians; and birds of a feather doe not alway flie together; for the [d] tranſgreſſor is againſt the tranſgreſſor, and the deſtroyer againſt the deſtroyer: a drunkard will ſtab a drunkard, a theefe rob a theefe, a traitor proue falſe to a traitor, proditoris proditor, one wicked wretch is executioner of another.

They be ſo far from the peace betweene man and man, as that they want the loue which is betweene beaſt and beaſt: for if one ſheepe be faint, the reſt will ſtand betweene it and the Sunne, till it be comforted; if one hog hunted, the whole herd will muſter together to reuenge it: of Bees it is reported, agrotante vnâ, lamentantur omnes, if one ſicke, all ſorry: yea ſome beaſts are more kinde to man, than mankinde. In humane ſtory we read of gratefull Lions, of kinde Eagles, of truſty Dogs, qui mori pro dominis, & commori cum dominis parati; ſaith Ambroſe, in his [e] Hexameron.

In holy Bible, wee finde that [f] Eliah was fed by Rauens; and [g] Daniel not hurt among hungry Lyons. [h] O deteſtandum humanæ malitiæ crudelitatẽ! aues paſcunt; fere parcunt; homines ſæuiunt. O hatefull cruelty! the birds feed, the beaſts fauour; but one man is a wolfe, yea a deuill to another. In this the wicked reſemble [i] God, that they neither ſlumber nor ſleepe, but like the [k] deuill, in that they watch as the theefe to ſpoyle and deſtroy, ſeeking whom they may deuoure, 1 Pet. 5. 8. For to render good for euill is the part of a Saint: to render good for good, the part of a man: to render euill for euill, the part of a beaſt; but to render euill for good, only the part of a deuill. And yet ſuch is the faſhion of the wicked, [l] imagining miſchiefe in their hearts, and ſtirring vp ſtrife all the day long: Their throat is an open ſepulchre; the poiſon of Aſpes is vnder their lips: Their mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſſe, their feete are ſwift to ſhed bloud, their teeth are ſpeares and arrowes, and their tongue a ſharpe ſword. More ſharpe (quoth [m] Bernard) than the ſpeare which pierced our Sauiours ſweet ſide. For this doth not onely onely wound Christs mysticall body, but also dismember it, in the Common-weale making so many factions, as there are functions; in the Church, so many Creeds, as heads: as the same Father sweetly; Non iam exanime fodit, sed facit exanime fodiendo: Longinus thrust thorow a body that was dead, but the wicked a body that is quicke. [n] Destruction and vnhappinesse is in all their wayes, and the way of peace haue they not knowne: in their bed appointed for rest, they plot how to be turbulent (as the [o] Prophet speakes) they travell with mischiefe, and bring forth vngodlinesse. In a word, these are the troublers of Israel, thornes in our eyes, pricks in our sides, bellowes and brands of sedition, hating the good, not louing the bad; crossing themselves, at warre with all: There is no peace to the wicked, saith my God.

The second kinde of peace is betweene God and man, our reconciliation to God by the mediation of Christ, who is our [p] peace. So the Glosse interlineall, and other Expositors generally, there is no peace, that is, no Christ to the wicked. The Scripture tels vs, how that we were the sonnes of wrath, enemies of God, fire-brands of hell, aliants from the Common-wealth of Israel, and strangers from the couenants of promise. But Christ God and man, and therefore most fit to be the Mediator [q] betweene the mortall sinner and immortall Iudge, dying for our sinnes, and rising againe for our iustification, is peace to them that are farre off, and peace to them that are neere, saith the Lord in this Chapter. That is, as the Fathers [r] expound it, peace to the Gentiles afarre off, and peace to the Iewes that are neere.

This one blessed Peace-maker hath made attonement for both, and appeareth in the sight of God daily, to plead our pardon as a faithfull Intercessour and Aduocate, in whom only God is well pleased, and without whom God is no hearing God, no helping God, no sauing God, no louing God to vs at all.

And without faith, the Gospell is no Gospell, the Sacraments are no Sacraments, Christ is no Christ. Faith is [s] Iohn the Baptist, shewing the Lambe of God, which taketh away the sinnes of the world: yea Saint Thomas, first handling, then applying the wounds of Christ, euen the spirituall hand that putts on Christs robe of righteousnesse.

The wicked then hauing no true faith, haue no true Christ; and hauing no true Christ, they can haue no true peace with God: the grace of our Lord in redeeming, the loue of God in electing, the fellowship of the holy Ghost in comforting, is farre from them: so long as they continue in their sinnes and vnbeleefe, so long they be traitours, enemies, rebels vnto the King of all Kings: he proclaimes warre, and they can haue no peace.

Thinke on this, yee that forgett God. [t] Yee that ioine house to house, and lay field to field, till there be no place for other in the land: yee that rise vp early to follow drunkennesse, and are mighty to powre in strong drinke. Yee that speake good of euill, and euill of good; which put light for darkenesse, and darkenesse for light, &c. [u] Agree with your aduersarie quickly, while you are in the way: [x] seeke the Lord while he may be found, and call vpon him while he is nigh. [y] O Ierusalem, Ierusalem, thou that killest the Prophets, and stonest them that are sent vnto thee. [z] Suffer the words of exhortation; [a] harden not your heart, but [b] euen in this day heare the voice of the [c] Crier; confesse thy rebellion, and come in to the Lord thy God; [d] for he is gentle, patient, and of much mercie: desire of him to create in thee a [e] new heart, and to giue thee one drop of a lively faith, on dram of holy deuotion, a desire to [f] hunger and thirst after righteousnesse. Suffer not thine eyes to sleepe, nor thine eye lids to take any rest, untill thine [g] vnrighteousnesse is forgiuen, and sinne couered, vntill thy peace be made with God, and thy pardon sealed. O pray, pray, that thou maist haue this peace. O pray, pray, that thou maist feele this peace: for it is the third kinde, the peace of conscience betweene man and himselfe.

There are foure kindes of conſcience, as [h] Bernard hath well obſerued:

1. A good, but not a quiet.
2. A quiet, but not a good.
3. Both good and quiet.
4. Neither good nor quiet.

The two good belong properly to the godly; the two bad vnto the wicked, whoſe conſcience is either too too quiet, or elſe too too much vnquiet; in neither peace: Non eſt gaudium impijs, as the Tranſlators of the Septuagints read, Non eſt [i] gaudere impijs, There is no ioy to the wicked. Sometime their conſcience is too too quiet, as [k] Paul ſpeakes, euen ſeared with a hot iron, when habit of ſinne takes away the ſenſe of ſinne, when as men are paſt feeling, in a reprobate ſenſe, giuen ouer to worke all vncleanneſſe euen with greedineſſe: Epheſ. 4. 19.

This is no peace, but numneſſe of, yea a dumneſſe of conſcience. For at the firſt euery mans conſcience ſpeakes vnto him, as [l] Peter to Chriſt; Maſter looke to thy ſelfe: Her prick-arrowes, as the ſhafts of [m] Ionathan, forwarne David of the great Kings diſpleaſure: but if we neglect her call, and will not lend our eares while ſhe doth ſpend her tongue, this good Caſſandra will crie no more.

Now it fareth with the maladies of the minde, as it is with the ſickneſſe of the body. When the pulſe doth not beat, the body is in a moſt dangerous eſtate: ſo if conſcience never prick vs for ſinne, it is a manifeſt ſigne our ſoules are lulled in a deadly ſleepe. That Schoole will ſoone decay, where the monitor doth not complaine; that armie muſt neceſſarily be ſubiect to ſurpriſe, where watches and alarums are not exactly kept; that towne is diſſolute, where no clocks are vſed: ſo likewiſe our little citie is in great perill, when our conſcience is ſtill and ſleepie, quiet but not good; tunc maxime oppugnaris, ſi neſcis oppugnari: ſaith [n] Hierome to Helidore: None ſo deſperately ſicke, as they who feele not their diſeaſe. Saint [o] Auguſtine notably: Quid miſerius miſero non miſerante ſeipſum? and [p] Bernard; Ideo dolet charitas mea, quòd cùm ſis dolendus, non doleas; & inde magis miſeretur, quod cum miſer ſis, miſerabilis tamen non es: and [q] Hierome to Sabinian; Hoc plango, quòd te non plangis.

[r] When the ſtrong man armed keepes his hold, the things that are poſſeſſed are in peace. Where Diuines obſerue, that vngodly men already poſſeſſed with Satan, are not a whit diſquieted with his temptations. As God is at open war, ſo the deuill is at ſecret peace with the wicked: but yet, ſaith [s] Hierome, tranquillitas iſta tempeſtas eſt: This calme of conſcience will one day proue a ſtorme. For as God ſaid vnto [t] Cain; If thou doeſt ill, ſinne lieth at the doore. Where wickedneſſe is compared to a wild beaſt, which dogs a man whereſoeuer he goeth in this wilderneſſe. And albeit for a time it may ſeeme harmles, for that it lieth aſleepe, yet at length, except men vnfainedly repent, it will riſe vp and rent out the very throat of their ſoules. A guilty conſcience being once rouſed and awaked thorowly, will make them like thoſe who lye on a bed that is too ſtrait, and the couering too ſhort, who would with all their heart ſleepe, but cannot; they ſeeke for peace of mind, but there is no peace to the wicked, ſaith my God.

As the conſcience was heretofore too too quiet, ſo now too too much vnquiet. As godly men haue the firſt fruits of the Spirit, and certaine taſtes of heauenly ioyes in this life; ſo the wicked on the contrarie feele certaine flaſhings of hell flames on earth. As there is heauen on earth, and heauen in heauen; ſo hell on earth, and hell in hell: an [u] outward hell, and an inward; outward, in outward darkneſſe mentioned in holy Scripture, where there ſhall be [x] weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; at this feaſt (as Biſhop [y] Latimer wittily) there can be no mirth where weeping is ſerued in for the firſt courſe, gnaſhing of teeth for the ſecond.

Inward hell is an infernall tormenting of the ſoule, voyd of hope, faith and loue: this hell the deuills haue alwaies in them, and reprobate forlorne people carry about them, inſomuch that they can neither diſport themſelues abroad, nor

[a] Auguſtine in his enarration of the 45. Pſal. thus liuely deſcribes the wofull eſtate of a deſpairing ſinner: Fugiet ab agro ad ciuitatem, à publico ad domum, à domo in cubiculum: He runs as a mad-man out of the field into the citie, out of the citie into his houſe; from the common roomes in his houſe to his chamber, from his chamber into his ſtudie, from his ſtudie to the ſecret cloſet of his owne heart: & ecce hoſtem ſuum inuenit, quo confugerat, ſeipſum quo fugiturus eſt: and then laſt of all, he is content leaſt of all, himſelfe being greateſt enemie to himſelfe.

The blinde man in the [b] Goſpell newly recouering his ſight, imagined trees to be men; and the Burgundians (as [c] Cominæus reports) expecting a battell, ſuppoſed long thiſtles to be launces: ſo the wicked in the darke, conceit euery thiſtle to be a tree, euery tree a man, euery man a deuill, afraid of euery thing they ſee; yea, many times of that they doe not ſee.

[d] Polydore Virgil writes that Richard the 3. had a moſt terrible dreame, the night before Boſworth field, in which he was ſlaine: he thought all the deuills in hell hailed and pulled him in hideous and vgly ſhapes. Id credo non fuit ſomnium, ſed conſcientia ſcelerum; I ſuppoſe (ſaith Polydore) that was not a fained dreame, but a true torture of his conſcience, preſaging a bloudy day both to himſelfe, and all his followers.

The penner of the Latine Chronicle, de vitis Archiepiſcoporum Cantuarienſium, in the life of Archbiſhop Hubert, records a will of a couetous oppreſſor in this forme: Lego omnia bona mea domino Regi, corpus ſepulturæ, animam diabolo. The godly mans will alway runnes in this ſtile:

Terram terra tegat, dæmon peccata reſumat,
Mundus res habeat, ſpiritus aſtra petit.

I bequeath my body that is earthly to the earth, my ſinnes which are deuiliſh vnto the deuill, my goods that are worldly, to the world, my ſoule that is heauenly to heauen: but this vnhappy wretch in great diſpaire yeelded vp his coine to the King, whom he had deceiued and his ſoule to the deuill whom he had ſerued.

It is written by [e] Procopius, that Theodoricus, as he was at ſupper, immagined he ſaw in a fiſhes head the viſage of Symmachus a Noble man, whom he had vniuſtly ſlaine; with which imagination he conceiued ſuch terrour, as that he neuer after enioyed one good houre, but pining away ended his vnfortunate daies.

Cardinall [f] Creſcentius, the Popes Vicegerent in the Chapter of Trent, on a time writing long letters vnto Rome, full of miſchiefe againſt the Proteſtants and cauſe of Religion, had a ſudden conceit that the deuill in the likeneſſe of a huge dogge, walked in his chamber, and couched vnder his table, the which affrighted him ſo much, as that notwithſtanding the counſell and comfort both of friends and Phyſitians, he died a diſconſolate death.

[f] Sleidan com. lib. 23. in fine.

To conclude this argument, the deuill Iudas out of the hell of his conſcience, was Bailiffe, Iailor, Witneſſe, Iurie, Iudge, Sheriffe, Deaths-man in his owne execution.

Thus as you ſee, the wicked haue no peace with man, no peace with God, no peace with themſelues. The very [g] name of peace betweene man and man is ſweet, it ſelfe more ſweet, [h] like the pretious ointment vpon the head of Aaron, that ranne downe vnto his beard, and from his beard to the skirts of his clothing. Yet the peace of conſcience is farr ſweeter, a [i] continuall feaſt, a daily Chriſtmas vnto the good man; as the rich Epicure, Luke 16. ſo the godly fareth deliciouſly euery day. The man that truſteth in the Lord is fat, ſaith [k] Salomon, he feeds himſelfe on the mercies of God, and merits of Chriſt. And ſo the peace of God paſſeth all theſe: for it paſſeth all vnderſtanding, without which one gift all other are rather curſes then bleſſings vnto vs. As [l] Cyrill excellently,

Domino priuante ſuo gaudio, quod eſſe poteſt gaudium? It is the [m] conſolation of Iſrael and ſolace of the Church: [n] Reioice greatly ô daughter Sion, ſhout for ioy ô daughter Hieruſalem, for behold thy King commeth vnto thee. That God is our God, that Chriſt is our Chriſt, that the King of al Kings is our King, that he is reconciled vnto vs, and we to him, is a ioy ſurpaſſing all ioyes, a iubilation as the Scripture terms it, which can neither be ſupreſſed, nor yet expreſſed ſufficiently.

How wretched then are the wicked in being debarred of all this ſweet? of all this exultation, of all theſe iubilees of ioy? for if they can haue no peace abroad, no peace at home, no peace with themſelues, no peace with other, no peace with man, no peace with God; aſſuredly the propoſition is moſt true, There is no peace to the wicked.

Yea but you will ſay, there is none good except God; all of vs are gone aſtray: if we ſay we haue no ſinne, the truth of God is not in vs. Of what kind of wicked is this then vnderſtood? Anſwere is made, that this only concernes incorrigible, malitious, impenitent, ſenſleſſe ſinners. For when once men feele their ſinnes, and repent for their ſinnes, greeuing much becauſe they can greeue no more; then in ſuch as [p] ſinne aboundeth, grace ſuperaboundeth, [q] all things worke for their good; euen ſinne which is damnable to other, is profitable to them, occaſioning [r] repentance, neuer to be repented. Remember the ſpeech of God to Rebecca; The greater ſhall ſerue the leſſer. Albeit our ſpirituall enemies are ſtronger, and our ſins greater then we, yet they ſhall ſerue for our good, the greater ſhall ſerue the leſſe. God who can bring ſweet out of ſowre, and light out of darkeneſſe, ſhall likewiſe bring good out of euill.

Such offenders haue peace with men, ſo far [t] as is poſſible with all men, [v] endeuouring to keepe the vnitie of the ſpirit in the bond of peace.

Secondly, being iuſtified by faith, they haue peace toward God in Chriſt Rom. 5. 1.

Laſtly, Chriſt dwelling in their heart, they want not peace of conſcience, but abound with ioy in the holy Ghoſt: Rom. 14. 17.

When ſinners are rather paſſiue then actiue in ſinne, when it is rather done on them, then of them, albeit their conſcience accuſe them of the fact, yet it doth not condemne them of the fault: and ſo there is all kinde of peace to the penitent, no kind of peace to the wicked impenitent, ſaith my God.

Hitherto concerning the thing proclaimed: I come now to the perſon proclaiming, in theſe words, ſaith my God. The ſubordinate proclaimer is Eſai; the principall God himſelfe.

As heertofore the Prophet, ſo now the Preacher is not only the mouth of God as Luther cals him; but as Iohn Baptiſt ſaid of himſelfe, The very voice of God. For albeit we ſpeake, yet it is Chriſt who by vs and in vs calleth vnto you: 2. Cor. 5. 20. See Epiſt. Dom. 3. and Goſpell, Dom. 1. and 4. in aduent.

If then the Lord hath ſaid it, [y] let no man doubt of it: Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe, but not a iot of his word ſhall paſſe: he is not like man, that he ſhould lie, or like the Sonne of man, that he ſhould deceiue. Yea, that we might the better obſerue it, Almighty God hath ſpoken once and twiſe, as it is in the 62. Pſalme. For the Lord hath made this proclamation once before in the 48. chapter, at the laſt verſe. So that as [z] Auguſtine in the like caſe, Verba toties inculcata, vera ſunt, viua ſunt, ſana ſunt, plana ſunt. One text repeated twiſe, preſſed againe and againe, muſt needs be plaine and peremptorie. And aſſuredly (beloued) if we further examine the perſon of this Chiefe, we ſhall finde him able to make this warre, becauſe God; and willing to maintaine this warre becauſe my God. Hee is ſtiled elſwhere the Lord of hoſts, and therefore all, creatures as his warriours, are ready preſſed to reuenge his quarrels, and to fight his battels. His ſouldiers againſt the wicked, are either celeſtiall, or terreſtriall, all the creatures in heauen and on earth. In the beginning God created the heauen and the earth, Gen. 1. and all that therein is, Exod. 23. our paths, I finde three heavens, as Paul ſaith, he was taken vp into the [a] third heaven:

The { 1. Airie. 2. Starrie. 3. Glorious.

Airie heaven is all the ſpace from vs vnto the firmament: ſo the birds which flie betweene vs and the ſtarres are called in holy writ, the fowles of [b] heauen. In this heauen are meteors, haile, winde, raine, ſnow, thunder, lightning, all which are at Gods abſolute command, to ſerue ſuch as ſerue him, and to fight againſt them that fight againſt him. As when the wicked old world was filled with crueltie, The windowes of [c] heauen were opened, and the raine was vpon the earth fortie daies and fortie nights; inſomuch, that this one ſouldier of the Lord deſtroyed all his enemies, euery thing that was vpon the earth from man to beaſt: onely Noah, Gods holy ſeruant, remained, and they that were with him in the Arke, whom the raine did not hurt, but rather helpe: for the deeper the flood, the ſafer the ſhip: the water had peace with Noah and his company, but open warre with all the reſt of that old world.

So likewiſe the Lord out of heauen rained fire and brimſtone vpon the [d] Sodomites; and haileſtones out of heauen vpon the curſed Amorites at Bethoron, and they were moe, ſaith the [e] text, that died with the haile, then they whom the children of Iſrael ſlew with the ſword.

But what need we looke ſo farre? The great winde [f] this yeere, the [g] great froſt the laſt yeere, ſenſibly demonſtrate this point. What a wracke on the ſea, what a worke on the earth occaſioned by the one? What a dearth, and ſo by conſequence, what a death enſued upon the other? if God caſt forth his ice like morſels, who is able to abide his froſt? Pſal. 147. 17.

To ſtep higher, the ſecond heauen is the firmamant, cælum quaſi cælatum, becauſe it is ingrauen, and as it were enameled with glorious lights, as Moſes in the firſt of Geneſis, God made two great lights, the greater to rule the day, the leſſer to gouerne the night: he made alſo the ſtarres, and placed them in the firmament of heauen.

Now this heauen [h] declares the glory of God, and the firmament ſhewes his handy worke: though they want vnderſtanding and are dumbe, yet they trumpet forth his worthy praiſes in ſuch ſort, that there is neither ſpeech nor language, but their voice is heard among them. And as they ſpeake for God as ſchollers, ſo they fight alſo for God as Souldiers; for the ſtarres in their courſe fought againſt Siſera: Iudges 5. 20. and when Duke Ioſua fought againſt the wicked Amorites, he ſaid in the ſight of Iſrael; Sunne, ſtay thou in Gibeon and thou Moone in the valley of Aialon; and the Sunne abode, and the Moone ſtood ſtill, vntill the people of God auenged themſelues vpon their enemies; the Sun abode, and haſted not to goe downe for a whole day: Ioſua 10. 13.

[i] O Lord our gouernour, how excellent is thy name in all the world! When I conſider the heauens, euen the workes of thy hands, the Sunne and the Moone which thou haſt ordeined, what is man, that thou art ſo mindfull of him? or the ſonne of man that thou ſhouldſt thus regard and guard him? The third heauen is called by Philoſophers, empyreum: by Diuines, the glorious heauen: by [k] Scriptures, heauen of heauens, or heauen aboue the viſible heauens. In this heauen Almighty God hath two ſorts of tall warriours: { Angels. Saints.

Angels are [l] heauenly ſouldiers, miniſtring ſpirits of God, inſtruments of his mercie toward the good; executioners of his iudgements vpon the bad. When Ioſua was about to ſacke Iericho, an [m] Angell appeared vnto him as a Captaine with a drawne ſword to fight for his people. When Zenacherib and his innumerous hoſt came againſt Iſrael, the Angell of the Lord in one night ſlew one hundred, eighty and fiue thouſand: 2. Kings 19. Acts 12.23.. To conclude this argument, Angels at the laſt and dreadfull day
[a] Math. 13. ſhall bind the [a] tares, that is, make faggotts of the wicked, and caſt them into hell fire. As they pitch their tents about Gods elect, being the Saints guard
[o] Pſal. 91. 12. and nurſes, as it were, to [o] carry them in their armes, leſt at any time they hurt their foot againſt a ſtone: ſo contrariwiſe, ſpeedy meſſengers and miniſters of Gods anger to the reprobate.

Now for Saints, albeit they be milites emeriti (as the [p] Romans ſpeake) ſouldiers diſcharged the field, paſt fighting, paſt fighing, for all teares are wiped from their eyes; euen ſo ſaith the Spirit, they reſt from their labours, and their good workes follow them: Apocalyp. 14. 13. They be paſt warfare, and now liue in æternall welfare, crowned as conquerors in heauen, where there is neither militia nor malitia.

Though, I ſay, their fight be ended, and they rewarded with an immortall crowne of glory, yet for as much as there is a communion of Saints, a fellowſhip betweene the triumphant Saints in heauen, and the militant Saints on earth; the bleſſed ſoules departed and deliuered out of the miſeries of this ſinfull world, howſoeuer they be ſecure for themſelues, yet are they carefull for vs: as [q] our Churches in their Harmonie ſpeake, de ſalutate ſua ſecuri, de noſtra ſalute ſolliciti: they wiſh well vnto vs, and pray ſtill for vs in generall, albeit they know not our wants in particular. Howſoeuer they fight not any longer againſt Gods enemies with pen or pike, with paper or powder, yet they continually fight againſt them with puſh of prayer, as Saint [r] Iohn expreſly; The ſoules of them that were killed for the word, cryed with a loud voice, ſaying; How long Lord, holy and true? doeſt not thou iudge and reuenge our blond on them that dwell on the earth? Albeit they contend not with earthly weapons, yet they maintaine Gods quarrell with heauenly wiſhes in generall againſt Satan and his kingdome, out of zeale and heat to Gods cauſe, not out of any ſpleene or hate to any of the wicked in particular; I dare not ſay ſo: for where the ſpirit hath not a pen to write, the Paſtor muſt not haue a tongue to ſpeake, nor the people an eare to heare; but that the bleſſed ſoules in heauen pray for vs, againſt our enemies in generall, is an article of faith, and an euident truth of the Bible.

[a] Numb. 16. 30

In this one Prouince are ſundry rankes of fighting ſouldiers, armies of fell dragons, of hiſſing ſerpents, of roaring lions, of deuouring wolues, of other wilde wilde beasts in the forrest, and cattle vpon a thousand hills; all which named, and all other not named, are ready with force and furie to crush the wicked, and at Gods alarum to breake them in peeces like a Potters vessell.

Euen the least of these creatures is strong enough, if God set them to fight; an host of froggs, an armie of grashoppers, a swarme of flies, able to dismay Pharaoh and all his people; a few rats troubled all the Citizens of [b] Hamel; a few worms deuoured [c] Herod; a little gnat choked a great man, yea the greatest Monarch in his owne conceit, Adrian the Pope.

The very senslesse creatures haue sense and feeling of the wrong done to God. In Siloam (as we read in the [d] Gospell) a Tower fell vpon eighteene persons and slew them. In [e] Rome fifty thousand men were hurt and slaine with the fall of a Theater, as they were beholding the games of the Sword-players. [f] Anno 25. Reg. Elizab. the scaffold about Parisgarden vpon a Sunday in the afternoone fell downe, which instantly killed eight persons, and hurt many moe. A faire warning to such as prophane the Sabboth, and delight more in the crueltie of beasts, than in the workes of mercie, which are exercises of the Lords day. The time will not suffer me to name, much lesse to muster all the rest of Gods warriours on earth I will only remember one, whom, I thinke you feare most, namely, the plague, fitly called by the Canonists, Bellum Dei contra homines, the warre of God against men, and by the Scripture, the sword [g] of God, and [h] arrow of his anger.

In the yeere 1006. there was such an vniuersall plague throughout the whole world, that the liuing were not able to bury the dead, as Sigisbertus, and [i] other report. Anno 1342. there was in [k] Venice such a pestilence, that the hundreth person was scarsly left aliue, insomuch that the State made a law, that whosoeuer would come and dwell at Venice two yeeres, he should instantly be made free.

About the yeere 1522. there died of the plague in [l] Millanie fiftie thousand within the space of foure monethes. In [m] Norwich from the first of Ianuary to the first of Iuly, 57104. In [n] Yarmouth within the space of one yeere, 7052. In London and the Liberties thereof, from the 23. of December 1602. vnto the 22. of December 1603. there died of all diseases, as was accounted weekly, 38244. whereof the plague, 30578. and from that time to this day, the Citie not yet free. This last yeere past, as appeares in your owne bills, there died 2262. Lay this heauy iudgement to your heart, heare this proclamation againe and againe, There is no peace to the wicked.

As the [o] stones of the field are in league with the righteous, and the beasts at peace with the godly, they may dwell safe in the wildernesse, and sleepe in the woods, Ezech 34.25. so contrariwise, the stone shall crie out of the wall, and the beame out of the timber against the wicked, Habacuc. 2. 11.

Their sinne begets their sorrow; their faults increase their foes, euen their tables are made snares, and their iuory beds accusers, and their seeled houses witnesses against them; all things which were giuen for blessings are become curses vnto them: and that which is most strange, besides these two great bands of souldiers, one common in earth, another select in heauen; there is yet a third of rebels, euen of the very deuills in hell; for albeit they be preserued in euerlasting chaines vntill the iudgement of the great day; yet God in his infinite power and wisedome, who brings light out of darkenesse, doth make good vse of these bad instruments.

It is said in the first of Sam. chap. 16. that the euill spirit of the Lord vexed Saul; it was Gods spirit which came vpon Dauid, but it was a malignant spirit which was on Saul; and yet this spirit is called spiritus Domini the spirit of the Lord, because the Lord [q] sent that euill spirit, and suffered it to torment Saul, as [r] Augustine and [s] Lombard haue well expounded the place. So likewise we read in the Gospell, that the foule spirits made some deafe, some dumbe, casting one into the water, another into the fire; all which actions, as they were actions, proceeded from God, for the Scripture tells vs plainly, [t] there is no power but of God.

Happily some will say, the deuills assault the good so well as the bad. We wrestle

[t] Rom. 13. 1.

[u] Ephes. 6. 12. wreſtle (ſaith [v] Paul) againſt principalities, againſt powers, againſt the prince of darkeneſſe: for Satan goes about like a roaring Lyon, ſeeking whom he may deuoure. Anſwer is made, that God ſuffers Satan to tempt his children only to try them, but ſuffers him to tempt the reprobate, ſo far, as to deſtroy them: the temptations of the good are inſtruction; of the bad, deſtruction, vtter ruine of body and ſoule. In what a miſerable caſe then is euery wretch irrepentant? [x] drawing iniquitie with cords of vanitie, and ſinne as it were with cart-ropes; heaping vp wrath againſt the day of wrath. For the number of his enemies is without number; the number of the bleſſed Saints is innumerable: Apocal 7. 9. After theſe things, I beheld, and loe a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, ſtood before the throne, and before the Lambe, clothed with long white robes, and palmes in their hands. The number of Angels is infinite: Thinkeſt thou (ſaid Chriſt to Peter, in the 26. of S. Matthew) that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he will giue me moe than twelue Legions of Angels?

[v] Rom. 2. 5.

A Legion is [a] 3000. footmen, and 300 horſemen; or as Caluin vpon the place, 3000 foot, 500 horſemen; as [z] Vegetius, 6000 in all; and euery particular Angell able in one night, to kill, as is recorded in the ſtorie of Sennacherib, one hundred, eighty and fiue thouſand. The number of ſtarres in the skie, of fowles in the ayre, of fiſh in the ſea, of beaſts in the field, of deuills in hell, are without number: How infinitely infinite then is the number of all his enemies? in what a fearfull eſtate doth he ſtand, when as God and man, Angels and Deuills, Saints and ſinners, heauen and earth, fiſh and fowle, beaſts and birds, other and himſelfe; in a word, all that is within him, all that is without him, all that is about him, combine themſelues together to maintaine Gods holy warre againſt him?

See the view of certaine militarie matrs annexed to Tacitus in engliſh

I know there are degrees of ſinners, as there are degrees in ſinne; ſome be fautores, ſome actores, a third ſort authores. Of the firſt, Seneca wittily, Nihil intereſt faueas ne ſceleri an illud facias: It is in a manner all one to commit and commend a villanie. Non caret ſcrupulo occultæ ſocietatis, qui manifeſto diſcrimini non occurrit, ſaith Gregorie: He is ſuſpected to be an abetter of euill, who doth not endeuour to better the euill. A commoner then that flattereth, a Commander that faucureth vngodly wretches in a Citie, lets in ſo many ſtrong foes, to cut your throtes, and ruine your eſtate.

Yet actors on the ſtage be worſe then idle ſpectators: for howſoeuer ſinne be commendable, becauſe common, as [a] Saluianus complained in his time; In hoc ſcelus res deuoluta, vt niſi quis malus fuerit, ſaluus eſſe non poſſit: In plaine Engliſh, except a man be firſt bad, he cannot be reputed a good fellow: Yet horrible blaſphemers, incorrigible drunkards, ſhameleſſe whoremongers, makebate pettifoggers, malecontent accuſants on the one ſide, recuſants on the other, are the very men and meanes, which bring and keepe the dearth and plague ſo long among you.

[a] De gubernat. Dei, lib. 5.

But authors of euill and plotters of miſchiefe are worſt of all; as it appeares euen by Gods owne cenſure giuen of the firſt ſinne in Paradiſe, where the Serpent had three puniſhments inflicted vpon him, as the originall contriuer: the woman two, being the mediate procurer; and Adam but one, as the party ſeduced. Apply, for I can no further amplifie.

When [b] Phocas had built a mighty wall about his Palace, for his ſecuritie, in the night he heard a voice: O King, though thou build as high as the clouds, yet the Citie might eaſily be taken, the ſinne within will marre all: as [c] Ambroſe notably; Graniores ſunt inimici, mores praui, quam hoſtes infeſti: Wicked manners are ſtronger than armed men. If God be with vs, who can be againſt vs? if we ſtand againſt God, who can withſtand him?

[c] Ser. 87.

And as God is able, becauſe God, ſo willing to maintaine this warre, becauſe my God; that is, the God of his people, whom the wicked perſecute: for his Grant is faire in Letters Patent to [d] Abraham and his ſeed for euer: I will bleſſe them that bleſſe thee, and curſe them that curſe thee. Or, my God, that is, the God by whom I ſpeake, who dealeth alway with his ſeruants according to his word.

[d] Gen. 12. 3.

The

The Gods of the Gentiles are lying gods, and dying Gods: but my God is the truth, and the life, who can neuer deceiue nor be deceiued. Or, my God, becauſe we muſt not only beleeue the Maior of the Goſpell, but the [e] Minor alſo, ſaying with Thomas, my Lord; with Mary, my Sauiour; with Eſay, my God. If we can gaine this aſſumption, it will bring vs to the moſt happy concluſion; enioying peace of conſcience, which is an heauen on earth, and peace of glory, which is heauen in heauen. Vnto which, he bring vs that hath made peace for vs, euen Chriſt Ieſus the righteous: to whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, as we are bound, ſo let vs heartily yeeld all honour, &c. Amen.

The Epiſtle, Coloss. 3. 12. vulg. 3. 18th.

Put vpon you as the elect of God, tender mercie &c.

THis Epiſtle conſiſts of two parts: In the firſt S. Paul exhorts the Coloſſians, vnto many ſpeciall vertues, as tender mercie, kindneſſe, humbleneſſe of minde, meekneſſe, long-ſuffering, &c. In the ſecond, becauſe it is infinite to inſiſt in euery particular, he drawes them, and all other duties, vnto two [f] generall admonitions in groſſe: whereof,

The { 1. concernes our theory: Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you plenteouſly, &c.
2. our practiſe; whatſoeuer yee doe in word or deed, doe all in the name of the Lord, &c.

[f] Zanchius in loc.

Put vpon you] Chriſt had two ſorts of garments, (as we read in the [g] Goſpell:) one without ſeame, not diuided at his death; and that was a [h] figure of faith, which, maugre the [i] rents of all heretikes and ſchiſmatikes in the Church, is [k] but one.

Another with ſeames, parted among the ſouldiers, and that was a type of loue, [l] which ſeekes not her owne, but communicates it ſelfe to many.

[m] So the Chriſtian muſt haue two coats: one of faith indiuiſible, by which he putts on Chriſt: another of loue, parted among many, by which one Chriſtian [n] puts on another; [o] reioycing with them that reioice, weeping with them that weepe.

Vpon the point, theſe two coats are but one; faith being inſide, and loue outſide; faith in reſpect of God, and loue toward the world. This Epiſtle ſpeakes of the outſide, put on tender mercie] [p] quoad affectum: kindneſſe] quoad effectum: meekeneſſe] bene vtendo proſperis: long-ſuffering] bene ſe habendo in aduerſis. &c.

Theſe vertues are both ornamenta, and munimenta, clothes and corſlets. Epheſ. 6. 11. Put on the whole armour of God, that yee may be able to ſtand againſt the aſſaults of the deuill. Seeing we muſt euery day fight, and euery day be ſeene, let vs as well for armour as honour, put on tender mercie, kindneſſe, &c. that we may [q] walke vprightly and confidently. See epiſt. Dom. 21. poſt Trinit. How loue is ſaid to be the bond of perfectneſſe, and cheife vertue; See Epiſt. Dom. Quinquages.

As the elect of God] S. Paul builds all theſe good exhortations vpon an argument, drawne ab [r] honeſto ſeu [s] debito: you are the elect of God, holy and beloued; choſen and beloued of God before the world, through babtiſme conſecrated ſolemnly to God in the world: wherefore being thus, electi ſelecti, dilecti, [t] Gods owne workmanſhip created in Chriſt Ieſus vnto good works; it is moſt meete, new men ſhould vſe new manners; in ſtead of the works of darkeneſſe, put on tender mercy, kindneſſe, humbleneſſe of minde, which are weapons of light. It is due debt that you ſhould be followers of God, forbearing one another, and forgiuing one another, as Chriſt forgaue you. See epiſt. Dom. 3. Quadrages.

The [v] Nouelists except againſt our Seruice Booke, for omitting here two titles; holy and beloued. Our anſwer is, that the word, elect, implies the reſt; for if elect, then beloued and holy. The Church omits not the greater, and inferrs the leſſer, as the Churches of Scotland and middleburge, call Gods heauy iudgements vpon the wicked, a little rap, Pſalm. 74. 12. and bread of affliction, browne bread, Pſal.

Let the word of Chriſt] That is, the Scripture, the Goſpell, eſpecially ſo called, in reſpect of 3. cauſes:

Efficient: for he ſpeakes in the Prophets and Apoſtles: [x] I am he that doth ſpeake; Behold it is I.

Materiall: for he is the contents of all the Bible ſhadowed in the Law, ſhewed in the Goſpell: [y] vnam vocem habent duo Teſtamenta. The word of the Lord containes nothing, but the word, which is the Lord.

Finall: as being the [z] end of the whole Law, and ſcope [a] of all the Prophets euer ſince the world began. Wherefore, ſeeing the Scriptures haue Chriſt for their author, Chriſt for their obiect, Chriſt for their end, well may they be called the word of Chriſt.

Dwell] we muſt not entertaine the word as a ſtranger, giuing it a cold complement, and ſo take our leaue; but becauſe it is Gods beſt friend, the Kings beſt friend, and our beſt friend, we muſt vſe it as a [b] familiar and domeſticke; receiuing it into the parlor of our heart, making it our chamber-fellow, ſtudy-fellow, bed-fellow. Things of leſſe moment are without doore, the ſtaffe behinde the doore, [c] ſed quæ pretioſa ſunt, non vno ſeruantur oſtio: things of worth are kept vnder many lockes and keyes. It is fit then that the word, being more pretious [d] than gold, yea the moſt fine gold, [e] a peerleſſe pearle, ſhould not be layd vp in the Porters lodge, only the outward eare, but euen in the cabinet of the minde: Deut 11. 28. Yee ſhall lay vp theſe my words in your heart and in your ſoule: ſo the word that now doth plenteouſly dwell among you, may dwell plenteouſly in you.

Plenteouſly] Read, heare, meditate, with all attention exactly, with all intention deuoutly, with all diligence throughly. Iohn 5. 39. Search the Scriptures. Eſay 8. 20. to the law, to the teſtimonie. Apocalyps 1. 3. Bleſſed is he that reads, and heares, and keepes the word of this prophecie: not only read, nor only heare, nor only meditate; but all: ſometime read to rectifie meditation, and ſomtime meditate to profit by reading. Lectio ſine meditatione arida, meditatio ſine lectione erronea.

It is reported of Alphonſo King of Spaine, that he read ouer all the Bible with Lyraes poſtil, fourteene times. And [f] Auguſtine writes of Antonius an Egyptian Monke, that hauing no learning, he did by hearing the Scriptures often read, get them without booke, and after by ſerious and godly meditation vnderſtand them.

[f] Prolog. in lib. 1. de doctrinâ Chriſtianâ.

This one word, plenteouſly, confutes plenteouſly, firſt ignorant people, who cannot: ſecondly, negligent people, who will not read and heare: thirdly, delicate people, who loath the Scriptures as vnpleaſant, preferring the Poets before the Prophets, admitting into their houſe the writings of men before the word of God: fourthly, perfunctorie ſtudents in the Bible, turning ouer not the whole, but ſome part, and that ſo coldly, that as it is ſaid of the Delphicke Oracle, [g] quoties legitur, toties neglegitur, a leſſon is no ſooner got, but it is forgot: fiftly, couetous people, who will not giue to their paſtor plenteouſly, that the word may dwell in them plenteouſly. [h] Nehemia complained in his time, that the Leuites, for want of maintenance, were faine to leaue the Temple and follow the plow. And S. Auguſtine made the like complaint in his age: [i] whereupon in proceſſe of time, Clergie-men inuented ſuch points of ſuperſtition, as were moſt aduantageous vnto them. Hence they raked Hell, and found out Purgatorie, to make the Popes kitchin ſmoke: an inuention not knowne vnto the Greeke Church for the ſpace of [k] 1500 yeeres after Chriſt; and but of [l] late knowne to the Latine. Hence prayer for the dead, indulgences, and other new tricks of poperie, which are more for the Prieſts belly, than the peoples benefit.

God

God of his infinite goodneſſe forgiue Britaines ingratitude in this kinde, and grant that the burning lamps in our Temple, may be ſupplied with ſufficient oyle, that the light of Iſrael goe not out. Sixtly, this condemnes Enthuſiaſts, deſpiſing the word, and miniſterie. Seuenthly, the Marcionites and Manichees, rejecting Moſes and the prophets. Laſt of all, and moſt of all, the Papiſts, in denying the vulgar tranſlations of Scripture to the common people. Let the word of God dwell in you: [m] that is, in all you, Prieſt and people; Non in nobis modò, ſed in vobis: as [n] S. Hierome peremptorily; Hîc oſtenditur verbum Chriſti, non ſufficienter, ſed abundanter etiam laicos habere debere, & docere ſe inuicem vel monere: The word muſt dwell in us: Ergo, the Bible muſt be in our houſe. It muſt dwell plenteouſly: Ergo, we muſt read dayly; but, as it followes in the Text.

With all wiſedome] The [o] Papiſts as well in the Church as in the ſtreet, chant Scripture plenteouſly; but becauſe their hymnes are not in a knowne tongue, it is without vnderſtanding. The Browniſts in their [p] Bookes and Sermons often cite Scripture plenteouſly, but it is not in wiſedome. Learned [q] Origen notes well, (and where he doth well, none better) that Heretikes are Scripturarum fures, great lurchers of holy writt: but they ſo wreſt it, that (as [r] Hierome ſpeakes) Euangelium Chriſti, fit euangelium hominis, aut quod peius eſt, diaboli.

Table Goſpellers are full of Text. It is ordinarie to diſcuſſe diuinitie problemes euen at Ordinaries; a cnſtome very common, but by the cenſure of our Church, no way commendable. For the 37 [s] Iniunction forbids all men to reaſon of diuine Scripture raſhly; and the greateſt part of Archbiſhop Cranmers Preface before the Church Bible, is ſpent againſt idle brabling and brawling in matters of Theologie. And a [t] graue Diuine, much eſteemed in our dayes, held it better for venturous diſcourſers of predeſtination, and ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt, that they had neither tongues in their heads, nor hearts in their breaſts, then that they ſhould continue in this irreuerend vſage.

[u] Manlius reports, how two meeting at a Tauerne, contended much to little purpoſe about their faith: One ſaid he was of Doctor Martins religion; and the other ſware he was of Doctor Luthers opinion; whereas Martin, and Luther, were but one. So many men moue many doubts in many matters, hauing neither will to heare, nor skill to conceiue the ſtate of a controuerſie, and then, as [x] Auguſtine ſaid of Petilian the Donatiſt: Multa dicendo nihil dicunt: aut potius, nihil dicendo multa dicunt.

The word of Chriſt muſt dwell in us plenteouſly, but in all wiſedome, we muſt heare it in all wiſedome, read it in all wiſedome, meditate on it in all wiſedome, ſpeake of it in all wiſedome, preach it in all wiſedome; not only in ſome, but in all wiſedome; for all is little enough, conſidering the Lord will not hold him guiltleſſe, who taketh his name in vaine.

Teaching and exhorting] This clauſe may be referred either to that which went before, or to that which followes after: to that which went before; Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you ſo plenteouſly with all wiſedome, [y] that ye may both inſtruct and exhort your ſelues vnto euery good worke, for doctrine and exhortation are two principll vſes of the Scripture, 2. Tim. 3. 16. For doctrine, the [z] Law ſhewes euery man in his vocation, what actions are acceptable to God; and the Goſpell teacheth how they be acceptable, namely, by faith in Chriſt. Let the word of Chriſt therefore dwell in you ſo plenteouſly with all wiſedome, that it may be a lanterne to your feet, and a light to your paths; a direction how to ſerue God in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the daies of your life.

For exhortation; the word muſt ſo dwell in vs, as that we may ſtirr vp one another to godlineſſe: Eſay 2. 3. Heb. 3. 13. [a] νουθετεῖν eſt in νοῦν τιθέναι; ſo to put it and print it in our minde, that it may not only be profitable to our ſelues, but vſefull alſo to other; [b] in publike, which is the Paſtors office; in priuate, which is euery Chriſtians duety.

This alſo may be referred vnto the words following, as according to [c] moſt Expoſitors our Church here; Teach and exhort your owne ſelues in Pſalmes, Pſalmes and hymnes] Some diſtinguiſh theſe by their obiect, affirming that hymnes are laudatorie: [d] for the glorious Angels in heauen ſing not Pſalmes, but hymnes: [e] Hominum eſt pſallere, Deum hymnis efferre Angelorum. Spirituall odes are peculiar ſongs accurately framed by the Church, according to her ſeuerall exigence: Pſalmes are of ſundry matters and arguments, exhortatory, conſolatory, precatory, deprecatory. But I follow that other diſtinction of [f] Hierome and Luther, vnderſtanding by the firſt, the Dauidicall Pſalmes; by the ſecond, the ſongs of Moſes, Debora, Zacharias, Marie, Simeon, mentioned in the Bible; by the third, godly hymnes inuented by the Chriſtians of that age, called ſpirituall, reſpectu {termini á quo, as proceeding from Gods ſpirit. / termini ad quem, as edifying our ſpirit: containing ſpirituall matter and melodie for the comfort of our ſoule, not any carnall or wanton ditty, to nouriſh the luſt of our fleſh. And therefore the Papiſticall hymnes in an vnknowne language are not ſpirituall, reſpectu termini ad quem; in that they neither inſtruct, nor exhort; much leſſe ribald ballads, inſtructing in vanitie, exhorting to villany.

With grace] I finde three conſtructions of this one clauſe: {for grace. / by grace. / with grace.

Sing to the Lord for grace receiued; as Paul Epheſ. 5. Speake to your ſelues in Pſalmes and hymnes, and ſpirituall ſongs, making melodie to the Lord, giuing thanks alway for all things. And in the next verſe following heer: Whatſoeuer yee doe in word or deed, doe all in the name of the Lord Ieſu, giuing thanks to God the Father by him. Every good and perfect gift is from aboue, comming downe from the father of lights. Ipſum [l] minus munus eſt; the leaſt gift is a grace; the meanes to get and preſerue grace, proceeds altogither from grace: for if God withdraw his mercie, we preſently fall. As aſtaffe, which if a man take and ſet vpright vpon the ground, ſo long as he holds it with his hand, it ſtands vpright; but ſo ſoone as he withdrawes his helpe, though he neuer puſh it downe, it will fall of it ſelfe. Aſcendat ergo gratia, vt deſcendat gratia: Let your thanks aſcend vp vnto God, that his grace may deſcend downe to vs.

[m] By grace] man is not only the Temple of God, as Paul ſpeakes; but as Clemens Alexandrinus, the timbrell of God. Now the timbrell cannot ſound, except it be touched. It is then the [n] ſpirit of God that makes our pipes to go. God, ſaith [o] Athenagoras, is the bellowes, and we the organs. A man may ſing to the deuill, to the world, to the fleſh, without this grace; but he cannot ſing to the Lord, but by the Lord. Our muſique may be ſongs, but not ſpirituall ſongs, except they be guided by the ſpirit. This ſhould teach vs in our Pſalmes and hymnes to praiſe God for his grace when we feele it, and often to pray God for it, when we feele it not.

m Chryſoſt. Theophylact. & ſchol. in loc.
n Macarius. hom. 47.
o Orat. pro Chriſtianis.

[p] With grace] That is, with a gratious dexterity, with delight and profit, both vnto our ſelues and other. Vnto our ſelues: for as it is a ioy to the iuſt to doe iuſtice, Prouerbs 21. 15. ſo a grace to the godly to be ioyfull in the Lord: to ſerue the Lord with gladneſſe, and to come before his preſence with a ſong: to ſing the Pſalmes of Dauid with the ſpirit of Dauid: the ſong of Mary with p Theophylact. Luther. Caluin. in loc.

with the ſpirit of Mary; Te Deum of S. Ambroſe, with the ſpirit of S. Ambroſe.

Againe, with grace to other: Epheſ.4.29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which may miniſter grace, [q] that is, inſtruction and conſolation to the hearer, vttered in ſuch manner and method, that it may be well accepted euen of the moſt vntoward. We muſt not ſing our owne crotchets out of tune, without rule, witleſſe and ſenſeleſſe ſongs; All that we ſing, all that we ſay, muſt be gracefull:

Et prodeſſe volunt, & delectare poeta.

And if Poets, how much more Prophets? He that doth preach and pray without a grace, doth the worke of the Lord negligently, though hee preach euery day, and pray euery houre.

In your hearts] As your mouth muſt ſhew forth his praiſe, ſo our ſoule muſt magnifie the Lord, and our ſpirit muſt reioyce in God our Sauiour. It is not enough that wee come neere to God with our lips, in chanting hymnes and pſalmes, except wee make melody to the Lord with the member that wee haue. [r] Plus valet conſonantia voluntatum quàm vocum. How we neglect this precept in ſinging, when our hearts are on our harueſt, and our mindes on our meat, I need not ſay; your domeſticall Chaplane doth daily tell you.

To the Lord] [s] That as of him, and through him, and for him are all things, ſo vnto him may be glory for euermore.

Whatſoeuer yee doe in word or deed] A generall rule extended to all men, and all actions, in all places, at all times, vno cumulo cuncta complectitur, as Luther vpon the place.

Doe all] Not ſay ye, but doe. [t] Celſus and Antiphon writing againſt the truth, intituled their treatiſe, the booke of truth: and the Papiſts vnder the name of the Church, ouerthrow the Church, * Eccleſiæ nomine armamini, & contra eccleſiam dimicatis; Anabaptiſts are moſt carnall, and yet they boaſt of the ſpirit. Vnconſcionable men in our time; ſeeme to be all for conſcience: Iuſtice and conſcience are the greateſt martyrs in the world. For a great man in doing miſchiefe pretends iuſtice, and a meane man alway conſcience: ſo that as it is in the Prouerbe, [u] In nomine Domini incipit omne malum. So ſoone as the malitious man had ſowen his tares, he went his way. See the Goſpell for this day.

In the Name of the Lord Ieſu] Not in our owne name, for there is no good in vs: of our ſelues we cannot thinke ſo much as a good thought, much leſſe ſpeake a good word, or doe a good deed: nor in [x] Angels name, nor in any Saints name, for that is to mingle the bloud of Thomas with Chriſts bloud, as [y] Pilate did the bloud of the Galileans with their owne ſacrifice. Chriſt is our onely Sauiour, and Redeemer, our only Mediator and Aduocate, This (ſaith the [z] Wiſeman) is the ſumme of all, that he is all; yea [a] all in all; and therefore good reaſon all ſhould be ſaid, all ſhould be done in his name: that is, as our Church in the Collect, begun, continued and ended in him: he is Alpha, therefore we muſt beginne euery worke, [b] by calling vpon his name, and ſquaring it according to his word: he is Omega, therefore all muſt bee referred vnto him, and end in him: 1.Cor.10.31.

To God the Father] [c] Becauſe God, and becauſe a father: God for his greatneſſe, Father for his goodneſſe.

By him] Otherwiſe, our ſpirituall ſacrifices are not acceptable to God, 1. Pet. 2.5

The Goſpell. MATTH. 13.24. vnto. ℣. 31.

The kingdom of heauē is like vnto a man which ſowed good ſeed in his field, &c

THis parable being explained by Chriſt, verſe 37. needs not any further expoſition, but our good diſpoſition onely to practiſe that he taught; it requires application rather then explication.

For application then vnderſtand, that it makes against foure principall enemies of the Church: { Carnall Goſpellers. / Browniſts. / Papiſts. / Atheiſts.

Againſt carnall Goſpellers, in that they neither watch ouer the Church, nor pray for the Church as they ſhould. Satan is here called our enemie, both ab affectu, & effectu: for his malice [d] going about daily like a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may deuoure. For his ſucceſſe, ouercomming many; for this cauſe called a man in 28. verſe. Ἐχθρὸς ἄνθρωπος, [e] as Scipio was called Africane, for that he conquered Africa: or as [f] other obſerue, there is ſuch affinity betweene Satan and the wicked, as that mutually they be called one by anothers name. The wicked man is called a deuill: [g] Haue not I choſen you twelue, and one of you is a deuill? and the deuill is here termed a wicked man.

This enuious aduerſary ſoweth alway tares among the wheat; where God hath his Church, he hath his chappell. The deuill hath not any ground of his owne, but he ſoweth in Gods field, vpon Gods ſeed; and ſo the corruption of the good is the generation of the bad; hereſie being nothing elſe but an ouerſowing, [h] ἑτεροδιδασκαλία, an after teaching, or another teaching.

Almighty God hath [i] foure principall fields: { Heauen. / Paradiſe. / The Church. / Mans heart.

In heauen Lucifer ouer-ſowed pride, by which himſelfe and his angels fell: in Paradiſe Satan ouer-ſowed diſobedience, by which hee deceiued Adam and Eue: [k] God ſaid, in the day that thou eateſt of the tree of knowledge, thou ſhalt die the death: [l] Eua being corrupted by the Serpent, ſaid, leſt ye die, Satan himſelfe, yee ſhall not die: ſo Gods good ſeed, moriemini, was turned firſt to ne moriamini, then vnto non moriemini: [m] Deus affirmat, mulier dubitat, diabolus negat.

In the Church (as it is here ſhewed) he doth ouerſow ſchiſmes and hereſies in ſuch ſort that the tares ouertop the wheat, at leaſt they bee ſo mingled together, as that the one cannot be rooted vp without hurt to the other.

In mans heart (which is Gods eſpeciall encloſure) when the good ſeed is ſowen, Satan enters, and endeuours to [n] catch it away, planting in ſtead thereof vnlawfull luſt, pride of life, couetous deſires. He doth labour to blaſt our good workes, [o] either in the act, or elſe in the end: and all this is done, ſaith the text, while men ſleepe. The which I finde conſtrued of [p] Prieſts eſpecially, called in holy Bible, the [q] Watchmen of Iſrael: but not onely; for the Prince being a Paſtor of his people, muſt watch alſo the flocke; yea the ſhepheards, ouerſeeing the Seers, and watching the Watchmen that they doe not ſleepe.

This alſo concernes the people: for euery maſter hath charge of his houſe, euery man of his ſoule. The [r] maſter doth ſleepe when hee doth not gouerne well his familie; [s] euery man doth ſleepe, when he neglects Gods ſeed ſowen in his heart. That therefore which our Sauiour ſaid vnto his Diſciples, he ſaid vnto all, [t] Watch: and ſo the [u] Church expounds it of all idle perſons, inſinuating, that it is the beſt time for the deuill to worke his feat, when men are negligent in their calling.

It is not Gods fault then that tares are mingled among wheat; for he ſowed none but good ſeed: [x] All that he made was good, yea very good. Neither can we iuſtly condemne the deuill, for he doth but his part, being a [y] murderer from the beginning; [z] all the blame belongs vnto our ſelues, in that we ſleepe when we ſhould watch.

Here the Goſpell and Epiſtle parallel: If the Word of God dwell in vs plenteouſly with all wiſedome, then Satan cannot ſow tares in our ſoule. If Miniſters, Magiſtrates, and Maſters, as Gods elect, put on tender mercy, kindneſſe, humbleneſſe of minde, loue toward their charge, their compaſſionate bowels, aſſuredly will pitie the dangerous eſtate of ſuch as are tares vnder their gouernment, endeuouring endeuouring to make them wheat against the great harueſt. For the ſeruants here teach vs by their example to be [a] ſolicitous for the good of the corne, to come to Chriſt, and to pray that [b] faithfull labourers may bee ſent into Gods harueſt.

Paul was grieued becauſe ſome cockle grew in [c] Philippi: [d] Dauid was grieued becauſe the Heathen had broken into Gods inheritance: Chriſt was grieued becauſe Gods houſe was made a [e] den of theeues; and ſo Chriſtians in our time ſhould be grieued, becauſe Satan hath ſowed ſuch offences and ſcandals among the profeſſors of the Goſpell.

Secondly, this parable makes } criticall doctrine.
againſt the Browniſts in their } hypocriticall conuerſation.

It condemnes their doctrine; for there was, is, and euer ſhall be darnell in Gods field, tares among wheat, bad among good in the viſible Church. I confeſſe, the Church militant may be called the [f] ſuburbs of heauen; our Sauiour here termes it the kingdome of heauen, becauſe the King of heauen doth heauenly gouerne it with his holy Word, and bleſſed Spirit: but it is not heauen in heauen, it is but heauen on earth: and therefore in this heauen are many fire-brands of hell, the children of the [g] wicked, whoſe [h] end is damnation, and vtter confuſion in vnquenchable fire.

We may not therefore leaue Gods floore, becauſe there is ſome chaffe, neither breake Gods net, becauſe there are ſome baggage fiſh; neither depart out of his houſe, becauſe there be ſome veſſels of wrath; neither runne out of his field, becauſe there growes ſome cockle: but, as [i] Auguſtine determined againſt the Donatiſts accurately: Non propter malos boni deſerendi, ſed propter bonos mali tolerandi: We muſt not forſake the good for the bad, but rather tolerate the bad for the good. Almightie God would haue ſpared a whole Citie for ten [k] good mens ſake; let vs not then condemne a whole Church for ten wicked mens companie.

[l] Eccleſiam teneo plenam tritico & palea, emendo quos poſſum, tolero quos emendare non poſſum; fugio paleam, ne hoc ſim; non aream, ne nihil ſim: In [m] Gods Houſe there are not only veſſels of gold, and veſſels of ſilver, but alſo of wood, and of earth, and ſome to honour, and ſome to diſhonour. [n] It is our dutie to ſtriue that we may be golden veſſels, and as for earthen, we muſt leaue them to God, in whoſe hand is a rod of iron, to [o] breake them in peeces like a potters veſſell.

I will ſay to the Browniſt, as [p] Auguſtine to the Donatiſt: Accuſa quantis viribus potes; ſi innocentes fuerint, nihil eis tanquam frumentis oberit ventoſitas tua; ſi nocentes, non debent propter zizania frumenta deſeri: accuſa quantum potes; vinco, ſi non probas; vinco, ſi probas; ſi non probas, vinco iudice teipſo; ſin probas, teſte Cypriano, qui docuit horreum non eſſe deſerendum ob paleas He might haue ſaid, teſte Chriſto, commanding here, Let both grow together vntill the harueſt. We may not [q] iudge before the time, calling (out of our immoderate zeale) for fire from heauen to conſume the tares, but expect hell fire to burne them up; and that for two reaſons eſpecially, that the bad may be conuerted, and the good exerciſed.

[r] Omnis malus aut ideo viuit, vt corrigatur; aut ideo, vt per illum bonus exerceatur: [s] He that is now cockle, may proue by Gods eſpeciall grace, corne: weed not the field therefore preſently, leſt while yee gather the tares, yee plucke up alſo the wheat.

Saint Peter was an Apoſtate, S. Matthew a Publican, Zacheus an oppreſſor, Paul a Saul: Iuſtin Martyr was a Gentile, S. Auguſtine a Manichee, Martin Luther a Monke, Tremelius a Iew, Leo Africanus a Mahumetan: if all cockle had then beene rooted vp at the firſt, Gods field would haue wanted much good wheat, the Church many good men, yea [t] all men; for Adam in Paradiſe was a rare, when he diſobeyed. Here the Goſpell and Epiſtle meet againe. For if we may not root up the tares, it is very requiſite that wee put on tender mercy, kindneſſe, kindneſſe, humbleneſſe of minde, meekneſſe, long-ſufferance, forbearing one another, and forgiuing one another, &c,

[a] 1.Cor.11.19. Againe, the cockle muſt grow for the cornes exerciſe: [a] There muſt be hereſies among you, that they which are approued among you might be knowne. If Arius had not beene borne, [x] qui poſuit cum Trinitate perſonarum Trinitatem ſubſtantiarum; and Sabellius on the contrary, qui poſuit vnitatem perſonæ cum vnitate eſſentiæ; the queſtions about the bleſſed Trinitie would neuer haue been determined ſo ſufficiently by thoſe great lights of the Church, Athanaſius, Auguſtine, Hilary, &c.

If ſuperſtition had not a long time growne in Gods field among the wheat, principles of the true Religion, eſpecially the point of iuſtification by faith onely, would neuer haue beene ſo well vnderſtood.

If Anabaptiſts and Browniſts had not contended againſt the Church, it would haue gone worſe with the Church; as [z] Auguſtine ſaid of Rome: Magis nocuit Romanis Carthago tàm citò euerſa, quàm priùs nocuerat tàm diù adverſa. The counſell is good; [a] Sic viue tanquam inimici ſemper te videant: for the Church, as Chriſt, muſt ſuffer and ouercome, in medio inimicorum, in the middeſt among all her enemies: Pſal.110.2.

Secondly, this makes againſt the Browniſts in their hypocriticall conuerſation. It is ſaid here, that ſo ſoone as the malicious man had ſowen tares among the wheat, he went his way. [b] Not that he departs from hypocrites and heretickes, but hee putteth on another face: when he doth a worke of darkneſſe, he transformes himſelfe into an [c] Angell of light. He is no more blacke, nor browne, but a white deuill, ſaith [d] Luther. And therefore when it is obiected againſt the conformable Clergie, that Heretikes and Schiſmatiks are graue men, and good men: our anſwer may be; that the deuill is now gone: [e] rauening Wolues are in ſheepes clothing. Tares are ſo like good corne, that they cannot be diſcerned vntill the blade ſpring vp and bring forth fruit. Fitches haue many fetches: hypocrites are like Goodwin ſands, in dubio pelagi terræq;, neither of both, and either of both, as occaſion ſhall ſerue: [f] Gentilem agunt vitam ſub nomine Chriſtiano: They play the Turkes vnder the names of Chriſtians, oues viſu, vulpes æſtu: there is no more deuill appearing, but all is now the Spirit of God, and ſecret reuelations euen from heauen.

Thirdly, this parable makes againſt the Papiſts, in the queſtion of { Their religious antiquity. / Putting to death of Heretikes. / Purgatory.

We proteſt, and that vnfainedly, that no Church ought further to depart from the Church of Rome, then ſhe is departed from her ſelfe in her flouriſhing eſtate. Shew then, ſay the [g] Papiſts, in what age the tares were ſowen among the wheat: When and where purgatory, prayer for the dead, indulgences, auriculæ confeſſion, and other new trickes of Poperie crept into the Church. Anſwer is made for vs here by Chriſt; While men ſlept, the malitious enemie ſowed tares among the wheat. And it was not diſcerned vntill the blade was ſprung up, and had brought forth fruit.

When I ſee the finger of the diall remoued from one or two, ſhall I be ſo mad as to thinke it ſtandeth ſtill where it was, becauſe I could not perceiue the ſtirring of it? In the [h] forehead of the whore of Babylon, is written a myſterie: ſo Paul [i] calls the working of Antichriſt, a myſterie of iniquitie; becauſe the man of ſinne doth couertly and cunningly winde his abominations into the Church of Chriſt.

Polititians obſerue, that corruptions are bred in ciuill bodies, as diſeaſes in naturall bodies: at the firſt they be not diſcerned eaſily, but in their growth: inſenſibly they proceed often, till it come to paſſe, which [k] Liuie ſaid of the Roman State; Nec vitia noſtra, nec remedia ferre poſſumus; We can neither endure the malady, nor the medicine. The

The [m] Rhemists acknowledge many barbarismes and incongruities in the vulgar Latine Text. Cardinall Caietan, Sanctes Pagnine, Franciscus Forerius, Hieronymus Oleastrius, [n] Sixtus Senensis, all learned Papists, ingenuously confesse, that beside solecismes in the vulgar translation of Rome, there are many grosse faults, additions, transpositions, omissions. [o] Isidorius Clarius a Spanish Monke, professed that he found in it 8000. errors. It is plaine they were so manifest and so manifold, as that the Councell of [p] Trent, and after it Pope Sixtus Quintus, and Clement 8. tooke order for the correcting of it. I would know then of a Papist, how this cockle was sowen among Gods seed? in what yeere this and that absurditie first crept into their Text? as Luke 15.8. domum euertit, for domum euerrit: and Exod. 34.29. Moses in stead of a bright countenance, is said to haue cornutum faciem, a face of horne, whereupon the common Painters among the Papists, vsually paint Moses with two hornes, as a cuckold, to the great scandall of Christian Religion, as [q] Augustinus Steuchus, and [r] Sixtus Senensis obserue.

The whole Rhemish Colledge cannot tell in what age confusus est, in stead of confessus est, entred in, Marke 8. 33. Pope Sixtus Quintus hath sundry coniectures, in the preface prefixed to his Bible, vel ex iniuriâ temporum, vel ex librariorum incuriâ, vel ex impressorum imperitia, vel ex temerè emendantium licentiâ, vel ex recentiorum interpretum audatiâ, vel ex hæreticorum scholiis ad marginem. If the Pope cannot tell, in whose head and hands is all the Churches treasure, both for wit and wealth; it is enough for the Disciple to be as his Master is, and the seruant as his Lord.

The late Pope Clement 8. corrected the correction of his predecessor Sextus Quintus, setting forth another Bible, which one called vnhappily, The new Transgression. In these reformed editions of Rome, there is such [t] difference, that we may say with the [u] Prophet; Egyptians are set against Egyptians, and the [u] destroyer against the destroyer, one against another, and all against the truth.

In the [x] Roman Missals and Breuiaries, there were so many damnable blasphemies, and superstitious errors, that the late Popes euen for shame reformed them; and yet they cannot tell in what yeere these corruptions first grew: and therefore what need we tell them at what time this and that Popish nouelty was first sowen? Is it not enough that we now discerne the tares among the wheat? and proue to the proudest of their side, that there was no such darnell in Gods field for the space of [y] six hundred yeeres after Christ? I say, no such stinking weeds, as the single communion of the Priest, halfe communion of the people, worshipping of the bread, creeping to the Crosse, supremacie of the Pope, which are the most essentiall points of all the Romish religion.

Secondly, this parable makes against the [z] Papists in the question of putting Heretikes to death. I confesse the words, finite vtraque simul crescere; teach not the Magistrates duty, but rather shew Gods bounty towards Heretikes. It is the [a] Princes office to banish, imprison, mulct, and by all meanes possible, to suppresse them, and in no sort to suffer them, as being so pestilent as the plague. For as the plague doth instantly strike the heart, and by poysoning one infects many; [b] sic hæresis cor ipsum animæ petit, & cùm vnum interficit, centum alios inficit: Heresie strikes at faith, and so takes away the life of the Christian; for the iust doth liue by faith, and then it fretteth as a [c] canker or gangren, corrupting all other members of Christs mysticall body; we may cry mors in illâ; as the children of the Prophets, [d] mors in ollâ; such cockle then ought to be cropt and topt, but not vtterly rooted vp and burnt vntill the great harueſt. A murtherer and a traytor indued with faith and repentance, may passe from the crosse to the crowne; as the blessed theefe in the Gospell was instantly translated from his paine to Paradise: but an Heretike dying in his heresie, cannot be saued. He therfore that puts an Heretike to death, is a double murtherer, as [e] Luther thinks, in destroying his body with death temporall, in slaying his soule with death eternall. Excommunication, exile, losse of goods, imprisonment, depriuation, haue beene reputed euermore fit puniſhments for heretikes: but fire and fagot is not Gods law, but cannon ſhot, [f] enacted firſt by Pope Lucius the third, Anno 1184. and confirmed afterward by Innocentius the third, and Gregorie the ninth, as it appeares in the Decretals: and it was executed againſt the Waldenſes, and in latter times againſt the Proteſtants eſpecially, martyring the [g] dead with the liuing, the wife with the husband, the new borne, yea [h] not borne infant with the mother, (whom they ſhould haue cheriſhed by all lawes, and chriſtned by their owne lawes) and that not for the denying of any article of the Creed, but only for not beleeuing Tranſubſtantiation, and other new quirkes of the Schoole, which the moſt iudicious among them, as yet cannot explicate: for as one wittily,

Corpore de Chriſti lis eſt, de ſanguine lis eſt,
Deq; modo lis eſt, non habitura modum.

[i] Scotus, [k] Cameracenſis, and [l] other Papiſts of great note, confeſſe planely, that Tranſubſtantiation cannot be inforced by the Goſpell, nor by any teſtimonies of the ancient Church. And [m] Bellarmine, Romes oracle, doth acknowledge, that it may bee well doubted whether there be any place of Scripture clearly to proue Tranſubſtantiation, otherwiſe then that the Church hath declared it ſo to be, becauſe many learned and acute men hold the contrary. What helliſh cruelty then was it in the Bonners of Queene Marie, to make bon-fires of ſilly women, for not vnderſtanding this their ineffable myſterie, wherein are nine miracles at the leaſt, as [n] Ioannes de Combis affirmes? If theſe gun-powder Prieſts, and fagot Diuines are Saints, I wonder who are Scythians? if theſe be Catholikes, who are Canibals?

In this queſtion, as in all other, I ſubmit my ſelfe to the iudgement of our Church, and practiſe of our Country. Which, as [o] Diuines, and [p] Statesmen auow, neuer put any to death meerely for the cauſe of Religion. I conclude with the gloſſe of [q] Luther; Hoc verbum, Sinite, non eſt confirmationis, aut approbationis hæreticorum, ſed conſolationis & exhortationis noſtri ad patientiam: [r] Apertè ſæuit perſecutor paganus, vt leo; hæreticus inſidiatur, vt draco; ille cogit negare Chriſtum, iſte docet: aduerſus illum opus patientia, aduerſus hunc opus vigilantia. Conſulas Auguſtinum, epiſt. 48.50.61.127.158.159.160. Diligite homines, interficite errores, ſine ſuperbiâ de veritate præſumite, ſine ſæuitiâ pro veritate certate, contra literas Petiliani. lib. 1. cap. 29. All which, I deſire you, to conſtrue not of blaſphemous wretches, obſtinately denying the great myſteries of holy faith, as namely, Chriſts incarnation, and the bleſſed Trinitie; but of ſuch Hereticks as erre in other Articles of our Creed, concerning the Catholike Church, the Communion of Saints, the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, in which howſoeuer the Papiſts in our iudgement offend, yet none of them are put to death in our State, religionis cauſa mera ſed mixta, mixta cum mala mente & fide in principem, as that learned Father, in Tortura Torti pag. 133.

Thirdly, this makes againſt popiſh Purgatory, prouing it to be ſuperfluous and idle: for whatſoeuer is in the Lords field, is either corne or cockle: a barne is prouided for the one, and vnquenchable fire for the other. A third place for a third ſort of perſons, is that [s] which neither God made, nor Chriſt mentioned, nor the Apoſtles beleeued, nor the Primitiue Church imbraced. It is an heatheniſh fantaſie founded by the Poets, and not by the Prophets, by [t] Plato and [u] Virgil, not by Peter and Paul, and that vpon ſo tickle ground, that the moſt learned Papiſts can neither tell vs, where it is, nor what it is.

[x] Bellarmine reports eight ſundry different opinions about the place, confeſſing honeſtly, that the Church as yet hath not defined, vbi ſit purgatorium; it is in ſo many places, as that it can be in no place, quod vbiq; nullibi. Sir [y] Thomas More ſaid, that in all Purgatorie there is no water, and that he would proue by the words of Zach. 9.11. I haue looſed thy priſoners out of the pit, wherein is no water. On the contrary [z] Roffenſis affirmed, that there is great ſtore of water, and this he proued by Danid, Pſal. 66.11. We went thorow fire and water. [a] Albertus and Roffenſis are of opinion, that purgatories executioners are good Angels. Other, as [b] Dionyſius Carthuſianus, and Sir Thomas More make no doubt, but that that they be deuils. Cardinall Bellarmine is of both ſides, and no ſide concluding this point; [c] Maneat hoc inter ſecreta, quæ ſuô tempore nobis aperientur. Happily this vncertaintie is a great certaintie to the Pope, being Lord of Purgatorie; for he can [d] when he pleaſe make goale deliuerie, and auoid all the ſoules in Purgatorie, being his peculiar; the Pope may * command Gods Angels to fetch away from thence whom he liſt: and therefore this imaginarie fire may make his kitchin ſmoke, but it is altogether needleſſe for the people; becauſe Chriſt (ſaith [e] Paul) hath purged our ſinnes: all our ſinnes, ſaith S. [f] Iohn: as [g] Auguſtine ſweetly, Gods pitie is mans purgatorie.

Laſtly, this makes againſt Atheiſts, imagining that either eternall iudgement ſhall haue an end; or elſe that the world ſhall haue no end: our Sauiour confutes both in his expoſition of this parable: verſe 39. The harueſt is the end of the world, and the reapers be the Angels, who ſhall gather the tares, &c. but the wheat ſhall be gathered into Gods barne.

The glorious Angels at the great harueſt, ſhall firſt gather the tares, [h] ſeparating them from the wheat, which is pœna damni, priuation of God, and all that is good; Angels, Saints, friends; and then they ſhall bind them in ſheaues to be burnt, which is pœna ſenſus, a poſſeſſion of hell and all that is euill; [i] they ſhall not be bound all in one, but in many fagots; an adulterer with an adultereſſe ſhall make one fagot, a drunkard with a drunkard another fagot, a traytor with a traytor another fagot: as there be ſeuerall ſinnes, ſo ſeuerall ſheaues; all ſhall not be puniſhed in the ſame degree, though in the ſame fire: all ſhall be burnt, yet none conſumed. In that vnquenchable flame, [k] pœna gehennales torquent, non extorquent: puniunt, non finiunt corpora: [l] mors ſine morte, finis ſine fine, defectus ſine defectu.

Dauid ſaid of his enemies in the 55. Pſalme; Let them goe downe quicke into hell: in another ſenſe we may wiſh ſo much vnto our beſt friends, euen our owne ſelues, (as [m] one fitly) Let vs often goe to hell while we liue, that we come not thither when we be dead; let vs euery day deſcend into hell by meditation, that in the laſt day we may not deſcend by condemnation.

Gather the wheat into my barne.] In Gods field tares are among wheat, but in Gods barne no tare, no care ſhall moleſt vs: in the kingdome of grace bad are mingled with the good, but in the kingdome of glory there ſhall be none but good, enioying nothing but good, good Angels, good Saints; aboue all, our good God, in whoſe [n] light we ſhall ſee ſuch light, [o] as the eye of man hath not ſeene, neither eare heard, neither heart ſufficiently can conceiue, &c.

The Epiſtle. 1. Cor. 9. 24. vnto y^t ende

Perceiue ye not, how that they which runne in a courſe, runne all, but one receiueth the reward?

THere are [p] two waies of teaching; one by precept, and another by paterne. S. Paul vſeth here both: a precept, ſo runne that ye may obtaine: a paterne, I therefore ſo runne, &c.

The precept, is preſſed by two ſimilitudes: { 1. From runners, in the 24. verſe. 2. From wraſtlers, in the 25.

The ſumme of both is: if ſuch as runne for a wager, [q] and contend for a corruptible crowne, ſuffer great paines, and abſtaine from many pleaſures to win the goale; what ſhould we doe, what ſhould we not doe to gaine the crowne of glory, propoſed and promiſed onely to ſuch as run, trauell and endeuour for it? So runne therefore that ye may obtaine.

In which exhortation foure points are regardable: the { Men, yee. Matter, runne. Manner, ſo runne. Marke, that ye may obtaine.

Runne

Runne ye.] That is, all yee; for that is taken as granted here; Perceiue ye not? All men are viatores in this valley of teares before they can be comprehenſores, aſcended vp to heauen, and reſting on Gods holy hill, the bleſſed Virgin not excepted, the moſt bleſſed of all the ſons of men Chriſt Ieſus himſelfe not exempted, he firſt [r] ſuffered, and after entred into glory; firſt he did runne, then obtaine. God hath three houſes, Heauen for ioy, Hell for paine, Earth for labour: Man is borne to trauell, as the ſparkes flie vpward: Ioh. 5. 7.

[r] Luk. 24 26.

The matter then in the next place to be conſidered, is, that we muſt runne, Runne yee.

[f] Aquin. & Gorran. in loc.

Wherein obſerue [f] two things eſpecially: { 1. The labour / 2. The ſhortnes } of our life.

[t] Iob 14 1.
[u] Petrarcha.

The labour, in that we muſt runne; the ſhortneſſe, in that it is but a race. [t] Man that is borne of a woman, is of ſhort continuance, and full of trouble: [u] Animal æui breuiſſimi, ſollicitudinis infinitæ: Mans life is not ſhort and ſweet, but ſharpe and ſhort. Running is a violent exerciſe, therefore ſharpe; a ſtage is but a little ground, therefore ſhort.

God is good vnto vs in tempering theſe ſo fitly, that thinking on the ſhortneſſe of our life we may be content, becauſe full of miſeries; and againe, conſidering the miſeries of our life we may be comforted, becauſe it is but of ſmall continuance, not a long iourney, but a ſhort tie.

The word originall is στάδιον, a race of men or horſe, whereof I finde in [x] antiquitie three kinds: { Italicum. / Olympicum. / Pythicum. }

One of Italie, containing 625. feet, that is, 125. paces. The ſecond of Olympus, containing 600. feet, that is, 120. paces. The third, containing 1000. feet, that is, 200. paces. It is probable that Paul writing this vnto the Corinthians, alluded to the Olympiacke courſe, which is the ſhorteſt, much like the tyes in Kent, ſome 30 or 40. rods. And as experience ſhewes daily, ſome giue ouer at the firſt ſetting out, in the very cradle; ſome periſh when they haue run two or three paces in their youth, other about the middeſt of their race; moſt are out of breath before they can reach the ſtaied paces of threeſcore yeeres; if any liue till eightie, we repute him exceeding old. Why doe I name rods or paces? Our life is as it were a [z] ſpan long, a very [a] nothing in reſpect of eternitie: ſeeing then our courſe is ſmall, and reward great, a little paine, but an ineſtimable price; ſeeing our [b] light affliction, which is but for a moment, cauſeth vnto vs a farre moſt excellent and an eternall waight of glory; let vs not faint in our courſe, but ſo runne that we may obtaine.

[z] Pſal. 39. 6.
[b] 2. Cor. 4. 17.

[c] Melanchon. in loc tom. 4. fol. 236.

So runne.] Noting the manner and the meanes, [c] a generall rule neceſſarie for the courſe of our whole life, teaching vs in all we ſay or doe to foreſee the right end, and to vſe the meanes for obtaining that end.

Some looke to the right end, but vſe not the right meanes, as Caroloſtadius in Luthers age, who deſired the Goſpell might flouriſh, but hee failed in the meanes; he deſpiſed authoritie, neglected humane lawes, and was altogether tranſported with his owne priuate humors of ambition and couetouſneſſe. And ſo the Schiſmatikes in our time, eſpecially thoſe of the ſeparation, embrace the Goſpell (as it ſhould ſeeme) ſo much as we, but they faile in their Sic, in their ſo running; for they runne out of the Church, without which none can be ſafe, none can be ſaued, and ſo the more they runne, the further are they from the prize.

[d] Matt. 7.

Some vſe the right meanes, but not for the right end, as [d] hypocrites vſe to faſt and giue to the poore, not for Gods glory, but for their own praiſe. So vaineglorious Preachers and people ſeeke the truth, but not for the truth, [e] dum quærunt eam, non quærunt ipſam.

[e] Auguſtin.

Some

Some looke to the right end, and vſe the right meanes, as the holy Prophets and Apoſtles, all their preaching tended to the glory of God, and they run the right way, to propagate that his glory: So run therefore that yee may obtaine.

Now that we may run well, two { due preparation before / right diſpoſition in } the race. things are required eſpecially: a

He that vndertakes to run a tye, will firſt, if he be wiſe, [f] diet himſelfe, and not ſpend his time in drunkenneſſe and gluttonie; the Text ſaith, hee will abſtaine from all things, euen thoſe meats and pleaſures which he doth moſt affect, onely to make his bodie ſwift and fit for the race. So if we will happily run our courſe in Gods way, we muſt not walke in ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe, in chambering and wantonneſſe, but as Paul here, we muſt tame our bodies, and bring them into ſubiection: We muſt not be filled with [g] wine, but with the holy Spirit: for faſting and voluntarie chaſtiſing of our bodies, as occaſion is offered, are not workes [h] either ſuperfluous or ſuperſtitious. A full panch and heauy head is fitter to lie than to goe, to ſtand ſtill than to run a ſwift race. The Gentiles liue to eat, but [i] Chriſtians eat to liue, and life conſiſts in [k] health and ſtrength, and both are maintained eſpecially by moderate fare.

Secondly, the runner vſeth to ſtrip himſelfe of all about him, except ſome white garment to couer his nakedneſſe: and ſo we muſt put off the workes of darkneſſe, and euery thing that [l] preſſeth downe: we muſt caſt away the cares of this life, [m] vſing the world as if we vſed it not; hauing wiues and children, as if we had neither wiues nor children, accounting all things loſſe to winne Chriſt. We muſt ſtrip our ſelues of all that might hinder vs in our courſe, leauing nothing on vs but the [n] long robe of Chriſts righteouſneſſe to couer our nakedneſſe, to [o] couer our wickedneſſe, as our Apoſtle, Rom. 13.14. Put yee on the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and take no thought for the fleſh to fulfill the luſts of it.

And as the runner muſt haue due preparation before his race; ſo likewiſe a right diſpoſition in his courſe, that he begin well, continue well, and end well.

Firſt, he muſt be carefull to begin well, to ſet out in the right and direct paſſages: otherwiſe if he run in wrie-wayes and by-wayes, the more his labour, the greater is his loſſe. We muſt take heed, leſt meta be [p] tranſpoſita: ſuch as will obtaine Gods prize, muſt walke in Gods path, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left, Deut. 5.32,33. for there is danger in both; and, as [q] Luther obſerues, often the greateſt perill is on the right hand. For Schiſmatikes hurt more vnder a colour of reforming and building vp the Church, than Heretikes and open Tyrants can doe by perſecuting and pulling downe the Church. Omnes amici omnes inimici (quoth Bernard.) On the contrary, by the Martyrs blond, the Church is not deſtroyed, but watered: [r] Ante fuit in operibus fratrum candida, nunc in martyrum cruore purpurea. Euery man muſt be ſure to ſet forth aright, in the true profeſſion of the Catholike faith; otherwiſe when we runne without Chriſt, who is the way, [ſ] then our wiſedome is double fooliſhneſſe, our righteouſneſſe double ſinne; when we are beſt, then are we worſt. Againe, we muſt walke in an honeſt vocation warranted by Gods Word, otherwiſe we ſhall not run to, but from the prize.

Secondly, we muſt continue well; for many run, but one receiveth the crowne: we muſt therefore take heed that we doe not ſlip; or if we ſlip, that we doe not fall; or if we fall, that we fall not backward, but forward, ſo that we may with ſpeed riſe againe. The moſt iuſt [t] often ſlip, and ſometime fall, but they fall not backward as [u] Eli, and the [x] Iewes who tooke Chriſt, but forward as [y] Abraham in the valley of Mambre, and [z] Ezechiel by the riuer Chebar.

Laſtly, we muſt end well; Death is our laſt enemie, which muſt be deſtroyed, and therefore we muſt run well vnto the end, and in the end. As good not to run at all, as to run neere the end, and then to loze the prize; to ſuffer Satan at the laſt houre to ſnatch our reward from vs. A runner will be ſure to ſtretch out his hands at the races end to take the marke: ſo when death approcheth, a Chriſtian muſt ſtretch out the hand of faith apprehending Chriſt and his righteouſneſſe.

Obserue yet a great difference betweene the Christian and other races. In the games of other runners, as it is here said, one onely doth win the gole; [a] but in the Christian course, many receiue the prize, so many as continue stedfast vnto the end, though they doe not run so fast, though they doe not run from so far as other. So Christ shewes in the parable of the vineyard, allotted for the Gospell on this day: Such as came to worke at the eleuenth houre had a penny, so well as they that came into the vineyard at the third houre.

Secondly, in other races one hinders another; [b] but in our iourney to heauen one helps another. The moe the merrier, the greater company the better encouragement, euery good man being a spur to his neighbour. As when Peter and Iohn ran to Christs sepulcher, Iohn ouer-run [c] Peter vnto the graue, Peter outwent Iohn into the graue.

Thirdly, runners and wrastlers contend for a crowne that shall perish, but we runne to obtaine an euerlasting crowne: They runne for a little prize, for a little praise; but we striue for no lesse than a kingdome that is at stake, that is the marke, which being [d] infinitely aboue the value of all mens workes, it cannot be deserued by merit, but only giuen by grace: to propound a garland for the runner, and a crowne for the wrastler, proceeds altogether from Gods owne meere mercy: to run, and not to fall, to fall, and not finally to be cast downe, comes also from his especiall grace. So that it is [e] neither in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that shewes mercy. Yet we must so run, that we may obtaine. We must worke well in respect of the reward, as also for feare of punishment, due to such as worke not well, albeit not onely, nor chiefly for these considerations, as slaues for feare, or hirelings for reward; but principally out of louing obedience to God, as becomes children vnto so good a father. Holy conuersation is a signe and seale of our iustification, by which our election is made [f] sure. [g] Feramus ergo fidei fructum ab ipsâ pueritiâ, augeamus in adolescentiâ, coloremus in iuuentute, compleamus in senectute.

I therefore so run] [h] One said of Erasmus his Enchiridion, that there was more deuotion in the booke, than in the writer. But here Saint Pauls life doth preach so much as his letter; I so run, so fight I. Preachers, as it is well obserued vpon the Gospell for this day, must be not only [i] verbarij, but operarij: so that as Christ said to the [k] Lawyer, I say to thee, Goe and do thou likewise.

Not as one that beateth the aire] [l] Such as contend in the Church about things vncertaine and vnnecessarie, beat the aire.

I tame my bodie] The [m] Monkes of S. Swithin in Winchester, complained to Henry the second, that their Bishop had taken away three of their dishes, and left them but ten: to whom the King answered, that the Bishop should do well to take away ten, and to leaue them but three; for they were so many as he had in his Court. In England Monkes so tamed their bodie, that among vs as yet, Frier and fat are [n] voces conuertibiles: and the new bastard Monke, though his habit resemble loue, couering a multitude of sinnes; yet himselfe is the picture of enuie. No treason in old time without a Priest, no treason in our time without a Iesuite: so that I may say with the [o] Poet.

In vestimentis non est contritio mentis.
Ni mens sit pura, nil confert regula dura.

[p] Bodily exercise profiteth little; but godlinesse is profitable to all things. As [q] to shew the behauiour of a Prophet in the robes of a Cauilere, is louely: so contrariwise, to do the workes of a ruffian in the weeds of a Priest, is no better than hypocrisie.

Lest by any meanes] Our Apostle was assured of his saluation, as is euident, Ro. 8. [r] This then is to be construed of reproofe before men, not of reprobation before God. Or if it be referred to damnation eternall, his [s] meaning is, that we may not presume of the end, without the meanes and waies, by which Almighty God brings vs vnto it. And so we [t] lambes may tremble, seeing the bell-wether of the flocke must so labour and subiect his flesh, lest perhaps he misse the marke.

The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a man that is an houſholder,&c.

OVr Sauiour was delighted exceedingly with certaine prouerbiall ſpeeches; as, [a] Euery man that exalteth himſelfe, ſhall be brought low; and he that humbleth himſelfe, ſhall be exalted. [b] *Vnto euery man that hath, it ſhall be giuen, but from him that hath not, euen that which he hath ſhall be taken away. Chriſt therefore propounds here this parable for [d] explanation thereof, as it is apparent by the 16. verſe of this preſent Chapter, as alſo by the laſt words of the former. Many that are firſt ſhall be laſt, and the laſt ſhall be firſt: for the kingdome of heauen,&c.

[f] Luther poſtil. maior.in loc.

In the whole parable, three points are to be noted: our { calling. worke. reward.

In our calling, obſerue the { Author of our calling; God. diuerſitie of our calling, in reſpect of { time, called at houre, 3.6.9.11. place. ſome called in the market, and other elſe where.

God is termed here pater-familias, in reſpect of his [g] fatherly loue and care, diſpoſing of all things in the Catholike Church, with greater prouidence and wiſedome, than any diſcreet houſholder can manage the priuate buſineſſe of his particular familie. So that all Atheiſts and Epicures holding that either there is no God, or that he cares not for the things on earth, are confuted by this one word, that God is an houſholder, a Father of his Church.

[g] Culman.con. 2. in locum.

Went out] Whither can he goe, that is euery where? [h] Liceat dicere, exijt à ſe, vt intret in te, imo vt te conuertet in ſe. God went out from his maieſtie, which is vnknowne, vnto his mercy which is manifeſted in all his workes, in gouerning the Church eſpecially, ſending labourers into his harueſt, and workmen into his vineyard.

[h] Pont.in loc.

If then all labourers in the vineyard are called by God, [i] ſuch as are buſied in vnlawfull profeſſions and occupations, not allowed by his word, are not ſeruants of the Lord but hirelings of Satan.

[i] Marlorat. ex Caluin.in loc.

The ſecond point obſeruable in our calling, is the diuerſitie thereof in reſpect of time and place. God calls in diuers houres of the day; [k] that is, in diuers ages of the world, and in diuers yeeres of our age. In the time before the Law, God called Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and ſuch like. In the time vnder the Law, Moſes, Dauid, Eſay, together with other Kings and Prophets: in the time after the Law, the bleſſed Apoſtles, Martyrs, Confeſſors. Or as [l] other, God called ſome ſome in the firſt houre, as Adam and the Patriarkes vntill Noah: ſome in the third houre, as all Noahs poſteritie to Abraham: ſome in the ſixt houre, as all his ſeruants, who liued betweene Abraham and Moſes: ſome in the ninth houre, as Moſes and the Prophets: ſome in the eleuenth houre, as Peter and Paul; and all other who liued ſince Chriſts time, which is hora nouiſſima, the laſt houre, Ioh. 1 Epiſt.2.18. 1.Cor.10.11. But I thinke with S. Hierome, that this difference is meant of our age, rather than of the worlds age. For our great Maſter calls ſome to labour in his vineyard at the firſt houre of the day, that is, in their childhood, as Samuel, Ieremie, Iohn the Baptiſt; each whereof might ſay with the [m] Pſalmographer, O Lord, thou waſt mine hope when I hanged yet vpon my mothers breſts: Thou art my God euen from my mothers wombe. Other he calls in the third houre, that is, in their youth, as Daniel the Prophet, and Iohn the Euangeliſt; of whom [n] S. Hierome, Diſcipulum minimum Ieſus amauit pluriſmum. Other in the ſixt houre, that is, in their middle age, as Peter and Andrew. Other in the eleuenth houre, that is, in their old age, as Gamaliel and Ioſeph of Arimathea; ſome not only in the laſt houre of the day, but euen in the laſt minute of the houre, as the theefe vpon the Croſſe, *Luk.*23.

[m] Pſal.22.9.

[n] *Ad Heliodorũ, tom.*1 *fol.*4.

Againe this our calling is diuers in reſpect of the place: for God calls ſome from their [o] ſhips, and ſome from their [p] ſhops, and ſome from vnder the [q] hedges, and ſome from the market, as it is here, verſe 3.

[o] Matt.4.19.
[q] Luk.14.23.

Now this diuers calling at diuers times, and in diuers places, intimates a { caueat, for ſuch as are called. / comfort, for ſuch as are not called.

A caueat for ſuch as are called, that they neither magnifie themſelues, nor vilifie other. It proceeds not from our good works, but from Gods good will, that we be called; and he being infinitly rich in mercy, can call the moſt wicked ruffian, euen though he haue denied Chriſt with Peter, or ſold Chriſt with Iudas, or crucified Chriſt with Pilate. [r] Iudge not therefore, that ye be not iudged: iudge not maliciouſly, iudge not curiouſly. The counſell of Gods election is ſecret: [s] whom he did predeſtinate, them alſo he calleth; and whom he calleth, he iuſtifieth; and whom he iuſtifieth, he ſanctifieth in his good time: and therefore iudge not before the time.

[s] Rom 8.30.

This alſo may [t] comfort ſuch as feele not themſelues as yet ſufficiently called. Our Good Lord calls at all times, in all places: he called Paul in the middeſt of his furie, [u] breathing out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the profeſſors of the faith. He called Cardinall [x] Vergerius as he was running away: for being ſuſpected in the Court of Rome, to fauour the Goſpellers, and purpoſing to cleare himſelfe of that ſuſpition, intended to write a booke againſt them; and for that purpoſe reading their workes, and examining their arguments exactly, was fully reſolued that their doctrine was good, and alſo perſwaded his brother, the Biſhop of Pola, to receiue the ſame. He called Henry 8. Wickliſ, Luther, in their diſcontent. Henry 8. of famous memorie, diſpleaſed with the Pope for denying his diuorce, baniſhed all forraine iuriſdiction, and immediatly made publike profeſſion of the Goſpell [y] Iohn Wickliſ, with other, being thruſt out of Canterbury Colledge in Oxford, and Monkes placed in their roome by the Popes edict, and Simon Langham Archbiſhop of Canterburies power, at the laſt grew ſo diſcontent, that hee miſliked Pope, Biſhop, Monkes and all; and afterward it pleaſed God to ſhew him the bright beames of his truth, in ſo much that Wickliſ was a wicket and a doore of entrance to many who liued in that time of ignorance.

[a] In Epitaphijs.

Hitherto concerning our calling into the vineyard. The next obseruable point is our working. This vineyard, as the [b] Prophet tells vs, is the Church. Surely, the vineyard of the Lord is the house of Israel, and the men of Iudah are his pleasant plant. All men are either loyterers in the market of the world, or else labourers in the vineyard of the Church.

[b] Esay. 5. 7.

Of such as stand in the market idle there be foure sorts: some {sell, pawne, lose, giue} their soules.

Some sell: for as it is said of the Lawyer, that he hath linguam venalem, a tongue to be bought and sold; so it may be said of the couetous man, that hee hath animam venalem, a soule to be [c] sold; so the [d] voluptuous man doth sell his soule for pleasures, as Esau did his birth-right for a messe of pottage; so the proud man doth sell his soule for aduancement, as Alexander the sixth is said to haue done for his Popedome. The Lord saith, Thou shalt haue no other Gods but me, neither in heauen aboue, nor in earth beneath, nor in the water vnder the earth; and yet as the Scripture doth intimate, the proud man makes honour his god, the couetous man gold his god, the voluptuous man his belly his god. The first hath his Idoll as it were in the aire; the second his Idoll in the earth; and the third his Idoll in the water, as [e] one pithily notes vpon the second commandement.

Secondly, some pawne their soules: albeit they be not so desperate, so giuen ouer to commit sinne with greedinesse, as to sell their soules right out, yet for their profit and pleasure they will be content to pawne their soules vnto the deuill for a time: so Dauid in committing adulterie did as it were pawne his soule; Noah when he was drunke did pawne his soule; Peter in denying Christ did also pawne his soule: but these being all labourers in Gods vineyard redeemed their soules againe, with vnfained and hearty repentance. But let vs take heed how we play the merchant-venturers in this case: for our soule is our best iewel, of greater value then the whole world, and the deuill is the craftiest vsurer and greatest oppressor that euer was; if he can get neuer so little advantage, if we keepe not day with him, he will be sure at the iudgement day to call for iustice, and to claime his owne, speaking vnto God, as the King of Sodome did vnto Abraham; [f] Da mihi animas, cætera tolle tibi: Giue me the soules which haue beene pawned and forfeited vnto me, the rest take to thy selfe.

[f] Genes. 14. 21

There is another kinde of pawning of soules, and that is vnto God; for Princes and Prelates, Ministers and Masters are bound to God as it were in goods and body for all such as are vnder them: as the Prophet said vnto King [g] Ahab: Keepe this man; if he be lost, and want, thy life shall goe for his life. But if thou doest thy best endeuour, though the wicked incorrigible sinner die for his iniquitie, thou shalt [h] deliuer thy soule, redeeme thy pawne, and when euening is come, the Lord of the vineyard shall giue thee thy reward.

Thirdly, some lose their soules; as carnall and careless Gospellers, ignorant negligent people, who though they come to Church either for fashion or feare, yet, alas, they seldome or neuer thinke of their poore soule, from whence it came, or wither it shall goe, trifling away the time in the market, neither buying, nor selling, nor giuing, but idly gaping and gazing vpon other, a fit prey for the cut-purse, betraying themselues and their soules vnto that old cunnicatcher Satan, who goes about daily seeking whom he may deceiue, cunningly snatching and stealing such soules as are vnguarded, vnregarded. O blockish stupiditie! will you keepe your Chicken from the Kite, your Lambe from the Wolfe, your Faune from the hound, your Conies and Pigeons from the vermine; and will not you keepe your Soule from the Deuill, but idly loſe it without any chopping or changing in the market?

Fourthly, ſome giue their ſoules, as firſt the malitious and enuious perſon: for whereas an ambitious man hath a little honour for his ſoule, a couetous man a little profit for his ſoule, a voluptuous man a little pleaſure for his ſoule; the ſpightfull wretch hath nothing for his ſoule, but fretting and heart-griefe, like Cain, who ſaid of himſelfe, [i] whoſoeuer findeth me ſhall ſlay me.

[i] Gen. 4.14.

Secondly, ſuch as finally diſpaire, giue their ſoules away; for the deuill beſtoweth nothing in lieu thereof, but horror and hell of conſcience. The [k] diſtreſſed ſoule may comfort himſelfe with the concluſion of this parable: The firſt ſhall be laſt, and the laſt ſhall be firſt. The [l] laſt in their owne iudgment, the firſt in Gods eye.

Thirdly, ſuch as deſtroy their body, that the deuill may haue their ſoule, giue themſelues away for nothing: in one word, this is the caſe of all ſuch as ſtand idle in the market, they ſerue the deuils turne for nothing: for the wages of ſinne (ſaith [m] Paul) is death; and death is none of Gods workes, a nothing in nature. Why therfore doe you ſtand idle in the market all the day? Goe into the vineyard, ſaith the Lord and whatſoeuer is right I will giue you.

[m] Rom. 6.23.

Now there be diuerſe labourers in the vineyard, as there be diuerſe loyterers in the world; one plants, another waters, ſome digge, ſome dung: the [n] houſholder giues vnto one man a ſhredding hooke, to another a ſpade, to a third an hatchet: ſo there be * ſundry vocations and offices in the Church, diuerſities of gifts, and diuerſities of adminiſtrations, and diuerſities of operations, 1. Cor. 12. But about the trimming of the materiall vine, there be ° three ſorts of labourers eſpecially: the firſt, to proyne; the ſecond, to lay abroad, and vnderprop it; the third, to digge away the old mould, and to lay new to the roote: all which are ſo neceſſarie, that if any of them faile, the vine will ſoone decay.

[n] Hemingius in locum.
* Miles equis, piſcator aquis, & clericus hymnis: Nauta fretis, pugiles Marte, poeta metris.
* Eſay 5. 2.

No leſſe needfull in Chriſts Church are theſe three eſtates { Clergie. Magiſtracie. Commonaltie.

It belongs to the Prieſt to cut away ſuperfluous branches with the ſword of the Spirit. The Magiſtrate muſt protect, vnderſet, and hedge in the vine, leſt the wilde [p] Bore of the wood roote it vp, and the wilde beaſts of the field deuoure it. The common labourer muſt digge and till the ground, that he may get ſuſtenance for himſelfe and other. If no Prieſt, what would become of our ſpirituall life? If no Prince, what would become of our ciuill life? If no common people, what would become of our naturall life? We muſt all be labourers, and that painfull and profitable; painefull, called in this our parable thrice, workemen: Non otiandum in viâ, ſed laborandum in vineâ: There is no roome in the vineyard for ſluggiſhneſſe. [q] Curſed is he that doth the worke of the Lord negligently.

[q] Ierem. 48.10.

But becauſe Satan is the moſt [r] diligent Preacher in the world, and Heretikes [ſ] compaſſe ſea and land to make proſelytes, and to draw diſciples after them; it is not enough that labourers in the vineyard be painfull, except they be profitable: for as one ſayd of the Schoolemen; A man may magno conatu nihil agere, take great paine to little purpoſe; toyle much, and yet not helpe, but rather hurt the vineyard. The by-word, Euery man for himſelfe, and God for vs all, is wicked, impugning directly the end of euery vocation and honeſt kinde of life. That our paine might be profitable, we muſt labour in a lawfull calling lawfully, for the good of the vineyard, and then, as it followeth in the laſt point of the parable, we ſhall receiue Gods penny for out paine.

When euen was come, the Lord of the vineyard ſaid vnto his ſteward, Call the labourers, and giue them their hire, beginning at the laſt vntill the firſt.]

Wherein obſerue two things eſpecially: { When? at euening. What? giue them their hire.

The

The which is not a reward of merit, but of mercie; not of debt, but of fauour as it appeares here by the perſons,
- Of whom, God the Father.
- Through whom, the ſteward, God the Sonne.
- To whom, to the labourers; yet ſo, that the laſt be payed firſt, and the firſt laſt.

When euen.] All our time of labouring in the vineyard is termed in this and other places of holy writ, a day: [t] Behold now the day of ſaluation. [u] Exhort one another while it is called to day.

[t] 2. Cor. 6. 2.
[u] Heb. 3. 13.

Now our whole pilgrimage on earth is called a day, in two reſpects eſpecially:
1. For the ſhortneſſe of of our life.
2. For that after this our day is ſpent wee ſhall no longer worke.

All our time is but a day, and that a ſhort day, a winters day; for our eternall night is infinitely longer than our temporall day: and alas! it is but a little part of this little day that we worke. [x] Multum tempus eripitur nobis, plus ſubducitur, plurimum effluit: exigua pars eſt vitæ quam nos viuimus. It is the leaſt part of our life that wee truly liue; for we ſpend our youth, which is our morning, in toyes and vanities; and our old age; which is our afternoone, for the moſt part is loſt in carking and caring for things of this life; ſo that there remaineth only the noone of our day. As Epaminondas aptly, we muſt ſalute young men with good morrow, or welcome into the world; old men with good night, becauſe they be leauing the world; only thoſe of middle age, with good day.

Let vs examine then how we ſpend our noone. Though harueſt men vſe not toſleepe at noon, yet all we being labourers in Gods harueſt and vineyard ordinarily ſleepe almoſt halfe our time. Other houres we waſte in eating, other in playing, and that which is worſt of all, moſt of all in ſinning: all which time, we cannot properly be ſaid to liue: for as the Scripture teacheth vs plainely, bad workes are not the workes of light, but of night and darkeneſſe: a day miſ-ſpent is loſt. [y] Amici, diem perdidi.

[y] Titus Veſp. vti Sueton. in eius vita.

Similis, Captaine of the Guard to the Emperor Adrian, after he had retired himſelfe, and liued priuately ſeuen yeeres in the Countrey, confeſſed that he had liued only ſeuen yeeres, and cauſed to be written vpon his Tombe:

[z] Hic iacet Similis, cuius ætas
Multorum annorum fuit, ipſe
Septem duntaxat annos vixit.

[z] Xiphilinus in vita Adriani.

So, many religious men haue numbred their yeeres, not from the day of their birth, but of their new birth, from the beginning of their regeneration and repentance, reputing all that time loſt, which was idly miſ-pent in the market of the world: ſo that whether wee conſider our life of nature, or life of grace, our whole time may well be called a ſhort day.

Secondly, a day in regard of our eternall night, in which wee cannot worke; for there is no grace in the graue, nor health in hell. I muſt worke the workes of him that ſent me, (ſaith [a] Chriſt) while it is day; the night commeth when no man can worke. When euen is come, the Lord of the vineyard ſhall ſay to his ſteward call the laborers, & giue them their hire. This euen is either [b] euery mans end, or elſe the [c] worlds end; the particular houre of our death, or the gẽerall day of iudgment: at [d] both which as well the loyterer as the laborer ſhall receiue his reward.

[b] Soarez tract. 2 in Matt. 20.
[c] Theophylact. in locum.
[d] Culman & Maldonat. in locum.

The next point to be diſcuſſed, is, what? Giue them their hire.] The word hire doth exceedingly trouble the papiſts; for they cannot, or at leaſt, will not vnderſtand, how eternall life may be both a reward and a gift: whereas it is demonſtrated in holy Scripture, that the immortall crowne of glory is called a reward ſecundùm quid onely, but a gift ſimpliciter. If we compare life euerlaſting to the worke, and looke no further, it is called a reward, Matth. 5. 12. Great is your reward in heauen: but examine the firſt originall from whence the worke it ſelfe alſo proceeds, and all is merely and wholly gift; Eternall life is the gift of God through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord: whereas the bleſſed Apoſtle ſaid, the wages of sinne is death. If there were any merits in our workes, the sequell of his speech [e] should haue beene. The wages of righteousnesse is eternall life; he saith not so, but the gift of God is eternall life; and so by that which he doth not say, as also by that which he doth say, sheweth that there is no place for merit. [f] If then it be of grace, it is no more of workes; otherwise grace is no grace: [g] Gratia non erit gratia vllo modo, nisi sit gratuita omni modo: Grace is not grace in any sort, if it be not free in euery sort.

In this controuersie, the Scriptures, and Fathers, and many learned Papists are on our side. God saith in the [h] law, that hee will shew mercy to such as keepe his Commandements: Ergo, reward is giuen of mercy to them that fulfill the law. Christ saith in the [i] Gospell It is your Fathers pleasure to giue you a kingdome. And [k] Paul, The sufferings of this life are not worthy of the glory in the life to come.

The most iudicious and the most indifferent for both parties among the Fathers is Augustine, who repeats in his [l] workes often this one golden sentence; Deus coronat dona sua, non merita nostra: God crowneth his owne gifts, not our merits: according to that of [m] Dauid; He crowneth vs with compassion and louing kindnes. [n] Eternall life should be rendred as due vnto thee, if of thy selfe thou hadst the righteousnesse to which it is due. But of his fulnesse wee receiue, not onely grace, now to liue iustly in our labours vnto the end, but also grace for this grace, that afterward we may liue in rest without end; [o] Hæc est gratia gratis data, non meritis operantis, sed miseratione donantis. [p] Origen saith, he can hardly be perswaded that there can be any worke, which by debt may require reward at Gods hand, inasmuch as it is by his gift, that we are able to doe, or thinke, or speake any thing that is good. Marke, [q] the Hermite, saith; he that doth good seeking reward thereby, serueth not God, but his owne will.

[r] Prosper vpon the words of my text: The Lord of the vineyard gaue the same hire, not as paying a price to their labour, but powring forth the riches of his goodnesse to them whom he chose without workes, that euen they also who haue sweat with much labour, and haue receiued no more then the last, may vnderstand that they haue receiued a gift of grace, not wages for their worke. So, Saint Hierome and Oecumenius in Rom. 8. Greg. Magnus in Psalm. 7. pœnitent. Ambros. lib. 1. de interpell. cap. 1. & in Luc. lib. 6. cap 17. Fulgentius ad Monimum, lib. 1. Many learned Papists agree with vs also both in their positions and practise. [s] Bernard in his sermon vpon the Annunciation, said, that the merits of men are not such as that life eternall by right is owing for them: his reason is this; Omnia merita, Dei dona sunt, & ita homo magis propter ipsa Deo debitor est, quàm Deus homini. For, saith he, all our merits are the gifts of God: and so man is rather a debtor to God for them, then God to man. And in [t] another place; Meritum meũ miseratio Domini, &c. My merit is Gods mercy, &c.

[u] Stella: God my protector looke not vpon me; but first looke vpon thine only sonne: place betweene me and thee, his crosse, his bloud, his passion, his merit; that so thy iustice passing thorow his blood, when it commeth at the last to me, it may be gentle and full of mercy.

Frier Ferus in his commentaries vpon this place, saith, that the parable of the vineard teacheth, that whatsoeuer God giueth vs, is of grace: not of debt. [x] Id in his Postill he professeth openly, that if it were not for pride, this question would soone be at an end.

[y] Gregorius Ariminensis vpon Peter Lombard, defends at large, that no worke done by man, though comming from the greatest charity, meriteth of condignity, either eternall life, or any other reward temporall: because euery such worke is the gift of God. His owne words are; Ex hoc infero, quod ne dũ vitã æternã, sed nec alius alterius præmij æterni vel temporalis aliquis actus hominis ex quãtacũq; charitate elicitus est de condigno meritorius apud Deum, quia quilibet talis est donum dei.

Cardinall [z] Bellarmine, after hee had a long time trauelled and wearied himselfe in the questions of iustification, at the last holds it the safest course to repose our whole trust in the onely mercies of God: propter incertitudinem

Propriæ iuſtitiæ & periculum inanis gloriæ, tutiſſimum eſt fiduciam totam in ſolâ Dei miſericordiâ & benignitate reponere.

Thus, as you ſee, Papiſts of the beſt note for learning, accord with vs in the pulpit and ſchoole. Now for their practiſe, that learned Clerke [a] Chemnitius hath obſerued long ſince, the moſt of them in the queſtion of iuſtification by workes haue ſaid one thing thing in their diſputations, and another in their meditations, otherwiſe behauing themſelues at their death, then in their life. For when once they ſee that they muſt appeare before the barre of Gods iuſtice, they plead for the moſt part, guilty, crauing a Pſalme of mercy: Miſerere mei Deus, & ſecundum multitudinem miſerationum tuarum, dele iniquitatem meam.

Pope [b] Gregory counſelleth vs, vt reſta, quæ agimus, ſciendo neſciamus, in plaine Engliſh, to take no further notice of our good workes, but to renounce them.

[c] Anſelmus, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, confeſſeth often in his meditations: that all his life was either vnprofitable or damnable. Whereupon he concludes at laſt: * Quid ergo reſtat ô peccator, niſi vt in totâ vitâ tuâ deplores totam vitam tuam? What remaines to be done in our whole life, but to lament for the ſinnes of our whole life?

Abbot [d] Bernard hath this ſweet ſaying: Sufficit ad meritum ſcire quòd non ſufficiant merita. Penury of merit is a dangerous pouerty, preſumption, deceitfull riches. I will therefore (ſaith he) pray with [e] Salomon, O Lord, giue me neither pouerty nor riches; neither want of merit, neither abundance of preſumption.

Sherwin, a Seminary Prieſt, [f] executed for treaſon with Edmund Champion at Tiborne, when he was in the cart, ready to dye, though he held himſelfe a Martyr for the Catholike faith, acknowledged notwithſtanding ingenuouſly, the miſeries, imperfections, and corruptions of his owne vile nature, relying wholly vpon Chriſt, and inuocating no Saint but his Sauiour, ending his life with theſe words; O Ieſus, Ieſus, Ieſus, be to me a Ieſus.

But the truth of this doctrine doth appeare more plainely by the conſideration of the perſons here mentioned, of whom, through whom, to whom. Firſt, of whom, the Lord of the vineyard, that is, God the Father, who ſaith in the 15. verſe, that the eternall pennie is his owne, and that he may doe with it what he liſt. If it were debt, then not his owne, neither could he diſpoſe of it as he will. In execution, the worke goeth before the reward; as here the labour before the hire: but in Gods intention the reward is before the worke. God therefore giueth vs grace to worke well, becauſe formerly by his election he giueth vs eternall life: [g] Whom he doth predeſtinate, them he calleth; and whom he calleth, he iuſtifieth; and whom he iuſtifieth, them he glorifieth. And ſo his mercy is [h] from euerlaſting to euerlaſting, from euerlaſting predeſtination, to euerlaſting glorification.

Happily ſome will ſay; promiſe is debt: but God promiſed and couenanted with the labourers in the ſecond verſe, to giue them a pennie. Anſwere is made that this very promiſe is mercy on Gods part, not merit on our part: by promiſe he bindeth himſelfe, but by merit we binde him vnto vs. It is in his owne power to promiſe, and without promiſe he ſhould be tied vnto nothing: but whether there be promiſe or not, he is tied in iuſtice to reward deſert. If a man deſerue a penny, he muſt haue a pennie; for God infinitely rich in mercy, doth highly ſcorne to owe any labourer a farthing: but if this pennie be due not by any performance of man, but only by the promiſe of God, it cannot truly be called a reward of debt, but of fauour; not purchaſe, but inheritance. [i] Come ye bleſſed of my Father inherit the kingdome prepared for you, &c.

Inheritance is a matter of birth, and not of induſtrie. The younger brother often is of better deſert then the elder; yet that cannot make him his fathers heire. When therefore the Scripture ſets forth vnto vs eternall life, vnder the condition of inheritance; it teacheth vs plainly, that we cannot obtaine it by merit; but that God electing vs his children, before any worke, giueth vs freely the ſtate and prerogatiue thereof.

The Goſpell. Lvke 8. 4. vnto 16.

When much people were gathered togither, and were come to him out of all Cities, he ſpake by a ſimilitude: The ſower went out to ſow, &c.

OVr Sauiour Chriſt in this Scripture {propoundeth / expoundeth} a parable.

In the propounding, three points are regardable: the {Occaſion: When much people, &c. verſ. 4. / Parable: The ſower went out to ſow: ver. 5. 6. &c. / Concluſion: He that hath eares to heare, let him heare: verſ. 8.}

The peoples preſſing [r] occaſioned Chriſt to deliuer this parable: wherein obſerue, [ſ] the {diligence of the people in hearing. / care of Chriſt in inſtructing.}

The peoples earneſt deſire to heare doth appeare, in that they were a multitude: ὄχλος πολύς, a very great multitude; as it is in our vulgar Engliſh, much people, gathered togither; many from many cities; in zeale ſo good, in number ſo great, that preſſing vpon Chriſt by the ſea ſide, he was faine to leape into a ſhip, and make that his Pulpit, as S. Matthew reports in his [t] Goſpell.

This peoples patterne condemnes our peoples practiſe, who will not runne out of the citie into the country, nor out of the country into the city to heare Chriſt, except it be vpon hatred or curioſitie, faction or affection.

Vnder the cruell perſecution of [v] Dioclesian twenty thouſand Chriſtians in Nicomedia were burned in the Temple, being all aſſembled to celebrate the birth of Chriſt. And [x] Hierome makes mention, how that at Mentz in Germanie, the city being taken, many thouſands were ſlaine in the Church. And what maſſacres haue lately beene in England, France, Flanders, is not vnknowne vnto ſuch as haue had either open eies or eares. Happy then are the eyes which ſee the things that we may ſee: for we liuing vnder the peaceable gouernment of a moſt religious Prince, may come to Church in peace, heare in peace, depart in peace: we may come in our ſlippers and ſit on our cuſhions. If then Chriſt doe not hold vs by the eares, as [y] Socrates did Alcibiades, if we doe not preſſe to heare him, as the people did here, he will one day ſpeake of vs, as he did of Hieruſalem: [z] How often would I haue gathered you together, as the henne doth her chickens vnder her wings, and yee would not? [a] I haue called, and yee refuſed, I haue ſtretched out mine hand, and none would regard: But becauſe yee deſpiſed all my counſell, and would none of my correction; I will alſo laugh at your deſtruction, and mocke when your feare commeth, &c.

Happily ſome will obiect: All the people whom yee commend came not vnto Chriſt with a good minde and honeſt heart to be taught: it may be ſome came in malice to carp at him; other in curioſitie to wonder at his miracles; other vpon couetouſneſſe, to reape ſome temporall benefit by him, [b] according to which ſeuerall humours, our Sauiour was occaſioned to propound this parable of the ſower ſowing his ſeed in diuerſe lands increaſing diuerſly.

Well howſoeuer yee come, yet come vnto Chriſt: if ye come with an intent to carpe, come: for happily while ye thinke to catch the Preacher, he may catch you, as [c] Ambroſe did Auguſtine: if ye come with a minde to ſleepe at the Temple, yet come; for it may be (ſaith [d] B. Latimer) Almighty God will take you napping: if you come with a reſolution to ſteale, yet come; for peraduenture the firſt word that yee heare, will be, Thou ſhalt not ſteale: or, Let him that hath ſtollen, ſteale no more. [e] The word of God is pure, and conuerteth the ſoule: perfect and pure, formaliter and effectiuè, both in it ſelfe pure, and making other pure; Come then howſoeuer yee ſtand affected, euermore preſſe to Chriſt, out of all cities and villages.

The care of Christ in instructing, is seene { 1. In that he went out of his house (saith [f] Matthew) to a more publike, large, fit place for teaching. 2. For that he spake by a similitude.

By the former all [g] Preachers may learne to take their best hint and opportunity for the propagating of the Gospell, and instructing of Gods people, leauing sometime their owne little cures, and vpon good occasion to preach vnto much people, sowing their seed in a more large field, and profiting euen so many as they can.

For the second point, Diuines haue rendred sundry reasons, why Christ vsed to speake by parables: as first, [h] that the Scripture might be fulfilled: I will open my mouth in a parable, Psal. 78. 2.

Secondly, [i] that we might know that Christ spake with the same spirit, by which all Gods holy Prophets in old time spake, whose writings are full of parables.

Thirdly, [k] that he might descend vnto the capacitie of the most simple, who best vnderstand and remember homely comparisons; as the [l] Poet truly:

Segnius irritant animos demissa per aures.
Quàm quæ sunt oculis subiecta fidelibus.

Fourthly, [m] that his auditors might hereby take occasion to moue doubts, and aske questions, as the Disciples in the 9. verse: What manner of similitude is this.

Fiftly, that the mysteries of Gods heauenly kingdome might not be reuealed vnto the scornefull; as Christ himselfe teacheth in the tenth verse: To you it is giuen to know the Secrets of the kingdome; but to other in parables, that when they see, they should not see &c.

Sixtly, that euery man in his occupation and ordinary vocation, might be taught those things which concerne his soules health: as this parable may bee termed the ploughmans Gospell, The seed is the word of God, &c. He that meditates on it, when he plougheth his ground, may haue a [n] sermon alway before him, euery furrow being a line, euery graine of corne a lesson bringing forth some fruite.

The sower went out to sow his seed] S. [o] Augustine writeth vpon the words, Aperiam in parabola os meum, eloquar propositiones ab initio, wisheth; vtinam qui dixit aperiam os meum in parabolis, ita aperiret etiam ipsas parabolas; & sicut eloquitur propositiones, ita etiam eloqueretur earum expositiones. Here S. Augustines prayer is heard. for Christ giues an exposition of his proposition; and therefore wee must [p] take heed, thot we neither detract nor adde any thing to it: Opus [q] habet lectore non interprete.

And as he said these things he cried, he that hath eares.]: He cried to manifest his affection and our dulnesse: excepting this occasion he did not crie aboue three or foure times in all his life. He cried as he taught in the Temple, Iohn 7. 38. He cried when he raised vp Lazarus from the dead, Ioh 11. 43. He cried, Ioh. 12. 44. He cried on the Crosse, Matth. 27. at all which times he deliuered matter of great consequence. This sentence then, He that hath eares to heare let him heare, being vttered vpon a cry, must not lightly be respected of vs. All men for the most part haue both their eares, but not to heare. The [r] man sicke of the gout, hath both his feet, but not to walke: He that is purblind, hath both his eyes, but not to see cleerly: he that is manicled by the Magistrate for some fault, hath both his hands; but so long as they are bound they cannot doe their office. So most men haue eares, but few men haue eares to heare, namely, to heare that which is good, and to heare that which is good, well. [t] Aures audiendi sunt aures mentis, scilicet intelligendi, & faciendi quæ iussa sunt.

A good eare, saith the [u] Wiseman, will gladly harken vnto wisdome: where note two lessons as concerning hearing: first, that we hearken vnto nothing but that which is good, vnto wisdome. Secondly, that wee hearken vnto it gladly; with a great desire to learne: for in Scripture phrase, obaudire is obedire:

a Exod. 21. 6. Deut. 15. 17. We read in the a law, that if a bond ſeruant will not be made free, but ſtay ſtill with his maſter, he ſhall be brought before the Iudges, and ſet to the doore or the poſt, and his maſter ſhall boare his eare thorow with an aule, and ſo hee ſhall ſerue him for euer. Euery ſinner is the deuills vaſſall: and therefore if he refuſe to be free, when liberty and free grace of the Goſpell is offered, ere it be long the deuill will ſo boare his eares, as that they ſhall be made vnfit to heare, and then he ſhall ſerue his old maſter for euer. He may peraduenture come to Church and heare the ſermon; but he ſhall be like the man, b that beholds his face in a glaſſe: for when he hath conſidered himſelfe, he goeth his way, and forgetts immediatly what manner of one he was.

Wherefore, when ye come to Chriſt, bring your eares with you, eares to heare ſo to heare, that ye may vnderſtand; ſo vnderſtand that ye may remember; ſo remember, that ye may practiſe; ſo practiſe, that ye may continue; ſo Gods ſeed ſhall be ſowen in good ground, and bring forth fruit, in ſome thirty, in ſome ſixtie, in ſome an hundred fold, &c.

c Ramus de Relig. lib. 2. cap 6. For the firſt, the Sabbath is aptly termed a c ſchoole-day, wherein all Gods people muſt come to the Temple, which is the ſchoole, to learne his word their leſſon. In this ſeminary Chriſt is the chiefe ſeed-man, ſtiled in the beginning of this parable, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, The ſower. In this vniuerſitie Chriſt is the prime Doctor: d Vnus eſt doctor veſter; e cuius ſchola in terris, cathedra in cœlis. His Apoſtles ſowed as vnder-bailiffes in his field: and his Preachers in our time teach as vnder-vſhers in his ſchoole.

e Aug. ſer. 4. in Feſt. Ioan. Bapt.

As then in the ſchooles of humane knowledge, ſo ſoone as the lecture is read, it is the ſchollers dutie to queſtion among themſelues how to parſe and conſtrue it, and when they doubt, to haue recourſe to their Grammer rules, by which all conſtruction is examined: and when they doe not vnderſtand an hard rule, to come for a reſolution vnto their Maſter, who is as it were a liuing Grammer and a walking booke.

So likewiſe in Gods Academy in the Diuinitie ſchoole when either the lecture of the Law is read, or ſermon on the Gotpell ended, it is your part to reaſon among your ſelues as you walke abroad in the fields, or talke at home in your houſe; how this and that may be conſtrued; and when you cannot reſolue one another, with the men of f Beræa, to ſearch the Scripture daily, whether thoſe things are ſo, to trie the ſpirits of men by the ſpirit of God: for the Bible is our Diuinitie Grammer, according to which all our leſſons ought to be parſed and conſtrued. Sauing knowledge of God is a gift and grace: for the [n] naturall man vnderſtands not the things of God; he beleeues oculô magis quàm oraculo, truſting his fiue ſenſes more then the foure Goſpells. It is a myſterie reuealed vnto you, but hidden vnto many, whoſe eyes the [o] god of this world hath darkned, that ſeeing they ſhould not diſcerne, and hearing they ſhould not vnderſtand. O Father, ſaith Chriſt, [p] thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe, and haſt opened them vnto babes. It is ſo, becauſe thy good pleaſure was ſuch. As it is our Fathers will alone to giue vs a kingdome; ſo likewiſe his good will alone to make vs know the ſecrets of his kingdome.

The heauens are high, what canſt thou doe? It is deeper then the hell, how canſt thou know it? The meaſure thereof is longer then the earth, and it is broader then the ſea.* God therefore requires rather we ſhould remember what he hath beene to vs, then curiouſly to ſeeke what he is in himſelfe.

[q] Iob. 11. 7.

But as for the ſecrets of his kingdome, he reueales them vnto the heires of his kingdome; theſe myſteries may, yea muſt be knowne: and therefore Chriſt cried, He that hath eares, let him heare. Teaching hereby that in making our election ſure, we muſt not begin à priori, but à poſteriori: ſuch as with a good heart heare the word and keepe it, and bring forth fruit through patience, ſhall inherit the kingdome of God; [r] but the kingdome of God ſhall be taken away from ſuch as are fruitleſſe, from ſuch as are faithleſſe.

This is the parable.] Bare reading without vnderſtanding, is bare feeding: the true meaning of the Scripture is the true Manna: [s] for as a man, ſo the Bible conſiſts of a body and a ſoule. For Gods husbandmen sow Gods seede, but the deuils factor, as Saint [f] Paul plainly, the doctrines of deuils. As for example, this is pure seed; Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serue. But to worship Angels and Saints, and to giue the same kind of worship to the crucifix, which is due to Christ, is sophisticate seed. The Epistle. 1. Cor. 13.

Though I speake with tongues of men and Angels, &c.

THe Bible is the body of all holy religion; and this little Chapter is as it were, an abridgement of all the Bible: for it is a tract of loue, which is the [n] complement of the Law, and [o] supplement of the Gospell. All the Scripture teaching nothing elſe (saith [p] Augustine) but that we must loue our neighbour for God, and God for himselfe. [q] Nihil præcipit nisi charitatem, nec culpat nisi cupiditatem: it forbids nothing but lust, and enioynes nothing but loue: for without [r] loue, there is no true faith; and without faith, [s] all our righteousnesse is sinne.

[p] De doct. Christ lib. 2. cap. 7.
[q] Ibidem. lib. 3. cap. 10.
[r] Galat 5. 6.
[s] Rom. 14. 23.

S. Paul therefore doth extoll in this Chapter above all other, this one vertue:

1. Largely, shewing that it surpasseth all other graces in [t] two things: { Vse: verse 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. / Continuance: ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.
2. Briefly, by way of [v] recapitulation in the last verse: Now abideth faith, hope, and loue, euen these three: but the cheife is loue.

[t] Gorran & Rez. in loc.
[v] Calu. Institut. lib. 3. c. 18. §. 5.

Charitie doth excell in vse: for all other gifts without it are nothing auaileable to saluation, as Paul proues by this induction; If I speake with tongues of men and Angels, &c.

All

All vertues are either { Intellectuall : in { Accurate speech : vers. 1. / Other knowledge : vers. 2. } / Morall : in { Doing: vers. 3. Though I feed the poore with all my goods. / Suffering : Though I giue my body to be burned, &c. } }

Though I speake with the tongues of men.] [x] That is, of all men. If I had vnderstanding in all languages, and Art to parle in them all: If a man could speake so many tongues as our late Soueraigne of blessed memory Queene Elizabeth, of whom the diuine [y] Poet, as a Diuine truly; not as a Poet flateringly:

That Rome, Rheine, Rhone, Greece, Spaine and Italie, Plead all for right in her natiuitie.

If a man could discourse in so many languages as Mythridates, of whom [z] Volaterane reports, that he well vnderstood 22. sundry tongues; or as [a] other 25. If a man could thunder in an Oration, as Aristophanes sayd of Pericles; or tune his note so sweetly, that he could moue mountaines and stony rockes with Orpheus; or fetch soules out of hell, as fabulous antiquitie fained of Mercurie. Though a man could hold the people by the eares, and carry them vp and downe the country like pitchers: as [b] Socrates did Alcibiades; and steale away their hearts, as [c] Absalon did in Israel. If a man were so bewitching an Orator, that he could [d] pro arbitrio tollere, extollere, amplificare, extenuare magicis quasi viribus eloquentiæ in quam velit faciem habitumq; transformare: so subtill a disputer, as that he could make quidlibet ex quolibet, euery thing of any thing, yet without loue, were he nothing.

Yea, though a man could speake with the tongues of Angels, [e] that is, of the learned Priests and Prophets, who were Gods [f] Angels and messengers. If a man had the siluer [g] trumpet of Hilarie; or the golden mouth of Chrysostome; or the mellifluous speech of Origen, [h] cuius ex ore non tam verba quam mella fluere videntur. If a man were so painfull in preaching, that, as [i] Saint Peter, he could adde to the Church with one Sermon, about three thousand soules: or as it is [k] recorded of venerable Beda, fondly and falsly, that he could make the very stones applaud his notes, and say, Amen.

Or as [l] other expound it, hyperbolically: though a man should speake like the glorious Angels, as Paul, Gal. 1. 8. Though an Angell from heauen should preach vnto you: [m] si quæ sint Angelorum linguæ. Giue me leaue to adde one thing more to this hyperbolicall supposition. If a man could speake like God, as antiquitie reports of [n] Plato; that if Iupiter himselfe should speake Greeke, he would vse no other phrase but his. And of [o] Chrysippus, that if the gods should speake logicke, they would haue none but his. Or as the people blasphemously of Herod, Act. 12. The voice of God, and not of man. Though, I say, we could speake with tongues of men, of Angels, of God, if it were possible, and haue not loue, wee were but as a sounding brasse, or as a tincking cymball: [p] we might happily pleasure other, but not profit our selues vnto saluation. Herein [q] resembling Balaams Asse, who by speaking, bettered her Master, not her selfe.

A plaine peece of brasse makes but a plaine noyse, Tinkers musicke; but a tinckling cymball, in regard of the concauitie, yeelds a various sound, a more pleasant stroke. So rude speakers are like sounding brasse; [r] but the curious and iudicious, adorned with multiplicity of distinctions, and varietie of good learning, are as a tinckling cymball, or more tickling delight to their hearers; and yet if they preach without loue, their sound is without life. Qui non diligit fratrem, manet in morte, saith [s] S. Iohn. Such fitly resemble the sermon-bell, which calls other to the Church, but heares nothing it selfe; it weares out to his owne hurt, though others good.

Nay, when Auditors are perswaded thorowly, that their Pastors instruct not out of charitie, their plaine doctrines are but as sounding brasse, tedious as the Tinkers note; their accurate sermons as a tinckling cymball, which onely pierce nature of poiſon, and ſome effects of that malignity, which is a ſwelling. If I ſpeake with the tongues of men and Angels, and had not charitie, it were but as a tinckling cymball. Not but that it is an excellent thing to ſpeake with tongues of men and Angels, and a farre more noble treaſure to poſſeſſe all knowledge. For Chriſt ſayd of his Apoſtles: that they were the light of the world, and the worthy Doctors ſucceeding, were [k] luminaria magna, great ſtarres in the firmament of the Church, by whoſe light, deſcending from the father of lights, we finde out the truth hidden in many darke places of the ſcripture. But the meaning of Paul is, if our knowledge be ſeuered from loue, and not referred to the good of men, and glory of God; it hath rather a ſounding glory, then a meriting vertue; though it ſeeme to be neuer ſo much, it is a very nothing.

[k] Baron. Epiſt. Clem. 8. præfix. tom. 4. annal.

The [l] Papiſts out of theſe words; if I haue all faith, ſo that I can remoue mountaines, and haue not charitie, I am nothing; gather two concluſions againſt vs: The firſt is, that true faith, may be without loue: the ſecond, that faith alone without good workes is nothing worth in the buſineſſe of our iuſtification.

To the firſt, anſwer is made, that the ſpeech of Paul is not a categoricall propoſition, but an hypotheticall ſuppoſition; [m] if it were poſſible that all faith ſhould be without good workes, it were nothing.

[m] Luther. poſtil. maior in loc.

Secondly, Paul here [n] ſpeakes not of a iuſtifying faith, of that faith of beleeuers which is common and generall, but of the ſpeciall gift of faith to worke miracles, of which our Sauiour in the [o] Goſpell; If he had faith as much as a graine of muſtard ſeed, and ſhould ſay vnto this mulbery tree, Plucke thy ſelfe vp by the roots, and plant thy ſelfe in the ſea, it ſhould euen obey you. This he ſaid vnto the beleeuing Apoſtles; and therefore cannot be conſtrued of a ſauing faith, but of a miraculous faith: and ſo Saint Ambroſe notes vpon this text, to doe wonders, and to caſt out deuils by faith is nothing worth, except a man be an earneſt follower of good conuerſation.

[o] Luke 17. 6.

Our Diuines acknowledge that euery kinde of faith is not ioyned with loue: for there is a [p] dead faith, and there is a [q] liuely, whereby Chriſt liueth in vs, and we in Chriſt. There is a faith of [r] Diuels, and a faith of [f] Gods elect. There is a faith whereby the beleeuer ſhall neuer [t] periſh; and there is a faith, whereby ſome [u] beleeue for a time, and in the day of temptation fall away. There is a faith, which the world [x] deſtroyeth, and a faith which is our [y] victory, by which a Chriſtian ouercomes the world. There is a faith, whereby wee beleeue there is [z] a God; and there is a faith, whereby wee beleeue [a] in a God according to theſe differences of faith in Scripture, there is a faith without [b] workes, and there is a faith which worketh by [c] loue.

We ſay then of the faith of Gods elect, whereby we beleeue in God, to which the promiſe of Iuſtification and eternall ſaluation is made, that is a faith which cannot be ſeparated from charitie, but whereſoeuer it is, there is loue ioyned with it, [d] bringing forth the fruits of righteouſneſſe, which are by Ieſus Chriſt vnto the glory and praiſe of God. Inſeparabilis eſt bona vita à fide, quæ per dilectionem operatur, imò verò ea ipſa eſt bona vita, ſaith [e] Auguſtine; according to that of [f] Irenæus, to beleeue is to doe as God will: and therefore Beza tranſlates here, πίστιν, not omnem fidem, but totam fidem; implying not all kind of faith, but all faith of this kinde to worke miracles; as if Paul ſhould argue thus: If a man could worke neuer ſo many miracles, and faile in his morals, hee ſhould bee nequam, and nequam, is nequicquam, as our Apoſtle ſpeakes, a nothing.

The ſecond concluſion gathered out of theſe words againſt vs, is, that faith alone without charitie, nothing auaileth to iuſtification. Our anſwer is, that albeit faith is not ſolitaria, yet in our iuſtification it is ſola; [g] euen as the eye in regard of being is neuer alone from the head, yet in reſpect of ſeeing it is alone, for it is the eye onely that doth ſee, So faith ſubſiſts not without other graces of God, as hope, loue, &c. Yet in regard of the act of iuſtification it is alone without them all. For the further opening of this hard point, you muſt vnderſtand, that ſeparating of things one from another, is either [h] reall in the ſubiect, or mentall in the vnderſtanding: reall ſeparation of faith and charity we wholly deny. For [i] Bellarmine confeſſeth expreſly, that Luther, Melanćthon, Chemnitius, Caluin, and other learned Proteſtants haue taught, that good workes in ſome ſort be neceſſary to ſaluation, and that there is no true faith, vnleſſe it bring forth good workes, and be conioyned with charitie.

Separation mentall in vnderſtanding and conſideration is either negatiue or priuatiue. Negatiue, when in the vnderſtanding there is an affirming of one, and denying of another. Priuatiue, when of things that cannot be ſeparated indeed, yet a man vnderſtands the one, and omitteth to vnderſtand the other. As for example, though light and heate cannot bee ſeparated in the fire, yet a man may conſider the light, and not the heate: ſo then in our iuſtification, we doe not negatiuely ſeparate other graces from faith, as if faith exiſted alone without hope and loue, but priuatiuely making them effects and conſequents, not concurring cauſes of our iuſtification. Our aſſertion is: Faith conſidered without hope and charity, that is, hope and charity not conſidered with it, doth iuſtifie.

Chriſt Ieſus is our husband, and we are his ſpouſe: now the [k] Bridegroome muſt be alone with the Bride in his ſecret chamber, all the ſeruants and the family being put apart; afterward when the doore is opened, and hee commeth forth into the waiting roome, then let all the ſeruants and handmaids attend, then let hope doe her office, let loue doe the duties of loue; then, as S. [l] Peter exhorts, ioyne vertue with faith, and with vertue knowledge, and with knowledge temperance, &c. The [m] Papiſts obiect that loue is the life of faith. All faiths actiuity proceeds only from charity, and without which our faith is dead. So the Scripture plainly, that in Chriſt neither is circumciſion any thing, neither vncircumciſion: but faith which worketh by loue. Cardinall [n] Bellarmine reads impreſſa, paſſiuely, wrought by loue: diſagreeing herein from all the Fathers, and that which becomes him worſe, from the vulgar Latine, to which all Papiſts are tied by the Counſell of Trent, as alſo from the Rhemiſh tranſlation in Engliſh, which hath as our Teſtament: worketh, actiuely: for they foreſaw this abſurdity, that if they ſhould haue tranſlated faith worketh by loue, then it would haue followed that loue muſt needs be before faith, whereas all of them acknowledge faith to be before loue; according to that of [o] Auguſtine; Faith is giuen firſt, by which we obtaine the reſt: and [p] Altiſſiodorenſis in his golden Summe faith, that faith hope and charity, are a created trinity, reſembling the three diuine perſons vncreate. For the Sonne is begotten of the Father, and the holy Ghoſt proceeds from both: ſo ſtedfaſt hope is bred of faith, and loue doth iſſue from them both.

And [q] Bellarmine cites often in his workes out of Auguſtine: Domus Dei credendo fundatur, ſperando erigitur, diligendo perficitur: The foundation of Gods houſe in our ſoules is faith, the walles hope, the roofe charity. The Prophet in a viſion ſaw the tranſgreſſour againſt the tranſgreſſour, and the deſtroyer againſt the deſtroyer. So the Schoolemen oppoſe the Schoolemen, and their Champion Bellarmine fights againſt Bellarmine. For if faith be the foundation of all other vertues, as himſelfe writes, lib. 1. de Rom. pont. cap. 10. then it is not as he diſputes in lib. 2. de iuſtificat cap. 4. wrought by charity: but contrariwiſe charity doth ariſe from faith.

It is then an idle dreame to ſuppoſe that charity is incloſed in faith, as a Diamond is in a ring; for [r] Chriſt is the pretious pearle, which giues life and luſtre to the ring. The iuſt liue not by loue, but by faith in him. It is an improper ſpeech (as [s] our Diuines obſerue) to ſay that faith worketh by loue, as the body by the ſoule, the matter by the forme; for the ſoule rather worketh by the body, then the body by the ſoule. The matter is paſſiue, the forme actiue.

Secondly, we [t] ſay, that Paul in that text, faith which worketh by loue doth not intend iuſtification, but the whole courſe of a Chriſtian after his iuſtification: he ſhuts out of Gods kingdome nullifidians and merit-mongers on the left hand, nudifidian and carnall Goſpelkers on the right. In Chriſt neither circumciſion auaileth any thing, neither vncircumciſion, that is to ſay, no merit, nor worſhipping. No religious order in the world, but faith alone without any truſt in workes, auaileth before God. On the right hand he doth exclude ſlothfull and idle perſons, affirming that if faith only doe iuſtifie, then let vs worke nothing, but barely beleeue. Not ſo yee careleſſe generation, enemies of grace: for faith is operatiue working by loue. Paul therefore ſets forth in that excellent ſentence the whole perfection of a Chriſtian in this life, namely, that inwardly it conſiſts in faith toward God, and outwardly in good workes, and loue toward our neighbours: ſo that a man is a perfit Chriſtian inwardly through faith before God, who hath [u] no need of our workes; and outwardly before men, (whom our faith profiteth nothing) by loue.

Faith is the Chriſtians hand. Now an hand hath a property to reach out it ſelfe, and to receiue a gift, but it cannot cutt a peece of wood without an hatchet or ſaw, or ſome ſuch like inſtrument, yet by helpe of them it can either cut or diuide. Such is the nature of faith, it doth receiue Chriſt into the heart; but as for the duties of the firſt and ſecond table, faith cannot of it ſelfe bring them forth, no more than the hand can cut off it ſelfe; yet ioyne loue to faith, and then (as our Apoſtle) faith worketh through loue, performing all duties ſo well to man as God.

The property of true faith is, to receiue into it ſelfe. The nature of true loue is to lay out it ſelfe vnto other: faith then alone iuſtifieth, aprehending and applying Chriſts merits vnto it ſelfe; but it cannot manifeſt it ſelfe to other, except it be ioyned with loue: [x] Shew me thy faith out of thy workes. And thus as you ſee, that inward worke of iuſtification is aſcribed in holy Scripture to faith only; but outward workes of Sanctification, holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, to faith and loue iointly.

I refer the diſtreſſed ſoule to the comfortable Commentaries of Martin Luther vpon the Galathians; and the curious Diuine to Doctor Abbot his Apologie for the reformed Catholike, Tit. Iuſtification. For I will ingenuouſly confeſſe, that my conſcience was neuer quieted more then in reading the one; and my curioſity neuer ſatisfied more than in examining the other.

Though I beſtow all my goods to feede the poore] Mercifull workes are [y] pro ſacrificijs, imò præſacrificijs, accepted of God as ſacrifice, Heb. 13. 16. yea more then ſacrifice: Hoſea 6. 6. I will haue mercy not ſacrifice. To be mercifull is the [z] ſole worke common to man with God.

It is then an higher ſtep of perfection, to diſtribute goods vnto the poore, then to ſpeake with the tongues of men and Angels, or to be furniſheed with all variety of knowledge: yet Paul ſaith, If I beſtow my goods, all my goods, not vpon the rich, but vpon the poore, to feed, not to feaſt them, and had not loue, it profits me nothing. Where note fiue degrees of this amplification: the firſt is to giue; for moſt men, as in the prouerbe, are better at the rake, then at the pitchforke, readier to pull in, then to giue out. The ſecond is to giue, not another mans, but our owne goods. If I beſtow my goods. According to that of Salomon, Eccleſiaſtes 11. 1 Caſt thy bread vpon the waters: Panis, ſi tuus, qui tuus. The third, is all our goods, not ſome ſmall portion, or great ſumme, but all; according to that of [a] Chriſt; If thou wilt be perfect, ſell all that thou haſt, and giue it to the poore. The fourth is, to giue not to the rich, but to the poore: Frange panem eſurienti, ſaith the [b] Prophet, Deale thy bread to the hungry. The laſt is to giue to the poore, not ſuperfluouſly to feaſt, but neceſſarily to feed them If a man performe this and more then this out of vaineglorious oſtentation, or idle prodigality, not out of loue to Chriſt, and compaſſion of his members, it were but ſo much as nothing.

Though I gaue my body to be burned] Loue is ſeene more in deeds then in words, words, and in ſuffering more then in doing: and of all ſuffering, death is moſt terrible; and of all kinds of death, burning is moſt fearefull. Here then are many degrees in this one ſpeech (as [c] Interpreters obſerue:) firſt, Si tradidero, not if I be forced, but if of mine owne accord, I giue my body to be burned, as it is ſayd of Chriſt, [d] he gaue himſelfe for vs a ſacrifice. Secondly, Si tradidero corpus, if I ſuffer loſſe not of goods only, though that be very commendable, Heb. 10. 34. Ye ſuffered with ioy the ſpoyling of your goods; but affliction in body, which is far dearer than our wealth, as the father of lyes in this truly; [e] skin for skin, and all that euer a Man hath, will he giue for his life. Thirdly, Si tradidero corpus meum; if I giue not only the body of my child, (though a woman is highly magnified for ſuch an act in in the 2. Maccabees 7.) but my body; not only fleſh of my fleſh, but fleſh which is my fleſh; not only to ſuffer a naturall death, but a violent, and of all violent, the moſt terrible, to be roſted, yea conſumed in the fire.

If any ſuffer all this, and want charity to particular perſons, eſpecially toward the common body of the church, it is no better, or rather indeed worſe then nothing. I beſeech you therefore by the mercifulneſſe of God, whatſoeuer you ſpeake, whatſoeuer you ſtudy, whatſoeuer you doe, whatſoeuer you ſuffer, [f] let all be done in loue.

Vniuerſa, inutiliter habet, qui vnum illud, quo vniuerſis vtatur non habet: Vnprofitably (quoth [g] Auguſtine) hath he all, who wants that one whereby he ſhould vſe all. As the [h] ſame Father in another place: Quanta eſt charitas quæ ſi deſit, fruſtrà habentur cætera, ſi adſit, rectè habentur omnia? How great is loue? for if it be wanting, all other graces loſe their grace; but if preſent all are profitable. So the text here; Loue ſuffereth long, it is bountifull &c.

- Embracing that which is good: { Internall: it is patient. / Externall: it is courteous.
- Eſchewing that which is euill, against our { neighbour, in { thought: it enuieth not. / deed: loue doth not frowardly. } ; ſelues, either out of { passion: it ſwelleth not, dealeth not diſhoneſtly, ſeeketh not her owne: it is not prouoked to anger. / election: it thinketh no euill: it reioyceth not in iniquitie. }
- Perſeuering in both: ſuffering, beleeuing, hoping, enduring all things.

In this encomiaſticall paſſage, S. Paul ſets downe loues operation in [k] 3. points:

Loue ſuffereth long.] S. Paul doth begin with patience, [l] becauſe deſire to reuenge is a vice moſt oppoſite to charity. Malitious impatient men are like the toad, no ſooner moued, but they ſwell: or like gun-powder; no ſooner touched with an hot word, but inſtantly they are in your face. Which occaſioned [m] Bion the Philoſopher to ſay; Magnum eſt malum ferre non poſſe malum. For if thine enemie be little, [n] parce illi, the beſt courſe is to ſpare him, if great, parce tibi, the beſt counſell is to ſpare thy ſelfe. Si turbet, non perturbet, as [o] Bernard in the like caſe: Though he moue thee let him not remoue thee from that which is good, from that which is thy good. The [p] diſcretion of a man deferreth his anger, and his glory is to paſſe by an offence. Better it is to ſuffer much and long, than by courſes of impatience, to runne thy ſelfe out of all honeſt breath. It is reported of the Philoſophers, [q] that they had a ſword, and wanted a buckler: but a buckler becomes a Chriſtian better than a ſword. We muſt not beat euery dog that barks at vs in the way, but run with patience the race that is ſet before vs, Heb 12. 1.

Loue is curteous: or as other read, bountifull] [*] Amor ſi eſt, operatur: ſi non operatur, non eſt. As loue is patient in wrong, ſo actiue in kindneſſe, doing good vnto all, alway performing liberall and curteous offices, euen to the greateſt enemie. But it hath beene their hell to behold their neighbour Biſhops, and fellow Miniſters in better faſhion, and among the reſt of greater account for iudicious preaching and writing than themſelues.

It is wittily noted by [a] Bonauentura, that an enuious man is like Cain, who ſayd of himſelfe, Gen. 4. 14. Whoſoeuer findeth me ſhall ſlay me. For either he ſeeth in a man that which is good, and then he repineth; or elſe, that which is euill, and ſo reioiceth: and both theſe ſlay the ſoule.

It reioiceth not in iniquitie.] Not in her owne fault not in anothers fall. Not in her owne: for albeit the malicious incorrigible ſinner reioyceth in doing euill, and delights in frowardneſſe, Pro. 2. 14. yet the man of God doth noe ſin: 1. Ioh. 3. 2. For it is rather done on him, then of him: according to that of [t] Paul; I doe not the good thing which I would; but the euill thing which I would not, that doe I. Not in anothers fall: for it doth grieue when they grieue: yea ſometime becauſe they doe not grieue for their ſinnes, as [t] Hierome to Sabinian: Hoc plango quòd te non plangis. And [u] Auguſtine calls this a bleſſed vnhappineſſe, when a man is affected not infected, with his neighbours iniquitie: Beata miſeria vitijs alienis tribulari, non implicari; dolore contrahi, non amore attrahi.

It ſuffereth all things, it beleeueth all things.] [x] It ſuffereth not it ſelfe to bee abuſed, but it iudgeth other with all loue and humanity. To beleeue all, were ſillineſſe; to beleeue none, ſullennеſſe: diſcreet loue therefore doth beleeue much, and hope the beſt of all. Enduring all things; that is, all that it may without offence to Gods holy word: [y] Non patitur ludum famæ, fidei, oculus: A mans good name, faith, and eye will not bee dallyed withall. A Chriſtian as concerning his faith, cannot be too ſterne, too ſtout. I will take vpon me (ſaith Luther) this title: Cedo nulli: I giue place to none.

Loue doth not fall away.] Knowledge is not aboliſhed in the world to come, but perfited, as Paul expounds himſelfe: Wee know in part, wee prophecie in part: but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is vnperfect ſhall be done away. [z] Ex abſtractiuâ fit intuitiua notitia. [a] As the light of a candle doth vaniſh away, when the bright Sunne doth ſhine. The manner of teaching in the world to come ſhall ceaſe: for we ſhall need no ſchooles or tutors in heauen: all there ſhall ſee God face to face, but knowledge it ſelfe ſhall not vaniſh, [b] for this is eternall life to know God.

S. Paul proues our knowledge and propheeying vnperfect by two familiar examples: one taken from his owne perſon, another from a looking glaſſe: When I was a child, I ſpake as a child, I vnderſtood as a child, I imagined as a child, Speaking may be referred vnto the gift of tongues, vnderſtanding to the gift of propheey, thinking to knowledge.

Now we ſee in a glaſſe darkely, but then wee ſhall ſee face to face.] When a man ſees a map of Hieruſalem, he can preſently conceiue what manner of city it is imperfectly: but when he comes thither, and beholds all the ſtreets is better ſatisfied. The Scripture is a glaſſe, faith is an eye, by which all Gods elect in part know the glorious building of Hieruſalem aboue; they beleeue that this [c] coruption ſhall put on incorruption, that this mortall ſhall put on immortality; that the iuſt ſhall ſhine [d] like ſtarres for euer: in heart conuerſing with the Saints, and aſſured through hope, that themſelues are [e] burgeſſes of that celeſtial Incorporation.

I am ſure, ſaith [f] Iob. that my Rdeemer is aliue, who died for our ſinnes, and roſe againe for our iuſtification, and now ſitteth at the right hand of God as our aduocate. But hereafter, when wee ſhall ſup with him in his kingdome, and ſit with him in his [g] throne, when all miſts of ignorance and diffidence ſhall vaniſh away, when wee ſhall ſee God face to face, then wee will ſay tohim as the noble Queene of [h] Sheba to Salomon; Loe, the one halfe of thy kingdome was not told vs.

Now abideth faith, hope, and loue.] The reſt of the graces are reduced to theſe faith Melanchthon, and the chiefe of theſe is loue, ſaith Paul. There is ſo great affinity betweene faith and hope, that (as [i] Luther obſerues) it is hard to find, any difference, they cannot be well ſeparated, one hauing reſpect to the other as the two Cherubins on the mercy ſeate: Exod. 25. 20.

Yet they differ much eſpecially in their { Obiect. Subiect. Order. Office.

In their obiect: Faith hath for her obiect the truth; Hope for her obiect the goodneſſe of God. Faith (as [k] Auguſtine notes) is of good things and bad: but hope lookes on good things only. The Chriſtian beleeues there is an hell as well as heauen; but he feares the one, and hopes only for the other; as the Poet diſtinguiſheth aptly: —liceat ſperare timenti [l]

Faith is of things { Paſt: for wee beleeue that Chriſt is dead, buried, riſen againe, &c. Preſent: for we beleeue that Chriſt now ſitteth at the right hand of God. Future: for we beleeue Chriſt ſhall come againe to iudge the quicke and the dead.

But hope doth expect and reſpect only things to come.

In their ſubiect: Faith is in the [m] vnderſtanding, hope reſteth in the will: if they differ in place, this I take to be the moſt profitable ſeparation.

In order: for [n] faith is the ground of things hoped for. A ſtedfaſt hope proceeds out of a liuely faith: if the ſparke of faith ſhould not giue light to the will, it could not be perſwaded to lay hold vpon hope. Faith alway goeth before, then hope followeth after.

In their Office: for faith is our [o] Logicke to conceiue what we muſt beleeue hope our rhetoricke to perſwade vs in tribulation vnto patience. So S. Paul ſaith: Wee are ſaued by hope, Rom. 8. 24. [p] Sic liberati ſumus, vt adhuc ſperanda ſit hæreditas, poſtea poſſidenda; nunc habemus ius ad rem, nondum in re. Faith is a Doctor and a Iudge, diſputing againſt errour and hereſie, iudging ſpirits and doctrines; hope is a captaine fighting againſt impatience, tribulation, heauineſſe of ſpirit, weakeneſſe, deſperation. In a word, the difference betweene faith and hope in Diuinitie, is the ſame that is betweene fortitude and prudence in policy. Fortitude not guided by prudence is raſhneſſe, and prudence not ioyned with fortitude is vaine: So faith without hope is nothing, and hope without faith a meere preſumption and tempting of God. And therefore wee muſt ioyne together all theſe graces, as Paul here, faith, hope, charity: Wee waite for the hope righteouſneſſe through faith, and faith worketh through loue.

Firſt faith teacheth vs the truth: and then hope teacheth vs what to ſuffer; and loue what to doe for the truth: Faith engendreth hope; faith and hope loue, but the chiefe is loue, &c.

The [q] Papiſts hence reaſon againſt vs; If charity be greater then faith, it is vnprobable that men are iuſtified onely by faith. [r] Our Diuines anſwer, that the argument is not good; A Prince doth excell a peſant: Ergo, till the ground better. A man is better than a beaſt: Ergo, runne faſter then a horſe, carry more than an elephant, &c.

Secondly, [s] that loue is not greater in euery reſpect abſolutely, but only greater in latitude of vſe and continuance: faith and hope are reſtrained within the bounds of our priuate perſons, as the iuſt man doth liue by his owne faith, and the good man hopes only for himſelfe: but loue like [t] Dauids vine doth couer the mountaines with her boughes, and ſtretcheth her branches vnto the ſea, extending it ſelfe to God, Angels, men; in men to our ſelues and other: in other, [u] vpward, to ſuperiors, downward, to inferiours; on the right hand to friends, on the left to foes.

Loue then in reſpect of others is of greater vſe: but if we conſider a man in himſelfe priuately, faith is more needfull then loue, as wherein originally ſtands our communion and fellowſhip with God, by which Chriſt [x] dwells in our hearts, into which as an hand, Almighty God powreth all the riches of his grace grace for our ſaluation, and by which only, whatſoeuer elſe is in vs is accepted of God, as [y] Saluianus excellently: omnibus ſemper ornatibus ornamento eſt, quia ſine hac nihil tam ornatum quod ornare poſſit. See Epiſt. Dom. 17. poſt. Trinit.

Againe, charity is greater in latitude of continuance: faith apprehends the Lords gracious promiſe concerning eternall ſaluation, and hope doth expect it with patience. When God then ſhall haue fulfilled his word, and filled vs with vnſpeakeable ioy, when in that other life wee ſhall ſee God face to face, faith is at an end, hope is at an end, their vſe ceaſe, but loue ſhall continue betweene God and vs an euerlaſting bond. So the Fathers expound it; onely loue (ſaith [z] Chryſoſtome) is eternall; in this reſpect the greateſt is charity, becauſe they paſſe away, but charity continueth alway. So [a] S. Auguſtine; loue is the greateſt of the three; becauſe the other two departing, it ſhall continue more encreaſed, and better aſſured; & auxior & certior permanebit. [b] In this preſent life there are three; but in the life to come loue remaineth onely: therefore that is greater which is euer needfull, then that which once ſhall haue an end. And ſo [c] Gorran and [d] other Popiſh writers heretofore conſtrued this text. I conclude, To ſaue a man, faith is greater; in a man ſaued, charity is the greater: vntill faith haue [*] finiſhed our ſaluation, loue muſt yeeld to faith; but when faith hath fully ſaued, it ſhall haue an end, and ſo muſt yeeld to loue, which is without end.

Ieſus tooke vnto him the twelue, and ſayd vnto them; Behold we goe vp to Ieruſalem, and all ſhall be fulfilled, &c.

[e] Ioh. 1. 9.

IN this Goſpell our Sauiour Chriſt, [e] the true light of the world, doth illuminate two ſorts of blinde: the diſciples, who were ſpiritually blinde; and a poore begger, who was corporally blinde. The diſciples [f] vnderſtood not as yet the myſteries of our redemption, wrought by Chriſts humiliation and exaltation; by [g] the one taking from vs all euill; and by the other, giuing all that is good [h] He died for our ſins, and roſe againe for our iuſtification. Chriſt therefore doth open their eyes, and inſtruct them in theſe two points exactly.

Concerning his paſſion, fiue things are deliuered: { traditio, illuſio, conſputio, flagellatio, occiſio, } that hee ſhall bee { betrayed. mocked. ſpitted on. ſcourged. put to death. }

For truth it ſelfe was betrayed, wiſdome it ſelfe mocked, glory it ſelfe ſpitted on, innocency it ſelfe ſcourged, and life it ſelfe killed.

Concerning his reſurrection, hee ſetts downe two points eſpecially: { 1. That he ſhall riſe. 2. That he ſhall riſe the third day.

Wee

We goe vp] Chriſts paſſion is called an [l]exaltation or aſcending. For albeit he could not aſcend higher, as God, yet he was exalted by his humiliation, as man, and had a name giuen him aboue euery name: Phil. 2. 8. 9. Lucifer and Adam by climbing vp, were caſt downe: but Chriſt by caſting himſelfe downe, went vp.

So the [n] charets and horſemen of Iſrael, aſſiſted by Gods eſpeciall grace, lifting them vp aboue the baſe vallies of the world, runne faſter, and are more delighted in heauens vp hill, then the wicked in hells downe hill.

To Ieruſalem] Interpreters haue rendred [o] ſundry reaſons, why Chriſt was crucified at Ieruſalem, eſpecially [p] two. Firſt becauſe there was not enough malice in any other City to kill the Lord of life; none but the holy could enuy the moſt holy. The prophane Gentiles and ignorant Iewes elſewhere, did not maligne Chriſt in his words and wonders; Ieruſalem onely the [q] Prophet-killer could not endure the [r] Prophet. His holineſſe and wiſedome was the fitteſt obiect for the Scribes and Phariſees enuy. [s] That vpon them might come all the righteous blood ſhed vpon earth, euen from Abel the ſhadow, to Chriſt the ſubſtance, [t] whoſe bloud ſpeakes better things vnto vs, and cries lowder againſt them, then that of Abel. Here note by the way, that as the Sonne of God was crucified in the City of God; ſo by good correſpondence, the members of Chriſt are perſecuted moſt by the Vicar of Chriſt.

Secondly, Chriſt ſuffered in that eminent place, that his paſſion and patience might be renowned in the whole world. There was not another ſtage fit for his tragedie, which is our comedie.

In a [u] myſticall ſenſe, Chriſt and his Apoſtles aſcend to Ieruſalem, euen to Ieruſalem [x] aboue, the [y] new Ieruſalem prepared as a bride trimmed for her husband: but the God of this world, with his company, deſcend to Iericho, to the loweſt hell. Hee that followes not Chriſt in his courſe, goes from Ieruſalem to Iericho; from heauenly paths vnto the by-waies of deſtruction; and ſo he falls among theeues, that is, as the [z] Fathers expound it, among many deuills and euills who rob him, and wound him; and in fine, will leaue him dead, except Chriſt the true Samaritan, releeue him and ſet him in his right way againe.

And all ſhall be fulfilled that are written by the Prophets of the Sonne of man.] [a] As the Painter at the firſt drawes his picture with a coale roughly, then with an accurat penſil, and orient colours exactly: ſo the holy Ghoſt in the Prophets, and old Teſtament, ſhadowed Chriſts paſſion obſcurely; but in the new paints it as it were to life perſpicuouſly. The two Teſtaments are [b] two pence, [c] bearing the ſame Kings image, though not of the ſame ſtampe: for all things being now fulfilled, written by the Prophets of the Sonne of man, our Sauiours picture ingraven in the Goſpell, is more full and cleere then that imprinted in the Law. Now God hath ſhewed vs the light of his countenance: Pſalm. 67. 1. Let vs therefore ſearch the Scripture, for that is the way to Chriſt, and Chriſt is the way to God.

Chriſt

Chriſt was deliuered vnto the Gentiles, as { Iudas. / the Iewes. / Pilat. } we read in the Goſpell, eſpecially by three:

[c] Matt. 26. 15. By Iudas, out of couetouſneſſe, as the [c] text expreſly; What will ye giue me, & I will deliuer him to you? For a little ſiluer, and that not paid, but only promiſed, he ſold his friend; yea that which is worſe, his Maſter; yea that which is worſt of all, his maker. See the Goſpell the Sunday before Eaſter.

By the Iewes, out of malice. Matth. 27. 18. Pilat knew well that for enuy they deliuered him.

[f] Ioh. 19. 12. By Pilat, through feare: for the Iewes ſayd vnto him: [f] If thou ſet him free, thou art not Cæſars friend: for whoſoeuer maketh himſelfe a King, ſpeaketh againſt Cæſar. And therefore Pilat choſe rather to crucifie the Lord eternall then to diſpleaſe Cæſar, a Lord temporall.

In like ſort, all couetous, all malicious, all cowardly profeſſors betray Chriſt daily. The couetous, who make their coyne their Creed, and their penny their Pater noſter, and their bills their Bible, betray Chriſt with Iudas. It is but what will you giue them, and they will deliuer vp the Goſpell vnto you.

Enuious men, who perſecute the Saints, and diſgrace their graces, betray Chriſt in his members with the Iewes, euen for meere malice, ſpeaking to their Chriſtian brother as Antonius Caracalla to his naturall brother; [g] Sit diuus modò non viuus.

[g] To Geta.

[h] Matth. 13. 21. Cowardly profeſſors vſe to betray Chriſt with Pilat: [h] For as ſoone as tribulation or perſecution commeth for the word, they feare more the threats of Cæſar an earthly Prince, who can kill only the body, then the wrath of God, who being King of all Kings, is [i] able to deſtroy both body and ſoule in hell.

[i] Matt. 10. 28. The ſecond point touching Chriſts paſſion, is illuſio. Now Chriſt was mocked in foure places eſpecially.

1. In Caiphas houſe, where the keepers [k] blindfolded him, and ſmote him on the face, and asked him, ſaying; Prophecy; who is it that ſmot thee?

[k] Luke 22. 64.

2. In Herods campany, [l] when as the ſouldiers arraied him in white.

[l] Luke 23. 11.

3. In the common hall, where they [m] ſtripped him, and put vpon him a ſcarlet robe.

[m] Matt. 27. 28.

4. In Golgotha, when hee was crucified. Firſt, as Saint Matthew in the 27. Chap. by the paſſengers, wagging their heads, and ſaying: Thou that deſtroyedſt the Temple and buildeſt it in three daies; ſaue thy ſelfe, &c. Then by the Scribes and Phariſes; He ſaued other, but he cannot ſaue himſelfe. Laſt of all, ſome peruerted his words, affirming that hee called for Elias, when as he prayed; Eli, Eli, &c.

The Popiſh Clergy mocke Chriſt with Caiphas, in that they blindfold the people, by denying them the Scriptures, and then mocke them for their ignorance. [n] Sampſon hauing his eyes out, was a laughing ſtocke to the Philiſtins: and ſo the blind laymen are the Prieſts paſtime. Though a Ieſuit or Seminary buffet them euery day, yet can they not prophecy who ſmote them. Either Sampſon muſt pull downe the Colledges of theſe Philiſtins, or elſe hee ſhall neuer ſee but thorow their ſpectacles. They mocke Chriſt with Herod, who retaine foule conſciences in a white rochet, who conforme themſelues in habit, but reforme not themſelues in heart.

[n] Iudg. 16. 25.

[o] Apoc. 17. 4. The Babylonian whore mocks Chriſt with the ſouldiers, in putting on [o] skarlet, betokening zeale aud charity, when her actions are cruell and bloudy.

They mocke Chriſt with the Iewes in Golgotha, who diſtort the words of Scripture for their aduantage, making Elias of Eloi. Like the Popiſh dolt, who reading the ſubſcription of Pauls 2. Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, in the vulgar Latine; Miſſa fuit ex Athenis, inſtantly cried out, that he had found a plaine text for the Maſſe. Or like that foppiſh Anabaptiſt, who gathered out of Chriſts words in Engliſh; [p] Goe and teach all nations, and baptiſe, &c, that it is not lawfull for a Clergy man to ride on a faire palfrey; much leſſe, as the Biſhops, in a stately coach. Or as that Fen-man, alias Fin-man, standing vpon a marsh custome, iustified his not paiment of Tithes out of Paul; [q] Custome to whom custome: but his pastor replied aptly; [r] the Churches of God haue no such custome.

So the blasphemous mouth spits on Gods face; the tyrants openly crossing the Gospells proceeding, scourge Christ: and all such as slide from the profession of the faith, are sayd in [f] Scripture, to crucifie againe the Sonne of God. And therefore [t] the Church hath allotted this Gospell for this weeke most fitly. For at this Carnival and gut-tide, many deliuer Christ vnto the Gentiles, in their chambering and wantonnesse, drunkennesse and gluttony, making such as are no Christians to [u] blaspheme Christianity, seeing such vncomely behauiour and mad meriments among professors of holy religion.

As a louing wife which hath her husband slaine, to moue compassion in the Iudges, and to make the fact more odious and hatefull, tells of his deadly wounds, and describes his gastly lookes, and shewes some garment of his embrued in bloud: [x] so the Church at this time doth offer vnto our considerations how Christ her deare loue was betrayed, and mocked, and spitted on, and scourged, and put to death; hereby recalling vs from our horrible sinnes, which as another Iudas betray Christ, as another Herod mocke Christ, as another Pilate condemne Christ, as another Longinus, wound Christ, as another band of Iewes recrucifie Christ.

And the third day he shall rise againe] [y] Christ is large in the report of his ignominy, but short in this of his glory: for he deliuered fiue points as concerning his humiliation, but he remembers only two, yea for the matter, but one touching his exaltation. And the third day hee shall rise againe. Yet this one is the locke and key of all Christian faith, on which all other articles of holy beleefe depend. See before the Creed, and after the Gospell on Easter and Saint Thomas day.

The prophets vsually mingle the sweet of Christs exaltation with the sower of his humiliation; as Gen. 49. 9. Esay 53. 7. 8. Psal. 4. 9. and Christ here foretold the one so well as the other to [z] strengthen his followers in affliction: for as he first suffered, and after entred into glory; so such as beare with him the crosse, shall be sure to weare with him the crowne. [a] If we be grafted with him to the similitude of his death,, euen so shall wee bee to the similitude of his resurrection.

And this saying was hid from them.] Men hardly conceiue ill of those whom they loue well; and therefore the Disciples expecting better things of Christ, could not vnderstand his prophecy, but the (Iewes as [b] Beda notes) hating Christ, and seeking how they might put him to death, easily beleeued him vpon his word, yea one word, and that not so perspicuous as this, but obscure; for when he sayd, [c] If I were list vp from the earth, I will draw all men vnto mee; the Iewes answered him: We haue heard out of the Law, that Christ bideth for euer: and how saiest thou that the Sonne of man must be list vp?

Hence we may note [d] that the deerest Saints of God haue their infirmities and errours; and least we should doubt of it, S. Luke repeats it againe: They perceiued not the things that were spoken. [e] Not that wee should follow their ignorance, but praise God for our knowledge, when we conceiue these deepe mysteries of our saluation.

Againe, we may learne from hence [f] not to be discouraged, if we doe not at the first discerne Gods holy word: for the blessed Apostles after Christs resurrection vnderstood all these things, as S. Luke reports in his last chapter, verse 45. God at his good time, will open our eyes, as he did the blinde mans in this Gospell, and open our eares, as he did of the Prophet, Esay 50. and open our hearts, as he did of Lydia, Act. 16.

In that other part of this Gospell, concerning the bodily blinde, we may behold a miserable patient, and a mercifull Physitian.

In the patient two things are regardable: to wit, his { Outward wants, { Blindneſſe. Beggery, verſ. 35. / Inward vertues: { Faith. Grateſulneſſe.

In his faith obſerue the { Beginning, it came by hearing, verſ. 36. / Continuance, though he was rebuked, he ceaſed not to cry, Ieſus thou ſonne of Dauid haue mercy on me, verſ. 37. 38. 39. / End and fruit, he receiued his ſight, verſ. 43.

His thankfulneſſe appeares in two things eſpecially: { 1. In following Chriſt. / 2. In praiſing God.

And his example cauſed other to doe the like: All the people when they ſaw this gaue praiſe to God.

The mercifulneſſe of Chriſt the Phyſitian toward this diſtreſſed patient, is ſeene in his { Geſture: verſ. 40. Hee ſtood ſtill and commanded the blind man to be brought vnto him. / Speech: verſ. 41. What wilt thou that I doe vnto thee? / Workes: verſ. 42. Receiue thy ſight thy faith hath made thee whole, and immediatly he receiued his ſight.

And it came to paſſe, that as he was come nigh to Ierico.] Chriſts actions are our inſtruction: as Chriſt then, [z] ſo muſt we doe good in all places, as occaſion is offered, euen in the ſtreets and high waies, ſo well as in the Temple. There is nothing in the ſheepe but good; his fell is good, his fleſh is good, his entrals good, his dung good: ſo the lambes of Chriſt muſt be profitable to all, hurtfull to none.

[z] Theophyl. in loc.

A certaine blind man ſat by the high way ſide.] [b] Proteſtant Diuines as well as the Fathers and Friers haue conſtrued this myſtically; for euery man is blinde by nature, not diſcerning the things of God; he ſits by the way, but he cannot walke in the way, till Chriſt open his eyes and direct his pathes. And it is moſt certaine that the ſtate of the ſpiritually blinde is more miſerable then that of the other blinde; for to want the eyes of Angels, is worſe then to want the eyes of beaſts, as [i] Antonius told that good blinde man Didymus.

[b] Luther. Culman. Zepper. in loc.

[i] Granaten. in loc

As the bodily blinde is led either by his ſeruant, or wife, or dogge; ſo the ſpiritually blinde miſled by the world, the fleſh, and the deuill: the bodily blinde will be ſure to get a ſeeing guide, but the ſpiritually blinde followeth his owne [k] luſts and the blinde guides: and ſo the [l] blinde leading the blinde, both fall into the ditch.

[k] Eccleſ. 18. 30

The bodily blinde feeleth and acknowledgeth his want of ſight, but the ſpiritually blinde thinks hee ſees as well as any. So Chriſt in the Goſpell: [m] If yee were blinde, yee ſhould not haue ſinne: but now yee ſay, wee ſee, therefore your ſinne remaineth, &c. The bodily blinde ſupplieth his want of ſight oft by feeling, as [n] Iſaack when he could not ſee Iacob, ſayd Let me feele thee my ſonne: but the ſpiritually blinde though hee feele many times in his conſcience the flaſhing, yet neuer auoyds the flames of hell fire. The bodily blinde accounts them happy who ſee; but the ſpiritually blinde doth deſpiſe the Seers, and all ſuch as walke in the right way: [o] This is hee whom we ſometime had in deriſion, and in a parable of reproch.

To conclude; the want of corporall eyes, is to many [p] Diuinum bonum, albeit humanum malum; but the want of faiths eyes, is the greateſt euill which can befall man in this life: for reaſon is our ſoules left eye, [q] faith our right eye, without which [r] it is impoſſible to ſee the way to God. Come to me, ſaith [s] Chriſt; credendo venimus, ſaith [t] Auguſtine, yea Chriſt [u] comes to vs, and [x] dwells in our heart by faith.

Begging] The Iewes had a [y] law, that there ſhould be no begger in Iſrael. England hath ſtatutes alſo to correct impudent poore, and to prouide for impotent poore: but as it is obſerued, our lawes haue a better prologue then epilogue; they be well penned but ill kept: and ſo this good order is neglected among vs, as it was about Iericho, to the great ſcandall of Chriſtian religion, and diſhonour of our Engliſh nation. It is written of the [z] Athenians, that they puniſhed idle perſons as haynous offenders. And the Egyptians had a law, that euery man ſhould bring his name to the chiefe ruler of the prouince, and ſhew what trade of life he did vſe. The [a] Romans enacted ſeuere ſtatutes againſt ſuch as negligently ſuffered their ground vntilled. Among the [b] Chinois, euery man is ſet about ſomwhat, according to his ſtrength and yeeres: one laboureth with his hand, another with his foot, ſome with their eyes, and ſome muſt be doing with their tongue; and that which is moſt admirable, they keepe in Canton, foure thouſand blinde men, vnfit for other ſeruice, to grinde corne and rice for the people. If either the Law were beleeued as Goſpell, or the Goſpell kept as Law ſuch [c] as would not labour, ſhould not eat. Loyterers and ſturdy rogues, ſhould be ſent either to the Gallies, or Priſons, or Bridewell, or to ſome like place where they might worke well: and as for ſuch as cannot labour, it is fit, wee that are ſtrong, ſhould helpe to beare the burdens of the weake, being [d] eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame.

And when he heard the people paſſe by.] [e] we muſt apprehend euery fit occaſion for our good: and when once we haue begun well, we muſt not faint in our courſe, but continue, [f] though the world rebuke vs, as the people did the blinde man here. Let vs ſtill crie for mercy, manifeſting a liuely faith in our words and waies. In our words, [g] acknowledging Chriſt to be man: O Ieſu, thou Sonne of Dauid; and God, haue mercy on me. By our waies, in forſaking our old wicked courſes, and following Chriſt, that other ſeeing our good example, may likewiſe giue praiſe to God.

The Goſpell and Epiſtle [h] well agree. For in the Epiſtle, Saint Paul aboue all other vertues, extolleth loue. Now [i] greater loue then this hath no man, then to beſtow his life for his friends. And yet Chriſt, as Saint Luke reports in the Goſpell, was betrayed, and mocked, and ſpitted on, and ſcourged, and put to death, euen for vs [k] his enemies. Againe, Saint Paul in the Epiſtle, next to loue commends in a Chriſtian, faith and hope; both which (as the Goſpell intimates) are eminent in blinde Bartimæus, vnfainedly beleeuing, that Chriſt could: and in his greateſt diſcouragement, hoping againſt hope, that Chriſt would haue mercy on him; inſomuch that Truth it ſelfe giues this teſtimonie; Receiue thy ſight, thy faith hath ſaued thee.

It Duke Ioſua be renowned in holy Bible, for that he made the naturall Sunne to ſtand ſtill at his prayer in Gibeon; O what omnipotent faith hath this blind man, to make the ſupernaturall Sunne, the Sunne of righteouſneſſe, the Sunne that made the Sunne, to ſtay his courſe, and ſtand ſtill in the way, till his deſire was fulfilled! O Lord increaſe our faith and loue, making the one like this in the Goſpell: and the other according to thy precept in the Epiſtle, that being mounted vpon theſe two wings, we may ſoare to the place where thine honor dwelleth, and there reſt with thee for euermore.

AMEN.

THE FIRST SVNDAY IN LENT.

The Epistle, 2. Cor. 6. 1. vnto ℣. 11

Wee as helpers exhort you, that yee receiue not the grace of God in vaine, &c.

THE Lent-fast hath beene of good credit, and is of great continuance: for although it was neuer commanded by God in precept, yet, as [a] Hierome and [b] Augustine thinke, commended by Christ in patterne; whose judgement I follow so farre, as our Church, intimating in the Collect for this day, that Christ fasted fortie dayes and fortie nights for our sakes: as [c] Chrysostome, for our instruction; as [d] other for our example; so far forth as that action of Christ is [e] imitable, considered as a morall, and not as a miracle.

I dare not say with [f] Ambrose (for the Papists haue [g] fathered this saying vpon him) In totum non obseruare sacrilegum est, ex parte violare peccatum est: yet for as much as [h] Protestant Diuines auow, that some Lent in different degrees hath beene generally kept in [i] all ages, I will say with [k] Augustine, that It is an insolent madnesse to neglect that which the whole Church obserues.

It is true that our whole life should be nothing else but a [l] Lent to prepare our selues against the Sabbath of our death, and Easter of our resurrection: [m] but seeing the corruption of our dayes, and wickednes of our natures is so much exorbitant, as that it is a hard matter to hold the common sort of men at all times within the lists of pietie, iustice, and sobrietie, it is fit there should be one time at least in the yeere, and that of a reasonable continuance, for the recalling of them vnto some more staied courses and seuere cogitations; and this time was chosen as fittest, in prayer, fasting, and mourning to turne to the Lord; because that herein we remember how Christ * suffered for our sinne, which is the most preuailing motiue to make vs hate sinne, as also for that after this meditation of his sufferings and * conforming our selues vnto them, his ioyfull resurrection for our iustification immediatly presents it selfe unto us, in solemnitie whereof, all men vnbaptized were wont to be brought vnto the sacred Font; and all baptised of yeeres and discretion approched with great deuotion vnto the Lords holy Table. Now to receiue the Goſpell in vaine, is, not to beleeue it, or [p] ſo to beleeue, that we bring not forth any fruit thereof in our life, [q] but rather hide our talents in the ground; as S. [r] Ierome in one word: In vanum gratiam Dei recipit, qui in nouo Teſtamento non nouus eſt: He receiueth the grace of God in vaine, who doth not become a new man vnder the new Teſtament; for the [s] grace of God that bringeth ſaluation vnto all men appearing, teacheth vs to deny vngodlineſſe and worldly luſts, and that wee ſhould liue ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world.

If thou ſpend good houres in ill actions, or great bleſſings to bad purpoſes, aſſuredly thou art a traitor and theefe, to God, who redeemed thee from the hand of all thine enemies, and that with an ineſtimable price, for this end, that thou ſhouldeſt obſerue him, and ſerue none but him all the daies of thy life.

This exhortation is preſſed here by text out of Eſay, chap 49. verſ. 8. For he ſaith. that is, [t] God the Father, I haue heard thee, [u] that is, God the Sonne; in a time accepted, and in the day of ſaluation, [x] that is, in the fulneſſe of time, Galat. 4. 4. this then is a prophecie of Chriſt: God the Father heard God the Sonne for vs in an acceptable time: where note the ſweete order of the bleſſed Spirit, firſt an acceptable time, then the day of ſaluation; inſinuating that our ſaluation is altogether from Gods free grace, by the merits and mediation of Chriſt, who died for our ſinnes, and roſe againe for our iuſtification.

[x] Aquin. in loc.

Behold now is that accepted time.] A Sermon hath two principall parts, explication and application: our Apoſtle therefore doth not onely propound, but apply this Scripture. Now is the time; now is the day: [y] relatiue ad Deum, in reſpect of God, an accepted time: relatiue ad homines, in reſpect of men, a day of ſaluation.

[y] Caietan in loc.

All our time before the Goſpell, was a darke night of ignorance, Rom. 13. 12. but ſince the light of the world, the Sunne of righteouſneſſe hath appeared in our Horizon, illuminating all ſuch as ſit in darkeneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death, a bright day of ſaluation is come: the [z] Goſpell is the day, Chriſt is the light, faith is the eye, which apprehends this light: he then that [a] ſleepes ſtill, and ſtandeth not vp from the dead, receiues the grace of God in vaine. He that ſleepes and openeth not faiths eye to behold the great light ſent into the world, receiues it not at all; he that awaketh and openeth his eye, but ariſeth not from from the workes of darknes, and bed of sin, receiueth it in vaine. Walke therefore saith [b] Christ, in the day, the [c] night commeth wherein no man can worke; now is the time, now is the day, neglect not this opportunitie; this is our day, the next is the Lords day, wherein he will iudge such as haue receiued his grace in vaine: for an [d] Angell of heauen hath sworne by him that liueth for euermore, that time should be no more; [e] that is after this acceptable time, no more time for repentance, no moe dayes of saluation. Hee that refuseth here to take good councell cheape, shall hereafter buy repentance too deare: the water what way it gets a vent, that way the streame will make a current: the tree falleth as it groweth, and so qualis vita, finis ita: Men dye for the most part as they liue. Learne then in growing to sway right, looke to Ierusalem aboue, that you may fall right. As this world shall leaue you, the next shall finde you. Foure good mothers haue foure bad daughters; Truth hath harred, Familiaritie contempt, Prosperitie pride, Securitie perill: awake from sleepe, it is now day, worke [f] your saluation in feare and trembling, [g] while it is called to day.

The rest of this Epistle concernes especially Pastors, intimating what they be for their calling, and what they should be for their carriage. They be for their calling helpers, or workers together, & that in respect of { [h] their fellow Ministers. / [i] the people. / [k] God.

First they must be coadiuuant one to another, as [l] Peter and Iohn gaue to Paul and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship: they must ioyne together in the preaching of one Lord, one faith, one baptisme. For if diuision of tongues hindred the building of Babel, then diuision of hearts much more the building of Ierusalem. Hombred dissentions in a Church, are amicorum dispendia, hostium compendia; a Lent to friends, a Christmas to foes. O [m] pray for the peace of Ierusalem, that it may be at vnitie within it selfe; peace within her walls, and plenteousnesse within her palaces. [n] If her children, as the twins of Rebecca, struggle within her, it cannot be but with great paine and more griefe. The Kings daughter is all glorious within, her clothing is of wrought gold, and needle worke, wrought about with diuerse colours; and [o] so there is in the Church one faith, and variety of Ceremonies; an vnity for doctrine, but not alwaies in rites and vniformtiy: [p] now these diuerse colours in the same garment may not beget a contentious opposition in the members of one body: we may not diuide this coat without seame, but so worke together, as that wee may keepe the vnitie of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

Secondly, Preachers are helpers of the people, being their ghostly fathers to beget them in Christ. As our Apostle told the [q] Corinthians: In Christ Iesus I haue begotten you through the Gospell. And as it were mothers to bring them vnto the life of grace; Galat. 4. 19 [r] My little children of whom I trauell in birth againe till Christ be formed in you. And after the people be spiritually borne, the Ministers are [s] nurses and tutors vnto them, exhorting them, as Paul here, that they receiue not the grace of God in vaine. They feed them sometime with [t] milke, sometime with strong meat, till they be of [u] full growth in Christ. In affliction, as Simon, helping to beare their crosses; in prosperitie, like Timothy, [w] charging them not to be high minded, and that they trust not in vncertaine riches, but in the liuing Lord. In a word, good Preachers are helpers of their hearers,

Our fruitfull preaching is a great helpe, our holy practise greater, our holy prayer (as Gorran obserues) is the greatest of all: therefore your debt and duty to spirituall Pastors is such, as that [a] Paul told Philemon, thou owest vnto me euen thine owne selfe.

[a] Epist. to Philemon. vers 19

Thirdly, Preachers are helpers in respect of God, [b] Θεου συνεργοι, labourers together

[b] 1. Cor. 3. 9.

together with God, helping, not as efficient, but as instrumentall causes, as Paul construeth himselfe: Neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that giueth increase. They doe not administer helpe to God, [c] for who can instruct his spirit? but God workes in them as in his agents and ambassadors. [d] Ambrose calls them actores Dei. So S. Gregories saying is true; The good which a man doth, is both the worke of man, and the worke of God. See before Epist. Dom. 3. Aduent. It is then our [e] part first to preach, and then to presse the Gospell as the factors of God, that his grace bee not receiued in vaine.

Let vs giue none occasion of euill] It is an indelible blot to Doctor Shaw, the [f] Preacher and Proctor at Pauls Crosse for King Richard the third, that hee was [g] reputed a man of greater fame then learning, and of greater learning than honestie. Good Preachers are [h] lux mundi, the light of the world; bad, tenebræ mundi, saith [i] Bernard, fogs and mists, which keepe the people from seeing the light of the Gospell, and receiuing the grace of God. If there were no more scandalous Ministers in all England but one, yet it were too many by one. [k] Monstrosa res est sedes prima, vita ima, lingua magniloqua, & manus otiosa, sermo multus & fructus nullus, &c. [l] Habet enim vt obedienter audiatur, quantacunque grauitate dictionis maius pondus vita docentis: In current coyne there must bee good metall, the right stampe, and the iust weight; if wee preach well and liue ill, our metall is good, but our stampe bad; if wee liue well and preach ill, our stampe is good, but our mettall bad; if wee both preach and liue well, our penny then is good siluer; and therefore let vs giue none occasion of euill, that in our office be found no fault, but in all things let vs behaue our selues as the Ministers of God, exhorting and helping the people that they receiue not the grace of God in vaine.

In much patience] [m] Not in little, but in much, as Caietan vpon the place, longa & magna; the Miter becomes Aaron, not a smiter; he must fight with [n] beasts, euen with [o] rauening wolues in sheepes clothing, with Deuills vnder the names of Saints; hee must deale with [p] vnreasonable men, euer ready to cauill at whatsoeuer hee doth or saith: and therefore little patience will be to little purpose, much is happily not enough.

In strifes] Or, as other translations, in [q] tumults and [r] seditions. As patient not as an agent; for hee that must haue much patience, may not be turbulent in a State, but submitt himselfe to the gouernment of higher powers. A Diuine must be in strifes as in stripes, in necessities, in anguishes, in imprisonments; [t] quæ nulli inferre, verum ab aliis ferre conuenit, in all which he must beare not beat. Or in strife, that is, accused of strife wrongfully. So King [x] Ahab said, Eliah troubled Israel, and [u] Demetrius, that Paul was a dangerous man vnto the Commonwealth of Ephesus; and the [x] Iewes, that Christ had spoken against Cæsar, and that his followers had [y] subuerted the state of the world: It is euery Christians liuerie, which once the renowned Elizabeth in her poesie; Much suspected by me, nothing proued can be.

The Iesuits are quite contrary to this example; not accused only, but also conuicted of treasonable plots and practises, actors in strife, not martyrs in tumults, but murtherers; as [z] one of our side wittily, Flagella Reipublicæ, flabella seditionis; as one of [a] their side bitterly, their Pulpits are drums and trumpets, incensing princes one against another. All their confessions are as instructions, or rather destructions to teach rebellion, as their old friend in his [b] Quodlibeticall discourse: The reading of the Iesuits to the English youths in the Seminaries abroad, was the stroke of flinty heads on steely hearts, that gaue fire to the seditious match, which hath well nigh set all Christendome on flame. They vaunt indeed, [c] that the Church is the soule of the world; the Clergie of the Church; and they of the Clergie: but as [d] trauellers, of Constantinople, that it is a city in a wood, or a wood in a City; so the Iesuite is a [e] statizing Priest, a Court-rabbi, more cunning in Aretine, Lucian, Machiauel, than in his Breuiaries and Bible, not in [f] commission from

In labours.] Euery Chriſtian ſhould haue a ſweating brow, or a working brain: S. Paul had both, and the popiſh Monkes for the moſt part haue neither. [i] Hierome doth report; not ſo much for their bodily reliefe, as their ſoules health. In latter ages, as [k] Eraſmus obſerued, Monkes are more then men at their meat, leſſe then women at their worke; regulares gulares, as another pretily. The pampering of themſelues, and ſtarning of many pariſhes impropriate belonging to their charge, makes mee remember how a [l] fat-man in Rome riding alwaies vpon a very leane horſe, being asked vpon a time the reaſon thereof, anſwered readily, that hee fed himſelfe, but truſted other to feed his horſe. As [m] Veſpatian ſayd, Oportet imperatorem, ſtantem mori: ſo reuerend [n] Iewel: Oportet Epiſcopum concionantem mori: It is as fit for a Prieſt to dye ſtudying, as for a Prince to die ſtanding.

As [o] Chriſt ſayd of his yoke, that it was an eaſy yoke, yet a yoke; and as [p] Ambroſe of mariage, that it is a ſweete bond, yet a bond; ſo to be a Clergie man, is a worthy worke ſaith our [q] Apoſtle, yet a worke, non ſtuluinaris ſed pulueris, as the next word of the text intimates, In watchings] Our Sauiours ſpeech vnto Peter and the reſt of his Apoſtles; [r] Henceforth ſleepe and take your reſt, is no grace ad dormiendum (as [s] Interpreters obſerue) but a plaine Ironie. For if [t] all ought to watch, much more [u] watchmen; whereas therefore S. Luke records in the ſecond chapter of his Goſpell, how ſhepheards abiding in the field kept watch by night, becauſe of their flocke, [x] Bernard applieth it vnto the ſpirituall Paſtor: Hæc mea ſunt, mihi apponuntur, mihi proponuntur imitanda: This was written for our inſtruction and example.

[y] Ne ſi forte ſopor nos occupet, vlla ferarum
Seuiat in pecudes.

If death and ſleepe be moſt like; ſleepe nothing elſe but a ſhort death, and death a long ſleepe, then the more we ſleepe, the leſſe wee liue.

In faſting.] [z] Proteſtant Diuines allow three ſorts of faſting: Morall. Ciuill. Religious.

The firſt is a practiſe of temperance, when as in eating and drinking our appetite doth not exceed moderation; and this Lent euery Chriſtian in the whole courſe of his life muſt obſerue; for the cup kills more then the canon: an [a] intemperate gulligut can neither liue long nor well; whereas abſtinent [b] Aſſella, who made faſts her feaſts, inediam habens pro refectione, liued all her life ſana corpore, ſanior animâ.

The ſecond is, when vpon ſome particular and politike conſiderations men abſtaine from certaine meats, as in our Common-wealth obſeruing of fiſh-dayes and Lent to [c] preſerue the breed of cattell, and to maintaine the calling of Fiſher-men. And yet our Lent is not meerly ciuill, but in part religious, as it is apparent in the Collect for this day: Giue vs grace to vſe ſuch abſtinence, that our fleſh being ſubdued to the ſpirit, wee may euer obey thy godly motions in righteouſneſſe and true holineſſe, &c. As [d] Paul, Doth God take care for oxen? So I; Doth the Church take care for the liues of beaſts, and not for the ſoules of men?

The third kinde then is, when the duties of religion, as prayer and humiliation are practiſed in our faſting; for, as learned [e] Hooker iudiciouſly, much hurt hath growne to the Church of God through a falſe conceit, that faſting ſtands in no ſtead for any ſpirituall reſpect, but onely to take downe the wildnes of fleſh and frankes of nature: for hereupon the world doth now bluſh to faſt, ſuppoſing that men while they faſt, doe rather bewray a diſeaſe then exerciſe a vertue; ſo that that the speech of [f] Dauid may be truly the voyce of the Church in obseruing daies of fast: I wept and chastened my selfe with fasting, and that was turned to my reproofe.

Fasting is a matter indifferent in it selfe, but it taketh denomination from the [g] end and vse thereof. If wee fast as the [h] couetous to spare cost, or as hypocrites to be [i] seene of men, or as the [k] Papists, out of an opinion of merit to satisfie for our sinnes, and hereby to gaine heauen, our fasting is bad: but if wee fast for our good ends, it is commendable to vse some, yea much fasting, as Paul here.

Now the Scripture sets downe three principall vses of fasting, as [l] our Diuines obserue:

1. To chastise the flesh that it be not too wanton: 1 Cor. 9. 27. See Epist. Septuages. Sunday. Lasciuientem adolescentularum carnem crebris & duplicatis ieiunijs frangebat: malens eis stomachum dolere quam mentem. Hieron. in epitaphiô Paulæ.
2. That the spirit may be more frequent in prayer; and so the blessed Apostles fasted and prayed: Act. 13.
3. To professe our guiltinesse and humiliation vnto God for our sinnes, as Niniue: Ionas 3.

As Abraham sayd of Hagar vnto Sara, Gen. 16. 6. Behold she is in thine hands doe with her as it pleaseth thee: so if thou be regenerate, thou hast thy body committed to thy discretion to chastise by priuate fasting as thou wilt, and by publique according to the lawes of the Church wherein thou liuest, alway remembring the lesson of [m] Hierome, that the perfection and honour of a religious fast consists not in abstaining from meat, but in fasting from mischiefe. If the wezand haue offended onely, then it is enough that it fast; but if all the members haue surfetted in sinne, good reason (as [n] Bernard excellently) that all should keepe a Lent: that the wanton eye should obserue Lent in abstaining from seeing of vanitie; that the curious itching eare should obserue Lent in fasting from idle rumoures and vnsauory talke; that the glib tongue should obserue Lent in refraining from euill speaking; especially that the polluted soule should obserue Lent in denying her owne will, and doing Gods will. [o] Quid enim prodest ieiunare visceribus, & luxurare venatibus: abstinere cibis, errare peccatis; castigare corpus inedia, mentem exercere nequitia; vinum forte non bibere, & ebrium cogitatione malignitatis incedere?

In pureneſſe.] The Rhemists here reade chastitie, grounding vpon this text their impure Celibate. But [p] Ambrose construeth it of the Gospells purity so well as of the bodies chastitie. [q] Theodoret interprets it contempt of riches; Oecumenius, modestie; Chrysostome, reiecting of gifts, and preaching of the Gospell freely. So that it chargeth not Clergie-men to be without wiues, except they haue the gift of continency, and will vse it to Gods glory.

The Papists haue so doted on their Priests single life, that [r] Martinus de magistris, one of their owne schoole, deliuered impudently, that single fornication is no sinne. Bishop Iewell being challenged for this as a falsarie, further auowed it out of their owne Doctor Alphonsus de Castro. See defence of his Apologie, part. 4. cap. 1. diuision 1.

[s] Cardinall Campegius, Albertus Phigius, and other of that vncleane generation haue taught, that it is an honester thing for a Priest to be entangled with many concubines in secret, then openly to be ioyned in mariage with one wife: for he may not keepe one benefice with one wife, but he may haue two benefices and three whores, as their owne Cornelius Agryppa de vanitat. scient. cap. 64.

Their learned Bishop [t] Espencæus affirmes, that the Romish Officials haue taken a yeerly pension for licencing the Priests their concubines, exacting a paiment of continent persons also, because, say they, they may haue them if they list. In their [u] Canons, adulterie is reckoned among the petty sinnes, and so little punished in Clergie men, as that a Bishop need not [x] depriue them, and a lay-man may not [y] accuse them for incontinencie: for as Petrus Ranenas vpon the Decretals, Decretals, Albeit handling and kissing in lay-persons are the beginnings often of incontinent behauiour; yet in Priests it is far otherwise, for a priest is presumed to doe these things of charity and good zeale, so that if a Clergie man embrace a woman, a lay-man, saith the [z] Glosse, must iudge of it thus, that he doth it onely with an intent to blesse her: and thus, as [a] Augustine in the like case, Clamor Sodomorum & Gomorrhæorum multiplicatus est: The cry of Sodome and Gomorrha is multiplied, in that those vices are not onely vnpunished, but also openly vsed, and as it were by law authorized.

[b] Franciscus Turrianus, a Iesuite of great note, commends a single life so much, as to thinke it essentiall vnto Priesthood, euen by the word of God, and that it is no more lawfull for any person to permit the Clergie to marie, then to licence a man to steale. But their old [c] Gratian, and [d] Aquin, their now flourishing [e] Cardinall and their last [f] Councell affirme the contrary, concluding that this vow of chastity is annexed vnto the order of Priesthood onely by the positiue law of the Church, and that, as their Schoolman [g] Ioannes Scotus auoweth, is alterable. And indeed many learned Papists examining the sowre fruits of this accursed plant, haue thought it most fit that it should be changed. I will not cite satyricall Poets, as Mantuan, Petrarcha, Boccace, who may be sayd happily to write from the spirit of bitternesse, but their grauest Authors inueying against this abomination, euen from the bitternesse of spirit.

Abbat [h] Panormitane their great Canonist, saith, I beleeue it were a good law, and for the safety of soules, that such as cannot liue chaste, may contract matrimonie, for the Church herein ought to doe as the skilfull Phisitian. if he see by good experience that his medicine doth rather hurt, then helpe, taketh it cleane away.

[i] Polydor Virgil, an Author among them of good esteeme; No crime euer brought either more shame to Priesthood, or more hinderance to religion, or more griefe to the godly, then the life of single Priests.

Georgius Cassander, honoured of the Romane Emperors [k] Ferdinand and Maximilian for the most choice diuine of that age: [l] The Bishops of latter times haue much offended in executing the rigorous law of single life; for it is a snare vnto the soules of many young novices and hath occasioned most abominable scandals in the Church,

[m] Durandus, an accurate Schoolman, It were good that in a Councell Priests mariage were set at libertie, for hitherto it hath beene in vaine to force them vnto chastity

[n] Martinus Peresius a popish Bishop: Considering many men of filthy mindes are crept into the Church, it is necessarie that the law of single life should be released vtterly, that the holy name of Priesthood be no no more blasphemed of carnall and carlesse men.

[o] Espencæus: It may be sayd almost of Rome Christian, as it was of Rome heathen, Vrbs est iam tota Lupanar: All the whole city is a very stews.

Pope Gregorie the Great, vpon an horrible spectacle in a fish-pond as the spaune of constrained single life, did, for feare of moe murtherers, abrogate such ecclesiasticall restraints; as Huldericus Bishop of Augusta reports in an [p] Epistle to Pope Nicolas the first.

Pope Innocentius the third [q] wrote this of the Masse-priests in his age: Manè filium virginis offerunt in choro, sed nocte filium veneris agitant in thoro.

Pope [r] Pius the second, vpon the like corruptions, openly protested, that hee saw many causes why wiues should be taken away from Priests at the first; but now he saw many moe and more weighty reasons why they should be restored vnto them again.

The Cardinall of Cremona, being the Popes Legate sent from Rome to London especially for this end, to remoue married Clergie-men from their Cures; after he had made a long speech in disgrace of honourable mariage, was found the same night committing folly with a whore; res apertissima negari non potuit, celari non decuit, as Henry Huntingdon in his [s] historie.

Pope [t] Sergius the third kept Marozia Earle Guido his wife, and got of her another Pope Iohn the twelfe; and Iohn the [u] eleuenth did mortifie his flesh with with keeping his minion Theodora, and [x] Hildebrand with Matilda the Countesse, who forsooth was called S. Peters daughter.

Alexander the sixth bestowed a Cardinalship to continue the lone of [y] Iulia Farnesia, and made bold with his owne daughter Lucretia; and [z] Paul the third with his owne sister Iulia. But why speake we thus much of their adulterie, fornication, incest? It is Sodomie that is Romes [a] Diana, Rome is a [b] Cluniuersitie.

Roma quid est? quod te docuit præposterus ordo.
Quid docuit? iungas versa elementa, scies.
Roma amor est, amor? qualis? præposterus? vnde hoc?
Roma mares; noli dicere plura, scio.

John Casa Archbishop of Beneuentum, the Popes Legat at Venice, wrote in commendation of that abominable filthinesse; Et [c] quod ne fando quidem audiri debeat, eloquentiâ scelerata commendauit. It is written of [d] Tiberius Emperour of Rome, that he preferred highly Nouellus Tricongius, and made him Proconsul, for that he was able to drinke three pottles of wine together with one breath; and so the Popes haue [e] promoted some to Cardinalships (and a Cardinall is a Kings fellow) for doing them secret seruice, wherein was lesse honor and honestie.

Thus (as you see) there is great difference betweene popish chastity and Pauls puritie: for he saith expresly, [f] Mariage is honorable among all men; and that [g] it is better to marie then to burne: but these men, as [h] Epiphanius of the like, reiect mariage, yet cease not from lust. [i] Holcote applieth that of Iob vnto them, He hath not found stedfastnesse in his Angells. The spirits of our time by their couetousnesse are Angells of the pit of hell, and by their incontinence like the spirits called Incubi, the Priests of Priapus or Beelpheger; and so the Papists in their celibate mend their manners as the Deuill his dames legge; for whereas he should haue set it right, he burst it quite asunder.

It is sayd, Exod 37. 23. that the snuffers of the Temple were of pure gold: hereby signifying that they should be pure, who correct other. A Pastor then must be pure, though not a puritan; holy, not hollow; no boaster of puritie, but a true follower of vertue. Marke the words order here, [k] labour and fasting goe before, chastitie followeth after. It was fulnesse of bread and abundance of idlenesse that occasioned Sodome to sinne: Ezech 16. 49. but labour, and then as the Poet truly, perière cupidinis arcus, in the words of holy Scripture, Sarans fierie darts shall not hit thee. Venus in vinis, ignis in igne, quoth the [l] Master of that art. But fast and thou shalt starue thy raging enemie: nunquam fugatur nisi cum fugitur, nunquam mactatur, nisi cum maceratur, as [m] Innocentius sweetly.

Knowledge.] [n] That is, discretion and wisdome, called by the [o] Philosopher, ὄμμα τῆς ψυχῆς, as it were the soules eye: for as the Vnicorne doth more good with one horne then other beasts with two; so the discreet Pastor indued with a few gifts, edifieth his people better then vnwise Teachers adorned with many: which occasioned one to say, that young Lawyers, old Phisitians, and midling Diuines are best; an old Preacher cannot teach so painfully, and the young not so profitably, but the midling may doe both, as hauing the young mans erection of spirit, and the old mans direction of zeale.

An Vnicornes horne being in a skilfull mans hand, is very pretious and helpfull, but when it is in the beasts head, often hurtfull; and therefore [p] David praied he might be deliuered from the hornes of Vnicornes. In like manner, albeit zeale residing in a wise man be neuer so commendable, yet placed in a beasts head in a mans heart [q] like horse and mule without vnderstanding, is no better then madnesse and furie. [r] S. Paul sayd of the superstitious Iewes, I beare them record, that they haue the zeale of God, but not according to knowledge. zeale without learning is starke blinde, learning without discretion is purblinde; like strong Sampson without his eyes, apt to doe little good, howsoeuer able to doe much mischiefe.

As discretion is the soules eye, so the soule of vertue, being, as [s] Aristotle truly, virtutum

Then was Iesus led away of the spirit into the wildernesse to be tempted of the Deuill, &c.

[k] Iudges 9. 48.

The life of man is a [l] warfare vpon earth, and euery Christian is a professed souldier (as he vowed in baptisme) to fight against the world, the flesh and the deuill; our grand Captaine therefore Christ being both the [m] truth and the way, doth not onely direct vs by preaching, as the truth; but also demonstrate by personall encounter as our leader and way, how to quell and conquer all our enemies, [n] vt cuius munimur auxilio, erudiamur exemplo, the Captaine did fight that the souldier might [o] learne that euery Christian might sing and say with [p] Dauid, Blessed be the Lord my strength, which teacheth my hands to warre and my fingers to fight. And that [q] looking vnto Iesus the author and finisher of our faith, wee might not be wearied and faint in our mindes.

Now the weapons vsed in this combat by Christ, are partly { Offensiue, striking other. / Defensiue, guarding himselfe.

The [f] sword of the Spirit, that is the word of God, is his onely weapon offensiue; for as often as the tempter came nigh him, he strooke with it, It is written, it is written, &c.

His defensiue weapons are principally three, [t] correspondent to the number of our three mortall enemies, the { World. / Flesh. / Deuill.

He did vse the wildernes against the temptations of the world, fasting against the temptations of the flesh, and prayer against the temptations of the Deuill.

In the whole Gospell fiue points are remarkable concerning our Saiours temptation, the { Time when, Then. / Place where, The wildernesse. / Persons by whom, Led by the spirit, tẽpted of the deuill. / Manner how, The tempter came to him, &c. / Successe and euent what, Then the deuill leaueth him, and Angels ministred vnto him, &c.

S. Matthew reports in the words immediatly before, that the time was after Christ had bene baptized in Iordan, and the spirit had descended vpon him, and a voyce from heauen had said, This is my beloued sonn, in whom I am well pleased. Here then as in a Chrystall glasse wee may behold the condition of all Christians; [u] assoon as wee giue vp our names vnto Christ in baptisme, so soone as the Spirit shall descend vpon vs inlightning our vnderstanding, and reforming our affections; as soone as we begin to please God, we despise Satan, instantly making him our enemie, roring and raging against our poore soule with all might and malice.

[x] Nunquam bella bonis, nunquam dissidia cessant.
Et quocum certet, mens pia semper habet.

As Paul when he came to [y] Macedonia, so we, so soone as wee looke toward Ierusalem, and make conscience of sinne, shall be troubled on euery side, fightings without, and terrours within.

It is written, Apocal. 12. 4. that the great red Dragon stood before the woman, which was ready to be deliuered, that he might deuoure her childe, when shee had brought it forth. In a mysticall sense, this [z] woman is the Church, and this dragon is the deuill, euermore ready to deuour the penitent, all such as are new creatures in Christ, borne againe by baptisme and repentance. As the crafty theefe will not breake into an empty house, but into some fat kitchin, or full barne, where he may finde a good booty; so Satan assaults them especially, who are rich in grace: for [a] as a dogge barkes at strangers, and not at such as are domesticall; and as the Fowler layeth his snare for birds that are wild, not for his Pigeons or Partriges in his owne custodie: so when the Deuill as a [b] strong man armed keepeth his hold, the things he possesseth are in peace; then as [c] Holofernes to Iudith; Feare not in thine heart, for I neuer hurt any that would serue Nabuchodonozer the King of all the earth: In like manner he saith; I neuer molest any that are content to serue me the Prince of the world.

Discomfort not thy selfe then in any temptation, for it is a manifest argument Satan hath no possession or part in thee, but that thou art the seruant and sonne of God; for whom God loues, assuredly the Deuill hates; as the one workes in mercy, the other workes in malice. Let not the Prince of darkenesse be wiser in his kinde than the children of light: as he is craftie in obseruing his Then, and taking his time to tempt, so let vs be prudent in watching our hint to quell his suggestions; vndoubtedly the best time is to resist him at the first time, [d] audacius insilit a tergo, quàm resistit in faciem. If yee resist the deuill, he will flee from you, saith [e] S. Iames.

[i] 1 Pet. 5. 8.

The place where Christ was tempted is sayd here to be the wildernesse; and that for sundry reasons, as Interpreters obserue; [k] first in good correspondence to Adam ouercome by the Tempter in Paradise: for the first Adam was conquered of the Serpent by gluttonie, pride and auarice: by gluttonie, when he did eat the forbidden fruite; by pride desiring to be as God; by couetousnesse, in being discontent with his present estate: So the second Adam is assaulted here by the same Serpent, with the like temptations: With gluttonie, If thou be the Sonne of God, command that these stones be made bread: with pride, The Deuill setteth him on a pinnacle of the Temple: with auarice, he carried him vp to the top of an high mountaine, and shewed him all the kingdomes of the world, and the glory of them, and sayd, All these will I giue thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worship me. But our Sauiour comming into the world to gaine that which Adam lost, abounding with three contrary vertues, Humilitie, Temperance, Contentation, ouercame the Tempter, and that in open field, because the Deuill had discomfited Adam in the garden.

[k] Rupert. in loc. & Ambros. com in Luc lib. 4. c. 1

Secondly, Christ was tempted and fasted in the wildernesse fortie dayes and fortie nights, before he did execute his office publikely, [l] that he might appeare to be sent from God, rather then out of any Towne from men. [m] When Almighty God deliuered his Law to Moses, he tooke him vp into a mountaine from the sight of the people, and a cloud couered the mountaine, that he might talke with Moses as in a withdrawing chamber; and after Moses had beene in Mount Sinai fortie dayes and fortie nights, the Lord spake to Moses, and afterward Moses to the people. In like manner, it was meete that Christ being a far more worthy Minister of a far more excellent law, should fortie daies & fortie nights abide in the wildernesse, free from the tumults and troubles of the world, and then begin to teach the Gospell as a God among men, at least as a [n] man of God, & not [o] of men.

[p] According to this patterne Preachers of the Word should not be taken out of Tauernes into Temples, or from meere secular courses into this high ecclesiasticall function, but from their solitarie studies, and monasticall liues in Vniuersities.

Thirdly, Christ was tempted in the wildernesse as a most fit place for [q] temptation, as also for [r] duell and single combat: for men of resolution will not draw their weapons in the street, but (as we speake) challenge their aduersarie to goe into the field. Our valiant Captaine therefore prouoked his and our mortall enemie to fight hand to hand in a desert.

That the wildernesse is fit for temptation, is auowed by truth it selfe; [s] Two are better than one, for if they fall, the one will lift vp his fellow: but woe vnto him that is alone; for he falleth, and there wants a second to succour him. A melancholike solitarie man is most exposed to Satans malice; Christian societie is like a bundle of sticks laid together, whereof one kindles another; Eua was tempted alone, Christ alone, Hierome alone: Companie then is good, especially when the men are good; otherwise better it is to fight with one deuill in the wildernesse, than with many deuills in a tauerne. When thou art alone read the Scriptures, or pray, that either God may talke to thee, or thou to God, and so thou mayst say with [t] Scipio, that thou art neuer lesse alone, than when alone; for what companie so great and so good as the guard of Angels, and fellowship of the Holy Ghost? But if thou talke with thy selfe concerning worldly businesse, and meditate mischiefe in thy bed, in thy field, in thy Cell, assuredly Satan is in his right vbi to triumph ouer thee.

Led

Led by the spirit.] There be [n] sundry different acceptions of this word in holy Scriptures.

In this one Gospell wee may note foure kinds of spirits; a { Diabolicall, Angelicall, Humane, Diuine, } by which Christ was { tempted, vers. 1. comforted, vers. 11 hungry, vers. 2. led.

For [x] all the Doctors accord that this Spirit was the Spirit, the third person in the sacred Trinitie. [y] Dydimus and Hierome gather this out of the article The. Secondly, [z] St Luke reports expresly, that Iesus full of the Holy Ghost returned from Iordan, and was led by the spirit into the wilderneſſe. Thirdly, the context of our Euangelist is plaine, When the Spirit of God had descended on him like a Doue, then was he led by the spirit, &c. As Christ the naturall Sonne, so Christians adoptiue children of God are [a] led by the Spirit of God, ducuntur non trahuntur; as the Schoole, Deus non neceſſitat, ſed facilitat: an harsh phrase, but a sweete sentence, [b] verba lateritia, ſed ratio marmorea. So Dauid, O God my heart is ready, my heart is ready, Psal. 108. 1. [c] Paratum cor meum ad proſpera, paratum ad aduerſa, paratum ad ſublimia, paratum ad humilia, paratum ad vniuerſa, quæ præceperis: O God my heart is ready for prosperitie, ready for aduersitie: wilt thou haue me to be a shepheard? O God my heart is ready: wilt thou make me a King? O God my heart is ready, ready for honour, and ready for a meane estate; what soeuer it please thee to send, I will sing and giue praise with the best member that I haue. So Paul in this daies Epistle, being led by the Spirit, was ready for euill report and good report, ready for mirth, and ready for sorrow, ready for honor, and ready for dishonour in much patience.

The kine who carried the Lords Arke to Bethshemesh, as [d] Gregorie notes, aptly resemble the iust: Although [e] they lowed after their calues at home, yet they kept one path, and turned neither to the right hand nor to the left. And so naturall affection toward our children, makes euen the best man sometime to low, sometime to looke back vnto the things of this life; yet being led by the Spirit goeth on still the straight way, [f] forgetting that which is behinde, and endeuouring himselfe vnto that which is before, following hard toward the marke for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Iesus.

[g] Abraham being led by the Spirit, forsooke his owne country, kindred, home, [h] and went out, not knowing whither he went. [i] Paul being led by the Spirit, went to Ierusalem, euen a Citie that [k] killed her prophets, and said, I passe not at all, neither is my life deare vnto my selfe, so that I may fulfill my course with ioy. So Christ here led by the Spirit into the wilderneſſe.

He did not then thrust himselfe into temptation, neither was he forced thereunto by Satan his enemie, as the text plainly, led by the Spirit to be tempted of the Deuill. Out of which obserue two conclusions: [l] first, that we may not seeke temptations our selues: secondly that we cannot be tempted of other but by diuine permission. In consideration of both, it is fit with the Church daily to desire God, that we fall into no sinne neither runne into any kinde of danger, but that all our doings may be ordered by his gouernance, the which is no more than our master Christ hath taught in his absolute forme of prayer, lead vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from euill. O heauenly Father assist vs with thy Spirit, and giue an issue with the temptation, that those euills which the craft and subtiltie of the deuill, or man worketh against vs, be brought to nought, and by the prouidence of thy goodneſſe they may be diſperſed; as our Church in the Letanie.

To be tempted] [m] S. Iames saith, 'a man may not say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for he can neither be tempted with euill, nor tempt any to euill; how then could the Spirit leade Christ to be tempted? Answer is made by S. Augustine in an [n] Epistle to Consentius: Alia tentatio deceptionis, alia probationis: There be two sorts of temptations, one to proue, another to deceiue vs. Now God doth only tempt to try, but Satan to destroy. God doth tempt to make men better; and therefore [o] Dauid: Proba me Deus, & tenta me. So [p] S. Iames;

Account it exceeding ioy, when ye fall into diuers temptations, as knowing that the trying of our faith bringeth forth patience. But Satan tempts to make men worse: 1. Cor. 7 5. and 1. Thess. 3. 5. [q] Diabolus tentat vt subruat, Deus vt coronet: The deuill doth tempt vs to destruction, but God doth tempt vs for our instruction.

Happily some will obiect: If Christ were led by the Spirit to be tempted of the deuill, Almighty God is Author of euill. In answer whereof, vnderstand that God in some respect may be sayd, actor in malo, but not [r] Author mali, that is a worker in temptation, and yet free from sinne: first, God may be said immediatly to tempt by offring [s] occasions and obiects to trie whether a man will sinn or not. A [t] master suspecting his seruant, laies a purse of money in his way to try if he will steale it; which if he steale, then the master hath found by watching him a secret theefe, and so will lay him open for deceiuing any more: now this trying is no fault in the master, albeit this stealing is sinne in the seruant. In like manner God tempteth his seruants to proue them, Deut. 13. 3. Thou shalt not hearken vnto the words of the Prophet or dreamer of dreames for the Lord your God proueth you, to know whether you loue the Lord your God with all your heart.

Secondly, God is sayd to lead into temptation by withdrawing his grace, for so S. [u] Augustine doth expound, & ne nos inferas in tentationem; intelligitur (saith he) ne nos inferri deserendo permittas. As the schoole distinguisheth aptly, Deus deficit gratiam detrahendo, diabolus affligit malitiam apponendo, homo seipsum inficit duritiam contrahendo.

Thirdly, God is a worker in temptation so far forth as it is an action, [x] for euery action as it is an action is good, and of God, in [y] whom we liue, moue and haue our being. A man rides vpon a lame horse, the rider is the cause of the motion, but the horse himselfe is the cause of the halting in the motion: so God is author of euery action, but not of the wickednesse in any action; and yet being infinite in greatnes and goodnesse, he doth dispose well of that which is ill, [z] as the cunning Physitian makes of deadly poyson a wholesome medecine. [a] Licet Deus non sit author, tamen ordinator est peccatorum, ne vniuersitatis naturam turbare, vel turpare permittantur. And so God suffers his children to be tempted, [b] ἐις γυμνασιαν, for their exercise, [c] that they be not exalted out of measure, that they may know the power of the Lord, and proofe of his armour, [d] that they may be thankfull for that inestimable treasure comm tted vnto them by the father of mercies, I meane their soule, which Satan assaults daily to winne from them.

I conclude in the words of [e] Augustine to Laurentius; Non dubitandum est Deum facere bene etiam sinendo fieri quacunque male; non enim hoc nisi iusto iudicio finit; & profecto bonum est omne quod iustum est; quamuis ergo ea quæ mala sunt in quantum mala sunt non sunt bona, tamen vt non solum bona sed etiam sint & mala bonum est; nam nisi esset hoc bonum, vt essent & mala, nullo modo esse sinerentur ab omnipotente bono.

Kill the ſerpent in the egge, [h] for out of the ſerpents root ſhall come a cockatrice, and the fruit thereof ſhall be a fiery flying dragon; firſt a ſerpent, then a cockatrice, laſt of all a ceraſtes. And therefore [i] Salomon aduiſeth in his ſong, to take the little foxes; not becauſe little cubs are able to doe much hurt, but, as [k] expoſitors aptly, becauſe they may grow to be great foxes. In the two former temptations, as [l] Aquin wittily, the deuill aſſaults Chriſt with, if thou be the Son of God; but when he tempted Chriſt vnto couetouſneſſe, he was not ſo ſhameleſſe as to ſay, if thou be the Sonne of God, becauſe that ſinne is ſo farre vnfitting the Sonne of God, as that it doth not in any ſort become the [m] man of God. It

It is written] Our Sauiour repels all Satans assaults only with this one weapon, It is written, It is written. Philip Diez a Portugall Frier, of [n] great reckoning in Spaine, saith in his Postill vpon this place; that as [o] Laban deceiued Iacob in the night, giuing him in stead of faire Rachel, bleare-eyed Lea; so Satan in the darkenesse of our ignorance deceiueth vs: and therefore we must be conuersant in Gods holy word, which is a lanterne vnto our feet, and a light vnto our paths, able to discouer foule from faire, good from euill, Rachel from Lea. Cardinall Caietane, darling to Pope Leo the tenth, one who for his good seruice to the Church of Rome, should ([p] as it is thought) if he had liued, beene preferred vnto the Popedome, writes in his Commentaries vpon these words; Hinc discamus omnes arma nostra esse sacras Scripturas: Hence all may learne that holy Scriptures are their armorie. Iosephus [q] Acosta Prouinciall of the Iesuits at Peru, Visitor in Aragon, and Rector Collegij Salmanticen. in Spaine, saith vpon this [r] Text that this Scripture is like the Tower of Dauid built for defence, a thousand shields hang therein, and all the targets of the strong men. Cant. 4. 4. In this armorie there are many shields to defend our selues, and many swords to offend our enemies.

It is said of Christ, Cant. 5. 12. that his eyes are like doues vpon the riuers of water. Which Pope [s] Gregorie the Great thus allegorically: The Doue sitting by the riuers side describeth a far off the shadow of the Hawke her mortall enemie, and so doth either escape by flight, or shrowd her selfe by the banke. In like manner (saith he) the Christian who delights to sit by the fountaine of liuing waters, and to [t] meditate on Gods law day and night, is able to discouer all the cunning assaults of his aduersary the diuell, and, as Christ here, to sound him and wound him, euen by casting a little of this holy water in his face, Scriptum est, scriptum est.

I cite these popish Authors against the pope, who denieth vnto the common souldier of Christ this weapon, and in stead thereof would haue him fight either with the woodden dagger of fabulous Histories, or else with the rustie scabberd of old traditions; and so blunting so much as he can the two-edged sword of the Spirit, shewes himselfe more like the diuels deputy than Christ's vicar. For, Christ doth vrge most, it is written, whereas the Pope by way of countercuffe as Antichrist especially maintaineth ordinances vnwritten: as [v] Caluin, alluding to the words of [x] Ieremy, told Francis the King of France plainly, the Papists haue forsaken the fountaine of liuing waters, and haue digged themselues pits, euen broken pits that can hold no water, neglecting the Bible which is the Tree of Life, the Word of Life, the Booke of Life; they feed the peoples eye with pictures and bables, and their eare with legends and fables, in stead of scriptum est, traditum est, teaching for doctrines the traditions of men.

To let passe the manifold acception of the word tradition, examined by their learned [y] Bishop Peresius, and their accurate [z] Bellarmine: in this controuersie betweene them and vs, it is agreed on each side, that [a] Traditions are doctrines deliuered from hand to hand, either by word of mouth, or by writing, beside the Canonicall Scriptures.

And the state of the question is this, as the cited Authors & [b] other acknowledge: they teach, that beside the word written, there be certaine traditions vnwritten, which must be beleiued as necessarie to saluation: and these are either apostolicall, deliuered by the Apostles and not penned; or Ecclesiasticall, decreed by the Church, as occasion is offered daily. [c] We contrariwise maintaine, that the sacred Scripture containeth all doctrine necessarie to saluation, whether it concerne faith or manners.

It is vntruly said of Bellarmine, lib. de notis ecclesiæ, cap. 9. that we reiect all traditions; he doth deale more kindly with vs [d] elsewhere, confessing that our Diuines allow traditions and ordinances, touching outward order and comelinesse in the Church: and the truth is, our Congregations embrace more decent and ancient rites in saying of publike prayers, and administring of the Sacraments, than the present Romane Synagogue; for most of their old traditions are but vpstart vpstart fopperies. I will not here meddle with their [c]trumperies in administring of holy baptisme, nor with the ridiculous and apish ceremonies of the Masse, [f] whereby the Priest in his duckings and turnings, his kissings and crossings, his lifting vp and letting downe, behaueth himsefe more like a lugler or a vice vpon a stage, then a reuerend father in a Temple. Giue me leaue to taxe two points onely, which more neerly concerne the present text, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue.

First, their adoration of Christs image with diuine honour, concluded in their Schooles and practised in their Churches, is their [g] owne blasphemous inuention against all Synods and fathers, old and new, Greeke and Latine. The second Nicene Councell almost [h] eight hundred yeeres after Christ, first began this pretie pastime to kisse Images, and salute Crosses; and yet that Councell ascribed not diuine honour to Images, as the Papists in our time. [i] Ionas Bishop of Orleans that wrote against Claudius Bishop of Turin, in the defence of Images, aboue fiftie yeeres after the second Nicene Councell, abhorred notwithstanding exceedingly, the worshipping of Images as a most hainous error, and a wickednesse with open voyce to be detested and accursed; it is then an old new tradition, neuer embraced in the Church vntilll [k] Aquinas age, who died [l] Anno. 1274.

The second point here to be censured is their idle distinction of latria and doulia, as it is applied of late to maintaine their inuocation of Saints against my text. Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, & illi soli seruies. All diuine worship and honour whether it be doulia or latria, belongs vni Deo, soli Deo, semper Deo, So [m] S Augustine: Debetur ei latria vt Deo, doulia vt Domino. Whereas the Papists then affords vnto the creature doulian, reseruing to the Creator onely latrian, [n] he deales with God, as [o] Clodia did with her husband excusing her incontinence, by saying that she did company with Metellus as with an husband, but with Clodius as with a brother: whereas all was due to her husband onely.

[p] Laurentius Valla doth proue, the Iesuit [q] Suarez cannot denie it, and Cardinall [r] Bellarmine in one page doth twice confesse it, that latria and doulia signifie the same thing in all prophane writers, howsoeuer the Church distinguish them. I demand, what Church? Hath the West, or East? Is any primitiue Doctor, or ancient father author of this distinction? [s] Aragon answers ingenuously, no. For in their natiue signification, as he notes out of Suidas and Phaurinus, in old time, λατρεία was the same with δουλεία: but now (saith hee) λατρεία onely, and not δουλεία, doth signifie the worship due vnto God: now, that is, either the Iesuits and schoolemen must hold it vp, or else let inuocation of Saints fall downe. Neither is this strange (saith he) for the first authors and inuenters of any Science haue licence to coyne words according to their purpose. So the [t] Cardinall himselfe: Why should not the latter Church haue libertie to make new distinctions against new heretikes, as well as the learned Orthodoxes in former times inuented the word ὁμοούσιος, against Arius? In fine, the pith of his resolution is, as if he should say, the Papists against the true professors of the Gospell, hammered first in their owne schoole this halting difference betweene λατρεία and δουλεία, to iustifie their idolatrous inuocation of Saints, and adoration of their reliques. I prosecute this argument more vehemently, because Christ in this place doth handle Satan (as [u] Interpreters obserue) more roughly when he tempted vnto false worship, then he did before when he did onely tempt to distrust and vaine-glory: now Christ could not any longer endure him, Auoyd Satan hence from me: for it is written, [x] thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serue We may not worship a Saint, nor an Angell, Ergo not a Deuill: if we may not adore with diuine worship Gods especiall friends, then surely much lesse his irreconciliable foe. Man fell from God, and was againe reconciled vnto God, as being only seduced of another: [y] Ergo quanto fragilior in natura, tanto facilior ad veniam. But Lucifer fell so fully, so foully, being author of his fall as well as actor in his fault, that he shall neuer be restored againe, but is [z] preserued in in euerlasting chaines vnder darkenesse vnto the iudgement of the great day: so that Rupertus hath well noted vpon my text, that our Sauiour repeats the law, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, as written to men onely, [a] for God is not ashamed to be called their God: not as concerning the deuill, for the Lord is not his God, as he is euill, or deuill: Almighty God created in the beginning Angels and men, but he neuer made Satan or sinne.

THis Epistle to the Thessalonians, hath [k] two principall parts: a { Congratulation for their constant faith, in the three former Chapters. Exhortation to godly life, contained in the two latter.

[k] Sycerius in loc.

In the first part S. Paul, Siluanus, and Timothie giue God hearty thanks, for that the Thessalonians had receiued the Gospell in such sort, that they were [l] examples not onely to those of Achaia and Macedonia, but also to Christians in all quarters; and this may teach all men, Pastors especially, to reioyce for the good successe of the Gospell, as also sometime to commend and incourage their auditors in that they doe well; and it is the peoples dutie to vse this commendation, as a spur to vertue, not a stirrup to pride.

In the second, They desire the Thessalonians earnestly, to continue still according to their good beginnings, adding further (as [m] S. Peter speaks) vnto their faith vertue; part of which exhortation is the Scripture read:

These two, mildnes and boldnes of speech, howsoeuer in their owne nature different, ought notwithstanding to meete in euery good Pastour; in regard of himselfe, mildnes is amiable; for that is Pauls precept, [t] improue, rebuke with all long suffering: but in regard of Christ, whose errand he doth, all boldnes is necessarie; for that is Pauls practise, [u] preaching the kingdome of God, and teaching the things which concerne the Lord Iesus Christ with all boldnesse of speech. Hereby we may learne to [x] distinguish betweene good and bad Teachers, if good, they beseech as brethren, and exhort by the Lord Iesus; if bad, they [y] demineere ouer the faith of their hearers, obtruding their owne inuentions vpon the people, [z] teaching for doctrines the traditions of men: Instead of the Prophets edict, thus saith the Lord, and Pauls exhorting and commanding by Iesus Christ, they thunder out, sic volo, sic Iubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas; or as [a] Constantius that Arian Emperour, Quod ego volo pro canone sit. The people must beleeue as the Church, and the Church as the Pope, and the Pope as he list. And as the great Pope cannot erre; so the schismaticall Popeling will not erre; both are tyrants ouer their brethren in a different degree; for that which is effected by the one, is affected by the other.

[b] Reusner. in symbolis.

A Christian must not be like [c] Ezechias sunne that went backward, nor like [d] Iosuas sunne, that stood still, but [e] Dauids sunne, that like a Bridegroome comes out of his chamber, and as a champion reioyceth to run his race. As then heretofore we did heape sinne vpon sinne, drawing the threeds thereof so big, so long till we made them [f] cords of vanity, and after wrethed these cords vntill they became cart-ropes of iniquities: so now being called vnto sanctification and holinesse, let vs increase more and more, from faith to faith, from vertue to vertue, saying with [g] Paul, I count not my selfe perfect, &c. but one thing I doe, I forget that which is behinde, and endeuour my selfe to that which is before, following hard toward the marke for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Iesus. As it is sayd of Origen, that he did excell other in all he wrote, but himselfe in his notes vpon the Canticles: so wee must earnestly contend to passe all other, and at the last to goe beyond our selues in holy conuersation and pureneesse of life, like Paulinus, of whom [h] S. Hierome, in primis partibus alios, in penultimis teipsum superas.

In

In respect of { God, that we may doe the will of our Father in heauen, and by this our light, occasion other to glorifie him also, Mat. 5.16.
Our neighbours, to [i] witnesse our faith vnto them, as also to [k] winne them vnto Christ.
Our selues, to quiet our conscience, 1. Tim. 1.19. and to make our election sure, 2, Pet. 1. 10.

This doctrine Protestant Diuines auowed euer, as the Church of England in our Confession, art. 12. the Church of [l] Saxonie, the Confession exhibited at [m] Augusta to Charles the fifth, anno 1530. and after explained at [n] Worms, anno 1540. Luther. com. epist. ad Galat. cap. 5. vers. 6. Philip. Melanchthon in his Common places and Catechisme, tit. de bonis operibus, sect. causæ hortantes ad bene operandum. [o] Iewel in his Apologie, Caluin in his [p] Institution, Chemnitius in his Examination of the [q] Tridentine Counsell, Zanchius and others in their Commentaries vpon this Text.

It is then a forged imputation (our aduersarie [r] Bellarmine being witnesse) that our Gospell is [s] carnall, and the beaten high way to Epicurisme: so that we take vp the words of [t] Augustine, Nemo legem ita intelligit, nisi qui non intelligit; No man thus vnderstands the matter, but he that wants vnderstanding. We say that good workes make faith fat, and without [u] holinesse it is impossible to see God. Indeed we dare not compare with the Papists in their meritorious butchering of Princes, in their vncleane chastity, drunken fasts, vncharitable charitie, selling heauen vnto the rich, and denying it vnto the poore for want of money; but in all duties of religion and honestie, we dare iustifie our selues in comparison of them, vnto the whole world, though hereby we doe not iustifie our selues before God.

That euery one should know how to keepe his vessell in holinesse and honour] [x] First know to keepe by the word, and then to keepe according to the word: [y] Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way? euen by ruling himselfe after thy word.

His vessell] To wit, his bodie, which is a [z] vessell of honour in Gods house, yea, the [a] temple of the Holy Ghost: if then we must keepe the [b] materiall Temple cleane, much more the mysticall. Or, Your vessell, [c] that is, your wife; for albeit Christians of all sexes and sorts may marrie, 1. Cor. 7. 2. yet the bed must be vndefiled, Hebr. 13. 4. [d] Doting loue is dishoneſt in a man euen toward his owne wife: lust of intemperate concupiscence in mariage, is a kinde of adulterie, saith [e] Ambrose. The Gentiles vse to sinne much in this kinde, but it is because they know not God, but yee know what commandements we gaue you by our Lord Iesus, and therefore possesse your vessells in holinesse and honour, and not in the lust of concupiscence.

Now because filthy lust dishonours and pollutes our vessells especially, S. Paul would haue vs abstaine from fornication in euery kinde; for although it seemeth a paradise to the desire, yet it is a purgatorie to the purse, and an hell to the soule, and that which may moue the wanton most, a [f] sinner against his owne body. Doest thou then loue thy flesh? abstaine from fornication, for it is [g] rottennesse to the bones: Doest thou loue thy soule? abstaine from fornication, for it is dishoneſt: Doest thou loue thy credit? abstaine from fornication, for it is dishonourable; this heate is an infernall fire, whose fuell is [h] fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idlenesse; [i] euill communication the sparkes, [k] infamie the smoake, pollution ashes, end [l] hell. God the Father at the firſt created vs according to his owne likeneſſe, Gen. 1. 26. that is, righteouſneſſe and true holineſſe, Epheſ. 4. 24. When this image was defaced, it pleaſed God the Sonne to reſtore it againe, creating vs a-new to good workes, Epheſ. 2. 10. And that we may now poſſeſſe our veſſels in honour and holineſſe, God the Holy Ghoſt is giuen vnto vs [b] helping our infirmities, and [c] teaching vs how to ſerue God in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the dayes of our life: ſanctification then is the will of God the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt.

It is Gods abſolute command, that the very [d] ſumme of all his ſtrict law; [e] but to winne further obedience, Paul vſeth a more gratious terme, will; inſinuating that euery child ſhould bee moſt ready to doe the will of his father: and therefore we muſt firſt learne [f] what is his acceptable will, and then endeuour that it may be done in earth as it is in heauen: for none ſhall enter into Gods kingdome, but ſuch as doe Gods will, Matth. 7. 21.

If [g] all our time that remaineth in the fleſh, ought to be ſpent, not after the luſt of men, but after the will of God; much more his holy day, when we meet in his holy Temple, to call vpon his holy Name, to be made partakers of his holy Sacraments and holy word. Holy things are for holy perſons; a [h] pearle muſt not be caſt before ſwine, nor that which is ſanctified giuen to dogs.

As God enioyneth holineſſe by the word written, ſo likewiſe by the word preached, according to that which is written, verſ. 2. Yee know what commandements wee gaue you by the Lord Ieſus. [i] For I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I haue deliuered vnto you. Yee haue receiued of vs how yee ought to walke, verſ. 1. Ye know what commandement we gaue you, verſ. 2. We haue told you before time, and teſtified, verſ. 6. Albeit the Theſſalonians abounded in faith and knowledge, yet Paul thinketh it not vnfit to repeat the ſame leſſons againe and againe: ſo likewiſe [k] S. Peter, I will not be negligent to put you alwaies in remembrance of theſe things, though that yee haue knowledge, and be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth. And ſo Biſhop Latymer in his vltimum vale to the Court, proteſted openly, that if he ſhould ſay nothing elſe three or foure houres together but only the bare words of his text, beware of couetouſneſſe, beware of couetouſenſſe, his Sermon might be reputed witleſſe, yet not needleſſe. If all the world were paradiſe, the ſower once might ſow for all; or if he were like the land of the [l] Albanoyſes, he need but once to till in three yeeres; or if it were ſo fertile as ſome ſoyle is ſayd, vnder the [m] Northerne pole, he might ſow in the morning, and reape at euening. But ſince Adams fall the ground is full of thornes, Gen. 3. and ſome ſeed vſually falleth among thornes, Matth. 13. and much graine is caſt vpon the high way, which is either trampled away by the vulgar tract of the world, or waſhed away by the common ſtreame of the time, or elſe ſtollen away by the birds birds of the ayre, that is, as Chriſt expounds himſelfe, by Satan the prince of the ayre: it is therefore commendable for the ſpeaker, and [a] profitable for the hearer, that the ſame thing bee preached and preſſed often; I ſay, that the ſame ſeed bee ſowne in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon, 2 Tim. 4. verſ. 2.

And in truth all our ſermons are nothing elſe, but [o] rehearſals of that old Spittle Sermon, (as it were) preached by God himſelfe to decayed Adam and Eua, Gen. 3. 15. For firſt, all that is ſayd by Chriſt and his bleſſed Apoſtles in the New Teſtament, is ſummarily nothing elſe, but a repetition and explanation of that one prophecie, Semen mulieris conteret caput ſerpentis.

The primitiue Fathers, who flouriſhed as yet while the blood of Chriſt was [p] warme, Ignatius, Areopagita, Clemens, Polycarpus, and other, were diſciples vnto Chriſt his diſciples, as Irenæus writes, lib. 3. cap. 3.

After theſe ſucceeded other Doctors as the ſalt of the earth and light of the world, whereof ſome conſtrued the [q] Scripture litterally, as Hierome; other allegorically, as Origen; other morally, as Gregorie the great; other pathetically, as Chryſoſtome; other dogmatically, as Auguſtine; all of them (as worthy [r] Melanæthon is bold to deliuer) in the maine articles of religion apoſtolically.

Then in another ranke marched immediatly the Schoole Authors, whoſe crotchets are nothing els but a deſcant vpon the plaine ſong of the Fathers: and therefore Peter Lombard, their grand Captaine is ſtiled Magiſter Sententiarum the compiler of the Fathers axioms; and Thomas is termed by [s] Tritenhemius, alter Auguſtinus; and it is an vſuall adage in the Schoole, [t] that the ſoule of Auguſtine was Pythagorically transfuſed into the corps of Aquin; as Zeno ſayd, Rhetorike is like the hand open, and Logicke like the fiſt ſhut; as [u] Galeottus Martius ſayd, Hebrew is Chalde augmented, and Chalde Hebrew curtailed. And as one ſaid, galloping is nothing elſe but a loftie amble, and an amble nothing elſe but a ſoft gallop: So the Father is a large ſchooleman, and the [x] Schooleman a ſhort Father: the one doth flie out, and as it were gallop in the large fields of Common places, the other as it were amble in the ſtrict termes of argument; the one ſo plaine as the palme, the other ſo knottie as the fiſt.

As [y] Auguſtine wrote of his baſtard Adeodatus; Ego in illo puero præter delictũ nihil habebam; ſo the Schoolemen may confeſſe of their Treatiſes (which are their children, as [z] Syneſius called his Orations) that there is nothing in them of their owne, but only that which is bad, all the good ſtuffe is the Fathers (if I may ſo ſpeake) but the curious ſnipping and pincking is their owne. I might here mention the ſcribbling Frier, a midling Diuine betweene a Father and a Schoolman, ape to both: but as ſome imitated [a] Pompey the Great in ſcratching his head with one finger; and as ſome [b] Philip Melanæthon in his ſtammering ſpeech, and other Sir Thomas Moore in wearing his gowne on one ſhoulder; euen ſo the Frier, as an horſe-leech, did onely ſucke the corrupt bloud out of the Schoole veine, and ſpider-like, gather poyſon out of the Fathers ſweet flowers.

To come neerer home: Vniuerſities in this laſt age, be nothing elſe but the old Schooles new plaiſtered, and our Diuinitie profeſſors are reformed Catholikes, as Zanchius is termed vſually the refined Thomiſt; Melanæthon the perſpicuous Schooleman; Luther, I thinke, may challenge the ſtile of our countryman Bacon, [c] Doctor reſolutus; and the Ieſuite is a moth-eaten Schooleman in a new print and faire couer: the difference betweene them is onely this, as Bonamicus once wittily; the Schooleman is philoſophicall in his theologie, whereas the Ieſuit is theologicall in his philoſophie: but in the maine matters, as one ſayd of cimnell, that it is bread vpon bread; ſo Ludouicus Molina, Gregorius de Valentia, Franciſcus Suarez, and other of the Ieſuiticall Order in their Explications, Commentaries, and diſputations vpon Aquinas, are nothing elſe as it were but Thomas vpon Thomas.

Thus in all ages (as you ſee) the whole courſe of Diuinitie is nothing elſe but a [d] rehearſall of one Sermon onely, the ſeed of the woman, &c. and therefore Paul had iuſt cauſe to repeat the ſame doctrine to the Theſſalonians heere, yee haue receiued receiued of vs how to walke, &c. yee know what commandements, &c. as we haue told you before, &c.

Hee therefore that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not man but God. This argument is a [e] concluſion of the former reaſons, inforcing them [f] all. It is not I Paul that exhort you, but Chriſt, and Chriſt is not onely man, but alſo God; he that wills ſanctification is God, he that is auenger of fornication and couetouſneſſe is God, he that calls vnto this holyneſſe is God; he therefore that deſpiſeth our admonitions in this caſe, deſpiſeth not man, but God, God the Father, who created vs in holineſſe, God the Sonne, who renued vs vnto holineſſe, God the Holy Ghoſt, proceeding from the Father and the Sonne, to keepe vs in true holineſſe.

It is a great ſinne to deſpiſe man, Eſay 33. 1. Qui ſpernis an non ipſe ſperneris? a greater ſinne to deſpiſe the meſſengers of God; Hee that deſpiſeth you, ſaith [g] Chriſt, deſpiſeth me: but it is the greateſt ſinne to deſpiſe God himſelfe; for [h] if they eſcaped not, which refuſed him that ſpake on earth, how ſhal we eſcape, if we turne away from him, that ſpeaketh from heauen? I will honour them, [i] ſaith the Lord, that honour me, but they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be deſpiſed: If one man treſpaſſe another, the Iudge ſhall iudge it; but if a man offend God, who ſhall plead for him? all his aduerſaries ſhall be deſtroyed, and out of heauen ſhall hee thunder vpon them; as Paul in this text, he is an auenger of ſuch things. If God then deſpiſe thoſe who neglect him, all the reſt of their time ſhall be ſpent, in [k] heaping vp wrath againſt the day of wrath,

But how doth our Apoſtle proue this propoſition, he that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not man but God? becauſe, ſaith he, God hath ſent his holy Spirit among you] There be two readings of theſe words, εἰς ἡμᾶς, and εἰς ὑμᾶς: if wee tranſlate with the vulgar Latine, Marlorat, Beza, God hath giuen vs his holy Spirit, then Pauls argument is framed [l] thus: he that deſpiſeth vs, deſpiſeth not man, but God; for we write not of our owne authority, but as inſpired by the bleſſed Spirit, which is God. If we read with our Church according to the beſt [m] Copies, among you then Paul argueth after this ſort; God hath ſent his holy Spirit among you for this end, that you may [n] diſcerne ſanctification to be his will. His Spirit is our helper, Rom. 2 26. our comforter, Ioh 14.16. our teacher, 1. Epiſtle of Ioh. 2.27 and therefore quench not the Spirit: no man can extinguiſh the Spirit, [o] but the wicked endeuour ſo farre as they can, to put it out, and ſo they be ſayd to quench the Spirit, as to [p] crucifie Chriſt againe, not actually but intentionally. Or as [q] other expound that text, the wicked are ſayd to quench the Spirit, in that they quench the gifts of the Spirit; a metaphor taken from fire, which is put out either by caſting on water, or taking away the wood; and ſo quench the feruor of Gods holy Spirit with our dyrtie ſinne, fornication and auarice; the body is the ſoules houſe, the ſoule the Spirits houſe; fornication pollutes the bodie; couetouſneſſe, which make vs dote on the worlds mucke, defileth the ſoule; this puddle then muſt needs extinguiſh Gods holy fire within vs. Againe, we leſſen this heat by taking the fuell away, neglecting good motions, and the meanes to cheriſh theſe motions; hearing of the ſacred word, receiuing of the bleſſed Sacraments, hearty prayer, holy deuotion, are the bellowes to blow the coles and increaſe the ſparkes of Gods heauenly graces: hee therefore that ſtops his eares and hardens his heart, when the Preachers exhort by the Lord Ieſus, he that regardeth little the word and will of God commanding ſanctification, he that will not poſſeſſe his veſſell in honour and holineſſe, he that oppreſſeth or defraudeth his brother in bargaining, what doth he but quench the Spirit, deſpiſing not man but God, a beſeeching God, a God that rather wills then commands, a God that calls vnto holineſſe, an auenging God, a God that dwells (as it were like an inmate) with him, a God that vſeth all meanes for his good in this life, that he may increaſe more and more; for his glory in the next, that he may reſt vpon his holy hill for euermore?

Whereas it is obiected, if the bleſſed Spirit dwell with vs, and preach in our hearts, what need we read the Scriptures, and heare ſo many ſermons and exhortations

The prouerbe is true, that the best end of such as shall continue still in these foule sinnes is pox and penurie.

[l] Nuda Venus picta est, nudi pinguntur amores:
Nam quos nuda capit, nudos amittat oportet.

Now for oppression and defrauding our brethren in bargaining, it is very remarkable, that God in all the New Testament is called but once the Lord of Hosts, and that is an auenger of these sinnes, [m] Behold, the hire of the labourers, which haue reaped your fields (which is of you kept backe by fraud) crieth, and the cries of them that haue reaped, are entred into the eares of the Lord of hosts. Aquine notes in his Commentaries vpon this text of S. Iames, that there be but foure kinds of crying sinnes mentioned in all the Scriptures, according to that old distichon:

Clamitat in cœlum vox [n] sanguinis & [o] Sodomorum,
Vox [p] oppressorum, merces retenta laborum.

Three of these foure are crying against the couetous wretch, as being an open oppressor, a secret defrauder, , both open and secret murtherer: for when his poore brother shall starue for want of food and clothes is he not accessarie to his death, if not principall? and therefore the clamors of many poore debtors in the dungeon, of many poore labourers in the field, of many poore neigboures crying and dying in the streets, enter into the eares of the Lord, who being Lord of hosts, hath innumerable souldiers euer ready to fight against them that fight against him and his; and so wee read that an host of Frogs discomfited oppressing Pharao, that an host of Lice deuoured cruell Herod, that an host of Rats eat vp couetous Hanno; but the Magistrates are Gods especiall liuetenants in this battle, and therefore by Gods appointment [q] Iehu King of Israel brake Iesabels neck, for taking away Naboth his life, that Achab her husband might enioy his vineyard, 1. King. 21. and [r] Catellus a British King hanged vp all oppressors of the poore for example: King Edward, commonly called good King Edward [s] banished them all his land. And albeit sometime the great theeues hang vp the little theeues, as Diogenes vnhappily, yet God at his generall assize will auenge these things, when as hee shall say to such as omitted only the workes of mercy, much more to such as haue committed acts of crueltie depart from me yee cursed into euerlasting fire, prepared for the deuill and his Angels. What then shall the muck-worme gaine by purchasing an earthly lordship, and losing an heauenly kingdome? What shall the fornicator get, enduring an ocean of torture for a drop of pleasure? [t] Momentaneum est, quod delectat; æternum, quod cruciat: O that men would forget the beginning, and onely behold the [u] end of these delights, and consider here with our Apostle, that God is an auenger of such things.

[x] It is written of Lysimachus, that hauing his Citie besieged, and himselfe together with his whole armie being in extreme danger of perishing by thirst, in exchange of a cup of cold water, he deliuered vp the keyes of his Citie to his enemie, which cold comfort he had no sooner tasted, but his tongue bewrayed the griefe of his heart, saying, O that in lieu of so momentanie a pleasure, I should be made of a Soueraigne, a seruant, of a King a captiue! [y] O that euery sinner would apply this, and meditate with Hierome, Brevis est voluptas fornicationis, & perpetua poena fornicatoris.

God hath not called vs vnto vncleannesse, but vnto holinesse] [z] Euery man must continue in that calling, wherevnto he is called, and therefore seeing we are called to be [a] Saints, and haue escaped from the [b] filthinesse of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord, and of the Sauiour Iesus Christ, we may not with the sow returne to the mire, nor with the Dog to the vomit, and therefore let vs pray with the Church: Almighty God which doest see that we haue no power of our selues to helpe our selues; keepe thou vs both outwardly in bodie, & inwardly in soule that we may be defended from all aduersitie, which may happen to the body, and from all euill thoughts which may assault and hurt the soule, through Iesus Christ, &c.

Iesus went thence and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon: and behold a woman of Canan, &c.

IN this one Gospell obserue two great { workes of Christ, { Iustice. Mercy. / vertues of a Christian, { Faith. Loue.

[c] All the waies of God are mercy and truth; the two pillers of his kingdome are iustice in punishing, and mercifulnesse in giuing grace, forgiuing sinne. Christ here shewed his iustice in [d] leauing the most ingratefull Iewes, and comming into Tyrus and Sydon, countries of the Gentiles; and this should terrifie vs, in that our vnthankfulnesse hath worthily deserued, that Christ should depart from our coasts into some new found land, taking his word from vs, and bestowing it vpon a people, that will bring forth better fruit thereof.

[c] Psal. 25. 9.

[d] Ludolphus de vita Christi, part. 1. cap. 89. & Iansen. concord. cap. 61.

Christs mercy doth appeare, first, generally toward all the Gentiles, in making them his [e] people who were no people, a fauour in [f] other ages vnknowne vnto the sonnes of men, as it is now reuealed vnto his holy Apostles and Preachers by the Spirit, that the Gentiles also should bee inheritors, and of the same body, and partaker of Gods promise in Christ by the Gospell; more particularly toward this Cananite woman, in hearing her prayers, and helping her child: and this may cofort vs, in that the lord ouer all, is rich vnto all them that call vpon him.

[f] Ephes 3. 5, 6.
[g] Rom. 10. 12.

The two chiefe vertues of a Christian are faith and loue, both are most eminent in this woman; her faith is such as that our Euangelist reports it with an Ecce, behold, a woman of Canan; [h] it is strang that a woman, and that not a Iew, but a Gentile, and among all the Gentiles of the [i] most accursed and wicked nation a Cananite, should haue such a measure of faith, as to conquer not onely the world, but also the Lord of the world: for, [k] whereas it was shewed in the Gospell appointed for the last Sunday, that Christ in a duell ouercame the deuill: it is sayd in the Gospell for this Sunday, that a sillie woman ouercame Christ, not by force, but by [l] faith.

Her faith appeares also to be great by the { fruit thereof, vers, 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. / commendation of Christ { Parol: O woman great is thy faith. / Real: Her daughter was made whole euen the same time.

The principall fruits of her faith here mentioned are worshipping and praying, and that is commended in foure respects, as being { 1. Discreet. 2. Feruent. 3. Humble. 4. Constant.

Her deuotion was discreet in regard of matter and manner. For matter; in praying for that onely which was most fit for her to begge, and Christ to giue, to wit, mercie, miserere; this is her totall summe, Mercy good Lord, Lord helpe.

The

The Philoſopher ſaid truly, that a wiſe man euer begins at the end; and therefore this woman was very wiſe to begin her prayer with that which is the end of all our praying, Haue mercy on me good Lord. Chriſt is faithfull and cannot denie himſelfe, ſaith [f] Paul; the which text is wittily [t] gloſſed; if we deſire worldly wealth, he may denie, for that is not himſelfe; if we deſire reuenge he may denie, for that is not himſelfe; if we deſire preferment, hee may denie, for that is not himſelfe; but if we deſire mercy, then hee cannot denie, for that is himſelfe. [u] Deus meus miſericordia mea, thou O God art my refuge and my mercy, the [x] father of mercies, and therefore cannot denie himſelfe. Lord I doe not alleage my merit, but exſpect and only reſpect thy mercy.

Againe, ſhee was diſcreet for the manner, vſing not ſo much babling of the mouth as deuotion of the minde; her petition was a very briefe, containing an [y] ocean of matter in a little current of ſpeech, haue mercy on me, Lord helpe me. Lycurgus enioyned the people to offer little ſacrifices vnto their gods: for, ſaith he, they reſpect more the inward affection then the outward action; a rule which our maſter Chriſt hath giuen vs in the ſixth of Matth. when ye pray, vſe not much babling; a word is enough to the wiſe, more then enough to a friend. Almighty God is wiſdome it ſelfe, [z] knowing our need, mercy it ſelfe, and heares the [a] very groanes of his ſeruants, albeit they be not expreſſed and vttered diſtinctly; this woman therefore dealt diſcreetly conſidering the perſon of Chriſt, and ſhortneſſe of time, and inconuenience of place, to begge in a few words, haue mercy on me.

2. Her praying was earneſt and feruent; it is ſaid in the text twice, that ſhee cried, and this crie was not ſo much the lifting vp of her voyce, as of her heart; of which kinde of crie, God ſayd vnto Moſes, Exod. 14. 15. Wherefore crieſt thou vnto me? So Dauid in his Pſalmes often, I cried vnto the Lord, and called vpon him with my whole heart. So [b] Paul I will pray with the ſpirit, I will pray with vnderſtanding alſo. See before Magnificat.

[b] 1. Cor. 14. 15.

3. Shee was humble in her deuotion, holding this opinion, that wee cannot attribute too much vnto God, nor too little vnto our ſelues: and therfore though Chriſt called her dogge, ſhee called him Lord, extolling him who did extenuate her, and ſo Chriſt regarding the lowlineſſe of his handmaid, calls her no more dogge, but woman; and whereas at the firſt he did anſwere nothing, at the laſt he granted euery thing that ſhee deſired: O woman, be it vnto thee euen as thou wilt.

4. Shee was conſtant in her ſute, not diſcouraged either with Chriſts deniall or delay, but continually followed him and his, vntill her ſelfe was heard, and her daughter healed. Chriſt for the [c] greater manifeſtation of her faith and patience, made three great ſtops in granting her requeſt. Firſt, he doth neglect her, anſwering not a word, verſ. 23. Then deny her, verſ. 24. [d] I am not ſent but to the loſt ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael. Thirdly reproch her, as ſhee might happily conſtrue him, It is not meet to take the childrens bread, and caſt it to dogs. And yet her faith was ſo ſtrong, that ſhee takes a good hint by Chriſts worſt word, and entangles him as it were in his owne ſaying, truth Lord, I am a dogge, and therefore I will doe like a dogge, neuer depart from my maſters heeles, vntill I am rewarded. [e] A ſpanell will queſt, when he doth eſpie game; neither can I hold my peace, when I ſee ſuch aduantage the dogge will ſoone cure the ſore which he can licke with his tongue, giue me leaue to ſpeake then, O Lord; I am no Iew and therefore becauſe no childe, [f] I looke for no bread, but yet as a dogge I may well expect crums from my maſters table; albeit your greateſt miracles and mercies are for the Iewes, your owne countrymen and peculiar people, yet you may well act a little miracle, caſt out one deuill, ſhew a ſmall fauour to me who am a Cananite, I craue not a loafe, I begge only fragments, one crumme, one dram of thy mercy, Lord helpe me.

It is well [g] obſerued, that Satan aſſaults our faith and hope with theſe two ſuggeſtions eſpecially: firſt, that in regard of our manifold ſinnes and iniquitie, we bee moſt vnworthy to receiue any fauour from God; ſecondly, that howſoeuer howsoeuer wee serue God in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of our life, yet happily wee doe not belong to the number of Gods elect: hee doth passe by many notable men, as Augustus, Cato, Socrates; and elects Magdalen an harlot, Matthew a Publican, Zacheus an oppressour, yea the theefe vpon the crosse. This woman is assaulted here with these two temptations: in that Christ at the first answered nothing, and after compared her to a dogge; she might imagine that shee was no way worthy to receiue comfort. Secondly, she might feare that she did not appertaine to Gods election, because the Sauiour of the world sayd, I am not sent but to the lost sheepe of Israel; and yet her faith is so great that the more she feeles her owne miserie, the more she seekes after Christs mercie; so we must say with [h] Paul, if at any time we fall into the like temptation, where sinne aboundeth, there grace aboundeth much more; for our sinnes in regard of themselues are finite, but the grace of God is infinite: rob not then God of his glory, make not his goodnesse lesse then thy wickednesse; howsoeuer thou be not so faithfull as Abraham, so patient as Iob, so penitent as Dauid, yet cease not to crye with this woman, O Lord thou Sonne of Dauid haue mercy on me.

[h] Rom. 5. 20.

If the common enemie shall besiege the castle of our comfort with that other suggestion, as that the number of Gods elect children is small, some few lost sheepe of Israell, a little flocke; then answere with this woman here, that the crummes of Gods mercy belong to the Gentiles as well as to the Iewes; and with [i] Paul, that all beleeuers are Israelites: and with [k] Augustine, that all faithfull heathen are more Israel then Israel it selfe; that the promises of God touching our saluation are generall, as Rom. 10. 12. He that is Lord ouer all, is rich vnto all. And Matth. 11. 28. Come vnto me all yee that are heauy laden, and I will ease you; at least indefinite, not excluding any particular man; [l] For God so loued the world, that he gaue his only begotten Sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him should not perish, but haue life euerlasting. But I beleeue and call vpon him: ergo, I am included in the generalitie, not excluded elsewhere through any particularity.

[i] Galat. 3. 29.
[k] In Psal. 148.
[l] Ioh. 3. 16.

For albeit my name be not written in the couenant of grace particularly, yet grace is offered to me particularly, first in Baptisme, then in the Lords Supper, often in hearing of Gods holy word; so that except by doubting I cut of my selfe, I am sure to be concluded in Gods generall pardon; I may not curiously search into his secret counsell, but I know this to be his reuealed will, and therefore my heart is surely set, so long as I haue any being; to call vpon him and crie after him as the woman of Canan, haue mercy on mee, O Lord, thou Sonne of Dauid. Now the practises of holy men and women are as it were Commentaries vpon the Commandements of God, and many of them are recorded in sacred historie for our instruction and example, [m] that being compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, we might cast away euery thing that presseth downe and the sinne that hangeth so fast on, and so runne with patience the race that is set before vs.

[m] Heb. 12. 1.

And surely the Church hath allotted this historie for this time, because religious fasting consists in hearty prayer and vnfained humiliation for our sinne. This Sunday was called heretofore Dominica reminiscere; let vs therefore remember and learne by this good woman, how to be deuout all the Lent, all the yeere, praying discreetly, feruently, humbly, constantly, neuer leauing Christ vntill he blesse vs, vntill some crummes of mercy fall from his table.

His Disciples came and besought him.] [n] As the snow which falls vpon the mountaine being dissolued into water by the beames of the Sunne, and descending vpon the valley, maketh it to giue her increase, but being depriued of the Sunnes heat, remaines congealed and vnprofitable; so such as are in high places, as it were mountaines, in Court and Country, vpon whom the fauour of God and the King shine most, ought not to be frozen in charity, but to haue the bowels of piety and pity melt for the good of their inferiour brethren. I will not here dispute whether the Disciples out of loue besought Christ, or onely for her

[o] importunitie, who cried after them, and so was troublesome to them. Howsoeuer, it is absurd vpon this foundation to build inuocation of Angels and Saints. It is lawfull to pray the Saints liuing to pray for vs, as here we haue a patterne and in the fifth of S. Iames a precept, pray one for another; but for inuocating Saints dead, there is neither promise, nor example; nor warrant in all Gods holy Bible, which is our light and lanthorne.

Againe, the Romish Church hath canonized many for Saints, who can bee no better then deuills; as [p] Alexander the third reprehended some for giuing the honour of a Martyr to one that died drunke; and as [q] Bellarmine confesseth out of Sulpitius, the people did long time deuoutly celebrate one for a Martyr, who was a theefe, and after appeared and told them that he was damned. So the Papists adore [r] Papias a [s] Millenarian heretike: S. Becket a traitour, S. Saunders an open rebell, and others, who were neither Saints in heauen, nor men on earth, as [t] S. Christopher, S. George, S. Catherine, [u] Quiriacus, and that which often makes me merry, Father Parsons, whom [x] Ribadaneira cals a perpetuall Martyr all his life, must be worshipped euen of the secular Priests, as a Saint after his death. See Gospell, Dom. 5. after Easter.

O woman, great is thy faith.] O is an Interiection of maruelling; but it is a wonder how Christ, who knowes all things, should wonder at any thing, how hee that gaue this faith vnto this woman, should admire this faith in this woman. Answer is made by [y] some, that Christ did wonder not as God, but as man, in which respect his experimentall knowledge was increased daily. But I thinke with other Expositors, that Christ is sayd here to wonder, as God elsewhere, to be compassionate and angry; non secundùm affectum, sed secundùm effectum (as the [z] Schoole speaks) not that there is any such perturbation in God as wrath and anger, but that in punishing he doth behaue himselfe like one that is angrie; so Christ did wonder in shew, to make vs wonder indeed, that hee might [a] hereby stirre vs vp highly, to commend and imitate the great faith of this woman; as [b] Augustine pithily, Non sunt signa perturbati animi, sed docentis magistri; These words, O woman, great is thy faith, are not signes of an ignorant minde, but of a skilfull master: her faith did not astonish him, but admonish vs onely; for whose learning they were first spoken, and after written.

And it is worth our further obseruation, [c] that Christ did not wonder at the faith of any Iew, but at the faith of the Gentiles onely, to wit, at the faith of the Centurion, Matth. 8. and at the faith of this woman in this place; the reason hereof is plaine, because the Gentiles in old time were [d] strangers from the couenant of promise, without hope, without God in the world. That all people therefore should be Gods people, is the doing of the Lord, and it ought to bee wonderfull in our eyes; our Sauiour here did wonder a little, that wee might wonder much, acknowledging and magnifying his mercy toward vs.

Woman] After it was once manifest, that shee was no longer an Infidell, but a Beleeuer, Christ calls her [e] no more dogge, but woman. Hence we may learne to censure men, not as they haue beene, but as they are; when new vertues arise in the place of old vices, highly to commend them in our stiles, as Christ here this woman, O woman, great is thy faith.

It is able to put the very life of religion into the hearts of women, to see that euery little dutie of theirs is so well accepted of God, and remembred in his bookes; as the little kindnesse of [f] Rahab in entertaining the spies of Iosua; the little meale which the widow of [g] Sarepta spent vpon Elia; the little chamber which the [h] Shunamite prouided for Elisha; the little mite which the [i] widdow cast into the treasurie; Maries box of ointment, the diligence of Martha, the faith of this woman. And therefore let not them complaine too much of their weaknesse, nor other condemne too much their wickednesse; let not them complaine, either of nature, or grace; not of nature, for as the Martyr Iulitta sayd exhorting women to constancie, they be made of the same matter with men, not onely flesh of the flesh, which is weake, but also bone of the bone, which is strong;

Great] In compariſon, as the Diſciples faith is [m] elſewhere called little; the Diſciples faith was little, conſidering their great maſter; and this womans faith was great, conſidering her little [n] meanes of inſtruction. A little faith, ſo little as a graine of muſtard, and that [o] implicit, confuſed, and infolded, is ſufficient for ſome men at ſome time, to wit, in the beginning of their conuerſion, and in the houre of ſome grieuous temptation; but where God doth giue greater meanes he lookes for a greater meaſure; when he beſtoweth a greater portion of grace, there he doth expect a greater proportion of goodneſſe. Little faith in this vntaught woman was great; it was well for her that ſhe was a dwarfe in beleefe; but in this great Sunſhine of the Goſpell, it behoueth vs to be like Saul higher then other by the ſhoulders; it is required of vs aſſuredly, that we goe from vertue to vertue, and grow from faith to faith, &c.

Thy faith] Chriſt healed the child through the faith and inuocation of the mother, thy great faith hath made thy daughter whole. [p] Let no man doubt then but that the prayer and faith of our common mother auaileth much in catechizing and baptiſing children. If the petition of a priuate mother was ſo forcible, then vndoubtedly the deuotion of the publike congregation ſhall preuaile much more: and indeed this woman is a liuely picture of the Church, reſembling her tender care, beſeeching Chriſt daily to take pittie on her poore children grieuouſly vexed with the deuill and his angels.

Bee it vnto thee euen as thou wilt.] In that he ſaith not, O woman goe thy way thy daughter is well, or the deuill is gone out of thy daughter, as [q] S. Marke reports it, but further, O woman be it vnto thee euen as thou wilt; obſerue the power of faith and gratiouſneſſe of Chriſt; the power of faith, in that all things are poſſible to him that beleeueth; and the rich mercy of Chriſt, who is ſo good as his word, yea better then his promiſe: for whereas he ſaid, [r] aske and yee ſhall haue this woman asking in faith had more then ſhee did aske; for whereas her ſuit was for one thing, namely that her child might be made whole, Chriſt granted her more be it vnto thee euen as thou wilt. See Goſpell, Dom. 19. poſt Trinit.

[r] Matth 7. 7.

Hitherto concerning the faith of this woman. Her loue doth appeare, in [s] ſaying Miſerere mei, not meæ, reputing her childs misfortune her owne miſerie, haue mercy on me in healing my daughter. It is ſayd truly that neceſſity makes a man pray for himſelfe, but charity for another; and in charity the rule is good, the neerer the deerer: and therefore ſeeing our children next vnto our ſelues, and our wiues our other ſelues, are neereſt vnto vs, it is good reaſon we ſhould wiſh them all good, eſpecially that they may be diſpoſſeſſed of the Deuill.

It is our dutie to coniure the ſpirit of vncleaneſſe, and other foule fiends out of our children in their young yeers: [t] If thou haue ſonnes inſtruct them, and hold their necke from their youth. Albeit this Cananite did ſuffer patiently whatſoeuer Chriſt and his Diſciples either ſaid or did in reproching her nation, and repelling her ſuite, yet ſhee could not endure this one thing, that a deuill at her owne houſe ſhould poſſeſſe her owne child; marke the parts and paſſions of her ſpeech, O Lord thou Sonne of Dauid haue mercy, &c. for my daughter is piteouſly vexed with a deuill; it is not a ſeruant, but a daughter; and not anothers childe, but my daughter; and ſhee is not only troubled, but vexed; and that not a little, but piteouſly; not with a common euill, but euen with a very deuill. The Epistle. EPHES. 5. 1. vnto v. 15.

Bee yee followers of God, as deare children, &c.

THE first words of this chapter agree with the last words of the former, as a[a] conclusion to the precedent exhortation, Bee courteous one to another and tender-hearted, forgiuing one another, euen as God for Christs sake forgaue you: be yee therefore followers of God, in giuing, in forgiuing, walke in loue, euen as Christ hath loued vs, &c.

[a] Zanchius in loc

In which obserue[x] foure points especially:
1. Whom we must imitate, be yee followers of God.
2. Wherefore, because yee are children, and deare children.
3. Wherein, in loue.
4. How, euen as Christ hath loued vs, and giuen himselfe for vs &c.

[x] Gorran in loc

Where note
Factum, a fact, Christ hath giuen himselfe for vs.
Effectum, an effect, an offering and a sacrifice of a sweete sauour to God.

God is the first and truest exemplar, and therefore to be followed first of all and most of all; [y] Yee shall be holy, because I am holy; [z] be you perfect, as your Father in heauen is perfect; [a] Bee yee mercifull, as your Father in heauen is mercifull: See Epist. Dom. 1. post Epiphan. and Gospell, Dom. 4. post Trinit.

[y] Leuit. 11. 44.
[z] Matth. 5. 48.
[a] Luke 6. 35.

In imitation[b] two things are principally required:
Action, for it is not enough highly to commend and admire the patterne we propound for imitation, except we follow it indeed.
Affection, following with a desire to follow, for it is not enough to forgiue, because we cannot opportunely reuenge; this is not to follow God in loue, for he can as he list crush sinners in peeces as a [c] potters vessell, but wee must forgiue with a minde to forgiue, with a tender heart euen as God for Christs sake forgiueth vs.

[c] Psalm. 2. 9.

As deare children] Imitation doth become [d] two sorts of men especially, schollars and children; schollars, Ioh. 13. 13. Yee call me master and Lord, and herein yee say well: If then I your Lord and Master haue washed your feet, yee ought also to wash one anothers feet; for I haue giuen you an example, that yee should doe euen as I haue done to you. Children, Mat. 5. 44. loue your enemies, and blesse them that curse you, that yee may be the children of your Father in Heauen. If it be comely and commendable for naturall children, much more for adoptiue by grace, to follow the manners and examples of their most mercifull Father, [e] as being not onely children, but deare children, [f] Chari propter imaginem creationis, chariores propter similitudinem regenerationis, charissimi propter similitudinem glorificationis.

[f] Gorran in loc.

The word ἀγαπητὰ, signifieth not onely dilectum, but diligibilem, one that inducеth another to loue him: here then is another argument included; the more we follow God, the more God loueth vs, euen the neerer the dearer: if yee draw neere to God, saith [g] S. Iames, hee will draw neere to you; be yee therefore followers of God as children, as deare children, especially because most deare when yee most imitate.

[g] Cap. 4. 8.

And walke in loue.] We must imitate Christ not in miracles, but in morals, in his loue principally, for that is aboue all his workes; hee doth not say, talke of loue, but walke in loue, the whole course of our liuing must be louing; all that we doe, that we say, must begin, continue, and end in loue: when wee runne courses without it, euery step is out of the way to God, for God is loue; this our loue must not be dissembling, but dilectio vera, saith [h] S. Iohn, dilectio mera, saith [i] Martin Luther, an hearty plaine working loue.

[h] 1. Epist 3. 18

Euen

Euen as Christ] It is well [k] obserued, that καθὼς here doth not imply an equalitie, but a qualitie, we must loue one another as Christ loued vs, as for the manner, not for the measure; the loue of Christ passeth all knowledge; [l] God so loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten Sonne, so much as no tongue can tell, or heart conceiue how much, as being infinite for greatnesse and goodnesse: on the contrary, mans loue is inconstant, weake, mixed with selfe-loue, yet wee must imitate God as deare children: a little childe, though he cannot tread in the steps of his father, yet he may walke in the path after his father, as [m] Virgil wrote of Ascanius following Æneas:

sequiturq; patrem non passibus æquis.

In like sort wee must follow God, albeit we cannot ouertake him in goodnesse, we must walke in loue, euen as Christ loued vs, howsoeuer we cannot set so great paces as he, for he made for our sake, but one stride from the clowds into the cradle, and but another from the crosse to the crowne; to come from the bosome of his Father into the wombe of his mother, was a wonderfull stride; so was his ascending from hell to heauen, a very great stride: wee cannot then loue other as much as Christ loued vs; and yet we must walke in loue, run so fast and stride so farre as we can; [n] for if there be first a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

[o] When a man is deliuered from some dangerous and desperate sickenesse, hee will euer loue the very name of the medicine; by Christ's loue men are cured of all their sores, of all their sinnes, and therefore let vs honour this salue, let vs apply this vnto other, which hath done so much good vnto our selues, albeit we cannot imitate fully, yet let vs [p] emulate Christ in his loue.

Loued] Not, but that Christ loueth vs now, for he saith, [q] I haue loued thee with an euerlasting loue; but our Apostle speakes in this sort, to distinguish his loue, wherewith he loueth vs now, from that wherewith he loued vs, euen while we were his enemies, as he disputes in the fifth to the Romans, For, if when wee were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Sonne, much more being reconciled, we shall be saued by his life.

Vs] that is, all vs, Apud Deum nulla personarum acceptio, qui seipsum excipit seipsum decipit; in this one word is infolded a double reason, exciting vs to mutuall loue. 1. He that inioineth vs to loue, loued vs all first; [r] this is my commandement, that ye loue one another, as I haue loued you, dilecti diligamus. 2. Christ loueth all those whom he willeth vs to loue, dilectos ergo diligamus, it is meet we should loue them heartily, whom God fauoureth highly.

Who gaue himselfe for vs] Euery word amplifieth his exceeding loue, first, who, Christ, God and man, very God of very God, in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdome and knowledge, the Lord of Lords, higher then the highest, he it was that loued vs, and so loued vs, as that he gaue himselfe for vs.

It is said [s] elsewhere, God spared not his owne Sonne, but gaue him for vs all to death: how then is it true, that Christ gaue himselfe? Our Sauiour answered in the fifth of S. Iohn, vers. 19. Whatsoeuer the Father doth, the same things also doth the Sonne, God in his eternall loue decreed to giue his owne Sonne for vs, and his Sonne became [t] obedient vnto the death, euen the death of the crosse. [u] In the beginning of the booke it is written of me, that I should do thy will, and loe I come to doe thy will; as Paul applyeth this vnto Christ, Heb. 10. 7. The loue then of God the Father doth not extenuate, but amplifie the riches of Christs mercy, who gaue himselfe for vs.

Gaue] This word doth also magnifie Christs loue much, he was not compelled to dye, but freely gaue himselfe: I lay downe my life, saith [x] he, no man taketh it from me, I lay it downe of my selfe, Pater tradidit filium, & Christus suum Corpus, & Iudas Dominum suum; the Father gaue the Sonne; the Sonne gaue himselfe, Iudas betrayed him, and the Iewes crucified him; in one and the same tradition (as [y] Augustine notably) God is to be magnified, and man condemned, Quia in re vna quam fecerunt, causa non vna ob quam fecerunt; becauſe God and Christ did that that out of loue, which Iudas and the Iewes out of malice. Christ gaue himselfe: that assertion is therefore damnable, that he was a coward in fearing the naturall death of the body, a distracted wretch, in suffering the spirituall death of the soule, a brand of hell in enduring for a time the infernall death both of body and soule; for he did vndergoe the first death manfully, and ouercome the other triumphantly. I know Christ did naturally feare death, otherwise he should not haue beene affected as an ordinary man: yet he willingly suffered, otherwise he should not haue beene so well affected as an ordinary martyr. See Gosp. Dom 10. post Trinit.

Himselfe] We are not redeemed with [z] siluer and gold, all the riches of Crassus, of Salomon, or Midas, all the treasures of the new world, of the whole world cannot deliuer one poore soule, that will cost more, saith [a] Dauid, euery soule being [b] more worth then a million of worlds; neither are we saued by the blood of bulls and beasts, all those legall sacrifices were but [c] figures of this fact, dumbe shewes of this tragedy; not by the merits of any meere man, for a mediator betweene God and man must participate both natures, our mortality, Gods immortality, [d] Ne in vtroq; homini similis longè esset à Deo, aut in vtroq; Deo similis longè esset ab hominibus; [e] apparuit igitur inter mortales peccatores & immortalem iustum, mortalis cum hominibus, iustus cum Deo.

Neither by the mediation of Saints, [f] for they cannot spare their oyle for our lamps, it is impossible that they should be the propitiation for our sin; for [g] the propitiation for sinne knew no sinne; but all the Saints of God (Mary not excepted) were bred in wickednesse and brought forth in iniquitie, [h] receiuing, not giuing palmes; and therefore the Papists are blasphemous in their absolutions and prayers, absoluing thus, [i] Passio Domini nostri Iesu Christi, merita beatissimæ Virginis, & omnium Sanctorum sint tibi in remissionem peccatorum; and [k] Bellarmine plainly; The foundation of Indulgences is the Church treasure; the Church treasure consists of Christs passion, and the Saints sufferings; and [l] Rupertus speaking to the Virgin Mary, saith Ecce viuimus tuis meritis: and their whole Church doth pray, [m] Maria mater gratiæ, [n] Sancta virgo Dorothea, tua nos virtute bea, cor in nobis nouum crea.

Neither did Almighty God send a glorious Angell to redeeme the world; for [o] behold, he found no stedfastnesse in his seruants, and layd folly vpon his Angels, [p] heauen is not cleare in his sight. Againe, blessed Angels cannot fitly mediate betweene the mortall offender. and immortall Iudge, because they be not [q] touched with the feeling of our infirmities: and therefore when a Mother in heauen and earth failed, Christ so loued vs, as that he gaue himselfe for vs; all himselfe, his whole person, bodie and soule, Godhead and manhood, as God he satisfied, as man he suffered, as God and man he saued; although his Deity could not die, yet in regard of the personall vnion of the two natures in Christ, God is said to haue redeemed his Church with his owne bloud, Act. 20. 28 and 1. Cor. 2. 8. they crucified the Lord of glory.

So that as the Schoole speakes out of Augustine, totus Christus, albeit not totum Christi, was giuen for vs, all Christ, for God and man is but [r] one Christ.

[s] Solus homo non hoc vnquam præstare valebat,
Solus itemque Deus non hoc præstare volebat.

If Christ had beene man onely, not God, he could not haue done so much for vs; if onely God and not man, he would not haue done so much for vs; all Christ did die, but all of Christ could not die; for his Godhead is impassible; Christ therefore suffered in the [t] flesh; but if he could haue suffered in all, his loue surely was such, as that he would, for he saith, Esay 5. 4. What could I haue done any more to my vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it?

Hereby haue we perceiued loue, [u] that he layd downe his life for vs. [x] One will scarce die for a righteous man, but yet for a good man, it may bee that one dare die; but God setteth out his loue toward vs, seeing that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. [y] O quam stupenda dulcedo, quam inuicta mansuetudo, regem regem gloriæ pro deſpicatiſſimo vernaculo, imo vermiculo crucifigi? What an vnſpeakable kindnes is it for the King of glory to die for a wretch, yea, for a worme and that not a louing worme, but for his enemie; for all men ſufficiently, for euery beleeuer efficiently, who doth not onely beleeue that Chriſt ſo loued vs, as that he gaue himſelfe for vs in groſſe; but more particularly with Paul, Gal. 2. 20. Who hath loued me, and giuen himſelfe for me,[z] Read with great vehemencie theſe words againe, and againe me, and for me. An offering and a ſacrifice] In the Law there were two ſorts of oblations vnto God; one gratulatorie for the donation of gifts, another expiatorie for the condonation of ſinnes; a peace-offering; and a ſinne-offering; מנחה ſignifieth, as [c] Interpreters obſerue, the firſt kinde; זבח the latter: in Chriſt then all ſacrifices haue their end, giuing himſelfe for vs an offering and a ſacrifice. The laſt character of the Hebrews alphabet was a plaine figure of Chriſts croſſe, to ſignifie that Chriſt is the [d] end of the law written in Hebrew. [e] Some Rabbins affirme that in the fire conſuming the ſacrifices of the law, there did alwaies appeare the face of a Lyon; hereby prefiguring that Chriſt the Lyon of Iuda ſhould in the fulneſſe of time giue himſelfe for vs, an offering and a ſacrifice.

Chriſt in his life was an offering, in his death a ſacrifice; the whole courſe of his life was gratulatorie to God in word and deed: in word, [f] I giue thee thanks, O father, Lord of heauen and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe & men of vnderſtanding, and haſt opened them vnto babes. I thanke thee Father, becauſe thou haſt heard me, Iohn 11. 41. in deed, [g] I haue glorified thee on earth, I haue finiſhed the worke thou gaueſt me to doe, [h] Not as I will, but as thou wilt, was often his prayer, alwaies his practiſe; for he was [i] obedient to his Father in all things; he was an offering for vs all his life, but his death eſpecially was a ſacrifice for our ſinnes; [k] he died for our ſinnes, and was [l] wounded for our tranſgreſſions, and broken for our iniquities. His owne ſelfe in his [m] owne body bare our wickedneſſe on the Croſſe, that wee being deliuered from ſinne ſhould liue in righteouſneſſe: he gaue himſelfe for vs often an euchariſticall, [n] once an expiatorie ſacrifice, doing for vs in the firſt all that we ſhould doe, ſuffering for vs in the ſecond all that we ſhould ſuffer, non identitate pœnæ, ſed dignitate perſonæ.

To God] Hereby teaching that all ſacrifices are due to God, and therefore not to be conferred vpon falſe gods, or true Saints: againe to ſignifie that God onely was to be pleaſed, his iuſtice onely to bee ſatisfied, in that all ſinnes are committed againſt him; Againſt thee only haue I ſinned, ſaith [o] Dauid, and done this euill in thy ſight.

[o] Pſal. 51. 4.

Of a ſweet ſmelling ſauour] Almighty God heares all things without eares, and ſeeth all things without eyes, & doth all things without hands: & yet the Scripture for our infirmitie doth ſpeake [p] groſly, attributing to him hands, and eares, and eyes, and here ſmelling, intimating that this ſacrifice was acceptable to God, alluding to the ſacrifices of the law, the perfume whereof was [q] ſweet to the Lord.

[p] Rom. 6. 19.

[q] Leuit. 1. 17.

In this word obſerue the fruit and efficacy of Chriſts oblation, in which and for which all other ſacrifices are well accepted; in Chriſt alone God is onely well pleaſed; other offerings conſidered in themſelues, and not reſpecting this, are noyſome to the Lord, Pſal. 51. 16. Eſai 1. 11. Amos 5. 21. Eſai 66. 3.

But

But such as proceeded out of faith, and had reference to this oblation of Christ were pleasing to God: [r] Abel by faith offered a greater sacrifice than Cain; and by faith Noe built an Altar vnto the Lord, and offered burnt offerings vpon the Altar, and the Lord [f] smelled a sweet sauour.

[r] Heb. 11. 4.

[f] Gen. 8. 21.

So the sacrifices of the New Testament are well pleasing to God by this oblation only; [t] we are an holy Priesthood to offer vp spirituall sacrifices acceptable to God by Iesus Christ: and this is the true reason, why the Church in our Liturgie concludes all her deuotion with this one clause, Through Iesus Christ our Lord, desiring the father of mercy, that he would heare vs for his deare Sonnes sake; accepting of our sacrifice for his sacrifice.

[t] 1 Pet. 2. 5.

If any demand from whence this oblation hath such an efficacie: S. Paul here doth insinuate, that it proceeds, 1. From the worthinesse of the person offering, being of infinite greatnesse and goodnesse; the bloud shed for vs, was not the bloud of Bulls and Goats, or meere humane blood, but, as the Scripture speaks in regard of the personall vnion, the blood of God, [u] his blood did cleanse vs from all vnrighteousnesse.

[u] 1 Ioh. 1. 7.

2. From the sacrificers obedience, giuing himselfe freely, being obedient vnto death, euen the death of the Crosse, so that this perfect obedience did merit perfect remission of sinne.

3. From his loue, for that is the fulfilling of the Law: this sacrifice therefore proceeding out of loue to God and man, is a sweet sauour.

4. From his immaculate innocencie; for the Priest in old time did [x] offer first for his owne sinnes, and then for the sinnes of the people: but our Sauiour Christ knew no sinne, being the Paschall Lambe without blemish, and so gaue himselfe not for himselfe, but for vs only, that we might be well accepted of God.

[x] Heb. 7. 27.

This text then is a liuely crucifix, wherein wee may behold fixe points especially:

1. Who is the Bishop of our soules? he that was sacrificed for vs, Christ.
2. What he did offer? himselfe, for no other oblation had beene sufficient.
3. To whom? to God, who was offended, and therefore to be appeased.
4. For whom? for vs, all sufficiently, the beleeuers efficiently.
5. How? making himselfe an offering and a sacrifice, being the complement of all legall oblations.
6. The fruit and force, a sweet sauour to God.

O most mercifull Father, Behold thy Sonne, who did endure this for my sake; behold him which hath suffered, and of thy goodnesse remember him for whom he hath suffered; behold his harmelesse hands, and forgiue the sinne which my harmefull hands haue committed; behold his vndefiled feet, which neuer stood in the wayes of sinners, and make my paths perfect in thy tract: behold how his side became bloudy, his bowels dry, his sight dimme, his countenance pale, his armes stiffe, how his leggs hung, and the streame of blessed bloud watered his pierced feete, accept vs and our sacrifice for him and his sacrifice, who loued vs and gaue himselfe for vs an offering of a sweet sauour to God.

As for fornication, &c.] In these words and the rest vnto the end, S. Paul dehorts his Ephesians, and in them all Christians from 3. faults especially:

- Fornication,
- Couetousnesse,
- Lewdnesse of tongue, consisting in
  - filthy
  - foolish
  - scurrilous

  speech.

He names these [y] rather then other sinnes, as being so common in the world, that they be reputed commendable. Fornication is held but a tricke of youth; auarice, but a point of good husbandrie; foolish and filthy iesting, but a ierke of a good wit. Our Apostle therefore sheweth these peccadillos in the worlds eye to be great ſinnes in Gods ſight, euen ſo great that his wrath commeth vpon the children of diſobedience for ſuch things; and ſo farre vnfitting the Saints of God, as they may not be named among them, much leſſe done by them.

A Saint [z] may name them out of deteſtation to ſhun them, (otherwiſe S. Pauls owne practiſe ſhould contradict his owne precept) but a Saint may not name them out of delight to nouriſh them, as the patrons of fornication vrge both arguments and authority for the iuſtifying of that ſinne; their chiefe reaſon is, [a] that common courteſans in hot Countries are a neceſſarie euill; if there were no ſtewes, all the world would be full of aduiterie, rape, Sodometrie: ſo [b] S. Auguſtine; Auſer meretrices de rebus humanis & turbaueris omnia libidinibus.

The land of Iſrael is thought an [c] hotter climate than that of Italie; yet God ſaid vnto the Iewes expreſly, [d] There ſhall be no whore of the daughters of Iſrael neither ſhall there be a whore keeper of the ſonnes of Iſrael.

As for that of Auguſtine, we ſay that he liued in diſorder, when he wrote that tract of order, he was a young gallant, a nouice in the faith, and as yet vnbaptized, himſelfe keeping a concubine: but Auguſtine when he was indeed S. Auguſtine [e] ſaith, Iſtam in vſu ſcortatorum terrena ciuitas licitam fecit turpitudinem; The worlds Citie, not the Church of God, hath made this filthineſſe of harlots to bee lawfull. And [f] Paul greater than Auguſtine, Wee may not doe euill that good may come thereof; we muſt abandon that remedy, which is worſe than the diſeaſe. [g] Other anſwer that the words of Auguſtine were ſpoken ad hominem, according to the termes of the Schoole, as being the worlds opinion, not his iudgement and therefore we may cenſure the Romiſh proctors of the ſtewes, as [h] Auguſtine, Petilian; Vbi reſpondere conati, magis oſtendunt, quod non poſſint reſpondere.

Carnall Libertines haue text, as they thinke, for this ſinne,: Hoſea. 1. 2, Goe take vnto thee a wife of fornications, &c. Anſwer is made, that it is not a plaine hiſtory, but a propheticall viſion, a figure, not a fact, as the [i] Chaldee Paraphraſt [k] Hierome, [l] Haimo, Rupert, Zanchius, and other expound it, as if God ſhould ſpeake thus vnto the Prophet; Preach againſt that idolatrous Citie, for it hath committed great whoredome, departing from the Lord.

Or Oſeas ſignifieth a Sauiour, intimating that Chriſt tooke vnto himſelfe for his ſpouſe [m] the Church of the Gentiles, a wife of fornications in worſhipping Idols and Deuills in ſtead of the liuing Lord, [n] that he might make it vnto himſelfe a glorious Church, not hauing ſpot or wrinckle, or any ſuch thing, but that it ſhould be holy and without blame, and ſo [o] the not beleeuing wife was ſanctified by the husband. See Iren. loc. citat. & Auguſtin. contra Fauſtum Manichæum lib 22. cap. 89. Ribe. in Oſee 1. Numb. 59.

If we conſtrue this as done, namely, that Oſeas had taken an harlot, and begat of her children of fornication, as [p] Baſil, [q] Auguſtine, [r] Cyril, Aquin. 1. 2æ. quæſt. 94. art. 5. & quæſt. 100. art. 8. yet becauſe this fact is ſingular and extraordinary, it is no warrant or example for other to doe the like, no more than Abrahams fact in going about to kill Iſaack is a preſident for murther.

Or to preſſe the preciſe words, it is not ſayd, goe take vnto thee an harlot for fornication, but, take vnto thee a wife of fornication; and the Prophet is not to be blamed, as Hierome and Rupert note vpon the place, Si meretricem conuertat ad pudicitiam, ſed potius laudandus, quod ex malâ bonam fecerit.

The bawds of this ſinne wreſt other places of Scripture for this purpoſe: to whom I ſay with [s] Primaſius: Nemo periculioſius peccat, quam qui peccata defendit: no man ſinneth in an higher degree, than he that maketh apologie for ſinne: Let none deceiue you with vaine words, for becauſe of ſuch things, commeth the wrath of God vpon the children of diſobedience; be yee not therefore companions of them, for ſingle fornication is a double, yea triple fault, againſt God, our neighbour, and our ſelues.

Againſt God; for all of vs are his ſeruants, the members of Chriſt and temples of the Holy Ghoſt. No man is his [t] owne man, but Gods, and that, if a Chriſtian, by price and promiſe: by price, for we are bought and redeemed from the hands of all our enemies, that we might ſerue God in holineſſe, and righteouſneſſe all the dayes of our life: by promiſe, for euery Chriſtian in baptiſme makes a ſolemne vow, to continue Chriſts faithfull ſouldier and ſeruant vnto his liues end. The fornicator then, as being Gods couenant-ſeruant, wrongs him in following his owne waies, and doing his owne will. Againe we are the members of Chriſt; ſhall I then take the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid: An argument drawne ab abſurdo, for to couple with a ſtrumpet is,

Humano capiti ceruicem iungere equinam, as the [u] Poet;

according to that of the [x] Prophet, Vnuſquiſq; ad vxorem proximi ſui hinniebat.

Secondly, the fornicator iniureth his neighbour, all men in generall by the ſame; his minion and baſtard in more particular by the fact: his minion, if vnwilling, by corrupting her; if willing, by conſenting vnto this her ſinne; his baſtard, whoſe bringing vp for the moſt part is more baſe then his birth. Laſtly the fornicator hurts himſelfe by wounding his conſcience and defiling his bodie, 1 Cor. 6. verſ. 18. 19 20.

Or couetouſneſſe] Fornication is a ſinne that raignes in young men; auarice, that is in old men eſpecially: fornication as we grow in yeares is weaker and weaker; auarice, for the moſt part, ſtronger and ſtronger: [y] Omnia vitia cum ſenectute ſeneſcunt, auaritia ſola iuueneſcit. And yet becauſe ſome young men are couetous, and all that are young may proue old, S. Paul exhorts euery one to ſhun this fault as a ſinne not to be named among Saints, as idolatrie, ſo groſſe, ſo great, ſo contrary to faith and loue, that it pulls vpon a man the wrath of God, and debarres him vtterly from any inheritance in the kingdome of Chriſt.

The word φιλαργυρία, ſignifieth an immoderate deſire to get more, much is nothing, too much is too little for the couetous; [z] Auri namque fames parto fit maior ab auro: ſo the Latines haue deriued Auaritia ob aueo & aurum aut as, [a] auarus quaſi auidus æris, in Engliſh a money-man.

This ſinne ſpreads into three branches: { Couetouſneſſe in getting. / Wretchedneſſe in keeping. / Baſeneſſe in ſpending.

The firſt is the mother ſinne begetting and bearing the reſt, as our Apoſtle plainly, [b] φιλαργυρία, loue of money is the root of all euill, of all ſinne committed either againſt God or man; it is ſuch an offence to God, that Paul here calls it worſhipping of Idolls. A couetous wretch is an Idolator in reſpect of his inward and outward adoring of Mammon: inward worſhip conſiſts in our faith, hope, loue; ſee Decalog. Com. 1. for as [c] he is our maſter, to whom we ſubmitt our obedience ſo that is our God, which we truſt moſt, and loue beſt: as the wantons beſt beloued is his Saint and Goddeſſe; the panch of Epicurus is his [d] god: and the couetous beaſt, who would rather be damned then damnified, hath his mammon in the place of God, louing it with all his heart, with all his ſoule, with all his minde, [e] making gold his hope, and ſaying to the wedge of gold, thou art my confidence reputing it his Creator, Redeemer, Sanctifier; his God the Father, his God the Sonne, his God the Holy Ghoſt.

His Creator, for when he gets abundance of wealth, he thinks himſelfe made; but when by ſome accident he looſeth any goods, he complaineth inſtantly, that he is vndone; the Father Almighty maker of heauen and earth is not his Creator, he ſings that old ſong, ſol, re, me, fa, ſola res me facit; onely gold doth either marre or make, doe or vndoe him, if his purſe be light his heart is heauy.

God the Sonne is not his Redeemer, it is his money that deliuers him from all euill; hath he eſcaped any danger? he thinkes not of God, but thanks his gold: Is he like to fall into miſchiefe? he puts his certaine truſt in vncertaine riches; [f] Soule thou haſt much goods layd vp for many yeares, eat, drinke, take thy paſtime. When all is done, he ſaith his beſt proctor and protector is his purſe, ſo that the foole ſaith [g] in his heart [h] thou art my God, and I will thanke thee, thou art my God, and I will praiſe thee.

As for outward worſhip, [m] S. Hierome notes vpon my text, that the couetous man adores grauen images in his coyne. God made man little lower then Angels, Pſal. 8. 5. but the couetous makes himſelfe much lower then his angels. As the Papiſts hold images to bee the lay-mans goſpell, ſo ſculptura may be called his ſcriptura: for as [n] guilded pictures in the Church; ſo glittering peeces in the cheſt, excite men to commit idolatrie. Nay the couetous is more groſſe than heatheniſh or popiſh idolaters, for they worſhip aurum in imagine; but he doth worſhip aurum in ærugine: ſo [o] S. Iames expreſly, Your gold and ſiluer is cankred, and the ruſt of them ſhall be a witneſſe againſt you: thus, as Chriſt in the [p] Goſpell, no man can ſerue God and riches. he that is a penny father cannot be Gods childe, he that is the worlds friend, is Chriſts foe, the couetous perſon is an idolater.

[p] Matth. 6. 24

As auarice is hatefull to God, ſo moſt hurtfull to men, [q] auarus nemini bonus, ſibi vero peſſimus, a couetous muck-worme doth no good to any, much hurt to himſelfe: as for other, either they be ſuperiours, or equalls, or inferiours, all which the couetous offendeth in ſinnes of omiſſion and commiſſion; it is loue of money that makes a man vnwilling to giue Cæſar, the things appertaining to Cæſar, honour to whom honour, cuſtome to whom cuſtome, tribute to whom tribute belongs. It is loue of money that occaſioneth rebellious thoughts, and treaſonable practiſes; it is loue of money that cauſeth a childe to wiſh his father dead, and in fine to take away his life, who firſt brought him to life: nay whereas man and wife are but [r] one minde in two bodies; as the Scripture, but one minde in one bodie, being indeed both [s] one fleſh, loue of money makes them often two, ſometime none.

[s] Geneſ. 2. 24.

Concerning equalls, it is eſpecially loue of money, that hindereth all good neighbourhood and hoſpitality, breeding in ſtead thereof endleſſe contentions and fruitleſſe quarrels: as the darkeneſſe of Egypt was ſo thicke, [t] that one could not ſee another, ſo this vnhappy ſinne doth darken our vnderſtanding, the ſoules eye, that it cannot or will not diſcerne a brother from a ſtranger, a ſtranger from an enemie; all is fiſh that comes to net, all is good that brings in goods, vnde habeat quærit nemo, ſed oportet habere, it is no matter how he get, ſo he get, all termes of acquaintance, ciuilitie, kindred, honeſtie, religion, are forgot where dame lucre doth command, and auarice ſit as Iudge.

[t] Exod. 10. 23.

Touching inferiours, the couetous get much, and haue much, and keepe much, but they ſpend little, and giue nothing; it is [u] written of Antonie Prince of Salern,

Olim rogatus, quid ſibi relinqueret,
Tam multa qui cuiuis daret?
Hoc, inquit Antonius, ſi quid dedi;
Nam cætera haud puto mea.

And our [x] Chronicles, according to the ſaying, that we gaue, that we haue, report that Alexander Biſhop of Lincolne, Quod nondum dederit, nondum ſe credit habere.

[x] Huntingdon. lib. 7. hiſt. pag. 219.

But auarous men on the contrary thinke they loſe whatſoeuer they giue, [y] parcus quaſi par arcæ, quia ſicut arca tenaciter omnia cuſtodit, a hold-faſt is like his cheſt euermore cloſe ſhut, except it be to receiue; [z] like the Chriſtmas earthen boxes of Apprentices, apt to take in money, but they reſtore none till they be broken; ſo the couetous, as hogs & medlers, neuer doe good vnto any, till they be dead and and rotten ; but when they ſhall be broken as a potters pot, Eſay 30. 14. then happily the wormes ſhall haue their carcaſe, and vnthrifty heires their cap-caſe.

Theſe be faults of omiſſion in the couetous man ; but his ſinnes of commiſſion are greater: he is like S. Peters [a] fiſh, albeit his mouth be full of gold, yet is he nibling on euery bait ; if Naboth haue a little vineyard, Ahab muſt haue it, or elſe he will dye for very griefe; wherevpon [b] Ambroſe notably, Piſcis piſcibus adiungitur, auis auibus ſe aſſociat. & pecus pecori, nec damnum ducunt ſed ſolatium &c. ſolus tu homo conſortem excludis, includis feras, ſtruas habitacula beſtiarum, deſtruis hominum ; according to that of the [c] Prophet, Hee doth ioyne field to field, till there be no place for other in the land.

The [d] Rabbins haue this Apothegme, Qui dicit, quod meum eſt tuum eſt, & quod tuum eſt meum eſt, idiota eſt; qui vero dicit, quod meum eſt meum eſt, & quod tuum eſt tuum eſt, mediocris eſt ; qui dicit, quod meum eſt tuum eſt, & quod tuum eſt tuum ſit, pius eſt ; qui vero dicit, quod tuum eſt meum eſt, & quod meum eſt meum ſit, impius eſt.

Yea but the miſerable beaſt is wiſe for himſelfe. No ſurely : [e] Fulgentius obſerues that King Midas, who deſired Apollo, that euery thing which he touched inſtantly might be turned into gold, is ſo called in Greeke, Mida, quaſi μὴ ἰδὼν, as auidus, in Latine [f] à non videndo, becauſe couetouſneſſe hath ſo blinded him, that he cannot vnderſtand and ſee what is for his owne good. If the [g] Philiſtins had not bored out Sampſons eyes, he would neuer haue beene their miller ; the world is a mill turned about with the wheeles of time, the couetous man is Sampſon toyling for earthly corne, not [h] ſeeking, becauſe not ſeeing the things aboue ; nay, this vnhappy wretch is like the [i] mill-wheele, that turnes about all day, and at night remaineth in the ſame place, riſing vp early in the morning, and going to bed late at night, eating the bread of carefulneſſe, (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeakes) and yet when all is done, hee remaines as a man vndone wanting to himſelfe in all things appertaining to life naturall, ciuill, ſpirituall, eternall.

The naturall is maintained by diet and apparell, ſleepe, recreation and mirth ; in all which the couetous man is no man, alwaies in debt to backe and belly, corpus extenuat, vt lucrum extendat. As for ſleepe, he will not ſpare ſo much idle time as to take reſt in the day, neither can he [k] ſleepe in the night ; he calls to ſeruant and wife whether the doores be ſhut, the buttery and pantry well locked; and when anſwer is returned that all is well, he will beleeue none, except he riſe out of his naked bed, and ſee it himſelfe; when he lyeth downe the ſecond time to ſleepe, hee ſuddenly doth miſtruſt his owne memory, and though his gold was the laſt thing he thought on, and the firſt thing he worſhipped at his going to bed, yes he doth now beginne to doubt, whether his cloſet be ſure, or whether any thing lyeth in the window, that may be ſtollen. I remember Manlius reports, how a miſer in a deare yeare would needs riſe at mid-night to ſee his corne, and ſo ſtumbling in the ſtraw, with his candle, did ſet both corne and barne on fire.

His recreation is nothing elſe but vexation of ſpirit, [m] pierced thorow with many ſorrowes, eating in darkeneſſe with much griefe, Eccleſiaſtes 5. 16.

For the ciuill life, which is honeſt reputation in the world, no man almoſt doth ſpeake well of him when he is aliue, few men hope well of him when he is dead ; all the Schoole condemnes oppreſſours, all honourable ſtates exclude them, the Church excommunicates them, the people curſe them, all hate them.

The ſpirituall life conſiſts in faith and repentance : now the couetous being drowned in riches, make [n] ſhipwracke of faith, and a good conſcience: For faith is by hearing, and hearing by the word ; but the deceitfulneſſe of riches, as our Sauiour ſhewes, Matth. 13. choakes the word, and hinders the paſſage thereof.

And as for repentance, the couetous is ſcarce brought to confeſſe his fault, ſeldome to be ſorry, neuer to reſtore; ſo that hauing neither true faith in God, nor due loue toward men, he cannot be but ſpiritually dead, and ſo by conſequence can haue no portion, in the kingdome of Chriſt and of God, as Paul here : [o] For it is eaſier easier for a Camell to goe thorow the eye of a needle, then for a rich man putting his truſt in riches to enter into heauen.

I haue rubbed enough this fore: let vs now come to the ſalue, ſet downe by S. Paul, 1 Tim. 6. 11. But thou, O man of God flie theſe things, and follow after righteouſneſſe, godlineſſe, faith, loue, patience, meekeneſſe. Wherein he preſcribeth a ſtrict diet to the couetous, intimating firſt from what he muſt abſtaine, flie theſe things, and that for two cauſes, becauſe { A man. / A man of God.

Secondly, whereon he muſt feed, and what exerciſe he muſt vſe, follow righteouſneſſe, holineſſe, &c. for contraries are cured by contraries.

Auarice then ariſing from { Irreligion and infidelitie toward God: / Vncharitableneſſe, iniuſtice, pride toward men: / Impatience toward our ſelues: } is cured aſſuredly by following righteouſneſſe, godlineſſe, faith, loue patience, meekneſſe. The firſt antidote againſt couetouſneſſe is to flee from it, as from a ſerpent and that in body and minde; in body, not to meddle with ſuch occupations and occaſions as increaſe this ſinne; not to ioyne with oppreſſors in vnlawfull gaine: Be not yee companions of them, let not auarice be once named among you: for [p] euill words corrupt good manners. A ſaying ſo true, that it is receiued into the ſacred Canon, and made the leſſon of an [q] Apoſtle, being before the line of a Poet; [r] Secularem verſum ſumens Apoſtolus fecit eccleſiaſticum: It is now Gods word, that was Menanders verſe.

We muſt flee theſe things in our minde alſo; for [s] out of the heart come euill thoughts, adulteries, theſts. &c. If auarice be nothing elſe but an immoderate deſire to get and gaine more, then to flee theſe things in our thoughts is to cut the very throat thereof. It is a good obſeruation of Gregorie, that couetouſneſſe is a ſpirituall ſinne, whereas vncleaneſſe and gluttonie be carnall. Fornication is accompliſhed in chambering and wantonneſſe; gluttonie, in eating and drinking; all carnall ſinnes are finiſhed in carnall ſence; but auarice being a ſpirituall wickedneſſe, alway reſides in the ſoule, beginning, continuing, and ending in it only: for if the couetous had all the world, he would wiſh with Alexander the greate, for moe worlds: it is a fault bounded in his minde, not in his mines or meanes, and therefore the more dangerous and hard to cure, becauſe ſuch a ſinne as can hardly be ſeene.

Flee therefore theſe things, as ſecret enemies in thine owne boſome, becauſe thou art a man, and becauſe a man of God; a man: ergo, not a muck-worme but an [t] heauenly plant, for whereas all beaſts are made looking downe groueling toward the earth, a man hath an erect countenance looking vp vnto heauen: Ἄνθρωπος as Etymologiſts obſerue) ὁτι μετὰ τὸ ἀναθρεῖν, as [u] Plato diuinly, quaſi ἀναθρῶν ἃ ὄπωπε. According to that of the [x] Poet:

Pronaque cum ſpectant animalia cætera terram,
Os homini ſublime dedit, cœlumque tueri iuſſit, & erectos ad ſydera tollere vultus.

Remember then ô man, that thou art a man, play not the beaſt, looke not downeward, licke not the duſt, [y] non tam corpore quam cupiditate. For albeit man be made [z] de terra & ex terra, both in the earth and of the earth, non tamen ad terram, nec propter terram; ſed ad cœlum, & propter cœlum, yet made toward heauen and for heauen; for that is his end: to get a kingdome without end; [a] Quis alius noſter eſt finis, niſi peruenire ad regnum, cuius nullus eſt finis?

As our outward frame, ſo much more our inward forme ſhould make vs abhorre couetouſneſſe; for the ſoule is a ſparke of diuinitie,

The Goſpell. Luke. 11. 14. vnto v. 29

Ieſus was caſting out a Deuill that was dumbe, &c.

SAint Luke preſents vpon the Theater of this Goſpell, { Actors, Spectators.

The principall Actors are Chriſt and Satan; the Spectators, as they be diuers, ſo likewiſe different; ſome behold the wonder, and except againſt it; other behold the wonder and accept of it. There be two ſorts of the diſcurteous: the firſt openly blaſpheme Chriſt, affirming that he caſteth out Deuills through Beelzebub the chiefe of the deuills, verſ. 15.. The ſecond ſecretly deride Chriſt, asking a ſigne from heauen, verſ. 16, All the curteous admire the miracle, the dumbe ſpake, and the people wondred: one, to wit, a deuout woman of the company, brake forth into a further acclamation, and ſayd, Happy is the wombe that bare thee, and the paps which gaue thee ſucke.

The firſt that appears vpon the ſtage, is the Deuill: Now that you may the better vnderſtand what part he playeth,

I will ſhew you (God willing) { 1. Who he is. 2. What hee doth. 3. Why hee doth it.

The Deuill by creation was an Angell of light, but through his [g] owne fault and fall became a fiend of darkeneſſe. [h] All that God made was good, yea very good, and therefore the Deuill, as he is a creature, is good: Ipſius Diaboli natura, in quantum natura eſt, non eſt mala, ſaith [i] Auguſtine; but that he is miſcreant, euill or Deuill, is altogether from himſelfe; ſo Chriſt Ioh. 8. 44. the Deuill when he ſpeaketh a lye, ſpeaketh of his owne, for he is a lyer, and the father thereof. In a word, a Deuill not by Gods generation, but through his owne degeneration, he kept not his firſt eſtate, but loſt his habitation, hee fell from Heauen into the bottomleſſe pit of hell, and therefore he and all his Angells are reſerued in euerlaſting chaines vnder darkeneſſe, as S. Iude teacheth in his Epiſtle.

[i] De ciuit. lib. 19. cap. 13.

This doctrine doth ouerthrow two wicked aſſertions, as firſt that of the [k] Sadduces holding that Deuills are onely qualities of the minde, affirming that good Angels are nothing elſe but good motions, and bad angels nothing elſe but bad motions; whereas the Scripture ſheweth vs plainely, that they be ſpirits eſſentially ſubſiſting. Hell fire is no fable, Deuills are not Nominals onely but Reals not qualities but ſpirituall ſubſtances, here Tempters, hereafter Tormentors.

[k] Acts 23. 8.

Againe, that errour of [l] Manichæus is abundantly confuted by this doctrine, who taught that the Deuill at the firſt was ſo bad by creation as he is now; wheras it is euident, that he was formed good by God, deformed euill by himſelfe.

[l] Auguſtin. hæreſ. 46.

If any deſire to know more concerning the deuill, he may learne it eaſily by the [m] titles attributed vnto him: as in this Goſpell, in regard of his excellent knowledge, knowledge, Dæmon; in regard of his enmity, Satan; in regard of his command Beelzebub; in regard of his power, a ſtrong man; in regard of his pollution, an vncleane Spirit; but Deuill is his moſt vſuall name, being a continuall accuſer of his brethren, Apocal. 12. 10.

But wee may beſt vnderſtand who the Deuill is by his acting; what then is that which the Deuill doth on the ſtage? S. Luke reports here, that hee made a man dumbe: Satan is not a dumbe ſpirit, but a roaring Lyon, and therefore called in this text dumbe; not [n] formaliter, (as the Schoole doth ſpeake) but [o] cauſaliter and effectiuè, making other dumbe: the [p] word doth ſignifie deafe, aſwell as dumbe; for whoſoeuer is borne deafe, is dumbe alſo. [q] S. Matthew relating this hiſtory ſaith further, that this man was made blinde; Then was brought to him one poſſeſſed with a deuill both blinde and dumbe.

A cunning theefe that robs an houſe, comes in a bluſtering night leſt any ſhould heare him, and puts out all the light; leſt any ſhould ſee him, and then ſtops the mouth of the goodman, leſt he call for helpe, and ſo ſome take him. The Deuill acts the part of a murthering theefe, he comes to ſteale from vs our ſoule the moſt precious thing in all our houſe; [r] wherefore he laboureth to ſhut our eyes leſt we ſhould ſee that which is for our good, and ſtop our eares, leſt we ſhould heare that which is for our good, and cloſe our mouth, leſt we ſhould call for that which is for our good.

The [s] Goſpell is the power of God vnto ſaluation, for [t] faith commeth by hearing, and then there can be no condemnation vnto the [u] beleeuer: and this aſſuredly is the true reaſon why the Deuill vſeth all meanes in our time, to keepe both buſie Papiſts, and lazie proteſtants, from comming to Church; he knowes well enough, that Atheiſts and Papiſts too may be caught with the nets and hookes of S. Peter; if they come within his reach, and therefore he doth actually poſſeſſe them with a deafe ſpirit.

But when he cannot ſtop our eares, he laboures exceedingly to ſhut our eyes hee doth blinde (ſaith [x] Paul) the minds of vnbeleeuers, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt, which is the Image of God, ſhould not ſhine vnto them Hee that hath eares to heare, and eyes to ſee, can ſoone deſcry the theefe that comes to rob him: if the Deuill can neither bleare the eye of reaſon, nor put out the eye of faith, he will ſoone be diſcouered for a Deuil. It is written of [y] Antiochus, that entring into the Sanctuary, he tooke away the golden Altar and the Candleſticke for the light: in like ſort, ſo ſoone as Satan hath entred into any mans ſoule, which is Gods holy Temple, he doth endeauour inſtantly to put out the light, to darken his rectified vnderſtanding, that he may not be able to diſcerne good from euill; as [z] Nebucadnezar, when he conquered Zedekia, put out his eyes, and bound him in chaines, and carried him to Babel; ſo the Deuill ouercomming a ſinner, vſually puts out his eyes, that he may the more ſecretly be carried into Babylon, his ſoules confuſion.

When he can neither ſtop our eares, nor ſhut our eyes, his next aſſault is, to cloſe vp our mouth, leſt we ſhould confeſſe Chriſt: for albeit we heare and beleeue, yet without confeſſion he thinkes to bring vs to confuſion, as S. Paul expreſly with the heart man beleeueth vnto righteouſneſſe, and with the mouth man confeſſeth to ſaluation. And herein the Deuill eſpecially [b] reſembles a craftie theefe, who fearing to be diſcouered, either curs out the tongue of the true man, or elſe puts a gagge into his mouth, and then drawing him into ſome by-way, leaueth him hapleſſe and hopeleſſe. So long as the true man is ſpeechleſſe, the theefe is careleſſe; [c] as a cunning Iayleur, although he ſuffer his priſoner ſometime to be looſed from his manicles and fetters, in ſuch ſort that he may worke with his hands and walke with his feet, yet he will be ſure to keepe the priſon doore faſt; euen ſo the Deuill is content, that our hands giue almes, and that our feet ſometime carry vs vnto Church, as long as the barres of our mouth, and doores of our lips are ſhut. Our Euangeliſt omitting therefore, that this poore wretch was blinde, mentioneth onely that he was poſſeſſed with a dumbe Deuill.

Happily ſome will obiect, Beelzebub is a roaring Lyon, and his miniſters are talkatiue: the contentious ſchiſmaticke is a gaping deuill, like [d] Demetrius, he thinkes to carry it away with crying, great is Diana: the paraſite, who ſpends his tongue to maintaine his teeth, is a pratling deuill; the malitious ſlanderer is a brawling deuill, he makes a great noyſe, but all is like the doggs barking at the Moone; his vertuous enemie ſhines in honour, while he pines in enuie. In towne Schoole, Court, Couutrie there be many, too many talking deuills, euery one whereof our Sauiour Chriſt may coniure with, [e] Hold thy peace and come out. Who then is he that hath a dumbe deuill? Anſwere is made by the Prophet Ieremy, chap. 4. verſ. 22. They are wiſe to doe euill, but to doe well they haue no knowledge, they haue tongue enough to ſpeake ill, but mute when they ſhould ſpeake well.

He therefore that dares not confeſſe Chriſt for feare of perſecution, is poſſeſſed of a dumbe ſpirit. [f] The myſterie of the fiery tongues doth betoken the preaching of the Goſpell, and our profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith: he therefore that is dumbe in the cauſe of religion, hath not his tongue looſed by God, but tied by the deuill.

2. That man is poſſeſſed of a dumbe ſpirit, who ſuffers in his company prophane ſwaggerers to blaſpheme the moſt holy name of God, without any controlement. A [g] blaſphemous wretch is worſe then any thing; for euery creature doth praiſe God in his kinde, yea the very [h] dragons and loathſome toades after their fathion; but he like a mad dogge, flieth in his maſters face, who keeps him. If we cannot endure with patience, that any ſhould iniure our father or friend, or acquaintance, what numbneſſe of ſpirit, what dumbneſſe is it to ſuffer our beſt friend, euen our father in heauen, to be rent in peeces with oathes, and [i] ſtabbed thorow with outragious blaſphemies?

3. That man hath a dumbe deuill, who will not make confeſſion of his owne ſinns, as [k] Dauid teacheth out of his owne experience; While I held my tongue, my bones conſumed away through my daily complaining. How can a man hold his tongue and yet mourne all day? [l] Gregorie the Great anſwereth aptly, that he who committeth daily new ſinns, and yet neuer acknowledgeth and confeſſeth vnto God his old, doth roare much and yet hold his tongue.

[m] In the primitiue Church there was a godly diſcipline, that at the beginning of Lent, ſuch perſons as were notorious ſinners, were put to open penance and confeſſion: and ſurely the Church in the choice of this Goſpell, had an eye to this point inſinuating that Lent is a very fit time for the caſting out of this dumbe deuill: it is written of the fiſh Scolopendra, that hauing ſucked in the fiſhers hooke, that ſowre ſweet morſell,

[n] She hath a rare tricke to rid her from it,
For inſtantly ſhee all her guts doth vomit.

Men are caught with Satans allurements, as fiſhes are taken with a bait; we muſt therefore powre out our ſoules vnto God, [p] caſt vp, and caſt out in humble confeſſion all the baits of Satan within vs; and then aſſuredly the dumbe ſhall ſpeake, and the people ſhall wonder.

4. Clergie men either idoll or idle may be ſayd to be poſſeſſed of a dumbe ſpirit, ſome learned men complaine much, I thinke too much of their vnlearned brethren; but it is not enough for a man to be ſufficient, except efficient; actiue ſome way for the good of the Church, either in writing, or preaching, or conferring, or gouerning. A good paſtor is a voice, Chriſts owne mouth, and therefore little difference betweene the dumbe dogge and the dumbe deuill, betwene him that cannot, and him that will not imploy his talent. In a word, he that doth not ſpeake to glorifie God and edifie his brother, hath a dumbe deuill: and here Goſpell and Epiſtle parallell; for it is ſayd in the Epiſtle, that all fooliſh, all ſcurrilous, all filthy talking is vncomely, not fitting the Saints of God, but the ſonnes of Belial.

And thus I haue ſhewed who the deuill is, and what he doth on the ſtage: the next next point to be further examined, is, why Satan doth all this; and that is out of malice to God, and enuie to man; he knowes himselfe already damned, and therefore thinkes himselfe most happy when he makes other like himselfe most vnhappy, going about like a roaring Lion seeking whom he may deuoure. Like as a forlorne desperate rebell out of all hope of pardon, standeth vpon his owne guard, and raiseth a faction and part against his Soueraigne; so the Deuill past all grace laboureth to set vp a kingdome of his owne, the kingdome of darkenesse against the kingdome of light; the kingdome of Antichrist, against the kingdome of Christ: and for this warre his might is great, his malice greater.

But thanks be giuen vnto God, who hath giuen vs victorie through Iesus Christ our Lord; our Captaine Christ hath [q] cast out this Prince of darkenesse, out of his holds and dominions; as he did conquer the world on earth, and death in the graue; so Satan in the courts of hell his owne kingdome, leading, saith the [r] Scripture, captiuitie captiue, triumphing ouer him, who did tyrannize ouer vs as it followeth in the text, eijcient dæmonium.

[q] Iohn 12.31.

[r] Ephes. 4. 8.

The second Actor then appearing vpon this Theater, is Christ; I need not tell you who he is, or what he doth, or why he doth it, he is God and man, [t] God of the substance of his father begotten before the worlds, and man of the substance of his mother borne in the world; for vs men and our saluation, he came downe from heauen, and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost: as Satan therefore plaieth the part of a murtherer and a destroyer; so Christ doth act a Redeemer and Sauiour: as the deuill sets variance betweene God and man, betweene man and man, betweene man and himselfe; so Christ contrarywise makes our peace with God, exhorts vs to peace with men, and grants vs peace in our selues, as the text tels it in briefe he doth cast out the deuil, I say cast the deuill out of the poore sinner, whom he did possesse, and that for [t] foure reasons especially iustifiable by Law.

1. Because the deuill doth not pay the rent of Gods house.
2. Because he doth suffer Gods tenement to decay.
3. Because he doth imploy it to base vses.
4. Because God himselfe hath a purpose to dwell in it.

Almighty God infinitely rich in mercy, lends euery man, and as it were lets to farme diuerse possessions, as the graces of the spirit, the vertues of the minde the gifts of the body, the goods of the world; and for all these requires no rent but thanksgiuing, that our soule may magnifie the Lord, and our mouth shew forth his praise; but so long as the deuill is in any tenement, God cannot haue this little rent, this small farme: for hee possesseth a sinners heart with such a numbnesse, and his tongue with such a dumbnesse, that he can neither thinke things good nor speake things gracious.

Secondly, the deuill ruinates euery tenement, wherein he dwells: as for the out-houses of our bodies, he doth endeuour sometime to burne them with lust, and sometime to drowne them with drunkennesse, alway to mischiefe them with some perill or other: as for the spirituall and inward building; [u] the foundation of Gods tenement in our soule is faith. the walls hope, the roofe charitie. Now the deuill hauing neither faith, hope, nor loue, seekes euermore to raze our foundation, to digge thorow our walls, and vncouer our roofe, that hauing neither faith in God, nor loue toward men, our poore soule may be exposed to all his tempests and temptations, and therefore Christ hath a iust cause to cast him out of his farme for dilapidations.

[u] Augustin.

Thirdly that tenant deserues worthily to be thrust out of house and home, sedibus, ædibus, that implieth all the best roomes vnto the baseſt offices, as to make them either stables for his horses, or stalls for his oxen, or sties for his hogs: but the deuill is such a tenant, he makes our body, which is the temple of God, a den of theeues, a den of oppression and couetousnesse, a den of lust and filthinesse; as it is sayd of [x] Babylon, an habitation of deuills, an hold of all foule spirits, a cage of hatefull and vncleane birds.

Fourthly, the Lord hath a purpose to dwell in our mansion himselfe, and therefore the deuill must be packing: Behold, saith [y] Christ, I stand at the doore and knocke, if any man heare my voyce, and open the doore, I will come in vnto him, & will suppe with him, and he with me. There he doth promise to be our guest; but he saith in [z] another place, that he wil dwell with vs; If any man loue me, he will keepe my word, and my Father will loue him, and we will come vnto him, and will dwell with him. Now that Christ may come into vs, when he comes vnto vs, he doth open our eares the doores of our house, that we may heare his word, open our eyes and inlarge our heart, that we may beleeue his word, vntie our tongue, that we may confesse his faith, and call vpon his holy name. So did hee to this poore wretch, and so doth he still vnto his children; if any mans heart melt, when our [a] welbeloued puts in his hand by the hole of the doore, let him acknowledge thankfully, that it is the [b] worke of God. See the exposition of O Lord open our lips.

The people wondred] [c] The words and wonders of Christ are entertained of diuers men diuersly; the people both admit and admire Christ, but the Pharisies, and the wicked generation mutter and murmure. Now this may teach all teachers [d] not to feare the reproach of men, as knowing that God hath made vs a [e] gazing stocke to the world, to men and Angels. Athanasius was nick-named [f] Satanasius, Cyprian called Caprian, Paul accounted mad, Christ himselfe reputed a coniurer, casting out deuills through Beelzebub the chiefe of the deuills.

To be careleſſe what is spoken of vs, although neuer so falsly and slanderously spoken (especially when it is such, as that the maiestie of God and cause of the Gospell may thereby be dammaged) is the part of reckles and dissolute persons; [g] Hominum est dissolutorum & ad iniurias diuini nominis securè conniuentium; etsi enim aliæ iniuriæ sæpe magnæ ab homine modesto & christiano ferri ac dissimulari possunt, tamen hæreseos notam qui dissimulat, eum Ruffinus negare solebat esse Christianum. And therefore Christ accused of blasphemie, did euer [h] apologize for himselfe, when it made for the glory of GOD, and good of his hearers, as Iohn 8. 49. and Iohn 18. 23. and here confuting his aduersaries with fiue reasons.

The first argument is taken from a prouerbiall saying, vers. 17. 18. A kingdome diuided in it selfe cannot stand; Ergo, no man can cast out one deuill by another.

The second is à pari, vers. 19. If I through Beelzebub cast out deuills, by whose helpe doe your children cast them out? [i] You say that your sonnes cast out deuills by the power of God; Ergo, you doe wickedly to say I doe this in the name of Beelzebub.

The third is à mediis, vers. 20. I cast out deuills by the finger of God; Ergo not by Beelzebub.

The fourth is ab impossibili, vers. 21. 22. A strong man is not cast out of his possession but by a stronger; the deuill is ouercome by me, for I cast him out and spoyle him, Ergo, I am stronger then he.

The last argument á contrariis, vers. 23. He that is not with me is against me and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad. I gather the Church, but Satan doth scatter; Ergo, there can be no good agreement betweene the Deuill and me: that the deuill doth scatter the Church, he proues at large by a goodly similitude, vers. 24. 25. 26.

The true miracles of Christ and his Church, are knowne from the false miracles of heathen sorcerers and idolatrous exorcists, especially two waies, [k] impossibilitate & finibus, by their ends and impossibility. The miracles of Christ were wrought to strengthen our faith, and confirme the true worship of God; but all the miracles of Antichrist are to [l] deceiue the children of God, and to set vp idolatry. So [m] S. Augustine disputes, Aliter fiunt à sanctis, aliter à magis, diuerso fine diuerso iure.

Againe the miracles of Christ are impossible; [n] Since the world began, was it not heard, that any man opened the eyes of one that was borne blinde; Antichrist cannot

The Epiſtle. GALAT. 4. 21. vnto y^t ende

Tell me (ye that deſire to be vnder the Law) doe ye not heare of the law? &c.

AS [r] painting is an ornament to ſet forth and garniſh an houſe which is already builded; ſo is an allegorie the light of a matter already proued, and otherwiſe ſufficiently confirmed. Some Fathers, and moſt Friers expounding the Scriptures, are too much in their allegories, as being more cunning to beautifie then to build, and ſo their poſtils are like the Courtiers lodging, a rotten cottage well hanged; or, as a merry fellow ſayd of the Lawyers library, multum hic video iuris, at nihil carnis.

On the contrary, S. Paul vſeth in this Epiſtle firſt arguments, and then ornaments. Hee doth fortifie the maine propoſition of all his diſcourſe (namely, [f] That a man is not iuſtified by the workes of the law, but by faith in Ieſus Chriſt) firſt, by reaſons of [t] experience: ſecondly, from [u] Abrahams example: thirdly, by manifold teſtimonies of [x] holy writ: fourthly, by ſimilitudes and apt compariſons of a mans [y] will, of the [z] priſon, of the [a] ſchoolemaſter, of an [b] heire; now laſt of all as a beauty to the reſt, he addeth an allegorie, Tell me yee that deſire to be vnder the law, &c.

Tell me] Teach me, ſaith [c] Iob, and I will hold my tongue, ſo Paul here, tell me yee that deſire to liue vnder the burden of the law, [d] doe yee read Moſes or not? if you neuer read the law, you be not wiſe to deſire you know not what; if euer you read or heard the law, then vnderſtand that Abraham had two ſonnes, &c.

And therefore the [g] Fathers in old time did well in wreſting the weapons of heathen Poets and Philoſophers out of their owne hands; and the Proteſtants in our age deſerue better, who beat the Papiſts on their owne dunghill, in their owne ſchoole: for as Paul, tell me yee that deſire to be vnder the law; ſo tell mee yee that depend vpon the Popes infallible iudgement, as though he caried the holy Ghoſt in his boſome, did you neuer heare frō a learned Papiſt of [h] eminent note, [i] that ſome Popes haue beene ſo little furniſhed with good letters, as that they did not vnderſtand ſo much as their Grammar? and that

The Law.] Geneſis out of which he tooke this hiſtory, teacheth eſpecially faith and ſheweth how the Patriarkes in reſpect of their beliefe pleaſed God; [o] yet after the manner of the Iewes he called it the law, for that the law of circumciſion is contained therein; and ſometime the law comprehends not only the bookes of Moſes, but alſo the Pſalmes of Dauid, [p] and all the bookes of the old Teſtament, as Iohn 15. 25. but it is, that the word might be fulfilled which is written in their law; [q] They hated me without a cauſe. Law then in the firſt place muſt be conſtrued of the law morall and ceremoniall; in the ſecond, it is taken for the bookes of Moſes, eſpecially for that of Geneſis.

For it is written that Abraham had two ſonnes, Gen. 16. 17. 18. 21. chapters; one by a bond-maid, Iſmael by Agar; and the other by a free-woman, Iſaacke by Sara: now he that was borne of the bondwoman was borne after the fleſh; [r] after an ordinarie faſhion as other children are; but Iſaacke borne of Sara the freewoman was borne by promiſe; [s] Sara thy wife, ſaith the Angell to Abraham, ſhall beare thee a ſonne indeed, and thou ſhalt call his name Iſaacke; and I will eſtabliſh my couenant with him for an euerlaſting couenant, and with his ſeed after him. And this in briefe is the plaine ſtorie, the which as our Apoſtle ſpeakes, is an allegorie, for by theſe things is meant another thing.

Abraham is a figure of God, which had two ſonnes, that is, two ſorts of people, Iewes and Chriſtians, Iſmael repreſents the Iewes, Iſaacke the Chriſtians; and theſe two be borne vnto God by Agar and Sara, that is, in a ſimilitude the two Teſtaments, the old and the new, the Law and the Goſpell. Agar is Sina, which was [t] without the limits of the land of promiſe in Arabia, vpon which the couenant of the law was giuen with [u] lightnings and thunders, horror and trembling, and ſo all the children of that Teſtament are begotten to bondage and feare: but Sara is Ieruſalem, not that old Ieruſalem in bondage with her children, but the new Ieruſalem our mother the Church, here called Ieruſalem aboue from whence commeth the Goſpell begetting free children of liberty, who receiue the ſpirit of [x] adoption whereby they crie Abba father.

Mount Sina is Agar in Arabia.] Some thinke this mount had two names, Agar and Sina. [y] Some, that Sina is called of Arabians, Agar, and it [z] ſignifieth in their language as much as handmaid; and haply the likenеſſe of the name gaue Paul occaſion to finde out this excellent allegorie. [a] Some that Agar is called Sina, for that Agar is a figure of Sina, as Chriſt is called the [b] Paſſeouer.

As then Agar the bondmaid brought Araham a ſonne, yet not an heire, but a ſeruant? ſo myſticall Agar the law, did beare to God the great Abraham a people, but without the promiſe, not an heire, but a ſeruile ſeed. As Iſmael was the true ſonne of Abraham; ſo the Iewes had the true God to be their father, who gaue them his oracles, and religion, and temple: Pſalm. 147. 19. Hee ſheweth his word vnto Iacob, his ſtatutes and ordinances vnto Iſrael. This only was the difference, that Iſaacke was borne by promiſe, but Iſmael without the bleſſing of the word: Agar therefore gendereth vnto bondage,

The Law doth gender an affection of feare, but the Gospell of loue, so [d] S. Augustine, Breuissima & apertissima duorum Testamentorum differentia, timor & amor: according to that of Paul; Yee that are led by the Spirit of God, and beleeue the Gospell, haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare againe; but ye haue receiued the spirit of adoption, whereby ye crie to God, as to a most mercifull Father: Rom. 8. 14. 15.

[d] Li. contra Adimantum, c. 17

Againe, the bond-woman gendereth vnto bondage, quantum ad effectum, in respect of the successe and euent; for the Law begetteth vnto God seruants only, not sonnes; or if sonnes, not heires of his kingdome; in this respect it is called [e] the ministrie of death. On the contrary, the Gospell is the [f] power of God vnto saluation, and begets inheritors of Gods eternall kingdome; [g] the seruant abideth not in the house for euer, but the sonne doth abide for euer.

Bordered vpon the City now called Hierusalem.] Here the [i] Nouelists except against our translation, in that the word [bordereth] expresseth neither the situations of the place, nor meaning of our Apostle.

[i] Summe conference, pag. 45 and defece for not subscribig, part. 1. Cap. 10

First, for the fault in Cosmographie, Martin Luther auoweth in his Commentaries vpon this place, that there be continuall mountaines reaching from Arabia Petrea to Cades Barnea in Iury: so that mount Agar in that respect may be sayd to border vpon Hierusalem. And as for the true construction in Diuinitie, we take not the word topically, but typically. Mount Agar bordereth vpon Hierusalem in [k] similitude, not in situation, as the Church Bible consenting with the Translators of Geneua, Sina is a mountaine in Arabia, which answereth vnto Hierusalem: and so there is a great neighbour-hood in allusion and correspondence. For as Agar gendered not the seed of promise, so the Law seated in the terrestriall Hierusalem, is not able to beget heires vnto God, for Hierusalem is in bondage with her children, vnder the Romane seruitude litterally; but according to Pauls meaning allegorically, [l] shee cannot attaine to the liberty of the spirit, but abideth vnder the wrath of God, horror of conscience, guilt of death and hell.

I could tell the curious Criticke, who seeth a mote in the Churches eye, but ouerseeth a beame in his owne, that Hierome and Ambrose read coniunctus, [m] Erasmus of Roterodam, confinis; Erasmus Sarcerius in his postil. contiguus; all which are the same with our English bordereth: and if I should say, that the Puritan of England is next neighbour vnto the Brownist of Amsterdam, the most simple Separatist in all Sandwich, I am sure would vnderstand me; so little difference is there betweene the new Church and no Church.

[m] Annot. & Paraph. in loc. Mr. Couerdale in his translation confered with the translation of Tyndal, reads, reacheth vnto Ierusalem which now is.
[n] Hugo Cardinal. in loc.

But Hierusalem which is aboue is free, which is the mother of vs all.] Interpreters obserue, that these words are a liuely description of the Church; In hoc quod dicitur sursum, notatur altitudo; quod Hierusalem, pacis multitudo; quod libera, libertatis amplitudo; quod mater, charitas, or (as Aquine) fœcunditas. I shewed in mine exposition of the Creed, that the Church of God hath three properties, and three prerogatiues; the properties are, holy, catholike, knit in a communion; her prerogatiues are, forgiuenesse of sinne, resurrection of the body, life euerlasting. The word aboue doth intimate that shee is holy; Ierusalem and mother, that she is knit in a communion. In that she is the mother of all, it sheweth her to be catholike; in that a free-woman, and her childrens heires, implies forgiuenesse of sinnes, resurrection of the body, life euerlasting.

Hierusalem is a type of the Catholike Church in foure respects especially. First, God chose Hierusalem aboue all other places on earth to dwell in; [o] Here shall be my rest for euer; here will I dwell, for I haue delight therein. So the Church is a [p] chosen generation, a holy nation, a peculiar people to God, enclosed (as it were) from the commons of the world.

  - Bond, which obligeth vs in our owne perſon, to bring perfect righteouſneſſe for attainment of euerlaſting ſaluation, according to the tenour of the Law, Doe this and liue; ſo the publican and the prodigall ſonne, who condemned themſelues, appealed from the bar of Gods iuſtice, to the court of his mercy; non eſtis ſub lege, ſed ſub gratia, Rom. 6. 14.
- Freedom in good: reſpecting either the - Creator, in hauing free [n] acceſſe to God the Father, in the name of Chriſt, and a libertie to ſerue him in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the daies of our life [o] without feare; for Chriſt hath an eaſie yoke, the ſeruice of God is not a bondage, but a perfect freedome.
  - Creatures, in that [p] all things are pure to the pure: for the dominion ouer the creature loſt by Adam, is reſtored againe by Chriſt, all are [q] yours, and you Chriſts, and Chriſt Gods.

Hence S. Paul cals the forbidding of meats and marriage, with obligation of conſcience, and opinion of merit, [r] a doctrine of deuills.

A thing indifferent, vpon the commandement of the Magiſtrate becomes neceſſarie, not in reſpect of it ſelfe, but for auoyding ſcandall and contempt of authority; the thing to the conſcience remaines indifferent ſtill, and may be vſed and not vſed, if it were not for our obedience to the Prince. See *Luther lib. de Chriſtian. libert. & Com. in Galat. 5. 1. & loc. com. tit. de libertat. Chriſtian. Melanct. com. tit. de Ceremon. & Chriſtian libertat. Caluin. Inſtitut. lib. 3. cap. 19. The conſideration of this our freedome teacheth vs three duties eſpecially:

1. To loue Chriſtian religion, as the [f] meanes of this liberty.
2. To ſearch the Scriptures, as the Charter in [t] which our liberties are written.
3. To ſerue God in the duties of faith and newneſſe of life; becauſe this [u] ſeruice is our libertie, Stand faſt therefore in the libertie wherewith Chriſt hath made vs free, and be not entangled againe with the yoke of bondage, Galat. 5. 1.

Mother.] The word of God is committed to the keeping of the [x] Church, and this word is [y] ſeed, and [z] milke, and ſtrong meat, Heb. 5. 14. The Church then as a mother brings forth children to God by the miniſtrie of the word, and after they be borne, feeds them with milke flowing from her owne two breſts, [a] which are the Scriptures of the two Teſtaments.

[b] Hence the Church may learne to be diligent in preaching the Goſpell ſincerely. For by the ſeed of the word one begets another to God; I being begotten (ſaith Luther) of other, doe now beget other, which alſo ſhall beget other hereafter, and ſo this ſpirituall begetting ſhall continue to the worlds end.

2. Wee are taught [c] hereby to deſpiſe our [d] firſt birth, and ſeeke to be borne againe to God, and ſucke the breſt of our mother, feeding on the milke of the word, 1 Pet. 2. 2. Non enim naſcimur, ſed renaſcimur Chriſtiani, quoth [e] Hierome. Thus to be made a member of the new Hieruſalem, is a great priuiledge, Reuel. 3 12.

3. The word mother, implieth our dutifull obedience to the Church of God according to that of Salomon; My ſonne, heare thy fathers inſtruction, and forſake not thy mothers teaching. This Father is God, and this mother is the Church as [f] Diuines expound it aptly. The Romane Church is not our mother, but a ſtep mother, if not a profeſſed harlot; and therefore [g] we muſt come out of her as being more like mount Sina, gendring to bondage, then mount Sion begetting free children.

Of vs] τῶν ἐξ ἡμῶν, not of all, but vs all, that is, all true beleeuers elected and called effectually, [h] qui ſic ſunt in domo Dei vt ipſi ſint domus dei; for if the reprobate be liuely members of Hieruſalem aboue, the Church is a mother not only to the ſonnes of God, but alſo to the children of the deuill: a doctrine not onely receiued of the fathers in old time, but entertained of the Schoolemen alſo, [i] Iohannes de Turre Cremata, Alexander Hales, Hugo, Thomas, Petrus à Soto, Melchior Canus, &c.

All] For he that hath not the Church for his mother, ſhall neuer haue God for his father, [k] quos elegit hos & vocauit, all Gods elect are in due time called, and all that are called, are called by the Church; [l] electi nuſquam niſi inter vocatos, and therefore moſt honorable for the King himſelfe, who is the father of the Common-weale, to be the [m] ſonne of the Church.

For it is written.] In a controuerſie betweene the falſe teachers and himſelfe, concerning the iuſtifying of a ſinner, he makes the Scripture his Iudge; for for whosoeuer be index qui, the Bible must be index quo, by which all questions in religion ought to be determined.

Reioice thou barren] He sheweth by this allegorie of the Prophet [n] Esay, the difference between Agar and Sara, that is to say, betweene the Church and the Synagogue, between the Gospell and the Law. The Law being husband of the fruitfull woman, that is, of the Synagogue, begetteth very many children in the world; for none, saue the children of the free-woman, either see or know other righteousnes then that of the law. Contrariwise Sara, that is to say, the true Church vnder the [o] crosse, seemeth exceeding barren, as hauing no children, or very few. The Prophet therefore doth exhort her to reioyce; for howsoeuer the Church seeme to be forsaken and barren before the world, not hauing the righteousnesse and workes of the law, yet notwithstanding she is a most fruitfull mother hauing an infinite number of children before God The desolate hath many more children then shee which hath an husband. Agar hath not children, but seruants; and howsoeuer for a time, they that are borne after the flesh persecute those that are borne after the spirit, yet the children of the bond-woman, are cast out of the house together with their mother, and receiue not inheritance with the children of the free-woman.

Here then is [p] comfort for a distressed soule, Reioyce thou barren that beareſt no children, &c. Albeit thou feele thy selfe neuer so barren of good workes, vnable to thinke an acceptable thought, so voyd of righteousnesse as that there [q] dwelleth in thee no goodnesse at all; yet breake forth into ioy, for Christ is thy righteousnesse, and sanctification, and redemption. As Christ then is greater then the law, so thy righteousnesse is a farre more excellent righteousnesse then that of the law; thou hast many moe children then shee which hath an husband, reioyce therefore, for [r] Gods kingdome is the place of ioy, Gods children are the men of [f] ioy, the Gospell is the [t] matter of ioy. Gods Arke was a figure of Christ, and the mirth before the Arke signifieth that the foundation of all our ioy consists in our reconciliation with God in Christ; the musicke of the Temple was typicall, and prefigured these ioyes of the Catholicke Church.

Breake forth and crye] The first word intimates that the Church vpon earth is as it were pent in with present griefe; her ioy is mixed in this life with sorrow the paschall Lambe was eaten [u] with sowre hearbs, insinuating that we feele no sweetnesse in the blood of Christ, till we feele the smart of our sinne. The word crye doth shew, that albeit in earthly ioy we must be sparing and moderate; yet in spirituall ioy modus est sine modo, the measure is to reioyce without measure; if we be rauished in our ioy that we crie againe, it is the best of all. Reioyce in the Lord alwaies, againe, I say reioyce. See Gospell, Dom. 1. Aduent. & Epist. Dom. 4. Aduent.

Christ being an High Priest of good things to come, came by a greater and more perfect Tabernacle,* &c.

[a] 1 Pet. 2. 25.

THis text is a [z] briefe of the whole Epistle, wherein Christ Iesus the great [a] Bishop of our soules, is first compared and then preferred before the Leuiticall high Priest in sundry points, as,

[b] Marlorat. in loc.

1. Aaron and all his successors were but only fore-runners of Christ, who is the end of the law, [b] for this called here sacerdos accedens, or superueniens, a Priest added to the Priests, a Mediatour of the new Testament, consummating the priesthood of the old.

2. The Leuiticall high Priest was a Priest of things present, that is, earthly things and temporary, which only stood in meats and drinks, and diuers washings, and carnall rites, vntill the time of reformation; but Christ is an high Priest of good things to come, so great, that this world cannot [c] perceiue, much lesse [d] receiue them. As an [e] euerlasting father he bestowed on the Church [f] eternall gifts, in [g] this life grace to the end, in the next glorie without end. Spirituall graces in respect of the law were things to come, but yet howsoeuer [h] we be now sonnes of God, it doth not appeare what we shall be; for the glorie which our high Priest hath purchased for vs is yet to come; [i] now we see through a glasse darkly, but when this corruption shall put on incorruption, and this mortall shall be clothed with immortalitie, then we shall see face to face. These good things to come shall be further enioyed and fully reuealed in the world to come.

3. Christ Iesus our high Priest came by a greater and more perfect tabernacle then Aaron. [k] Some by tabernacle meane the Church of God, a tabernacle which [l] the Lord pight and not man. It is greater then the Iewes temple, for it is Catholike, the Lords great Cathedrall [m] extended to all places, and at all times, and all persons, not only those, who now are liuing, but also those who haue been from the beginning, and shall be to the worlds end, for this cause called, Galat. 4. the mother of vs all, and it is more perfect as being the body, whereof the tabernacle was only the shadow.

[o] Esay 33. 20.
[p] 1 Cor. 13. 9.

[n] Some by tabernacle vnderstand heauen, a tabernacle that cannot be [o] remoued; a greater tabernacle. For the whole earth in comparison of heauen is but a point, all Iury but a part of a point, the temple but a parcell of a part; and more perfect, for now [p] we know in part, and prophecie in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is vnperfect shall be abolished.

[q] Other, and that most fitly, thinke Christs humane nature to be this tabernacle, for he was consecrated vnto God in his flesh, he was crucified in it, ascended in it, glorified in it, and now sitteth at the right hand of God in Sancto Sanctorum. as our Mediatour and Aduocate. Well may Christs body be called a tabernacle, for it is the temple of the blessed Trinity, [r] wherein all the fulnesse of the Godhead dwels bodily: this tabernacle was not made with hands, as that old tabernacle, nor of this building as our [s] earthly tabernacles are. For albeit Christ was borne of the Virgine Mary, yet conceiued of the Holy Ghost; as the [t] Prophet, the stone cut out of the mountaine without hands. His body was of this building, secundùm principium materiale, for it was not fantasticall or heauenly, but true flesh of the substance of Marie, yet not of this building, [u] secundùm formale principium & actiuum, as being conceiued by the power of the blessed Spirit, not as other men, by the seed of man; and this was a more perfect tabernacle. For, the word incarnate was full of grace and truth. In Moses tabernacle was the type, but by Iesus Christ came the truth: in a word, [x] Christs body was a tabernacle, propter militiam passionis, greater, propter inhabitationem totius Trinitatis, more perfect, propter abundantiam sanctitatis, not of this building, propter modum conceptionis.

As the Pellican feeds her young, ſo Chriſt redeemes his Church with his owne [z] pretious blood; a benefit ſo great, that our bleſſed Sauiour inſtituted that holy Sacrament of his Supper in perpetuall remembrance thereof; [a] in the night that he was betrayed he tooke bread, and when he had giuen thanks he brake it, and ſayd, Take, eate, this is my body, which is broken for you, doe this in remembrance of me. After the ſame manner he tooke the cup, ſaying, This cup is the new Teſtament in my blood, doe this as oft as you drinke it in remembrance of me.

5. The Prieſt of the old Teſtament entred into the holy place [b] once euery yeere: but Chriſt our high Prieſt of the new Teſtament offereth himſelf once for all; a difference ſo materiall, as that our Apoſtle repeats it often in this one chapter, as verſe 25. not as that he ſhould offer himſelfe often: verſ 26. He appeared once to put away ſinne: verſ. 28. Chriſt was once offered to take away the ſinnes of many. S. Pauls argument is plaine, Chriſt could not offer vp himſelfe any other way then by dying: he therefore did offer vp himſelfe but once, becauſe he could dye but once, [c] not often after any fantaſticall, hidden, inuiſible, myſticall, or vnbloodie manner, as the [d] Papiſts hold, that the Miniſter is a ſacrificing Prieſt, and that in the Sacrament of the Lords ſupper, he doth offer vp Chriſt againe to God the Father, vnder the formes of bread and wine really and properly.

[b] Exod. 30. 10

[c] Dr. Fulke in Heb 9 25.
[d] Con. Trident. ſeſſ. 22. can. 1. 2. 3. &c.

The Church of England cals a Preacher of the Goſpell a Prieſt, of the word Presbyter, not Sacrificulus; or if a Miniſter may be called a ſacrificer, it is in reſpect of his Euchariſticall ſacrifice, prayer and thanksgiuing to God, not hilaſticall. Now the Lords Supper is not a new propitiatorie ſacrifice for the ſinnes of the quicke and the dead, but a thankfull commemoration and repreſentation of the old, and that in words and action: In words, becauſe celebrating this holy Sacrament, we report and repeat how Chriſt died for our ſinnes, and ſhed his blood once for our eternall redemption. In action, breaking the bread, and powring out the wine, taking, eating, drinking, all which are dumbe ſermons, and liuely repreſentations of Chriſts oblation for vs on the croſſe, [e] for as often as yee ſhall eat this bread, and drinke this cup, ye ſhew the Lords death vntill he come. As Chriſt died, and after a ſort was [f] offered in all the ſacrifices of the Law, to wit in figure not in fact; ſo Chriſt is offered in the Sacrament daily, not in fact, but in faith, as [g] Ambroſe notably, ſacrificed in the mindes of beleeuers as vpon an Altar.

[e] 1 Cor. 11.26

[g] Lib. 2. de Virginit.

In adminiſtring this Sacrament, we muſt doe as Chriſt the truth and the way, who did not offer vp his body, for that was crucifyed the day following, but he tooke the bread and brake it, and gaue it not to God, but to the Diſciples; and ſaid not to them, take and ſacrifice, but take and eat, and ſo [h] Lombard, [i] Aquine [k] Gropperus and other Papiſts acknowledge that the Lords Supper is not a reall offering vp of Chriſt, but a memoriall of his paſſion, according to their antiphona, ô ſacrum conuiuium, in quo Chriſtus ſumitur, recollitur memoria paſſionis eius, mens impletur gratia, & futuræ gloriæ nobis pignus datur, Alleluia.

The popiſh Maſſe then is a iniurious ſacriledge, detracting from the power and merit of Chriſts paſſion. an effectuall medecine, that at once cureth a diſeaſe, needs not to be applied againe: But Chriſt offering himſelfe for vs once, was [l] ſufficient for all, efficient for ſuch as apply it, as Gorran doth gloſſe the text briefly, ſufficienter quod ſemel; and therefore the Maſſe being [m] either a continuance or repetition of Chriſts oblation, is a blaſphemous act; for if the Prieſt finiſh that on the altar, which the worlds Sauiour began on the croſſe, then truth it ſelfe, told an vntruth in ſaying, [n] conſummatum eſt, it is finiſhed. If the maſſe be a repetition of Chriſts offring, then his ſacrifice was not ſufficient, and our Apoſtles argument inſufficient, [o] who proues all the legall ſacrifices vnperfect, becauſe they were repeated. It is a good obſeruation, that in a ſacrifice we giue ſomething to God, but in a Sacrament we receiue ſomething from God; if the Lords Lords Supper then bee a Sacrament of the New Teſtament, we muſt not in it offer vp Chriſt to God, but expect Chriſt and the benefits of his ſacrifice from God.

6. The Leuiticall high Prieſt entred into the holy places that are made with hands, which are ſimilitudes of the true Sanctuary: but our high Prieſt is entred into very heauen, to appeare now in the ſight of God for vs. If any now ſinne, we haue an agent in the court of heauen, as [p] S. Iohn, an aduocate with the Father Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, and he is the reconciliation for our ſinnes, and not for our ſins only, but for the ſins of the whole world, The Mediator of the new Teſtament, [q] interceding daily betweene God and man, obtaining for vs not onely temporall gifts, as the Legall high Prieſt, which could not make holy concerning the conſcience, but as it followeth in the next word to be conſidered, eternall redemption: he recouered our eſtate in Gods kingdome which Adam loſt, & hath ſo firmly purchaſed it againe for the Church, as that it is a perpetuity, now for euer, eternall redemption, [r] in { Effect, for he that beleeueth hath euerlaſting life, Ioh. 3. 16. / Efficacie, for his blood is not yet drie, but the power and vertue is alway the ſame, yeſterday, and to day, and for euer, Heb. 13. 8.

For if the blood of [s] oxen and of goats, and the [t] aſhes of a young cow when it is ſprinkled, purifieth the vncleane, as touching the purifying the fleſh, how much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt?] an argument to proue that Chriſt hath obtained eternall redemption for vs, and it is from the [u] leſſer to the greater, or from the [x] ſigne to the thing ſignified. If the blood of the beaſts outwardly did purifie the fleſh, how much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt inwardly purge the conſcience from dead workes, to ſerue the liuing God? Firſt, becauſe the blood of Chriſt, for [y] Ieſus is a Sauiour of his people. Secondly, for that he was offered through the eternall ſpirit: [z] for although our enemie come like a floud, yet the Spirit of the Lord ſhall chaſe him away. Thirdly for that he was without ſpot, an high Prieſt which is [a] holy, harmeleſſe, vndefiled, he knew [b] no ſinne, therefore moſt able to purge the conſcience from all ſinnes, here termed deadly workes, in that they procure to the ſinner in this world death ſpirituall, in the world to come death eternall. See Epiſt. Dom. poſt Trinit.

To ſerue the liuing God] The Lord is [c] life: ſuch then as will ſerue him, muſt offer themſelues a [d] liuing ſacrifice, for he redeemed vs for this end, that wee ſhould ſerue him in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the daies of our life. I haue put off my coat, ſaith the [e] Church, how ſhall I put it on? I haue waſhed my feet, how ſhall I defile them? A ſinner irrepentant is like the ſow wallowing in dirt and mire; but God (as [f] Dauid ſpeakes) hath brought me out of the horrible pit, out of the mire and clay, and ſet my feet vpon the rocke and ordered my goings: I haue put of the old man, and am become a new creature in Chriſt. Why then ſhould I, that am waſhed in the ſacred font, and bathed in my ſweet Sauiours owne blood, defile my ſelfe againe by ſtanding in the waies of ſinners and ſitting in the ſeat of the ſcornefull? [g] Hoc magis culpabiles ſumus, ſi legem bonam colimus, & mali cultores ſimus; imo potius nec cultores, ſi mali, quia cultor dici non poteſt malus cultor; neque enim colit, qui rem ſanctam non ſanctè colit.

- Oath, Verily, verily, I ſay vnto you, if a man keepe my ſaying, he ſhall neuer taſte of death.

Which of you can rebuke me of ſinne? The Church of Chriſt, [k] My beloued is white and ruddie, the chiefeſt of ten thouſand. [l] Candidus ſanctitate rubicundus paſſione; white, for he that was without ſpot in his life; ruddie, for that he ſhed his owne bloud for vs at his death, [m] A ruddie colour is not beautifull, except it be grounded vpon a faire white, ſo Chriſts paſſion had not beene an offering of a ſweet ſauour to God, if his life firſt had not been candide, without ſinne, [n] holy, blameleſſe, vndefiled.

Here the Epiſtle and Goſpell accord, our high Prieſt was without ſpot, ſaith Paul, who can rebuke me of ſinne? ſaith Chriſt: and both are fit for paſſion Sunday, for all the ſufferings of Chriſt on the Croſſe, may be reduced vnto bitter
- words, [o] I am a worme and no man, a very ſcorne of men and outcaſt of the people.
- wounds, [p] Behold and ſee, if there be any ſorrow like to my ſorrow.

This Goſpell affords a taſte of [q] both, he did heare bitter words in the 48. verſe, Say we, not well, that thou art a Samaritan and haſt a deuill? and he was like to ſuffer bitter wounds, in that they would haue ſtoned him, verſ. 59.

Chriſt proues himſelfe to be the Meſſias, and our high Prieſt of good things to come, by this infallible demonſtration; which of you can rebuke me of ſinne? peraduenture ſome will accuſe, but who can rebuke, which of you mine enemies, euen you that prie ſo much into my life? My conuerſation is without fault, my doctine without error, and why then admit you me not for Chriſt? ſeeing none is free from ſinne, ſaue the Meſſias only; flatter not your ſelues in your idle conceit, either proue me to be a ſinner, or acknowledge me for a Sauiour, if no crime, then Chriſt. If I ſay the truth, why doe yee not beleeue me? that man is worſe then mad, who perſecutes that as falſe, which he knowes to be true.

All men [r] hence may learne, Preachers eſpecially, to frame them ſelues according to Chriſts example, ioyning integrity of life to ſincerity of doctrine, that they may further the Goſpell among enemies, who reſpect more good life then good learning; and among friends, who tolerate bad manners often for our doctrines purity: the [s] Prieſt had Vrim and Thummim in his breſtplate, [t] ſo the Preacher ought to haue ſcience and conſcience; for albeit Chriſt alone was free from all ſinne, yet ſuch as will teach his Goſpell with fruit, muſt be cleare from open crimes. Our Sauiour ſaith not, (as Eraſmus vpon the place) which of you can accuſe? for they called him coniurer and Samaritan: but which of you can conuince? who can proue that he doth reproue? the moſt heauenly Doctor is an earthly man, fleſh and bloud, and in many things [u] all of vs offend; and ſo ſo we may be conuicted of manifold weakeneſſe, but let vs take heed of manifeſt wickedneſſe. He that with a good will and honeſt heart heareth Gods word, hath Chriſts record that he is of God; he that heareth the word and perſecuteth it, is of the deuill; and ſo *S. It is certaine, the Iewes knew Chriſt to be no Samaritan, and that he ſpake ſuch words, and did ſuch wonders, as none could doe by the power of the deuill; and ſo ſome confeſſe, Iohn 10. 21, Theſe are not the words of one that hath a deuill; can the deuill open the eyes of the blinde?

Hence we may learne to be zealous in the buſineſſe of God, howſoeuer remiſſe in that which concernes our ſelues: a [m] Chriſtian in his loue, may reſemble the Reed, but in his faith he muſt be like the Adamant, inflexible, ſtout, immutable, willing rather to loſe his life (ſaith [n] Baſil) then to ſuffer any one ſyllable of Gods holy truth in the Scripture to be betrayed, vnus apex doctrinæ plus valet quam cœlum & terra, ſaith [o] Luther: it is a Mathematicall point, which cannot be diuided; [d] albeit charity ſuffereth all things, beleeueth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, yet faith can ſuffer nothing, I deny my learning, ſayd renowned [q] *B. An

An indignitie, which only toucheth our priuate perſon, may be diſſembled, as [f] Auguſtine replied to Petilian, poſſumus eſſe in his pariter copioſi; ſed nolimus eſſe pariter vani; ſo learned [t] Hooker, the beſt anſwer to words of ſcorne and petulancie, is Iſaacks apologie to his brother Iſmael, the apologie which patience and ſilence make; our anſwer then vnto their reaſons is, no, to their ſcoffes nothing; and yet when the ſlanders which light on our perſons, rebound to the diſcredit of our profeſſion, it behoooueth vs not to be ſilent in anſwering truly, when as our aduerſaries are eloquent in obiecting falſly; [u] Paul therefore when Feſtus ſcorned him as a mad man, anſwered, I am not mad, O noble Feſtus, but I ſpeake the words of truth and ſoberneſſe. And when the Primitiue Chriſtians had beene ſlandered vnto the people for diſturbing the State, for adulterie, murder, and other inſufferable crimes, it was their vſuall cuſtome to write apologies, and to put vp ſupplications vnto Princes, that they might defend themſelues in open audience; ſo Chriſt here doth anſwer the Iewes cauill in a word, I honour my father, &c. as if he ſhould argue thus; he that is a Samaritan & worketh by the deuill, ſeekes his owne praiſe, not Gods glory: but I honour my father, and ſeeke not mine owne praiſe: Ergo, I am no Samaritan or coniurer, but yee rather are of the deuill, in that ye diſhonour me, who honour God; and this is tortura Torti, the retorting of a poiſoned weapon into the aduerſaries owne breſt.

Now we know that thou haſt the deuill.] [x] We ſaid ſo before, but now we can eaſily proue it ſo; before we did only coniecture, but now we certainly know that thou haſt the deuill. [y] Here note the deſperate incorrigibilitie of ſuch as are in a reprobate ſenſe; as euery word of Chriſt is the [z] ſauour of life vnto life to the godly; ſo the ſauour of death vnto death to the wicked, the more they heare, the worſe they are: firſt they thought Chriſt had a deuill, then they ſaid it; laſt of all, which is worſt of all, they knew it.

Your father Abraham was glad to ſee my day.] The Iewes exceedingly boaſted of the temple ſaying, [a] the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, this is the temple of the Lord; they did ſeeme to reuerence the Prophets and Patriarkes, Abraham eſpeciallly; ſo the Papiſts in our time crie, the Church, [b] the Church, all for the mother Church, all for the Fathers, all for antiquitie; but when we ſay to the Romaniſts as Chriſt here to the Iewes, Abraham was glad to ſee my day, the mother Church reioyced in old time to confeſſe the Goſpell now preached in England, for we doe not in any point of doctrine depart further from Rome, then ſhe hath departed from her ſelfe in her flouriſhing eſtate; then inſtantly they come to the third weapon, idle diſtinctions and cauills, Abraham is dead, and Abraham is not dead, [c] there is an idolatrie which is good, and an idolatrie which is bad; hoc in Grammar and Logicke demonſtrates this thing, yet in the words of Chriſt, hoc eſt corpus meum, it doth ſignifie [d] nothing.

[e] The ſoueraigne ſupremacie of the Roman Biſhop is the ſupreme difference, to which all other popiſh points are ſubordinate; [f] for the trueſt formalitie of a Papiſt is his vnion with the Pope; now [g] Romes champion is vncertaine, whether the Pope as Pope, hath power ordinarie or extraordinarie, to depoſe Princes after a direct or indirect manner, alwaies, or vpon ſome ſpeciall occaſion accidentally, ſo that the Catholike faith (as a learned Father of our Church hath wittily noted) is, [h] Credo quod Papa non vt Papa, habet aliquo quidem modo ſed modo tamen indirecto, poteſtatem ſaltem quandam temporalem, ſed non merè, nec abſolutam, ſed ad aliquid relatam, nec perpetuam, ſed caſualem.

I will not meddle with the [i] cobwebs of learning in the Schoole, which haue more wit then Art, yet more Art then vſe; nor with the diſtorted and idle gloſſes of the Canoniſts: he that liſt may burthen his memorie with a ſhipfull of their fooleries, accuratly collected by the penner of Pſeudomartyr, cap. 10.

Laſtly, when all other helpes and hopes faile, they caſt ſtones at Chriſt, fetching arguments from the ſhambles, and concluding in ferio, deſtructiue Doctors, who to build the Church, blow vp Common-wealths, euen like raſh [k] empiricks, they can cure no way but by letting of blood; the Spaniſh Inquiſition is their

The Epiſtle. PHILIP 2.5. vnto v. 12

Let the ſame minde be in you that was alſo in Chriſt Ieſus, &c.

THis Epiſtle containes an exhortation to lowlineſſe and loue, grounded vpon Chriſts example, who when he was Lord of all, humbled himſelfe to be ſeruant vnto all, taking on him the ſhape of a ſeruant, when he was in the ſhape of God, and in all reſpects equall with God.

- Humiliation, in that
  - Being God, he was made man.
  - Being man, he became obedient vnto death euen the death of the croſſe.
- Wherein obſerue Chriſts Exaltation, and herein
  - Generall, exalted on high.
  - Particular, What, in
    - Adornation, a name which is aboue all names.
    - Adoration in
      - Action, that at the name of Ieſus euery knee ſhould bow.
      - Confeſſion, that all tongues ſhould confeſſe, &c.
  - Wherefore, becauſe ſo good to man, and obedient to God, for whoſoeuer humbleth himſelfe, ſhall be exalted.

Who when he was in the ſhape of God.] Chriſt had a being before the world, though as man a beginning in the world; ſo [a] S. Iohn, In the beginning was the Word; and himſelfe of himſelfe, [o] Ere Abraham was, I am, eternally begotten of his Father as God; howſoeuer in [p] fulneſſe of time borne of his mother as man; and to diſtinguiſh him here from Angels eſſentially ſubſiſting, our Apoſtle further addeth, he was in the ſhape of God; that is, (as [q] all the Doctors expound it) God: for the word ſhape cannot be taken in this place [r] ſimilitudinarie, but eſſentialiter, as Heb. 1.3. the very image of his ſubſtance, χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως.

[r] Sarcerius in loc.

There be [s] many Gods in name, but Chriſt is God in nature; Lucifer and the Pope are Gods by robberie, but Chriſt is God by right, holding it no robberie to be equall with God; if equall, then not leſſe; if with God, and in the ſhape of God, a diſtinct perſon from the Father.

[s] 1 Cor. 8.5.

[t] In this one line then (as Interpreters obſerue) [t] many, yea [u] moſt heretikes erring about the natures and perſon of Chriſt, are confuted abundantly. Firſt, Ebion, Cerinthus, Photine, Paulus Samoſatenus, holding that Chriſt had no being before he tooke on him the ſhape of a ſeruant. Secondly, Sophronius, and after him Seruetus, imagining that the Word was not actually and really ſubſiſting from all eternitie, non fuiſſe rem vere ſubſiſtentem, ſed decretum tantummodo in mente Dei de hoc homine creando, & ſua deitate implendo. Thirdly, Carpocrates and Arrius acknowledging acknowledging that Christ had another nature besides his humane, but not of the same substance with the Father; and yet the text is plaine, he was in the shape of God, and thought it no robberie to be equall with God, [x] id enim natura sumpsit, non superbiâ præsumpsit. As the Greeke Fathers ὁμοιωσις, not ὁμοουσιος, of the same not of the like nature. Fourthly, [y] Noetus, Praxeas, Sabellius, affirming that there is no distinction of persons in the Trinitie. God the Sonne is equall with God the Father: ergo, God the Sonne is another person, albeit not another power, alius etsi non aliud; equality (saith Theophylact) is in respect of another. Fifthly, [z] Philoponus, Valentin, Gentilis, and other Tritheists, impiously maintaining that the three persons are three Gods essentially differing in number and nature; whereas the Catholike faith is according to this Scripture, that [a] the Godhead of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost is all one, the glorie equall, the maiestie coeternall.

[t] Theophylact. in loc.
[u] Zanchius in loc

Neuerthelesse he made himselfe of no reputation.] Christ humbled himselfe, and made himselfe a seruant: Ergo, whatsoeuer he did or suffered for the redemption of the world, was voluntarie, not forced. He, that is, onely the Sonne, not the Father, against [b] Patripassians; himselfe, against [c] Nestorius, absurdly conceiting that Christ was two persons in his two natures, one person as the Sonne of God, in the shape of God, another as the Sonne of man in the shape of a seruant and against [d] Eutiches holding quite contrary, that Christ after his incarnation had but one nature, because but one person; he being in the shape of God tooke on him the shape of a seruant, not by confusion of substance, but by personall vnion.

Againe, this ouerthroweth [e] Apollinaris, who taught that Christ was incarnate by turning some part of the God head into manhood, whereas [f] his diuine nature was not consumed, when his humane was assumed; [g] Homo quippe Deo accessit, non Deus a se recessit, [h] homo factus naturam suscipiendo nostram, non amittendo suam; as the diuine [i] Poet:

Ille manet quod semper erat, quod non erat, esse
incipiens ——

Or as Eusebius [k] Emissenus in one word, verbum caro factum est, non deposita sed sepposita maiestate: Christ then at the same time was both a seruant and a Lord; yea the Lord. It is not sayd here, Christ tooke on him the person of a seruant, or the place, [l] but the shape, that is, his whole nature, body and soule, being like vs in [m] all things, [n] excepting sinne, found as a man, in the frame of his body, forme of his minde, habit, gesture, speech, and other carriage like vnto man.

Became obedient:] To his [o] earthly parents, and his Father in heauen; [p] Loe I come to doe thy will, [q] I haue glorified thee on earth; I haue finished the worke, which thou gauest me to doe, to the death obedient, euen the death of the crosse. Here the Gospell and Epistle meete, both are narrations of our Sauiours passion and patience, the Collect is a briefe of the Epistle, and the Epistle an abridgement of the Gospell.

Wherefore God hath exalted him on high.] In his resurrection, ascension, session [r] at the right hand of the throne of maiestie, making heauen of heauens his seat, and all his enemies his [s] footstoole.

And giuen him a name.] sometime name signifieth in Scripture power, as [t] Dauid to Goliah; I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts: and Psal. 118 In the name of the Lord will I destroy them. In the name, [u] that is, through his power and helpe. So Christ had power giuen him aboue all powers in heauen, earth, hell, a power vnspeakable, which cannot be named, as himselfe of himselfe [x] all power is giuen to me.

Sometime name is vsed for honour and fame, Genes. 11. 4. that we may get vs a name: Prouerb. 22. 1. A good name is to be chosen aboue great riches: and so CHRIST had a name which is aboue all names, in being the [y] KING and [z] Lord of glory. that most fitly, conioyne both opinions, affirming that the Father gaue this name to the person of Christ God and man according to that of Peter, Acts 2.36. Let all the house of Israel know for a suretie, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, And so much is implied in the clause following, that at the name of Iesus euery knee should bow. [d] Christ is an appellatiue, Iesus is his proper name; now Iesus is Emmanuel, God with vs, as S. Matthew doth expound it in his Gospell; as God, then his glory was from all eternitie; but as with vs, it was in time manifested vnto vs.

Euery knee should bow] For that contemptible name Iesus, as Pilat scoffingly, Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudæorum, is now so preached and praised, as that it is a name farre aboue all names: hence capping and kneeling in the Church at the name Iesus, [e] an harmelesse, yet not fruitlesse ceremonie, which may be [f] well vsed and not to be [g] misliked, as being a reuerend regard to the Sonne of God, aboue other messengers, although speaking as from God; and against Infidels, Iewes, Arrians, who derogate from the honour of Iesus, a respect most profitable.

Whereas it is [h] obiected that this bowing at the name of Iesus more then at other names of God, may breed an erroneous estimation, aduancing the Sonne aboue the Father and holy Ghost; answer is made, that the truth of the Sonnes equality with the Father and Holy Ghost is a mysterie so hard for the wits of mortall men to rise vnto, that of all heresies in the world, that which may giue him superiority is least to be feared: for it is well [i] obserued, that most Heretikes haue denied the Sonne, but none the Father to be God. And therefore the condemning of this honour done to Iesus in the Church, is an argument of spight, rather than an euidence of the spirit.

Both of things in heauen, and things in earth, and things vnder the earth.] In [k] heauen, Angels; in earth, liuing men; vnder the earth, dead bodies; for Iesus is [l] Lord both of the dead, and of the quicke, and all in the last day must appeare before his seat of iudgement with bowed knees. Or as [m] other, Angels and Saints in heauen, men in earth, deuills in hell vnder earth. For there is a [n] twofold geniculation or adoring, one voluntarie, another extorted. All glorious Angels, all blessed spirits, all good men of their owne accord yeeld obedience to Christ fully, cheerefully. But the wicked man on earth, and damned fiend in hell is forced against his will to doe this dutie. So [o] Iudas, I haue sinned in betraying the innocent blood: so [p] Iulian apostata, Vicisti Galilæe: so the deuills, as S. Matthew reports in his 8. chap. vers. 29. Iesus the Sonne of God, what haue we to doe with thee? Art thou come hither to torment vs before the time? Thus as euery knee should bow, so euery knee shall bow, saith [q] Esay, that knee that will not out of faith, shall out of feare

In this sense, the tongues of all things in heauen, in earth, and vnder earth shall confesse that Iesus Christ is the Lord; goodmen say this on earth, and see this in heauen; in this life, [r] with their heart they beleeue to righteousnesse, and with their mouth confesse to saluation; in the next life, they shall be [s] clothed in long white garments, and palmes in their hands, and they shall crye, Saluation be ascribed to him that sitteth vpon the seat of our God. The [t] Deuills also confesse, but tremble; reprobate men also confesse at the last day, but with horror as we read in the fifth chapter of Wisedome. Such as now [u] crucifie Christ againe, making a mocke of Iesus, [x] despising the spirit of grace, treading vnder foot the Sonne of God, and accounting his precious blood an vnholy thing, shall then in all submissiue manner acknowledge that Iesus Christ is the Lord, saying, [y] Lord when saw we thee an hungred, or a thirst, &c. But alas, this extorted confession is to their confusion: for Christ will then say, depart from me ye cursed into euerlasting fire, which is prepared for the deuill and his angels.

Vnto the praise of God the Father] I finde [z] two constructions of these words, in the glory, to the glory; the vulgar Latine and S. Ambrose read, in gloria Dei Patris, all tongues shall confesse that Iesus Christ is the Lord, and in the glory of God the Father, as Paul [a] elsewhere, receiued vp in glory. Christ as man had created and visible glory: but as God, infinite, vncreated, and inuisible glorie; [b] the iust shall ſhall ſhine as the ſtars for euer and euer; in what glory then is the Sunne of righteouſneſſe, euen light it ſelfe? Apocal. 21. 23.

Now this two-fold glory doth anſwer to Chriſts two-fold humiliation; in his birth he made himſelfe of no reputation, as God he put off (as it were) his vncreated glorie, and tooke vpon him the ſhape of a ſeruant; in his death as man, he did humble himſelfe ſo farre, that he was rather a [c] worme then a man, a very ſcorne of men, and outcaſt of the people; but when he was exalted on high, his created glorie due to him as a man was aſſumed, 1. Tim. 3. 16. and his vncreated glorie proper to him as God, was againe [d] reſumed: Ioh: 17.5. Glorifie me, O Father, with thine owne ſelfe, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was; aſcribe then all glory to the King of glory, for his is kingdome, power and glorie.

But our Church interprets it [e] better, vnto the praiſe of God the Father. For the Father is glorified in his Sonnes glory, to whom he committed all [f] power and praiſe, they both are one; thou, o Father, art in me, and I in thee, Ioh. 17.21 He that doth deſpiſe the Sonne, deſpiſeth alſo the Father; he that doth confeſſe that Ieſus Chriſt is the Lord, honoureth the Father, and if hee doe this out of faith and loue, God will [g] honour him; if againſt his will out of feare, God will be [h] honoured in him. Here for application let vs pray with the Church.

Almighty and euerlaſting God, which of thy tender loue towards man, haſt ſent our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt to take vpon him our fleſh, and to ſuffer death vpon the croſſe that all mankinde ſhould follow the example of his great humility; mercifully grant, that we both follow the example of his patience, and be made partakers of his reſurrection, through the ſame Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

The Goſpell. MATT. 26. 1. vnto v. 57 of the 27 chap.

And it came to paſſe when Ieſus had finiſhed all theſe ſayings; and ſo forth vnto the 57. verſ. of the next Chapter.

I Haue choſen out of this long Scripture (which is indeed the Goſpell of the Goſpels) only two ſhort Texts, as beſt fitting the time; the firſt preached in Engliſh at Pauls Croſſe, March. 11. Anno. 1598. the ſecond in Latine at the Batcheiours commencement in Cambridge, Anno 1599. both exercites of a young Student and then no Practitioner.

The firſt Text is written, Matth. 26. 14. Then one of the twelue which was called Iudas Iſcariot went vnto the chiefe Prieſts, and ſayd vnto them, what will ye giue me, and I will deliuer him vnto you?

The foure Euangeliſts are compared by the [i] Schoole-men to the foure elements Iohn, to fire, Luke to aire, Marke to water, Matthew to the earth, and that in two reſpects eſpecially: firſt, becauſe this Euangeliſt before his conuerſion, was an earthly minded man, altogether occupied in worldly buſineſſe, telonarius, ſitting at the receit of cuſtome, Mark. 2. 14. Secondly, becauſe Matthew doth moſt exactly deliuer in his Goſpell how Chriſt tooke fleſh on earth, and for this Ezech. 1. and Apoc. 4. figured by the beaſt, which had the face of a man, beginning his hiſtorie, The booke of the generation of Ieſus Chriſt, &c. accurately ſetting downe all circumſtances concerning Chriſts birth, as alſo the whole manner of his death.

He was borne at Bethlem a little village, not in Hieruſalem a great citie; in an Inne, not in his fathers houſe; in a ſtinking ſtabel, not in a ſtately chamber laid in a cratch, not in a cradle, that we might [k] learne of him to be Humble and meeke: Omnis enim huius natiuitatis ſchola humilitatis eſt officina, ſaith Auguſtin. ſerm. 22 de tempore.

Our Euangeliſt alſo doth note the time when Chriſt was borne, to wit, in the daies of Herod in the [l] 42. yeere of Auguſtus Caſar his empire: for as man was made the [m] ſixt day of the weeke, ſo redeemed in the ſixt age of the world; borne when when the dayes are shorteſt, [n] vt diminuto noctis curriculo defectionem sentiant opera tenebrarum; he muſt increaſe (quoth the Baptiſt) I muſt decreaſe. Iohn therefore was borne at Midſummer when the dayes grow ſhorter and ſhorter, but Chriſt about the Calends of Ianuary when the dayes waxe longer and longer, giuing at once both life to man and length to dayes, as [o] Auguſtine and [p] Ambroſe note: borne in the night alſo, ſaith [q] Tertullian, to ſignifie that he ſhould be a light to lighten the Gentiles, and all ſuch as ſit in darkeneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death.

Touching Chriſts paſſion, our Euangeliſt tells vs he ſuffered in Golgotha, the place where Adam was buried, as [r] Ambroſe thinkes, vpon that very day of the weeke that Adam was created, and as it is probably coniectured, vpon the ſelfe-ſame day of the moneth, and the ſame time of the day; [s] for as in Adam all dye, euen ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made aliue.

I need not here relate how the King of glory was enuied by the Phariſies, accuſed by the Prieſts, accurſed of the people, condemned by Pilat buffeted by the ſouldiers, mocked of the Captaines: laſt of all, which is worſt of all, (an action which the Sunne did bluſh to ſee) crucified among theeues as a malefactor, euen by his owne Country-men, and all this ſayd, and more then can be ſayd, through a treacherous act of a miſcreant Apoſtle, who played the Merchant with his Maſter, as you heare in the text, What will you giue me and I will deliuer him vnto you? In which bargaine and ſale foure points are to be conſidered eſpecially:

- The
  - Merchant, deſcribed by his
    - Name, Iudas Iſcariot.
    - Company, one of the twelue.
    - Office among the twelue, marſupium habebat, Ioh. 12. 6.
  - Chapmen,
    - Eccleſiaſticall, chiefe Prieſts.
    - Ciuill, Captaines, Luke, 22. 4.
  - Ware, Chriſt, I will deliuer him, ſelling his Maſter, as if he had beene his ſlaue.
  - Manner of bargaining, in which Interpreters obſerue three groſſe faults.

First, as a Pedler hauing no certaine ſtanding, he ran vp and downe the City, [t] ſeeking chapmen, not chapmen ſeeking him, as if his ware had beene ſo bad, that none would buy it, except he did expoſe it baſely; for it is ſayd, he went vnto the chiefe Prieſts.

Secondly, whereas he ſhould haue ſayd, Yee ſhall giue me thus much, or elſe yee ſhall goe without him, he ſaith only quantum dabitis? What will ye giue? [u] leauing it to the diſcretion of the buyers.

Thirdly, he did not take ready coyne for his ware, for it appeares in the text, and Theophylact obſerues it, that the chiefe Prieſts at this time did onely promiſe him money, not pay; yet Iudas an vnhappy Merchant. after he had wrought iourney-worke with the deuill, ſold his moſt louing maſter vnto ſtrangers his moſt hatefull enemies; euen Ieſus the worlds Sauiour, in whom is all treaſure, for a little ſiluer, and that without any good aſſurance, for he ſaith only, what will ye giue? &c.

Iudas (as Origen and Auguſtine note) ſignifieth a confeſſor; of which name there was another Apoſtle ſurnamed [x] Thaddeus, or Iudas Iacobi, Luke 6. 16. that therefore this treacherous Merchant might be diſtinguiſhed from that other faithfull Apoſtle, he is termed Iſcariot, either of the village wherein he was borne as Caietan; or of the tribe of Iſachar as [y] Eraſmus thinkes, Iſcariot quaſi Iſachariot; or of both, as Hieron and [z] Iſiodore; for Iſachar as theſe Doctors obſerue, doth ſignifie wages or hire, noting vnto vs Iudas nature by Iudas name, [a] called Iſcariot of this Iſcarioticall feat, what will yee giue me?

Here note that ſome Iudaſes are Iſcariots, ſome confeſſors traytors, ſome Chriſtians in ſhew, deuills indeed, like the dragons of Armenia, that haue cold bodies, Endeuour thou to be like that other Apoſtle, not onely Iudas a profeſſor, but alſo Lebbæus, a practiſer, all heart, as Iſiodore, lib. 7. Origen. cap. 9. For Chriſtians are not Sophiſters, only learning Logicke and Rhetorike able to make them ſpeake well, but alſo maſters of that art, quæ non verba ſed facta profitetur, as [e] Clemens Alexandrinus excellently.

I ſay to them as Auguſtine to the [i] Donatiſts, Non recedite ſed accedite pacati ad plebes non noſtras, ſed illius cuius omnes ſumus; aut ſi non vultis impacati, vos potius recedite à plebibus pro quibus Chriſtus ſuum ſanguinem fudit, quas ideo vultis veſtras facere ne Chriſti ſint; and in another place, [k] tu qui vento tentationis foras euolaſti, quid es? triticum? non id tolleret ventus ex area; ex eo ergo, vbi es, agnoſce quid es. If you be Chriſts, heare Chriſts word, he bids you [l] ſuffer the tares to grow among the wheat; he tels you that he had choſen twelue, and one was a [m] deuill; as it followeth in the text, Iudas Iſcariot was one of the twelue, not a Diſciple only, but an Apoſtle.

The name of a Prieſt in former ages, hath beene ſo venerable, not among Chriſtians only, but among Heathens alſo, [n] that they were wont to chuſe their Prieſtes out of their Philoſophers, and their Kings out of their Prieſts. Among the Romans (as [o] Alexander ab Alexandro) none were created pontifices, but ſuch as were of great wealth and noble blood; and it is reported by the ſame writer, that Alexander the great, ſeeing the high Prieſt of the Iewes in his rich attire, ſaluted him with all humble reſpect, and adored him as a god; and the [p] papiſts haue this fabulous apothegme of S. Francis, that he was wont to ſay, if he ſhould meet in one way at one time a Prieſt and an Angell; he would firſt reuerence the Prieſt, and then ſalute the Angell; and therefore the ciuill lawyers acquainted with the Canons of the Church haue little law, leſſe conſcience, to ruſh into our poſſeſſions and contemne our profeſſions, hauing our benefices, hating our habits, as if it were a diſcredit for their worſhip to ride in a Prieſts cloake, or put on our clericall attire, to be pointed at for an Apoſtle, and reputed one of the twelue.

Iudas a Preacher, a worker of miracles, an Apoſtle, yet for all this an Iſcariot a traitor to his Maſter, a butcher to himſelfe. This may teach the people, terrifie the Paſtor; it may teach you to reſpect more the doctrine and commiſſion of him that is ſent, then his life and conuerſation; if God ſpeake to thee, as he did vnto Balaam by an Aſſe, thou muſt haue ſo much patience, ſaith [q] Luther, as to heare him: if God will haue thee ſaued by one who peraduenture ſhall be damned, heare what he ſaith, and looke not what he doth, erret non erret ille, tu non erras, ſi credideris, if thy Paſtor liue lewdly, that is his owne hurt; if he preach learnedly, that is thy good: take thine owne and goe thy way; Iudas himſelfe preaching Chriſts doctrine muſt be heard, albeit in the end he ſteale from vs and betray the Goſpell.

Secondly, this example may terrifie Preachers, euermore remembring that fearefull ſpeech of our [r] Sauiour, Many will ſay to me in that day, Lord, Lord haue we not by thy name propheſied? and by thy name caſt out deuills, and by thy name done many great workes? and I will profeſſe to them, I neuer knew you. Their booke and clergie cannot then ſaue them; it will be demanded of Paſtors at that day,

[r] Matth. 7. 22.

[c] Non quid legerint, sed quid egerint, non modò quid dixerint, sed quomodo vixerint; and therefore if thou beest an Apostle, labour to be like thy maister Christ, who did first doe, then teach, Acts 1. 1. Like Basil, of whom Gregorie Nazianzen, that he did thunder in his doctrine, and lighten in his conuersation.

But Iudas was not an ordinarie Preacher only, but one of the twelue. Now why Christ should chuse twelue rather then another number, [d] alij atq; alij aliud atq; aliud opinati, so many men, so many mindes; and yet all in this one point agree, that the number is mysticall, and therefore [u] some thinke Christ in this number alluded vnto the twelue sonnes of Iacob, Gen. 49. other to the twelue fountaines of water, which the children of Israel found in Elim, Num. 33. the twelue wels are the twelue Apostles, the seuentie Palme trees, are the seuentie Disciples, saith S. Hierome: other to the twelue pretious stones commanded to be set in Aarons garment, Exod. 28. other to the twelue Princes chosen out of the tribes of Israel, Iosua 3. other to the twelue stones Iosua tooke out of Iordan, and pitched in Gilgal, Iosua 4. [x] the twelue stones Iosuah put in Iordan were a type of the twelue Patriarkes, and the twelue stones he tooke out of Iordan prefigured the twelue Apostles: other resemblances as vulgar I omit, and come neerer the text.

It was an especiall fauour of Christ to number Iudas among the twelue, whom he had chosen out of the whole world to be his deareſt friends, and greateſt followers in his life, as also to be the trumpeters of his Gospell and glory after his death. It was such an honourable calling on earth, as that the Schoolemen are much perplexed about their precedence in heauen; so that the higher Iscariot was in place, the greater was his fall, the fouler his fault; it doth [y] aggrauate his villanie much, in that an Apostle was an apostata.

Secondly, note that in euery order some are out of order, in Abrahams house, Isaacks familie, Dauids court, and Christs owne familie, some euill, some deuill: if any should demand why Christ foreseeing the treason of Iudas chose him, and all this while suffered him being chosen? answer is made by [z] S. Ambrose, to teach vs patience, that when we bee betrayed euen of our owne followers and neareſt acquaintance, to beare it, and forbeare them moderately, blessing them that cursed vs, Matth. 5. 44.

Lastly, Iudas is described by his office, namely that he had the bag. Ioh. 12. 6. here begins all the mischiefe, Iudas being purser shuts himselfe into his purse, and becomes a slaue to a few peeces of siluer his owne prisoners; for as Ambrose speakes of the drunkard, ebriosus cum absorbet vinum, absorbetur a vino: so Gregorie the great of a couetous caitiue, tenendo diuitias, tenetur à diuitijs; & dum vult esse prædo fit præda, saith [a] Augustine; it was easier for a Camell to passe through the eye of a needle, then for Iudas (as it were coniured into the circle of his purse) to get out againe. He now thinkes of gold when he is awake, and dreames of gold, when he is a sleepe; he could not see so much as a box of oyntment, but he must needs be fingering of it, the smell of oyntment was sweet, but the smell of gaine more sweet; and therefore being exceedingly grieued, as a foolish [b] hunter for losing that prey which he neuer had, instantly to [c] recouer that damnage, went to the chiefe Priests, and sayd, what will ye giue me and I will deliuer him vnto you.

Here then we see that to be true, which because the Scripture saith it, cannot be false, that [d] couetousnesse is the root of all euill, the very [e] metropolis of all villanie; euery man hath one fault or other, but the couetous wretch hath seuen, he is an index or epitome, rather indeed a commentarie vpon all the deadly sinnes; of all Christs Apostles, he that bare the bag betrayed him.

In a mysticall sense, [f] whosoeuer esteemeth his goods more then his Gospell, is a Iudas; an heretike making [g] merchandize of the word, is a Iudas; a witnesse or a Iudge that sels the truth in place of iustice, can be no better then Iudas, for Christ is [h] truth; and is not (I pray you) Christ bought and sold, when Balaam is the Bishop, Iudas the Patron, Simon Magus the Priest? but the [i] Pope is the greateſt greateſt Iſcariot of all, worſe then Iudas in ſome reſpect, for he ſold Chriſt but once, and he thought that once too much, but Iudas of Rome ſelleth daily pardons and indulgences, cruces, altaria, Chriſtum, Chriſts croſſe, Chriſts blood Chriſts ſelfe, and yet is not a whit aſhamed of this holy merchandize, ſuch an horrible crime, that it made [k] Æneas Siluius (who after his Prieſthood was alway great of the Popedome) to whet notwithſtanding both tongue and pen againſt this Iſcarioticall legerdemaine.

If there were no chapmen, there would be no merchants; I come therefore now to thoſe who bought Chriſt, ſayd in my text to be chiefe Prieſts, and they were Chriſts chiefe enemies, able to doe wrong in regard of their might, and willing to doe wrong in regard of their malice, the which amplyfieth exceedingly Iudas ſinne, who cared not what became of his maſter, ſo he might haue a little mony, deliuering vp a moſt innocent Lambe into the iawes of rauening wolues. In the perſon of theſe Prieſts, obſerue that ſometime they make merchandize of Chriſt, which are promoted to the chiefe places in the Church, herein reſembling the Wolfe, who ſuckes the ſheepe when he is little, but being growne great deuoures him, as the Poet wittily:

Nutritus per me, tandem fera ſæuiet in me.

It is added in the Goſpell of S. Luke, chap. 22. 4. that Iudas communed alſo with the Captaines about this bargaine, the word is στρατηγοῖς, which Hierome tranſlates magiſtratus, the tranſlater of the Syriacke copie, magiſtri militiæ; Tremelius, principes exercitus templi, for they were a ſelect band to defend the Temple, præfecti Templo tuendo, ſaith [l] Eraſmus, or as [m] Theophylact, ouerſeers of the building, or cenſores, they that ſhould ſee good order kept in the Church, or thoſe whom the Romans appointed to keepe the ſeditious people in awe; whatſoeuer was their office in particular, it ſhould ſeeme they were defenders and protectors of the Church, and yet they be moſt ready to crucifie Chriſt the head of the Church.

I feare ſome Patrons of our Temples in England reſemble theſe guardians of Hieruſalem: if it be not ſo, Iudas is to blame for communing ſo much about the ſelling of Chriſt with them; if it be ſo, let them remember how theſe Captaines and high Prieſts were deſtroyed, and that ruine is the end of ſacriledge. The Eagle ſtole a peece of meat from the altar, but with the meat ſhe carried away a coale which ſet her neſt on fire. Read the Cronicles, examine hiſtories, and ſhew me but one Church-robbers heire that thriued vnto the third generation; for where there is gloria patri, without a ſicut in principio, there cannot be gloria filio nunc & in ſecula.

Buy the truth (ſaith [n] Salomon) but ſell it not; if theſe chapmen had bought Chriſt to poſſeſſe him as their owne, they ſhould haue made the beſt purchaſe that euer was in the world, to buy him who [o] bought them. But they bought Chriſt to ſell him againe, to mocke him, to buffet him, to ſpit on him, in fine to crucifie him; and ſo we that are true beleeuers haue gotten all the gaines and benefit of their bargaine. MATTH. 26. 40.

Tunc venit ad Discipulos, & reperit eos dormientes, & dicit Petro Itane non potuistis vnam horam vigilare mecum? aut vt est apud Marcum, cap. 14. vers. 37. Simon dormis?

VEtus querela est, omnium Apostolorum sensu, & orthodoxorum patrum consensu suffragante, multos olim è philosophis multa verè de Deo vero disputasse; Christi vero scholam vnicum salutaris scientiæ gymnasium in tanto veritatis lumine, nunquam (vt aiunt) á limine salutasse; Christus enim (authore [t] Paulo) Iudæis scandalum, Græcis stultitia, reliquis huius seculi sapientibus offendiculum: hunc magnum [x] Plato nescivit, eloquens Demosthenes ignorauit; nonnulla, fateor, in profundo latitantia, tanto [u] excellentes ingenio, flagrantes studio, abundantes otio fœliciter admodum inuestigarunt: latuit autem eos omnino ad cœlum via, latuisset & nos, nisi venisset ad nos: piger viator (inquit [x] Augustinus) venire nolebas ad viam, ad te venit ergo via, ecce rex tuus venit tibi, Zach. 9. 9. impotens viator ad viam tendere non valebas, [y] nec opibus, nec operibus, nec operâ: præuenit itaq; Christus, & errantem viatorem inuenit, ego sum via, veritas, & vita, vt sic ad illum per illum tandem aliquando perueniamus.

Mysterium hercle (Bernardo iudice) singulariter mirabile & mirabiliter singulare, velle Deum damnare iustum vt seruaret iniquum, mulctare medicum vt sanaret ægrotum, tradere filium vt liberet seruum: sol ad hoc paulo verecundior obscuratur, terra mouetur, velum templi finditur, ipsi mortui sine sensu sentiunt tamen ad hoc spectaculum, è sepulchris egrediendum, addo, sed è contextu, duræ scinduntur petræ, Petrus interim vel lapide magis ἀναίσθητος, dum totus hic actus tragicè perageretur, sine metu, forsitan etiam sine motu altè dormitaret. O mentes amentes, animi sine animo! solus enim compatitur, pro quo solo Dominus patitur, Simon dormis?

Queritur

Queritur hodie populus fortasse cleromastix, sicut anteà maiores conquesti sunt, & nati natorum & qui nascentur ab illis postea querentur, Anglicanos præsules basilicè nimiùm viuere, in altâ sede altum sapere, ambulare tantùm in magnis & pontificalibus, inferiores ministros negligere, nobilissimos proceres nullo in pretio habere, rudiores irridendos exponere, laicos omnes ceu lapides sub pedibus conculcare: sed quemadmodum cum [u] Anastasius Pontifex Romanus mercede sycophantas adolescentulos conduxisset, qui de stupro Macedonium accusarent, ille in iudicio subductâ tunicâ viribus se carere ostendit: ita cum accusantur in Anglia Prælati, quòd sint κατακυριεύτικ cum Macedonio; proh dolor; ostendere possunt se carere viribus. Quicquid id est quod male est, pia misericordia erit, & beata miseria vitijs eorum tribulari non implicari, mœrere non harere, dolore contrahi, non amore attrahi, sicut scripsit ad Sebastianum [x] Augustinus; monendi sunt vt saniores, obsecrandi vt seniores, ait Apostolus prioris ad Timotheum 5, vitia procul dubio manibus pedibusq; fugienda, sed nomina omni officiorum genere cohonestanda.

In Academia quid Petrus fecerit, ipse humilis inter Theologiæ discipulos taceo; dixerit alius forsitan eum esse clericum in libro, neque mentalem sed attramentalem scientiam assecutum: in schola compositos nollem ego in suggesto mouere fluctus: vtinam mei fratres controuersiæ toties determinatæ tandem essent terminatæ; melius est enim cum Petro dormire, quàm Christum cum Iuda prodere: gratior est Christo somnolentus Simon, quàm turbulentus Sinon: probatque Cepham desidiosum magis quàm Iscariotem insidiosum discipulum decipulum; nam vt est in prouerbio, qui benè dormit nil malè cogitat, sed vt ingulent homines surgunt in nocte latrones.

The Epistle. Coloss. 3. 1.

If ye be risen againe with Christ, seeke those things which are aboue, &c.

THis Epistle consists of Aduertisements, and Argumentes enforcing the same.

Aduertiſements { Exhortatiue; ſeeke thoſe things which are aboue; ſet your affection on heauenly things. Dehortatiue; not on earthly things.

Arguments taken from our { Preſent eſtate of grace; We are riſen againe with Chriſt: Ergo we muſt aſcend and ſeeke the things aboue. Dead vnto the world: Ergo, not minde the things on earth. Future eſtate of glory: whenſoeuer Chriſt (which is our life) ſhall ſhew himſelfe, then ſhall ye alſo appeare with him in glory but the wrath of God commeth vpon the children of vnbeleefe, both in this world, and in that to come: for Chriſt ſhall appeare to reward the godly, to puniſh the reprobate to iudge all.

S. Paul doth vſe two words here, ζητεῖν and φρονεῖν, to ſeeke and to ſauour, and howſoeuer φρονεῖν in the Text be laſt, [x] yet it is in nature firſt; for wee muſt firſt know, then follow the things aboue; firſt diſcerne, then deſire them; ignoti nulla cupido, quoth the Poet, vncouth vnkiſſed; ergo, we muſt firſt looke before we can like; [y] firſt ſee with faith in our vnderſtanding, then ſeeke with deuotion in our affection. And theſe two muſt goe [z] togither ioyntly, becauſe ſeeking without ſeeing is blinde, and ſeeing without ſeeking lame: God is to be ſerued with our whole heart, with all our wit, with all our will.

Here then is a notable leſſon, as well for ignorant, as negligent people. For ignorant, there is no pleaſure ſo ſweet to the minde as knowledge, no knowledge ſo ſweet as that of religion, no point of religion ſo ſweet as to ſauour the things aboue, [a] for it is eternall life to know God, and whom he hath ſent, Ieſus Chriſt.

[a] Iohn 17. 3.

[b] Syneſius is of opinion, that a Philoſopher excells an ordinarie man, as much as an ordinarie man doth a beaſt; but euery ſchollar in Chriſts Vniuerſitie doth excell a Philoſopher, as much as a Philoſopher doth a dolt. Humane learning is a ruſh candle, ſaith [c] Clement Alexandrinus, but the Goſpell is as the glorious Sunne in her brightneſſe, illuminating all ſuch as ſit in darkeneſſe and in the ſhadow of death. If it were not for hope of things aboue, Chriſtians [d] of all men were moſt miſerable: now no man entreth into heauen, but [e] he that doth the will of God; and no man can doe the will of God, except he [f] know the will of God; eſteeme then all things as loſſe [g] for the ſurpaſſing knowledge of Chriſt Ieſus our Lord. Read the Bible, for it is his will; frequent the Temple, for it is his houſe; come to the communion often, for it is his Mandie, ſuffer the words of exhortation and doctrine, for the Goſpell is the power of God vnto ſaluation Vſe all good meanes for knowledge, that you may ſet your mindes on heauenly things, and then for practiſe, that ye may ſeeke the things aboue. For it is an inſtruction for idle perſons alſo, being more curious in finding, then carefull in following heauenly things. In a ſchollar the Mathematikes are commended eſpecially, becauſe they ſtand vpon infallible demonſtration; and ſo it is in Gods Academie, the beſt learned make demonſtration; as [h] ſhew me thy faith out of thy workes, there is a demonſtration; [i] let your light ſo ſhine before men, there is another demonſtration. If your minds are ſet on heauenly things and not on earthly, then ſeeke the things aboue, place thy religion [k] non in lectione, ſed in dilectione, not in the braine or brow, but in godly care and heauenly carriage. Seeke the things aboue [l] by liuing according to the lawes of Hieruſalem aboue. For albeit we dwell on earth, our Burgeſſe-ſhip is in heauen, Phil. 3. 20. Earth is patria loci, but heauen patria iuris, as Iriſhmen are dwellers in Ireland, but Denizons of England, gouerned by the ſtatutes of this kingdome; ſo we dwell in houſes of [m] clay, whoſe foundation is in the duſt, but we ſubmit our ſelues vnto the lawes of that Citie, which is [n] aboue; yea we dwell in heauen partly, for [o] amator mortuus eſt in proprio corpore, viuus in alieno, the louer is dead in himſelfe, and liues in another, [p] vbi ſum ibi non ſum, vbi non ſum ibi animus. As [q] Origen of Mary Magdalen, when ſhe came to the ſepulchre and ſaw Chriſt taken away, Maria ibi non erat, vbi erat, quia

tota ibi erat vbi magister erat. [r] As the Hart desireth the water brooke, so longed her heart after Christ; and so it is with vs all, [s] animus velut pondere, vnnote fertur, quocunq; fertur; our minde is where our pleasure is, our heart is where our treasure is; if then our affections be set on Christ, we are dead in our selues and [t] liue in him, and liuing in him, our hearts are with him, euen in the place where he sitteth at the right hand of God.

If any shall aske what things are aboue, Saint Paul answers in 1 Cor. 2. 9. such things as eye hath not seene, and eare hath not heard and heart not vnderstood; and in 2. Cor. 12. 4. mysteries ineffable; [u] not that Paul would haue men here curious in searching that they cannot finde; for so the saying is true, quæ supra nos, nihil ad nos, things aboue vs, appertaine not to vs: but his meaning is that we should learne by the booke of God that which is reuealed of God, and so fidendo, not videndo, by faith and hope grounded vpon the rocke of Gods holy word, not vpon the sands of humane wit; first vnderstand, then vndertake to seeke the things aboue; to seeke though as yet we cannot throughly see; this is φρονεῖν, but in audacious curiositie to measure euery foote in hell, and dispose of euery cabinet and chamber in heauen, ὑπερφρονεῖν, as Paul [x] elsewhere, to know more then is meet to know.

Not on earthly things.] [y] Some referre this to the traditions of men, and ceremonies of the Law mentioned in the former chapter; all those beggerly rudiments were but shadowes of things to come, the body is in Christ; and therefore preferre the kernell before the shell, set your affection on heauenly things, and not on earthly.

[z] Other vnderstand by things earthly, the things of the world, that three-headed [a] Geryon, honor, riches, pleasure; so Paul in the words immediately following expounds himselfe, mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleannesse, &c. we may set our eyes and hands on the things of this world, but not our heart, as [a] Dauid by precept. If riches encrease nolite cor apponere; set not your heart vpon them; and the Christians in the Primitiue Church by practise, who sold their possessions and layd downe the money at the Apostles feet, Act. 4 35. ad pedes, docens calcandam esse pecuniam, at their feet not at their heart, to signifie, saith [b] Hierome, that we must not make them our [c] Master, much lesse our [d] Maker, but vse them as our seruants, and as it were creatures, hauing all things and yet possessing nothing, our affections must not be set, at least not setled on trash below.

As God sayd to Abraham, [e] exi de terra tua, get thee out of thy land, and from thy kindred vnto the country that I will shew thee: so likewise doth hee speake to the [f] soule of man in the 45. Psalme, Hearken, O daughter, and consider, encline thine eare, forget also thine owne people, and thy fathers house. Socrates being asked what country-man he was, answered, a citizen of the world; but a Christian, saith [g] Æneas Siluius, must answer otherwise, that he is a burgesse of heauen; for albeit man is called earth thrice with one breath, ô terra, terra, terra! that is, as [i] Bernard construeth it, earth by procreation, earth by sustentation, earth by corruption, yet in regard of a better inheritance purchased for vs in heauen by Christ, and in respect of our faith, hope, loue, faith apprehending, hope assuring, loue desiring those things aboue, we are not [k] habitatores terræ, but accolæ, saith Ambrose, [l] soiourners and inmates for a time, not permanent dwellers Heb. 13. 14.

This world is the land wherein we were borne, wherein we were bred, but we must forget our fathers house, forsake this home-stall, and seeke for another in the spirituall Canaan, one to come in the Celestiall Hierusalem aboue, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. Aboue is a place opposite to this earth, it is heauen of heauens, Ephes. 4 10. [m] for the heauen must containe him, vntill he come to iudge the quicke and the dead. How then is Christs body with all dimensions in the blessed Eucharist? it sits at the right hand of God in heauen, and therefore doth not descend downe to vs, but we must ascend vp to it, according to that of the old Church, and as yet retained in the Popish Missall, Sursum corda lift vp your hearts, set your affections on things aboue, not on things below; flie with the wings of faith and deuotion as Eagles into heauen, where the body of Christ sitteth at the right hand of the Father: and this I take to be the true reason, why the Church of England hath allotted this Scripture for Easter day, that comming to the Lords table, we may not only gaze vpon the visible signe, but to set our affections on things aboue, that we may be made partakers of inuisible grace. See before Sursum corda, Zanchius in loc. Caluin. institut. lib. 4. cap. 17. §. 36. Church hom. concerning the worthy receiuing of the Sacrament. part. 1. *Beza antithesm. Mortifie your earthly members, fornication vncleanesse. [n] The whole corrupt masse of wickednesse is the body of sinne, fornication, vncleanesse, vnnaturall lust, euill concupiscence, couetousnesse, members of this body; called our, because [o] perditio tua ex te Israel, [p] all sinnes in vs are from vs: omnia mea mala purè mala sunt & mea, saith Hugo the Cardinall: and earthly: [q] for that they raigne in men earthly minded, and hinder our heauenly conuersation, and therefore [r] such hands are to be cut off, and such eyes ought to be pulled out. It is not sayd occidite, but mortificate; we must not destroy nature, by casting our selues out of the world, but mortifie sinne by casting the world out of vs; [t] Hæc membra vestra quæ non ad naturam hominis, sed ad corpus peccati pertinent, mortificate, scilicet non membra naturæ vestræ, quæ Deus creauit, sed membra corporis peccati, quæ vos fecistis, extinguite, ne viuant in vobis amplius.

Hitherto concerning aduertisements, I proceed to the powerfull arguments enforcing the same, the first is taken from the word resurrection.

If ye be risen againe, &c.] A [t] new life doth require new manners, if then yee be risen from the death of sinne to the life of grace, ye must walke with [u] new tongues, and walke in new [x] waies, as being new [y] creatures in Christ [z] created vnto good workes. He then that increaseth in faith, and groweth in grace, and sprouteth in heauenly meditations higher and higher, is assuredly risen againe; but he that walketh in his old waies, and groweth from bad to worse, growing euery day downward, is still dead and buried in the Golgotha of the world: a couetous muck-worme that digges in the earth, as an hogge, and then entombes himselfe like a mole, cannot be sayd to be risen againe, for cumulus is tumulus, his minde is shut in his chest, as a dead bodie buried in a Coffin; a voluptuous man is not risen againe, for he that liueth in pleasure is [a] dead although he liue. The proud man hath his thoughts aboue, and yet not risen againe, the top of his ambition is not heauenly, but earthly, risen [b] against Christ, not risen with Christ.

The [d] dipping in holy baptisme hath three parts, the putting into the water, the continuance in the water, and the comming out of the water: the putting into the water doth ratifie the mortification of sinne by the power of Christs death, as Paul, Rom. 6. 3. Know yee not that all we which haue beene baptized into Iesus Christ, haue beene baptized into his death, and that our old Man is crucified with him? The continuance in the water notes the buriall of sinne, to wit, a continuall increase of mortification by the power of Christs death and buriall, Rom. 6. 4. The comming out of the water [e] figureth our spirituall resurrection and viuification to newnesse of life by the power of Christs resurrection, [f] that like as Christ was raised vp from the dead by the glory of the Father, euen so wee should walke in newnesse of life,

[e] Theophylact. in loc.
[f] Rom. 6. 4. and Colos. 2. 12.

We promised in our baptisme, to forsake the vaine pompe & glory of the world with all couetous desires of the same, so that if we set our affections on earthly things, and not on the things aboue; what are we but Fœdifragi, such as haue broken our word and vow to God? Secondly Gods elect are risen againe with Christ effectually; for as the Burgesse of a towne in the Parliament house beareth

the

the person of a whole Towne, and what he saith, the whole Towne saith, and and whatsoeuer is done to him, is also done to all the Towne: so [g] Christ vpon the Crosse stood in our place, and bare our person, and whatsoeuer he suffered we suffered, and when he died all the faithfull died in him, and as he is risen againe, so the faithfull are risen in him. It is therefore meet the members should follow the head, seeking the things aboue, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. I conclude this argument in the words of [h] Gorran, Status vigoris quia surreximus, locus honoris quia sursum, affectus amoris quia vbi Christus est, ergo status potest, locus prodest, amor adest.

Ye are dead [i] to the world, but aliue to God through heauenly conuersation, according to that of [k] Paulinus:

Viue, precor, sed viue Deo, nam viuere mundo Mortis opus, vita est viuere vita Deo.
[l] Viue Deo gratus, toto mundo tumulatus,
Crimine mundatus, semper transire paratus.

Your life is hid with Christ in God } Naturall. Spirituall. Eternall.
This may be construed of our life,

This mortall is so full of miseries and mischiefes, as that the [m] Thrasians vsed to lament at the birth, and reioyce at the buriall of their freinds; [n] an non hæc regio mortuorum, vbi vmbra mortis, vbi porta mortis, vbi corpus est mortis: our diseases and disasters are such, as that euen our naturall life many times is hid, but Christ is the [o] resurrection and the life, the great Physitian able to [p] wound and make whole whom he list.

The life spirituall is hid in God much more; [q] for as trees in stormy winter, so good men in tempests and anguish of soule seeme to be dead, not only to the world, but euen to themselues.

[r] Eutychus is an embleme of a Christian in temptation, he fell from an high loft and was taken vp dead, and so reputed of all that were present, but Paul laid himselfe vpon him, and embraced him, and found life in him, and set him on his legs againe; so though a man fall high from heauenly grace, to the very pit of hell if it were possible, yet he may be raised againe by some skillfull and painfull Paul applying the comforts of the Gospell, and shewing that his life is not altogether extinguished, but hid only with Christ in God.

Lastly, this may be well expounded of our eternall life; for albeit we be now the sonnes of God, [s] yet it doth not appeare what we shall be, that is hid in Christ with God. [t] The pearle cannot be found vntill the shell of the fish be broken; our glory cannot be seene, ouershadowed with this mortality; but whensoeuer Christ which is our life shall shew himselfe, then shall we also appeare with him in glory. Come Lord Iesu, come quickly. Amen.

The Gospell. IOHN. 20. 1. vnto X. 11

The first day of the Sabbaths came Marie Magdalen early (when it was yet darke) vnto the Sepulchre. &c.

IN this Gospell is commended vnto vs the dutifull and deuout behauiour of a religious woman called Marie Magdalen, and of two louing disciples Peter and Iohn, toward their late deceased Lord Iesus Christ.

The deuotion of Marie Magdalen is seene, { 1. In comming to the Sepulchre. 2. In communicating what shee saw at the Sepulchre.

The deuotion of Peter and Iohn in { Running to / Going into } the Sepulchre.

All which duties of all parties as they were performed in good haste so they proceeded out of a good heart, being earnest as early.

The

The first day of the Sabbaths] [a] All the weeke-dayes are called Sabbaths in honour of the seuenth which is the Sabbath, as Luke 18. 12. Νηστεύω δὶς τοῦ σαββάτου, that is, I fast twice in the weeke; so Sabbath is vsed, Act. 20. 7. and 1. Cor. 16. 2. the first day then of the Sabbath is the first day of the weeke; the which according to the Iewes computation is our Sunday, so called in memoriall of our Sauiours blessed resurrection, who being the [x] Sunne of righteousnesse arose this day, [y] non ab oriente sed ab occasu, not from his rising, but from his fall, from death, hell, graue; the Iew gaue God the last, but the Christian honours him better with the first day of the weeke.

It is obiected out of Matth. 28. 1. that Marie came not to the Sepulchre in the beginning of the morning on Sunday, but rather at euening on Saturday. For the reconciling of the foure Euangelists in this point, I referre the Reader to S. August. de consensu Euangelist. lib. 3. cap. 24. Aquin. part. 3. quæst. 53. art. 2. Baron. annal. tom. 1. fol. 196, 197. Iansen. concord. cap. 145. Marlorat. Maldonat. English Gloss. in Matth. 28.

We must vse the Scriptures as [z] Elisha did the Shunamites childe, lay mouth to mouth, and eyes to eyes, and hands to hands; if we meet with an hard place, we must compare text with text, Euangelist with Euangelist, translation with translation, and meditate thereon day and night vntill we finde the truth, and as it were, put spirit into the dead letter.

I must intreat you therefore first to conferre Matthew with Moses; euening, Gen. 15. doth signifie the whole night, all the time from the Sunne setting vntill the Sunne rising, the Euening and the Morning were the first day. So that whereas Matthew reports Mary came to the sepulchre in the Euening of the Sabbath, his meaning was not that shee came on Saturday night, but on Sunday morning, as his words import, In the euening, when the first day of the weeke began to dawne, that is, as our Euangelist, early when it was yet darke.

2. The text originall is not ὀψὲ δὲ σαββάτων, but ὀψὲ δὲ σαββάτῳ, and that as [a] Gregorie Nyssen a Grecian borne construeth it, is transacto Sabbatho, when the Sabbath was ended as Beza translates, extremo Sabbatho, in the latter end of the Sabbath: this exposition is allowed of [b] Hierome, [c] Ambrose, Musculus: and lest we should doubt of it, auowed by S. Marke, chap. 16. 1. When the Sabbath day was past, Marie Magdalen &c.

3. For the better concordance betweene Iohn and Matthew, note the difference betweene the Iewes and Romans in their computation. The Iewes accounted the naturall day from euening vnto euening, as it is euident, Luke 23. 54. where it is sayd that the Sabbath drew on, when Christ was buried, but he was entombed on Friday, so that according to their account, when it was darke on Friday, the Sabbath on Saturday began; but the Romans did reckon the naturall day from the morning vnto morning, [d] ab ortu solis ad sequentem ortum If our Euangelist follow the Iewes, and [e] Matthew the Romans in their account distingue tempora, & conuenient omnia.

So that now the text is cleare, Mary Magdalen when the Sabbath was ended, on the first day of the weeke came to visit Christs sepulchre: [f] she knew very well where Ioseph had layd his precious bodie, but shee came not with her spices and oyntments vntill the Sabbath was past: in which [g] Interpreters haue noted her zeale to be well ordered and discreet, first she did serue God, and then obserue men, first praise the liuing Lord according to law, then visit her dead Lord according to loue.

Many men in our age performe lesse necessarie duties at such houres of the Sabbath as they should worship God in his holy Temple. Nay some ruffians are so prophane, that they thinke Easter day, wherein they were made partakers of Christs heauenly Supper, to be the most conuenient time for gosslipping and drunkennesse. Assuredly the Christians in Prester Iohn his country shall rise vp against vs in the last day, [h] who may not after the receiuing of the Sacrament vnder paine of grieuous punishment, so much as once spit vntill the going downe downe of the Sunne: whereas vnruly rake-shames in more ciuill Countries, endued with a greater portion of knowledge, drowne Christ at the Tauerne, whom they receiued in the Temple.

Early] Marie did seeke Christ in the first day of the weeke, and first houre of the day, but many deferre to seeke the Lord vntill the last weeke of their life, the last day of the weeke, the last houre of the day, the last minute of the houre. It is an exorbitant course while the ship is sound, the tackling sure, the Pilot well, the Sailers strong, the gale fauourable, the sea calme, to lye idle at rode, carding dicing, drinking, burning the seasonable weather, and when the ship leaked, the Pilot sicke, the Mariners faint, the stormes boysterous, and the sea a turmoile of outragious surges, to lanch forth and hoist vp saile for a voyage into farre Countries; and yet such is the skill of euening repenters, who though in the morning of youth, and soundnesse of health, and perfect vse of reason, they cannot resolue to weigh the anchor and cut the cable that with-holds them from seeking of Christ; neuertheless they feed themselues with a strong perswasion, that when their wits are distracted, their senses astonied, all the powers of the minde and parts of the bodie distempered; then forsooth they thinke suddenly to become Saints at their death, howsoeuer they demeaned themselues as deuils all their life.

Let vs awake from sinne with Dauid [i] early, rise with [k] Samuel early, with [l] Abraham send away Hagar early, with [m] Christ and his audience come to the Church early, seeking the Lord with this holy woman early.

When it was yet darke] S. Iohn here doth seeme to contradict S. Marke, reporting that Marie Magdalen came to the Sepulchre when the sunne was rising. For the reconciling of these places, [n] Ambrose is of opinion that diuers women came at diuers times. [o] Hierome and [p] other hold that the women came foure times, according to the different reports of the foure Euangelists; namely, that first they came in the euening as Matthew chap. 28. secondly, when it was darke, as Iohn here: thirdly, in the morning early, as Luke chap. 24. fourthly, when the sunne was rising, as Marke chap. 16.

But the most and best Expositors haue determined that these deuout women came but once, and that in the morning early, when it was darke they began to set out of their lodging, but they [q] continued in their iourney, and abode about the tombe till it was [r] twilight, and saw the stone taken away from the Sepulchre.

As the former clause shewed Magdalens good haste, so this her good heart being (as Origen speakes) mulier non mulier, a woman endued with manly courage and carriage: she might haue feared that her-selfe and her company could not remoue the tombe-stone; or if they could, that the souldiers, who guarded the place, would not haue suffered it; or if they would haue beene content, it was vncomfortable for a sillie woman in the night to view the dead corps of so louing a friend. Yet Magdalen a woman, a timorous woman, accompanied onely with some few of her owne sexe, as S. Marke reports; as our Euangelist, iourneying alone, came to the graue with spices and sweet oyntments, when it was darke. O the riches of Gods infinite mercy! that so foule a sinner should proue so faire a Saint; that Magdalen, sometime an harlot, should precede in this good office Marie the mother of Christ alwaies a virgin; that a woman in this point of valour and vertue should be more forward than Peter the most louing Disciple to Christ, and Iohn the best beloued of Christ. O the deepnesse of the riches, both of the wisdome and knowledge of God! how vnsearchable are his judgments, and his waies past finding out!

And saw the stone taken away from the graue] It is recorded by [s] Matthew, that Ioseph of Arimathea tooke the bodie of Iesus, and wrapped it in a cleane linnen cloth, and put it in a new tomb which he had hewen out in a rocke, and rolled a great stone to the doore of the Sepulchre, and departed. All which vndoubtedly Magdalen well obserued as shee was sitting against the graue, it might therefore perplex her much in this holy businesse, how she should [t] roll away the tombe-stone, and so purchase

Purchase a sight of her best beloued Master. But Almighty God, who giueth his Angels [u] charge ouer his children, that they hurt not their feet against a stone, sent a messenger from [x] heauen to roll backe that huge stone for her. Euen as a louing father, when he carrieth his little childe to a towne, will suffer him to walke in the plaine and faire way, but when he comes vnto slipperie pathes, he takes him by the hand, and in dirtie passages beares him in his armes, and when he comes to a stile lifts him ouer easily; so God our heauenly Father vseth vs his deare children; if we shall endeuour to goe so farre as we may, so fast as we can in the plaine way to the celestiall Hierusalem, he will assist vs in dangers, and helpe vs ouer stiles, he will remoue blocks and hindrances in our passage, the great stone parting Christ and vs, euen while we least thinke of it, shall be rolled away.

Againe, in that Marie saw the stone taken away, note that Christ rose the first day of the Sabbaths early: to shew that he was very God, he rose againe: to shew that he was very man, he rose againe the third day. That a liue man should raise a dead man, as [y] Peter did Tabitha, was wonderfull: that a dead man should raise another dead man, as the bones of [z] Elisha did the Moabite, was more wonderfull; but that a dead man should raise himselfe, as Christ on this day, was most wonderfull. Assuredly none could doe this but he who sayd, [a] I am the resurrection and the life: [b] Power I haue to lay downe my life, and power to take it againe.

But his resurrection was deferred vntill the third day, to demonstrate that he was very man; [c] for if he should haue Presently risen, his death would haue been thought no true death, and so by consequence his resurrection no true resurrection. As then it was often told by himselfe, and foretold by other, he rose the third day, and that as it is in the text, early: for as he was crucified adueſperascente iam die, when the Sunne was going to bed, to signifie that by his death hee would destroy the workes of darkenesse, & tenebras culpæ & pœnæ, both the inward darkenesse of sinne, and outward darkenesse of hell, as [d] Aquine wittily; so he rose when the Sunne began to shine, that hauing conquered the kingdome of darkenesse, he might baing vs vnto light and life euerlasting. Then she ranne, and came to Simon Peter, and to the other Disciple whom Iesus loued, and sayd, They haue taken away the Lord out of the graue.] As the people said, [g] Is Saul among the Prophets? Euen so may we wonder at this, and say, Is Magdalen among the preachers? a tutor of those great Doctors, who were to teach all the world; [*] Apostolorum Apostola? the Apostles Apostle? Yes surely, Magdalen made the first Sermon that euer was of Christs resurrection, and this her fact had some reference to Eues fault; [h] a woman was the first messenger of this our ioy, because a woman was the first minister of that our sorrow.

We cannot tell where they haue layd him] As Magdalen is a patterne of much vertue, sparing neither paine nor cost in visiting our Sauiours Sepulchre; so likewise a president of some weakenesse, in that she could not finde Christ at this time, though she sought him earnestly and early, because she did erre in two circumstances, as the glorious Angels intimate, Luke 24. 6. first in her quando, surrexit; then in her vbi, non est hic. Let vs therfore seeke the Lord [i] when he may be found, and where he may be found. There is a time wherein he may be found, but if we neglect it, there shall be [k] no more time. The wicked old world had a time to seeke the Lord while Noe preached: Sodome had a time while Lot visited: Hierusalem had a time while Christ conuersed in her: Dines had his time while Lazarus lay at his gate: Iudas had his time while Christ reproued him. If the filthy Sodomites, if the rich Glutton, if treacherous Iudas, if proud Pharao were now aliue; what would they doe, what would they not doe to seeke the Lord while he may be found, and to call vpon him when he is neere? Nothing would be so much esteemed as a trice of time, which heretofore by dayes, weekes, moneths, yeers, was lauishly mis-pent. Againe, we must seeke Christ in the right vbi, Christ is not to be found in the furrowes of earth, in hell or or graue: we muſt not ſeeke a dead Chriſt, but a liuing Chriſt, in his workes, in his word, in his Sacraments, in his houſe, there we ſhall be ſure to finde him in the midſt of them that [l] preach, in the midſt of them that [m] pray.

They ranne both togither.] [n] In like zeale to Chriſt, and loue one to other, and yet each out-ſtripped other, Iohn in going to, Peter in going into the Sepulchre. Iohn doth [o] reſemble the contemplatiue, Peter the practiue. The contemplatiue perſon is more nimble in his wit, the practiue more quicke at his worke: Iohn did runne faſter, but Peter did goe ſurer; or, as [p] Rupertus, Iohn did figure the Iewes, Peter the Gentiles. The Iewes came to Chriſt ſooner, yet the Gentiles ouertaking them were the founder: I haue not found (ſaith he that knew beſt) ſo much faith in Iſrael, Matth. 8. 10.

When he had ſtouped downe he ſaw the linnen clothes] [q] None but humble men and meeke can ſee theſe myſteries. He that will not ſtoope at Chriſts graue ſhall neuer be made partaker of his death and reſurrection. He went not in] [r] Aut his contentus, aut tremore detentus. But Peter following him went into the Sepulchre, and ſaw the linnen clothes lying, and the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linnen clothes, but wrapped togither in a place by it ſelfe] As the followers and friends of Chriſt, ſo the cruell enemies and foes of Chriſt became preachers of his glorious reſurrection, as [s] Caluin truly, vel tacendo vel mentiendo. Some by ſilence did ſeeme to confeſſe it, other by reporting an incredible tale did more ſtrongly confirme it. The grand lie firſt inuented by the Rulers, and after broached by the ſouldiers, impudently to diſgrace the truth of our Sauiours reſurrection (as S. [t] Matthew reports) is, that the Diſciples came by night and ſtole him away while we ſlept. [u] O mali! o peſſimi! aut vigilabatis, & cuſtodire debuiſtis; aut dormiebatis, & quid factum ſit neſcitis: O ſenſeleſſe vntruth, either you were aſleepe or awake; if aſleepe, how did ye know that his Diſciples had taken him away by night? if awake why did yee not guard the tombe? yee could not be vnable, for [x] the watch was ſtrong; yee will not, I am ſure, be thought vnwilling for then either you were cowards, or traitors, or both; in not vſing your hands, arrant cowards; in not imploying your tongues in raiſing the towne to ſurpriſe the body, rancke trayters.

Againe, if theeues had ſtollen him away by night, [y] they would not haue left the fine linnen clothes in the graue, neither could they gaine ſo much leyſure as to looſe the feet, vnbinde the head and diſrobe the body, leauing the napkin that was about his head in a place by it ſelfe.

The Goſpell and Epiſtle concord in euery point: for if Chriſt be riſen and not here, then Mary Magdalen muſt not ſet her affections on things earthly, but ſeeke the things aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God.

The Epiſtle. 1. Iohn. 5. 4. to v. 13

All that is borne of God ouercommeth the world, &c.

VVHerein obſerue
1. A propoſition: All that is borne of God ouercommeth the world.
2. An expoſition how the regenerate man is a conqueror of his enemies, and that is by faith apprehending Chriſt who doth ouercome: this is the victorie that ouercommeth the world euen our faith:

And this faith is ſealed vntovs by the teſtimoniall of three witneſſes in
- Heauen, the Father, Sonne, Holy Ghoſt.
- Earth, The Spirit. Water, Bloud.

If

If then we receiue the witnesse of men, which often lie, let vs embrace the witnesse of God, which is greater, euen truth it selfe, for he that doth not beleeue, makes God a lyer, but he that beleeueth, hath eternall life.

All that is borne] S. Iohn doth not vse the masculine gender, he that is borne, nor the feminine, she that is borne, but the neuter, all that is borne; [z] becausе there is in our spirituall generation no distinction of sex: Gal. 3. 28. There is neither male nor female, but ye are all one in Christ Iesus; and this (as [a] Rupertus obserued) is of greater emphasis, all that is borne of God, of whatsoeuer sex, countrie, condition, ouercommeth the world.

Not all that is borne, but all that is borne of God: we are borne the sonnes of wrath, and seruants to the world, but new borne to be conquerors of earth and heires of heauen; I say borne [b] not of bloud, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God: [c] Our conception is by the seed of his word, through the powerfull operation of his holy Spirit: our [d] birth is our baptisme; the Church is our nurse; the breasts all of vs sucke, the two Testaments; our meate, the pure milke thereof; our growth, increase of grace, riches, heauenly treasures; end, euerlasting life.

There is a prouerbe in Italie, that it were good for men to be borne wise, or twice; now we can [e] not be borne spiritually wise, and therefore we must be borne twice; first borne that we may come into the world, then againe borne that we may ouercome the world.

Ouercommeth] In the present, for albeit in other battells euery souldier must stand to the fortune of the warres, aut sors, aut mors: [f] yet in our spirituall fight, a Christian may conquer euen while he doth march. [g] I write vnto you young men, because yee haue ouercome the wicked; we triumph when we fight, pugna tantùm, & certa victoria: not becausе the battell is ended; (for we must [h] wrestle still against flesh and bloud, against principalities and powers, as we promised in our Baptisme, we must manfully fight vnder Christs banner against sinne, the world, and the deuill, and so continue Christs faithfull souldiers vnto our liues end) but all that is borne of God ouercommeth the world, becausе our grand-Captaine Christ hath already wonne the field, and obtained victorie for vs, [i] ego vici mundum, in the world ye shall haue affliction, but be of good comfort, I haue ouercome the world.

Yet, [k] let not him that girdeth his harnesse, boast himselfe, as he that putteth it off. For when [l] Agamemnon said, victor timere quid potest? answer was made by [m] Cassandra, quod non timet; we may not be secure, but serue God in [m] feare, though we fight in faith; as our Captaine, [n] watch and pray, lest your [o] aduersarie deuoure you, continue, [p] fighting a good fight, hauing faith and a good conscience.

The world is ouercome two waies, as [q] Aquin pretily, but not pithily, abijciendo, [r] subyciendo, by forsaking it in a contemplatiue course, by subduing it in an actiue; but herein Aquine speakes like a Frier, [r] Ergo a lyer: I therefore correct his glosse, saying; that we need not abijcere, but onely subijcere, not vtterly leaue, but only not loue the world, as S. Iohn in this [s] Epistle, being in the world, but yet not [t] of the world; riches and honour be good seruants, but bad masters, as [v] Augustine sweetly: they must be subdita non prædita, sequentia non ducentia: he that greedily followeth and hunteth after the world, is ouercome of the world, [x] dum vult esse prædo fit præda, but he that suffers onely the world to follow him, vsing it as [y] Aristippus did Lais, ouercomes the world, in being greater then the world.

A meere contemplatiue Monke, in shunning some occasions of euill, flieth in a manner all occasions of doing good, against the rules of nature and Scripture; for the one sheweth a man is not borne for himselfe; the other, that a Christian ought to be seruant vnto all, as Saint Paul expressly, Galath. 5. 13. By loue serue one another, he that is borne of God ouercomes the world in being a new man, not in being no man: as a man, he must be like [z] Martha, cumbred with much businesse;

The martiall termes, ouercome and victorie, shew that our life is a continuall [e] warfare vpon earth; all that are borne, fight; all that are borne of God, ouercome: the [f] serpent doth somtime bruise our heele, and so fall vs, and happily foile vs, but Christ our Generall hath broken his head, by whose power and victorie we shall tread downe Satan vnder our feet: a Christian therefore must put on the resolution of King Alfred, of whom our [g] Chronicle:

And this is the victorie] [h] Faith is the meanes of this victorie: for albeit opera bona vincunt executiuè, sola tamen fides imperatiuè, saith [i] Caietan, in ouercomming the world, good workes as vnderling souldiers execute something, but faith vnder Christ commands all as a Captaine: yea faith is head and hand too, striking the conquering stroke with the sword of the Spirit.

[h] Sarcerius in loc.

In our spirituall warfare we fight against foure enemies especially, the world, the flesh, the deuill, and death.

All the worlds armie consists of [k] two wings: { Aduersitie on the left hand. / Prosperitie on the right.

[k] Aquin in loc.

He that beleeueth in Christ ouercommeth both, as Christ, who liuing in the world renounced prosperity, and endured aduersitie; [l] Omnia bona terrena contempsit, vt contemnenda monstraret, & omnia terrena mala sustinuit, quæ sustinenda præcipiebat, vt neque in illis quæreretur fœlicitas, neque in istis timeretur infœlicitas. A Christian then that followeth our Sauiours example remembers in want his [m] treasure in heauen, in dearth his conscience is a [n] continuall feast, in banishment he lookes for [o] another citie to come, [p] whose builder and maker is God; in all these things a Christian is a victor, yea more then a conquerour Rom, 8. 37.

As for enticing prosperitie, that vsually doth assault vs more dangerously then affliction. As [q] Augustine notes, Homo victus in Paradiso, victor in stercore. Iob was a conquerour on a dunghill, whereas Adam was ouercome by Satan in Paradise, and the Church saith, [r] Ecce in pace amaritudo mea amarissima, for so the vulgar latine, in my happinesse my griefe was most bitter, as [s] Bernard expounds it; Amara priùs in nece martyrum, amarior post in conflictu hæreticorum, amarissima nunc in moribus domesticorum: At the first she had griefe in the death of her martyrs; afterward greater griefe in her conflict with heretikes; in processe of time being in peace, she was grieued most of all in the loosenesse of her children, and so the world gained of the Church more by prosperitie then aduersitie; yet he that is borne of God ouercommeth all this wing: [t] By faith Moses, when he was come to age, refused to be called the sonne of Pharaohs daughter, and chose rather to suffer aduersitie with the people of God, then to enioy the pleasures of sinne for a season.

The flesh is not a forren foe, but an homebred enemie fighting not as a tall souldier, but as a craftie traytor rebelling against the spirit, Dalila in Sampsons bosome, Iudas in Christs company: like the [u] moth in a garment, it is bred in vs and daily cherished of vs, and yet it frets and destroyeth vs.

Sordet, tumescit, liquitur, fœtet, dolet,

[x] Prudentius peristephan. hym. 10.

Yet he that is borne of God [y] abstaineth from fleshly lust and sinneth not, as our Apostle proues in this [z] epistle. See the Gospell, Dom. 15. post Trinit.

The deuill is our arch-enem e, being indeed the chiefe commander of all forces against vs, euen the [a] prince of darkenesse, a watchfull and a wrathfull enemie yet he that hath the shield of faith is able to quench all his fierie darts, Ephes. 6. 16. His greatest canon shot against vs is, that we are grieuous sinners, in which he giueth euery one that is borne of God [b] armour and weapons against himselfe, that with his owne sword, we may cut his owne throat. For Christ gaue himselfe for our sinnes, Gal. 1. 4. If I were righteous and had no sinne, then I should not [c] need Christ. Why then, O peeuish holy Satan, wilt thou make me turne Puritane? and so seeke righteousnesse in my selfe? when in very deed, I haue nothing in me but sinnes, and, as thou saist in this truly, grieuous sinnes; alas they be no trifling but terrible sinnes against the first and second table: but I flie to Christ the lambe of God, who takes away the sinnes of the world, [d] Who loued me and gaue himselfe for me, [e] dying for my sinnes, and rising againe for my iustification; and so my sinne, which is a [f] condemned sinne, is in Christ who is a [g] condemning sinne, a ransome and sacrifice for sinne. Now this condemning sinne is stronger then that which is condemned. For it is wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification and redemption.

The last enemie, but not the least, that shall be destroyed, is [h] death, of all terribles vnto the natural man most terrible; yet by faith it is made [i] aduantage to vs, howsoeuer hurtfull and hatefull vnto other.

[k] Mors quæ perpetuo cunctos absorbet hiatu,
Parcere dum nescit, sapiùs ipsa sanet.

He that beleeueth, is assured that Christ is the [l] resurrection and the life, that he hath led [m] captiuity captiue, that he hath [n] swallowed vp death in victorie by his death, and opened vnto vs the gates of eternall life. See before the song of Simeon. Euery true Christian then is a greater conqueror then William the Conqueror, euen greater then Alexander the great, or Pompey the great, or the great Turke. For whereas they conquered in many yeeres a few parts of the world, he that is borne of God ouercommeth in one houre with one act onely, the whole world, and all the things in the world.

Aristotle dying sayd, [o] Anxius vixi, dubius morior, nescio quo vado But [p] Paul in his life desired to be dissolued and to be with Christ: and [q] Steuen at his death O Lord Iesu receiue my spirit. So comforted in his life, so blessed in his death is euery one that is borne of God. I conclude this part in a distichon.

Terra fremet, regna alta crepent, ruat ortus & orcus,
Si modò firma fides, nulla ruina nocet.

For there are three which beare record in heauen, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost.] Whether in old time this clause were receiued into the sacred Canon or no, see Sextus. Senen. bibliothec. lib. 7 haref 9. resp. ad ob. 7. Erasm. annotat. especially the Commentaries of Lorinus vpon the place. The Father bare witnesse of Christ in his [r] transfiguration and [s] baptisme, saying from heauen, This is my beloued Sonne in whom I am well pleased, heare him. God the Holy Ghost bare record in descending first vpon himselfe, Matth. 3. 16. [t] then vpon his Apostles at Whitsontide, [u] making them witnesse this truth also. The Word bare record of himselfe: I [x] am the way, the truth, and the life. [y] The workes that I doe in my fathers name, they beare witnesse of me. [z] Doest thou beleeue the Sonne of God? be it is that talketh with thee. [a] I am Iesus; I am Iesus of Nazaret, whom thou persecutest.

who redeemed vs with his owne blood, Acts 20.: 8. by water, the blessed Spirit, Ioh. 7. 38. [e] other construe this of Christs humane spirit, which he gaue vp on the Crosse, and of the water and bloud which issued out of his precious side, Ioh. 19. 34. Or as [f] other, the spirit, that is, our minde inspired by the Holy Ghost, applied vnto our eternall comfort the water and blood which came forth of our Sauiours holy side. [g] Water being a signe and seale of our sanctification; bloud of our iustification. If then we receiue the witnesse of men, and are contented that euery question among vs should be determined by the [h] mouth of two or three, let vs, hauing so [i] great a cloud of witnesses, euen sixe concording all in one, beleeue stedfastly that all which is borne of God ouercometh the world, and that the victorie conquering the world is our faith apprehending the merits of Christ Iesu, who did ouercome the world for vs. O Lord increase this faith in vs euermore.

The Gospell. IOHN. 20. 19.

The same day at night, which was the first day of the Sabbaths, &c.

- Time; the same day at night, when the doores were shut.
- Place; where the Disciples were assembled together for feare of the Iewes.
- Herein obserue the Disciples
  - Comfort; amplified by circumstances of
    - Person; Iesus came, not only sending good newes, as before, vers. 18. but himselfe bringing it, comforting them in.
      - Words, saying twice, Peace be to you.
      - Action, standing in the middest, and shewing his hands and side.
  - Commission: and in it the
    - Qualifier, Iesus.
    - Qualified, all the Disciples present, I send you, he breathed on them, &c.
    - Qualification, Whosoeuer sinnes yee remit, they are remitted, &c.

The same day at night] As a compassionate mother cannot endure that her little childe should cry long, but instantly she takes him in her armes to dandle that he may be still; euen so Christ comforting his disciples [k] as one whom his mother comforteth, appeared vnto them vpon the same day that he did rise, not [l] deferring his comfort, at night the doores being shut for feare, [m] when they did most need his comfort, and stood in the middest of them, [n] as the Sunne in the middest of the firmament, and the heart in the middest of the members, affording his comfort indifferently to them all, vsing words of comfort, peace be to you; a salutation howsoeuer ordinarie, [o] yet at that time most fit and best welcome, considering their troubled estate; shewing them also the wounds of his hands and side, more then euident demonstrations of comfort: for as [p] Marius accused of the Senat for treason against the Common-weale, rent his clothes, and in their presence shewed the wounds he receiued in the warres for his Countries good saying, Quid opus est verbis, vbi vulnera clamant? so Christ here shewing his pierced hands and side; these bee the tongues, and these bee mouthes open and wide to proclaime how much I loue you, these, these, tell all the world: that I died for your sinnes, and rose againe for your iustification.

It is recorded in holy Bible, that a Giant in [q] Gath had six fingers on each hand; on the contrary, that [r] Adonibezek lost his thumbs: all such as are too curious in schoole-quirks haue six fingers on a hand, one finger in the dish more then is needfull; and yet such as altogether neglect schoole-learning, want their thumbs, and cannot so well handle the sacred word of God. It is apparant that Christ did rise with his wounds, otherwise he would not haue shewed his hands and side, for the confirmation of his resurrection, and yet a body glorified is without any blemish in all parts; here then we must either distinguish or destroy.

The skars of Christ in his hands and feet after he was risen againe, were not signes of defect, but [f] ensignes of victorie, [t] non necessitatis sed voluntatis, in the words of [u] Emisenus, vulnerum signa virtutum insignia, not wounds of horrour but of honour; the conquerour glorieth in his skars, enumerat miles vulnera. Consule Iansen. concord. cap. 147. Suarez in 3. part. Thom. 2. tom. 47. disputat. 2. sect. Caietan. Modin. & alios in Thom. 3. part. quæst 54. art. 4.

[x] Mystically, Christ doth speake comfortable words, and sheweth his pretious wounds vnto such as haue shut their doores vnto the street, and renounced the pomps of the world, [y] especially to such as are gathered together in vnitie to serue God according to his promise, [z] where two or three are gathered togither in my name, there am I in the middest of them. All these, and all other remarkable notes vpon this part, I purpose God willing more fully to discusse in mine exposition of the Gospell appointed for S. Thomas day.

As my Father sent me, euen so send I you. This as and so may be referred vnto the person sending, as also to the parties sent. Vnto the person sending, as my Father had authority to send me, so [a] all power being giuen vnto me in heauen and earth, I send you; [b] for he saith not, I will desire my Father to send you, but I send you.

Againe, this as may be referred to the parties [c] sent; for as my Father sent me to [d] preach good tidings vnto the poore, to binde vp the broken hearted, and to call [e] sinners vnto repentance; so send I you to reconcile men vnto God, and God vnto men, according to that of Paul, 2. Cor 5. 19. Wee are Ambassadours for Christ, as though God did beseech you through vs, we pray you in Christs stead, that ye be reconciled to God.

No [f] man must take vpon him this honor except he be called of God: he that runneth of his owne accord, without sending, is a false Prophet, Ierem. 23. 21. for albeit Christ now doe not immediatly call, and send Apostles as heretofore, yet he doth mediatly send by deputies vnder him, as he did Titus and Timothy, Sosthenes and Siluanus, and other in the [g] Primitiue Church; and [h] those we ought to iudge lawfully called and sent, which be chosen to this worke by such as haue publike authority giuen vnto them in the congregation, to call and send Ministers into the Lords vineyard. As the Bishops of Ephesus ordained by men, are sayd expressly to be placed in that high calling by the blessed Spirit, Acts 20.28. Take heed to your selues and to all the flocke, whereof the Holy Ghost hath made you ouerseers.

The qualified are the Disciples, euery one, so well as any one; for that which Christ sayd vnto Peter, [i] I will giue to thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. and whatsoeuer thou shalt binde on earth shall be bound in heauen, &c. he saith here to all, I send you; whosoeuer sinnes ye remit, they are remitted vnto them: all had the same calling and the same charge. Happily S. Peter in this commission had a prioritie, not a superiority; or if a primacie, not a supremacie ouer the rest: he had (as [k] our Diuines acknowledge) a precedence in place, named for the most part [l] first, as the fore-man of the quest; and a preeminence in grace, reputed for his excellent knowledge and zeale the chiefe of the whole College, the Scripture witnessing that he was the first [m] Confessor, the first [n] Preacher, the first [o] Baptizer, the first worker of [p] miracles; in a word, as he was the fore-man, so the most forward of all the twelue in execution of his Apostleship: I say the most forward of all the twelue; for S. Paul in his [q] owne conceit was not inferiour, and in others opinion farre superiour to Peter: [r] Augustine saith, Deus docuit Petrum per posteriorem Paulum, [s] Eusebius Emisenus, Et si ille primus, iste præcipuus; and [t] Chrysostome, Honore par erat illi, nihil enim hîc dicam amplius; [u] his meaning is, that that Paul was Peters better, & doctior & sapientior, as Bellarmine writes in lib. 1. de Ro. Pont. cap. 28. §. respondeo, Paulum. And therefore Paul [x] withstood Peter to his face, and that in a matter of [y] faith, and when, if euer, he was [z] Pope of Rome.

S. Peter accounted himselfe, and so was esteemed of all the Colledge, a [a] fellow pastor, not as [b] Bellarmine, a Monarch, making the whole world his dioceſſe calling all men, euen the rest of Christs owne Apostles, his sheepe; our blessed Sauiour in this commission made them all Peeres, and when some would haue been Princes, he rebuked them, Mat. 20. 26. Luk. 22. 26. I will end this obseruation with that excellent sentence of Pope [c] Leo the great, Et electio pares, & labor similes, & finis facit aequales.

The persons qualified abode long in Christs Colledge, and receiued the holy Ghost also before they did execute this high commission; and so we must be furnished, and endued with many commendable parts of learning and sanctification, as [d] Paul, διδακτικὸν, fit in regard of our knowledge to be Pastors, and in respect of our vnblameable life to be patternes, See Gospell, Dom. 8. after Trinitie.

Whosoeuer sinnes ye remit.] Vpon this ground there is in the Church of England a generall absolution after a [e] generall confession of sinnes, and a [f] particular absolution, vpon a particular confession, yet neither absolute, but conditionall if the penitent truly repent and vnfainedly beleeue the Gospell.

Againe, we further say, that Almighty God hath giuen power and commandemẽt to his Ministers to declare and pronounce to his people being penitent, the absolution and remission of their sinnes; [g] in so much that this act of absoluing only belongs vnto the Minister ordinarily, tanquam ex officio; but when none of that order is or can be present, another man may doe it with good effect, according to that old saying, In casu necessitatis quilibet Christianus est Sacerdos: and I see no reason in popish learning, why women may not absolue so well as baptise. See Gospell Dom. 19. after Trinitie.

Thus, as you see, the Disciples had comfort and commission: first, comfort for themselues, and then a commission to strengthen and comfort other, and for [i] this cause Christ sayd twice, peace be to you, receiuing principally peace for themselues, and then secondarily charge to preach peace to them afarre off, and to them that are neere, Esay 57. 19.

The Epistle. 1. Pet. 2. 19.

This is thanke worthie, if a man for conscience toward God endure griefe, &c

SAint Peter hauing instructed vs in the former part of this Chapter what we should doe, teacheth vs in this latter how we must suffer, and that by { Precept, This is thanke worthie, if a man for conscience toward God endure griefe, &c.

Patterne, Christ suffered for vs leauing vs an ensample.

This is thanke worthy] τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις, [k] it is Gods grace, to wit, an [l] effect and signe of his grace, [m] gratious and acceptable to God, or as we read according to S. Peters own glosse, it is thanke worthy, [n] deseruing commendation and praise. If a man for conscience toward God endure griefe, [o] that is, for God who knoweth all; [p] or for that a man in his owne conscience knowes is well pleasing to God; or for the faith of God (as Aquine vpon the place) for as faith is vsed for conscience Rom. 14. 23. Whatsoeuer is not of faith, is sinne; so conscience here may be taken for faith.

And therefore the Scismatikes and Papists enduring griefe for their own faults and not for Christs faith, haue by their suffering neither grace nor glory; but as Ariſtides [q] who died of the bite of a Weaſell, exceedingly lamented becauſe it was not a Lion: ſo the Schiſmatike may grieue that he doth not ſmart for the Lion of Iuda but for a Weaſell lately crept out of the Alpes, which at the firſt crouded in among vs at a little hole, but ſince being pampered at the tables of many Citizens, and ſome country Ladies, is growne ſo full and purſie, that many will rather forſake Gods plough and looke backe to the world, then acknowledge he came in at ſo little an entrance.

And for the Papiſts, it is well obſerued, [r] that as no man dies by an ague, nor without an ague; ſo none are executed for the Romane religion, nor without it: all their Ieſuits and other Romaniſts Ieſuited (as our [s] Homer their hammer excellently Non religionis cauſâ meræ ſed mixtæ, mixtæ cum malâ mente & fide in principem: it is not faith meerely that makes them endure griefe, but faction; it is not religion, but rebellion, beginning at Tyber and ending at Tyburne. If then it be true, [t] not the croſſe but the cauſe makes a martyr, non mortes ſed mores, it is not thanke-worthy for a Papiſt, buffeted for his owne fault, to take it patiently.

Yea, but the Schiſmatikes in loſing their liuings, and the Papiſts in loſing their liues euermore pretend conſcience toward God. Anſwere is made, that [u] conſcience not grounded vpon ſure knowledge, is either an ignorant fantaſie, or an arrogant vanitie; for as in a mans body, the raw ſtomacke makes a rheumaticke head, and a rheumaticke head a raw ſtomacke; ſo ſcience makes our conſcience good, and conſcience our ſcience good: con is alwaies in compoſition, and among Chriſtians it ſhould be with ſcientiâ: that which Art hath ioyned and God coupled let no man ſeuer.

The [x] Philoſopher ſpeakes of a twofold ignorance, particularis ac vniuerſalis, as the Lawyers, [y] ignorantia iuris & facti, or as the [z] Schoolemen, ignorantia vincibilis & invincibilis; according to theſe diſtinctions euery neſcience is not a ſinne but only that ignorance which is in ſuch points as we may and muſt vnderſtand, [a] ignorantia vel neglecta vel affectata; ſo that an [b] erroneus conſcience (our aduerſaries being Iudges) is not a ſufficient warrant to ſuffer martyrdome, though a man ſhould vaunt with Edmund Campion, Occidi poſſum, ſuperari non poſſum; and in [d] another place, Niſi diui de cœlo deturbentur; & ſuperbus Lucifer cœlum recuperet, cadere nunquam potero.

They who killed the bleſſed Apoſtles in their erroneus conſcience, [c] thought they did God good ſeruice: Saul breathing out [f] threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the Diſciples of the Lord, ſaid he did it out of zeale Philip. 3. 6. the moſt blaſphemous heretike which is interfector veritatis (as [g] Tertullian ſpeakes if he be buffeted for his error, preſently makes himſelfe a Catholike martyr; [h] ego defendo dogmata Sanctorum patrum, ego eorum habeo teſtimonia, ego cum patribus ejicior. In old time many were ſo vaine-glorious in affecting the reputation of martyrdome, that there was a ſect called [i] Martyriani: ſome ſuffer out of faſhion, for there is a conſcience not according to knowledge; other endure griefe out of faction, for there is a knowledge not according to conſcience: the firſt ſuffer as ambitious of honour; the ſecond to ſatisfie their malignant humor but neither of theſe (Pope Peter being Iudge, and the Schoole-men Iurie) can merit thanks of God, or praiſe of men.

When [k] Simeones ſaw that Arſacius an vnlearned and an vnworthy doting old man, was placed in Chryſoſtomes roome, he cried out, prô pudor! quis, cui? [l] ſo may we cenſure iuſtly the Popes ſitting in Peters chaire, prô pudor! quis, cui? Peter would haue men ſubiect to their Lords with feare, not only to the good and courteous, but alſo to the froward, for this is thanke worthy, if a man for conſcience toward God endure griefe and ſuffer wrong vndeſerued. But the Pope doth vnlooſe men at his pleaſure from their allegeance to good and gratious Princes, and therfore we will appeale from Peter to Peter, from Sir Peter to Saint Peter, from princely Peter to preaching Peter, affirming here, What praiſe is it if when yee be buffeted for your faults, yee take it patiently? but, and if when ye doe well, ye ſuffer wrong and take it patiently, then is there thanke with God, for hereunto verily were y called. [m] For all that will liue godly in Christ Iesu shall suffer persecution, entring into Gods kingdome [n] through many tribulations.

Christ suffered for vs, leauing vs an ensample.] [o] Christ is propounded in the Gospell as a sacrifice for sinne, and as an ensample for vertue. S. Peter hath pithily comprehended both in this one verse, Christ suffered for vs, [p] that his passion might deliuer vs from the bondage of sinne, leauing vs an ensample to follow his steps, that his actions might direct vs vnto vertue.

For the first, our iustification stands in [q] two things especially, to wit, in the remission of our sinnes by the merits of Christ his death, and in imputation of righteousnesse, whereby God accounteth that righteousnesse which is in Christ, as the righteousnesse of that sinner which beleeueth in him. Now the righteousnesse of Christ consists in his obedience passiue and actiue, both together, for Christ in suffering obeyed, and in obeying suffered, and the very sheding of his blood, to which our saluation is ascribed more specially, must not only be considered as it is passiue, that is a suffering; but also as it is actiue, that is an obedience, in which he shewed his exceeding loue both to God and vs in fulfilling the law for vs.

For vs] That is, all vs indefinitely, for God commanded [r] Moses to put in his perfume so much frankincense as galbanum, and as much galbanum as frankincense to signifie that Christ in his oblation on the Crosse (a [s] sacrifice of a sweet smelling sauour to God) shed as much blood for the labouring man who followeth the plough, as for the Prince, who sitteth in his throne: that his precious blood should haue greater force in some then in other, is not the fault of him, who did impart it, but of him, who doth not well imploy it. If a man should commit such an hainous offence, that he could no way but by the Princes gratious pardon escape death, he would not suffer his eyes to sleepe, nor his eye lids to take any rest vntill by some meanes or other he had obtained the same, gotten it written and sealed, and layd vp in a boxe fast and sure, reading it often with great ioy. Now this is the case of euery man, originall sinne makes vs the sonnes of wrath, actuall much more rebells and traytors against our heauenly King, by which all of vs haue deserued ten thousand deaths. Our only refuge is; that Christ suffered for vs: in his name we must sue for pardon at Gods hand, and neuer rest vntill we haue the assurance thereof sealed vp in our hearts and consciences. How dull are our wits, how dry are our eyes, how hard are our hearts in hearing and reading these mysteries: Our blessed Sauiour in the Garden for our sake did sweat [t] drops of blood trickling downe to the ground, and on the [u] Crosse shed streames of blood, and yet we cannot shed one teare for his sake, when we remember his torments and receiue the Sacraments, which are speaking seales of his passion; he was longer in dying and doing it, than we can endure to [x] contemplate on it. Alas how shall we die for him, and suffer for conscience toward God? [y] Hee that hath not heate enough to thinke on it, will neuer haue heart enough to dye for it. I beseech thee deare brother, if not for my sake, yet for thine owne sake, yea for his sake who died for vs, examine one word vttered by [z] Dauid in the person of Christ, foderunt manus meas, &c. they digged my hands and my feet, noting the wide wounds in both, as being not only pierced, but also digged as it were with a mattocke; for the nailes were so big, that (as [a] Socrates reporteth Constantine made of them a bridle and an helmet for his owne vse. Whatsoeuer he did endure, was not for himselfe but for vs, he bare our sinnes in his body on the tree, that we being deliuered from sinne, should liue vnto righteousnesse, by whose stripes we are healed. [b] O Domine Iesu, da cordi meo te desiderare, desiderando quærere, quærendo inuenire, inueniendo amare, amando mala mea redempta non iterare. Da Domine Deus meus cordi meo pœnitentiam, spiritui contritionem, oculis lachrymarum fontem, ori custodiam, manibus eleemosynæ largitatem, vt totus figaris in me, qui totus crucifixus pro me, Amen.

Leauing vs an ensample] For he was not only a sacrifice for sinne, but a direction also for vertue, that we should follow his steps: he saith in the Gospell appointed

For as his actions are our inſtructions, ſo S. Peter ſaith here, that his paſſions are our patternes:

Inſinuating that we muſt ſuffer
- Innocently, for albeit he was reputed among the wicked, and crucified as a malefactor, yet did he no ſinne, neither was there guile found in his mouth.
- Patiently, who when he was reuiled, reuiled not againe, when he ſuffered, he threatned not, but committed the vengeance to him that iudgeth righteouſly.

But I beſeech thee Lord Ieſu to dwell in my heart by faith, and to fill me with all fulneſſe of grace that I may know thy loue which paſſeth knowledge, and comprehend what is the bredth and length, and depth and height of it ſhewed on thy croſſe for the redemption of the whole world.

Chriſt ſayd, I am the good ſhepherd, &c.

[k] NO man being but a man, ought in this life to commend and iuſtifie himſelfe: for if he conſider the time paſt, he ſhall haue good cauſe to lament his ſinnes of omiſſion and commiſſion: if he conſider the time preſent, he may well bluſh at his manifold infirmities: if he conſider the time to come, he muſt feare

the Lions mouth, euen ſo Chriſt giuing his life for his fathers ſheepe, redeemed them out of hell mouth, and the iawes of Satan, who goeth about like a roaring Lion, and as a rauenous wolfe, to ſcatter, and catch, and kill the ſheepe.

Secondly, Chriſt hauing brought his ſheepe out of the ditch, he leads them forth beſides the waters of comfort, conuerting their ſoules, and guiding them in the paths of righteouſneſſe for his names ſake, Pſal. 23. He doth call them all by the preaching of his Goſpell into his fold, and laſtly bring them vnto his eternall kingdome, ſaying vnto the ſheepe at the laſt day, Come ye bleſſed, inherit ye the kingdome prepared for you from the foundations of the world.

[h] A ſubordinate Paſtor and vnderling ſhepherd, cannot redeeme ſo much as one ſheepe with his owne blood, though he could giue ten thouſand liues. It is his dutie to preach Chriſt crucified, and to ſhew that the good ſhepherd hath giuen his life for the ſheepe. He muſt ſpend his ſtrength, and expend his time for the benefit of his flocke, that they may beleeue Chriſt died for their ſinnes, and roſe againe for their iuſtification. A Prelate (ſaith Biſhop Iewel) muſt die preaching I would to God (quoth [i] Caluin) Chriſt Ieſus at his comming to iudgement might finde me in the pulpit.

When as the great Biſhop and good Shepherd committed his lambes and ſheepe to S. Peter, he did aske him thrice, [k] Simon bar Iona, loueſt thou me? as if he ſhould ſay, [l] Niſi teſtimonium tibi perhibente conſcientiâ quòd me ames & valde ames, hoc eſt plus quàm tua, plus quàm tuos, plus quàm te, nequaquam ſuſcipias curam hanc: Except thy conſcience doe beare thee witneſſe thou loueſt me well yea better then either thy goods, or thy friends or thy ſelfe, thou art not fit to take this great charge of my ſheepe vpon thee.

The good Shepherd knowes his ſheepe and endeuoures to reduce ſuch as are ſtraying, vnto Chriſts fold, both are duties of reſidence and preſidence: wherefore ſuch as abſent themſelues vnneceſſarily from their cure, muſt take heed, [m] ne diſpenſationem in diſſipationem vertant. I ſpeake not againſt all non-reſidence, nor againſt any which is allowed by law, for a Paſtor may well abſent himſelfe from a particular Cure for the generall good of the whole Church: and therefore when Archbiſhop Warham was cenſured by ſome of his acquaintance, for conferring the parſonage of Aldington in Kent on Eraſmus of Roterodam, who could not ſo much as read Engliſh: anſwered, It is better that one pariſh ſhould want a Preacher, then the whole State ſuch a worthy Writer.

A Shepherd, as the [n] popiſh Poſtillers obſerue, muſt haue three things, a { Scrip. Staffe. Whiſtle.

Where note by the way, that Romiſh Prelates and Prieſts are firſt for the ſcrip, then for the ſtaffe, laſt of all for the Whiſtle. For the truth is, they are all for the ſcrip and ſtaffe, and nothing for the whiſtle. So long as they may fare well and rule the roſt, it makes no matter in what paſture the ſheepe feede, or in what ditch they ſtarue: [o] Ac ſi victuri eſſent ſine curâ, cùm peruenirent ad curam: As if they might liue without care, when once they haue gotten a Cure. [p] Theſe Shepherds feed themſelues, and not the flocke, being more like Paſties then paſtors.

[q] Cùm non paſcunt ſed paſcantur.
non à paſco deriuantur,
ſed à paſcor paſceris.

An hired ſeruant] All Expoſitors agree, that hirelings are ſuch as reſpect in preaching their temporall hire more then the ſpirituall charge, [t] magis craſſiani quàm Chriſtiani, louing the fleece more then the flocke. Some (ſaith [u] Paul) preach Chriſt, euen through enuy, ſtrife, contention, vnder a pretence, not ſincerely: yet ſo long as Chriſt is preached, I therein ioy, yea, and will ioy. [u] S. Auguſtine therefore doth gloſſe this Text excellently: Diligendus eſt paſtor, tolerandus eſt mercenarius narius, cauendus est latro: We must honour the good shepherd, shun the theefe, tolerate the hireling: for albeit [x] he seeke not that which is Iesus Christs but his owne, yet he doth good so long as he doth stay with his sheepe and preach; [y] vnam carpe, spinam cane. Consider [z] what he saith, and not what he doth, heare him as long as he sits in Moses chaire, but when he sits in the [a] seate of the scornefull, [b] haue no fellowship with the vnfruitfull workes of darkenesse. An hireling is good in ingressu & progressu, saith [c] Bernard, onely bad in egressu, saith Christ, for when he seeth the wolfe comming he leaueth the sheepe.

The wolfe catcheth and scattereth the sheepe] By wolfe is meant [d] all danger annoying the sheepe, as Tyrants Atheists, Heretikes, especiall the [e] deuill, who doth not only catch and scatter, as it is in the text, but also kill and destroy, vers. 10 He cannot kill, except he catch; and he cannot catch, except he scatter. [f] S. Thomas was scattered out of the Disciples companie, when he did not beleeue Christs resurrection. [g] S. Peter was also scattered from the good shepherd and his flocke when he denied his Master. The Separatists at this time being scattered from Christs fold, and caught and insnared by the wolfe daily. The shepherd therefore must looke to straggling sheepe, especially to such as loue not the congregation, but are gadding alwaies after new Pastors & other pastures: [h] If there be any consolation in Christ, if any cõfort of loue, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any compassiõ & mercy, [i] support one another, endeuouring to keep the vnity of the spirit in the bond of peace

Lastly, Christs sheepe are described in this Gospell, and that by their secret markes; on Gods behalfe [k] predestination, I know my sheeepe, for their names are written in heauen, Luke 10. 20. I know whom I haue chosen, Ioh. 13. vers. 18. on their part, a [l] liuely faith, I am knowne of mine, for they beleeue that I am the good shepherd, and the [m] great shepherd of their [n] soules. Outward markes of Christs sheepe are diligence in hearing his words, and obedience in following his waies, in being hearers of his word and doers of the same, Iam 1. 22. receiuing the Gospell (although preached by subordinate ministers and vnder-shepherds) not as the word of men, but as it is indeed the word of God, 1. Thess. 2. 13.

I will end this tract in the words of [o] Bernard: If thou beest a good shepherd reioyce, for great is thy reward in heauen; if an hireling, tremble, for thy danger is great on earth; if a theefe or a wolfe that scattereth Christs sheepe, repent heartyly, lest thy damnation be great in hell.

Dearly beloued, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstaine from fleshly lusts &c.

IN the former part of this Epistle, S. Peter instructed vs in articles of faith; in this [p] latter he descends vnto rules of good life, teaching vs how to liue [q] soberly, and righteously, and godly.

Soberly toward our selues, abstaine from fleshly lusts, and that because { You are strangers and pilgrims / They fight against the soule.

Righteously toward our neighbours in
- General toward all
  - Gentiles, haue your conuersation honest among the Gentiles, in respect of
    - Your selues, that yee may stop the mouthes of foolish and ignorant people.
    - God, that other seeing your good workes, may praise God.
    - Enemies, that God by your good example may visit, that is, [r] conuert them.
  - Christians, loue brotherly fellowship.
- Particular, the Magistrate,
  - Supreme, the King as chiefe.
  - Subordinate, rulers vnder him: & this obedience to superior powers is to be performd in regard of it
    - Author, it is the will of God, ergo, for the Lords sake.
    - End, that euil men may be punished, and good incouraged.

Godly toward God, as the seruants of God, feare God.

Dearly

[p] Sarcerius. Marlorat. Lorin in loc.
[q] Titus 2. 12.

Dearly beloued] [c] Oecumenius obserues, that ἀγαπώμενος is hee which is beloued for some one thing, but ἀγαπητὸς vsed here, signifieth one that is beloued in all, at least in many respects; and so [t] these Proselytes dispersed here and there through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, &c. were beloued of Peter as men, more beloued as his brethren in Christ, yet most beloued as his children, whom he had begotten in the faith.

As strangers and pilgrims] A Christian is a [u] burgesse of heauen, a citizen and sonne of [x] Hierusalem aboue; so long then as he trauelleth on earth, he is both a stranger and a stragler; a stranger, as belonging to another countrey; a stragler as hauing here no [y] permanent Citie. The worldly man is a pilgrim too, tossed from post to pillar, subiect to change and chance, [z] πόντος πόντον ποτὲ φέρει: yet he reputes himselfe [a] no stranger, in that his [b] portion is in this life, making earth his heauen, and his purse his paradise: but the childe of God saith as [c] Dauid, I am a stranger and a soiourner as all my fathers were. [d] Plutarch and [e] Plato did say so much by the light of reason, and therfore let vs which haue faiths eye, see so much in religion.

Strangers haue [f] foure remarkable qualities:
1. They goe forward euery day toward home.
2. They chuse the best way.
3. They be very sparing in their expences, often forbearing things necessarie.
4. They will not be detained in their iourney with any vaine delights or allurements.

So we must not looke [g] backe to Sodome, but still haue our [h] face toward Hierusalem, [i] forgetting that which is behinde, and endeuouring our selues vnto that which is before, dayly growing vpward and going forward in the waies of the Lord toward our heauenly home.

Secondly, we must chuse the right and best way, not the wry-wayes of Antichristianisme, nor the by-wayes of humane Philosophie, but Christ who is [k] the way that leadeth vnto Hierusalem, and [l] the doore, by which at our iourneyes end, we must enter into our heauenly fathers house.

Thirdly, we must [m] abstaine from euery thing which [n] presseth downe and hindereth vs in our race; strangers must not be [o] curiosi in aliena republica, nor we too much cumbred with affaires of the world; especially we must take heed, that we be not detained with vaine pleasures and delights, as our Apostle, we must abstaine from fleshly lusts; as [p] adulterie, fornication, vncleannesse, wantonnesse, idolatrie, witchcraft, hatred, debate, emulation, wrath, contentions, seditions, heresies, enuy, murther, drunkennesse, and such like: in a word, from euery corrupt affection of our nature, [q] for the wisedome of the flesh is enmitie against God These lusts are called fleshly, because they proceed from the flesh, and nourish the flesh and make men fleshly: but the contrary vertues, as loue, ioy, peace, long-suffering, gentlenesse, temperancie, meekenesse, faith, are called spirituall, because they proceed from the spirit, Gal. 5, 22. and delight the spirit, Eph. 4. 30. 5. 10 making men also spirituall and seeking the things aboue, Colos. 3. 1.

Which fight against the soule] Furie fights against the soule like a mad Turke; Fornication like trecherous [r] Ioab, it doth kisse to kill; Drunkennesse is the master-gunner that sets all on fire; Gluttonie will stand for a Corporall, Auarice for a pioner, Idlenesse for a gentleman of the company, Pride must be Captaine: let vs therfore put on [s] Gods armour, weapons of [t] righteousnesse [u] on the right hand, and on the left, that we may [x] fight a good fight against all fleshly lusts, which [y] warre in our members against the soule. They which are well prouided for warre, and are alwaies in a readinesse to fight, shall be sure (said that expert Captaine [z] Zenophon) to haue many friends and few foes. If then our [a] loynes of the [b] minde be girded about, if we put on righteousnesse as an habergeon, Esay 59. 17 if we take vnto vs the shield of faith and sword of the Spirit, we shall be able to cast downe holds, 2 Cor. 10. 4. and to withstand all the assaults of our enemies, Ephes. 6. 11.

Secondly, good conuerſation among the Gentiles is honorable, and comfortable for our ſelues, in that we may ſtop the mouthes of fooliſh and ignorant men. And this of all other is the moſt Chriſtian and noble reuenge; [h] Regium eſt audire malè cùm feceris bene; ſi rectè facis, quid eos vereris, qui non rectè reprehendunt? ſaith [i] Epictetus. And Picus Mirandula; Fœlix es qui bene viuens à malis ob id maximè, quia bene viuis, malè interim audias: Happy are they who when they doe well heare ill; much more bleſſed are they who liue ſo well, as that their backbiting aduerſaries ſeeing their good workes, are conſtrained to praiſe God, and to ſpeake well of them. As Saul vnderſtanding Danids honeſt cariage toward him, inſtantly brake forth into this ingenuous confeſſion, [k] Thou art more righteous than I. So Plinius Secundus examining the deuotion and holy liues of Chriſtians vnder Traian, had his mouth ſtopt from backbiting, and yet open to [l] commend them exceedingly. Laſtly, good conuerſation is profitable for ſuch as are without, for hereby they ſhall praiſe God in the day of viſitation] [r] Some conſtrue this of Gods viſitation in iudgement, but moſt, of his viſitation in mercy; for honeſt conuerſation in Chriſtians is a great motiue to conuert Gentiles, and to winne the moſt cruell enemies of religion vnto the faith. Our Engliſh [s] hiſtories afford a memorable preſident hereof in S. Albane, who receiued a poore perſecuted Chriſtian into his houſe, and ſeeing his holy deuotion, and ſweet carriage, was ſo much affected with his good example, that he became both an earneſt profeſſor of the faith, and in concluſion a glorious martyr for the faith.

Loue brotherly fellowship.] A precept so necessarie, that Paul repeats it in his writings [b] thrice, S. Peter in two Epistles [c] foure times; Athenagoras, Iustin Martyr, Tertullian, in their seuerall Apologies highly commend brotherly fellowship in the primitiue Christians; and S. Iohn in his [d] Reuelation makes mention of a whole Church called Philadelphia, the which, as [e] Augustine thinks, is a fit name for all Christendome; [f] seeing all Christians haue but one father in heauen, which is God, and but one mother on earth, and that is the Church: all are brethren and we that liue together are twins.

I cannot say with Paul, as touching brotherly loue, yee need not that I write vnto you, 1 Thess. 4. 9. for most men in our daies are either brethren and not good fellowes, or else good fellowes and not brethren. The composition is rare, there be few Philadelphians in the world. Schismatikes are all for the brotherhood, and nothing for fellowship; on the contrary, wicked Atheists are all for fellowship, and nothing for the brotherhood. A good Christian must embrace both (as our Apostle here) loue brotherly fellowship.

The Gospell. IOHN. 16. 16. vulo p. 23

Iesus said to his Disciples, after a while yee shall not see me, and againe after a while yee shall see me, &c.

THis Gospell is part of that excellent Sermon, which our blessed Sauiour made to his Disciples after Supper the night before he suffered; so that the very circumstances of person and time should incite you to marke it with all diligence, and regard it with all reuerence; for who did [g] euer speake so well as Christ? and whom did he loue better than his owne Disciples? and the last words of good men are the best; for as the last glimpse of the candle is most bright, and the last glare of the Sune going downe most cleare; so the last speech of a deare friend parting with his friends, and departing out of this world, is vsually most affectionate and patheticall. An admonition vttered by such a teacher at such a time to such an auditorie, requires in speaker and hearer good attention great deuotion.

[g] Ioh. 7. 46.

In the whole two points are more specially regardable:

- The carefulnesse of Christ in instructing of the
  - Matter, forewarning them of troubles.
  - Manner, forewarning them often, and plainly, propounding a familiar example, vers. 21. A woman when shee trauelleth, &c.
- The dulnesse of the Disciples in vnderstanding, as it doth appeare by
  - Their owne questions among themselues, v. 17. 18. What is this, &c.
  - Christ his answere, vers. 19. 20, &c.

As the wise Mariner in a calme makes all his tacklings strong against a storme; and the carefull fen-man mends his banks in summer, lest his grounds be drowned in winter; and as a learned Physitian looks not only to the disease, which afflicts his patient for the present, but administreth often pysicke to preuent a maladie which is as yet to come: so Christ the Captaine in the Churches ship, and great Physitian of our soules ([h] his houre being come that he should leaue the world) called his Disciples together, as [i] Iacob did his sonnes, and told them plainly what good and euill should come to them in the last dayes after his departure.

It is a question among Philosophers, whether it be better præscire an nescire mala, mala, to fore-know miſchiefe or not. [k] Eraſmus diſputing againſt Aſtrologians held all Prognoſtications and predictions vnprofitable; for if they foretold ioyfull newes, they decreaſe our future pleaſure; if euill tidings, encreaſe our preſent paine; the feare of danger being often worſe than the danger it ſelfe. But whatſoeuer Eraſmus and [l] Fauorinus haue more wittily than wiſely written of this argument, it is a concluſion acknowledged in the world, and confeſſed in the ſchoole. that it is better to know before we feele, than to feele miſchiefe before we know it. For if we be well admoniſhed of any misfortune to come, we may either preuent it cautionately, or elſe endure it patiently.

2. Chriſt inſtructs his Apoſtles often in this one point; ſometime plainly, verſ. 2. They ſhall excommunicate you, yea the time ſhall come, that whoſoeuer killeth you, will thinke that he doth God ſeruice: ſometimes obſcurely, verſ. 16. After a while yee ſhall not ſee me: ſometimes vſing a bare affirmation, as verſ. 4. Theſe things haue I told you: ſometimes an earneſt aſſeueration, as in the 20. verſe, Verily, verily, I ſay vnto you, yee ſhall weepe and lament. [m] Inſinuating hereby, that it is commendable for the Doctor, and profitable for the Scholler, that the ſame Lecture be repeated againe and againe, according to that of [n] Paul, To write the ſame things, is not grieuous to me, and it is ſure to you.

[n] Phil 3.1.

Vnregenerate hearts are termed in holy Bible [o] ſtonie hearts; if they were brazen they might be melted, if iron, they might be made pliable: but hearts of ſtone muſt be broken with continuall hammering, adamantine hearts are mollified only by the blood of Chriſt, and that through often dropping on them,

Gutta cauat lapidem, non vi, ſed ſæpè cadendo;
Sic homo fit iuſtus, non vi ſed ſæpè monendo.

[o] Ezech 11.19. 36.26.

When our doctrine ſhall drop as [p] raine, and our ſpeech diſtill as dew; when we ſhall daily beat hard hearts vpon the anuill of conſcience with the powerfull hammer of Gods pure word, at the laſt they will bend, yea breake, and then [q] a broken and contrite heart the Lord will not deſpiſe.

[p] Deut. 32.2.

[q] Pſal. 51.17.

Thirdly, Chriſt inſtructed his Apoſtles plainly, verſ. 21. A woman when ſhe trauelleth, hath ſorrow.] Feare and hope ſtriue in her as the two twins in Rebeccaes wombe. Her ſorrow is when her houre is come, [r] yet ſhe doth hope well, becauſe ſhe knoweth that her griefe is common vnto women in her caſe. Secondly, ſhe is well aſſured that her paine cannot ordinarily be long, ſorrow may continue for a night but ioy commeth in the morning. Thirdly ſhe doth hope the end of her paine will be the beginning of her ioy: for as ſoone as ſhe is deliuered of the childe, ſhe remembreth no more the anguiſh, for ioy that a man is borne into the world.

So likewiſe it ſhall be with you my Diſciples, in the world yee ſhall haue affliction, for theſe troubles are common, [s] all that will liue godly ſhall ſuffer perſecution. Secondly, your ſorrow is but ſhort; a little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me; againe, a little while, and yee ſhall ſee me. Thirdly, your mourning ſhall be turned into mirth, and no man ſhall take this ioy from you.

[s] 2. Tim. 3.12.

By this familiar inſtructing hee teacheth all Teachers to conſider more the dulneſſe of their auditorie, then the quickneſſe of their owne wit, and to regard the peoples benefit more than their owne credit, loſing as it were themſelues to winne other vnto God. It is an excellent ſpeech of [t] Auguſtine: Mallem vt reprehendant Grammatici, quàm vt non intelligant populi. The ſame [u] Father in his workes often tranſlates the words of David; non eſt occultatum os meum á te, my bones are not hid from thee, non eſt occultatum oſſum meum, as deſiring to ſpeake barbarouſly rather then obſcurely. [x] Philip Melanchthon vſed euermore the moſt receiued formes and phraſes of ſpeech, [y] hating equiuocation and ambiguity. Biſhop Latymer was ſo plaine in his preaching, that he drew many compariſons euen from the ſaffron bagge and hogſtie. The moſt learned Diuines in all ages had their introductions to Religion, and eaſie Catechiſmes, as Clement Alexandrinus his Pædagogus: Lactantius, his Inſtitutions: Cyril, his Catechiſmes: Auguſtine his Enchiridion and booke De catechizandis rudibus.

I write not this against accurate Sermons in learned auditories; euery Preacher in this case may professe ingeniously with that famous Orator Demosthenes, that he would speake if it were possible [x] non modò scripta, sed etiam sculpta; [a] but he must consider seriously whether he teach many or few, such as are learned or ignorant, ciuill or rude. For if hee feed infants, he must giue milke saith [b] Paul, that is,, nutritoria, non peremptoria, saith [c] Augustine; or as Bernard. apta non alta. There is [d] quædam diligens negligentia, quæ sic ornatum detrahit, vt sordes non contrahat. A Preacher ought to be diligently negligent, hauing his phrase neither ouer-curiously set, nor yet altogether rudely composed, but so rightly diuideing the word that he may deliuer alway profitable matter after a profitable manner; and without all question, it is the greatest point of deepe learning to distinguish aptly that which is confused, and illustrate plainly that which is obscure.

After a while, yee shall not see me, and againe, after a while, yee shall see me.] I finde foure expositions of this one clause: first, [e] Alcuinus interprets it thus: The time wherein ye shall not see me shall be but short, namely, part of three daies, while I shall rest in my graue; the time likewise wherein yee shall see me will be but little, to wit, fortie daies after my resurrection.

Secondly, [f] Theophylact, Euthymius, Caietan, and other vnderstand it thus: After a while yee shall not see mee; for I shall be dead and buried; and againe after a while yee shall see me; for [g] I will rise againe, and goe before you into Galile.

Thirdly, [h] Rupertus expounds it thus: After a while ye shall neuer see me in this mortall body, but yet after a while ye shall see me in a glorified and im-impassible body.

Fourthly, [i] S. Augustine and Beda thus: After a while ye shall not see me, for I ascend vp to my father to sit at his right hand, and yet after a while ye shall see me, for I will come againe quickly to iudge both the quicke and the dead; and then your hearts shall reioyce, and your ioy shall no man take from you. This last interpretation I hold to be the best, and most agreeable to Christs intent in this Gospell appointed for the Sunday, being betweene his resurrection and ascension, and so consequently in the iudgement of the Church not to be construed of his death and resurrection, but rather of his ascension and second comming to iudgement: See the Gospell for Whitsunday: Maldonat in loc. & Iansen. concord. cap. 135.

Hence we may learne to be patient and comforted in our affliction. Howsoeuer Christ absent himselfe for a while, yet after a while we shall see him, he will either come or send comfort: example hereof in the blessed protomartyr Stephen, a while Christ did as it were withdraw himselfe, but within a while againe Stephen[k] saw the heauens open, and the Sonne of man standing at the right hand of God. [l] Robert Glouer being condemned by the bloudy Bishop of Lichfield to die for the profession of the truth, a while felt in himselfe no willingnesse, but rather an heauinesse and dulnesse of spirit, full of much discomfort, and void of spirituall consolation to beare the crosse of martyrdome: but within a while the Lord repleniseth him abundantly with such ioyes, as that comming neere to the stake, he cried out, he is come, he is come, and that with such alacritie as one seeming rather to be risen from some deadly danger to libertie of life, then as one passing out of the world by paines of death.

The dulnesse of Christs owne Disciples in not vnderstanding these mysteries, affordeth [m] instruction and [n] comfort. We may learne [o] that the naturall man perceiueth not the things of God, vntill the blessed Spirit become his tutor; and therefore we must pray with [p] Dauid, lead me forth in thy truth, and learne me, for thou art the God of my saluation. Hence we may receiue consolation also. [q] Weaklings in faith are not reiected of Christ, but strengthned, [r] he doth not breake the bruised reed, nor quench the smoaking flax.

The Epistle. Iames 1. vers. 17. Vulg. 22

Euery good gift, and euery perfect gift is from aboue, and commeth downe from the father of lights, &c.

THere be [f] two kindes of euill mentioned in holy Scriptures: { Vnum quod homo facit, an euill which is sinne. Alterum quod homo patitur, an euill which is a punishment for sinne.

God is Author of all punishment for sinne, according to that of the [t] Prophet Is there any euill in a Citie and the Lord hath not done it? [u] that is any iudgement for euill, any plague, famine, warre, and the Lord hath not sent it? but he is not author of euill which is sinne. God (saith our Apostle) cannot be tempted with euill, neither tempt other vnto euill. The Father of lights hath prepared indeed outward darkenesse of [x] hell, as the reward of sinne; but he did not create the inward darkenesse of the minde, which is sinne. The reason hereof is deliuered in the text: he that is the fountaine of all good, is not author of any euill, but euery good and perfect gift is from aboue; and the Father of lights in his goodnesse is constant and permanent. [y] For albeit the Sunne in his course be variable, sometimes appearing bright and cleere, sometime darke and cloudie; yet the Father of lights is euermore the same, shining alwaies in bounty without change or shadow of change. Gifts, the perfectnes of gifts, the perfectnes of all gifts comes downe from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableneſſe neither ſhadow of change.

All the gifts of fortune faisly so called, as riches and possessions; all the gracefull endowments of the body, as agilitie, strength, comelinesse, &c. all the goods of the minde, as vertue, wit, learning, all these and all other beside these descend from God aboue, who giues נתן נתן, to all, all things Acts 17. 25. no siluer in [z] Beniamins sacke till Ioseph put it in; no good in man except the Lord bestow it.

First, for the gifts of fortune rich and poore, Iob resolues the doubt: [a] The Lord giueth, and the Lord taketh, blessed be the Name of the Lord. Bread in the Pater noster is called ours; giue vs this day our daily bread, but (as [b] Augustine sweetly) ne putetur à nobis, dicimus da nobis. Lest we should imagine that it is our owne from our selues of our selues, our Master enioyned vs to begge it of our Father in heauen daily, saying and praying, giue vs this day our daily bread. It is a gift, ergo, not our owne; it is good, ergo, from aboue.

Happily the worldling (blinded by the Prince of darkenesse, and not illuminated by the Father of lights) ascribeth his increase of corne, wine, and oyle, either to the goodnesse of his skill, or to the greatnesse of his industrie, saying with proud Nabuchodonozor, [c] Is not this great Babel which I haue built? haue not I got all these goods my selfe by mine owne wit and prouidence? But what saith our Apostle? Erre not my deare brethren, euery good and perfect gift is from aboue. The Scripture speakes plainly, that [d] Paul may plant, and that Apollos may water, but it is God that giueth the increase; [e] except the Lord keepe the citie, the watchman waketh but in vaine; except the Lord build the house, their labour is but lost that build it: It is vaine to rise vp early and to take rest late, and to eat the bread of carefulnesse, except the Lord blesse our endeuours.

That our valleyes therefore may stand so thicke with corne, that they [f] shall laugh and singe that our [g] garners may be full and plenteous with all manner of store, that our sheepe may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets, that our oxen may be strong to labour, and no decay in our cattell; it behoueth vs to begge all these blessings of the Father of light, for it is he that doth blesse thy going out, and thy comming in, it is he that maketh thee plenteous in goods, plenteous in the fruit of thy ground, it is he that opens his treasures, euen the heauen to giue raine vnto the land in due season, only he that doth blesse all the workes of thine hands, Deut 28.

Secondly, for the gifts of the body; it was God that gaue ſtrength to Sampſon beauty to Abſolon, talneſſe vnto Saul. Of our ſelues we cannot adde one [h] cubit of ſtature to our ſelues. He that would ſeeme old cannot make [i] one haire of his head white, nor he that would be young one hoarie haire blacke. It is God that did wonderfully frame vs in our mother wombes,[k] beholding our ſubſtance being yet vnperfect, and in his booke are all our members written; it is God that did more wonderfully bring vs into the world, inſomuch that women haue iuſt cauſe to praiſe him for their deliuerance: it is God alone that doth moſt wonderfully preſerue vs in our nonage, middle-age, doteage, while we vſe foure legs two legs, three legs; as [l] Adam was, ſo euery ſonne of Adam is in this reſpect the [m] ſonne of God. That our hands therefore may be taught to [n] warre, and our fingers to fight, that our [o] feet may be like Harts feet, and our armes able to breake a bow of ſteele, that our ſonnes may grow vp as the [p] young plants, and that our daughters may be as the poliſhed corners of the temple, that we may plow with our owne [q] heiffer, and reioyce with the wife of our [r] youth; that our wife may be like the fruitfull vine and our [s] children like oliue branches round about our table, we muſt entreat theſe bleſſings of the father of light, from whom only commeth euery good and perfect gift.

The noble skill in Phyſicke ſtanding vpon [t] two legs, experience and reaſon, is an excellent meanes aſſuredly for the preſeruation of our health; and yet for all this it is the great Doctor, which hath heauen for his chaire, that keepeth vs aliue. If the [u] keepers of our houſe doe not tremble, and the grinders doe not ceaſe, if the ſiluer cord be not lengthened, and the golden ewer broken, if our eies the windowes of our body be not darke, it is the good gift of the Father of light: for ſo [x] ſoone as he is angry, all our daies are gone, we bring our yeeres to an end euen as a tale that is told. Reade Pſalmes 90. 91.

Thirdly, for the gifts of the minde appertaining to the will or vnderſtanding, or both, all of them are from God; the Father of lights enlightneth our vnderſtanding, he gaue wiſdome to [y] Salomon, for which he was ſo renowned in all the world; and it was he who tooke away knowledge from Georgius Trapezuntius, who being one of the greateſt clerks in all his time, forgat all his learning, as [z] Volaterane writes, and his name too, as [a] other report. And therefore the Poets in the beginning of their treatiſes vſually did inuocate the gods for their aſſiſtance; and the firſt character our forefathers taught their children was Chriſts Croſſe, and the firſt leſſon in their Primer, was, In the name of the Father, &c. and the firſt copie in their ſchoole, was In my beginning God be my ſpeed. And [b] Sarisburienſis in Policratico counſelleth all Students humbly to knocke at heauen gate, that the key of knowledge may open vnto them a doore of vtterance; for God only is wiſe, wiſdome it ſelfe, in whoſe hand is the booke of knowledge, from whence commeth euery good and perfect gift.

[c] There are diuerſities of gifts, but the ſame ſpirit; diuerſities of adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord; diuerſities of operations, but God is the ſame who worketh all in all. Diuerſities of gifts among the Apoſtles; Paul was good at planting, Apollos at watering: diuerſities of gifts among the Fathers, [d] ſome conſtrued, the Scriptures allegorically, as Origen; other more litterally, as Hierome; other morally, as Gregorie the great; other pathetically, as Chryſoſtome; other dogmatically, as Auguſtine.

Diuerſities of gifts among the new Writers, as Martin [e] Luther wrote on the wals of his chamber with chalke:

Res & verba Philippus, res ſine verbis Lutherus, Verba ſine re, Eraſmus, nec res nec verba Carolaſtadius.

Diuerſities of gifts among ordinarie Preachers, [f] aly ſenſu ampli ſed non ore; aly ſenſu inopes, ſed ore torrentes; aly neque ſenſu ampli, neque ore; aly ſenſu ampli, & ore. Some haue bad vtterance, but a good conceit; other, excellent vtterance, but a meane wit; ſome neither, and ſome both. of conſcience, a fourth exquiſite in determining ſchoole doubts. In a word, ſome be iudicious to enforme the vnderſtanding, other powerfull to reforme the will and affection. All theſe diuers gifts are from aboue, comming downe from one and the ſame Father of lights.

If any man then haue a deſire to diſcourſe with Salomon of all trees euen from the [g] Cedar that is in Lebanon, vnto the hyſſope that ſpringeth out of the wall; if any deſire to martiall his words and adorne his phraſe, that they may be like [h] apples of gold with pictures of ſiluer; if any deſire to ſpeake with the [i] tongue of men and Angells; if any lacke wiſdome let him, ſaith [k] our Apoſtle, begge it of God, who giueth to all men liberally, from whom commeth euery good and perfect gift.

As for gifts appertaining to the will, [l] S. Paul affirmeth plainly that all our ſufficiencie is of God; he doth indeed out of his abundant loue repute his owne benefits our gifts (as [m] Tully writes of Lentulus) Facit abundantiâ quadam amoris, vt etiam grata ſint ea, quæ prætermitti ſine nefario ſcelere non poſſunt: but as [n] Auguſtine elegantly, Quiſquis tibi enumerat vera merita ſua, quid tibi enumerat niſi munera tua? and in [o] another place, bona mea dona tua.

As for faith, an eſpeciall gift belonging (as ſome thinke) both to the will and vnderſtanding, it is the faire [p] gift of God, without which all other are no gifts Ipſum velle credere Deus operatur in homine: God worketh in man the firſt deſire to beleeue, ſaith [q] Auguſtine. If any man aske why this man doth beleeue, and another doth not beleeue, cur illi ita ſuadeatur, vt perſuadeatur illis autem non ita? I can giue him none other anſwer but that of [r] Paul, O the deepneſſe of the riches both of the wiſdome and knowledge of God! how vnſearchable are his iudgements, and his waies paſt finding out? [s] Cui reſponſio iſta diſplicet, querat doctiores, ſed caueat ne inueniat præſumptores.

For if thou wert ſo glorious as an Angell, or thy meat ſo good as Manna that fell from heauen, or thy garments ſo precious as Aarons Ephod, or thy breath ſo ſweet as the perfume of the Tabernacle, yet all theſe could not ſet one of thy feet into Chriſts kingdome, only God worketh all in all, in whom we liue, and moue and haue our being naturally, ciuilly, ſpiritually, eternally. So that euery Chriſtian in reſpect of all theſe may ſay with [t] Paul, By the grace of God I am whatſoeuer I am. And with that good Father [u] Auguſtine: Omne bonum noſtrum vel, ipſe vel ab ipſo: All our good is either God or from God, God in the life of glorie, from God in the life of nature, creating vs, when we were not, and preſeruing vs euer ſince we were, and in the life of grace beſtowing vpon vs daily priuatiue grace to defend vs from euill, and poſitiue grace enabling vs to doe good.

[x] If God then be with vs, who can be againſt vs? Who can be? man will be, the world will be, the fleſh will be, the deuill will be. But if God be with vs in our creation, with vs in our preſeruation, with vs in our regeneration, with vs in our glorification; then man albeit neuer ſo bloody, ſhall not take away our naturall life; the world albeit neuer ſo malitious, ſhall not take away our ciuill life; the fleſh albeit neuer ſo fraile, ſhall not take away our ſpirituall life; the deuill, albeit he rage like a roaring Lion, ſhall not take away our eternall life.

This doctrine teacheth euery man to renounce his owne little merits, and to magnifie Gods great mercy, to renounce whatſoeuer is in himſelfe, of himſelfe [y] For what hath he, that he hath not receiued? and if he haue receiued all his gifts from God, why doth he boaſt as if he receiued them not? he hath not ſo much as a rag to his backe, or a morſell for his belly, or a good haire on his head, or a good thought in his minde, but it is a gift and a grace, [z] Boni ſi quid habeo à Deo ſumpſi non á me præſum ſi, And Hugo Cardinalis in this very well: Omnia mea mala purè mala ſunt & mea, omnia mea bona purè bona ſunt & non mea: Whatſoeuer is euill in me is from me, but that which is good came downe from the father of lights.

And therefore [a] let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdome, nor the ſtrong man in his ſtrength, nor the rich man in his riches: all of vs are ſtewards, and theſe goods are none of our owne, but committed vnto vs only for a time, that we may well employ employ them for our masters aduantage. For at his generall Audit, he will reckon with vs in all our receits and expences; he will come and say, [b] How is it that I heare this of thee? giue an account of thy stewardship thou mayst be no longer steward.

[b] Luke 16.2.

The second inference is, that we must laud and magnifie the mercies of God, from whom commeth euery good and perfect gift. [c] All the Psalmes of Dauid are contained in these two words, Halleluia and Hosanna, blessed be God, and God blesse, as being all made to pray to God for mercies, or to praise him for deliuerance from miseries.

[c] Gueuara.

Ingratitude is a monster in nature, a solecisme in manners, a paradox in religion: a [d] monster in nature, for the [e] heauens declare the glory of God &c. the chirping birds sing such Psalmes as they can vnto the Creator euery morning when they rise, and euery euening before they rest. If thou bestow a little seed vpon the ground, it will within a few moneths againe returne to you sometime thirty fold, sometime sixtie fold, sometimes an hundred fold, as our Sauiour speaketh in the Gospell. Nature teacheth vs to be so thankfull, that vsually we call him that is gratefull, a kinde man, but an ingratefull wretch, an vnnaturall man.

Secondly, it is an absurd solecisme in manners and ciuility consisting of two vices; falshood in not acknowledging, iniustice in not requiting a benefit. It is written of Alexander the Great, and Iulius Cæsar, two renowned Emperors, the one for his liberalitie, the other for his patience; that Alexander would neuer giue, nor Cæsar forgiue an ingratefull man.

Lastly, vnthankfulnesse is a paradox in religion and Diuinity, for God bestoweth vpon vs all things, and requireth only this one thing, to be thankfull; he made all things for man, and man for himselfe. It is worth but little, that is not worth grand mercie, yet this is all God requireth of vs for all: ascendat ergo gratia vt descendat gratia, let vs send vp our gifts to God, that he may send downe his gifts to vs. O let vs sing and say with the Psalmist, [f] O giue thanks vnto the Lord for he is gratious, and his mercy endureth for euer. [g] Euery day will I giue thanks and praise thy name for euer and euer. [h] Reioyce in the Lord ô yee righteous, for it becommeth well the iust to be thankfull.

[f] Psal. 136.
[h] Psal. 33. 1.

[i] Dauid considering the great and infinite bountifulnesse of the Lord toward him, crieth out, Quid retribuam Domino? What reward shall I giue to the Lord for all the benefits he hath done vnto me? If Dauid, a King, a Prophet, a Saint, inward with God, vnderstood not what to present vnto the Lord for the good blessings he had receiued; then what shall we doe, which vnderstand not what to say, nor haue not what to giue? For if euery good gift be from aboue, our abilitie is to small, that if God doe not giue wherewith to giue, of our selues we haue not what to giue.

[i] Psal. 116.11.

Let euery Christian soule therefore, to the glory of God, confesse with [k] Paul that of him, and through him, and for him are all things. Of him, from whom commeth euery good and perfect gift: through him, enioying these gifts by his goodnesse, in whom is no variableneſſe or change: for him, that we should be the first fruits of his creatures Other creatures praise God in their kinde, and after their manner, [l] the Sunne, the Moone, Fire and Haile, Snow and vapors fulfilling his word: but Man, for whom all these things were made, should be most thankfull, the first fruits of his creatures, as our Apostle speakes. I will therefore shut vp this text, as Paul did his excellent discourse, Rom. 11. seeing all things are of him, through him, and for him, as we are bound, so let vs giue to him all praise, and honour, and glory, now and for euer. Amen.

The Gospell. IOHN. 16. 5.

Iesus said vnto his Disciples, now I goe my way to him that sent me, and none of you asketh me whether I goe, &c.

IN this Gospell our blessed Sauiour doth first chide, then comfort his Disciples.

He chides especially for their. { Silence, none of you asketh me whether I goe. Sorrow, because I haue sayd such things vnto you, your hearts are full of Sorrow.

He comforts in shewing that his departing is expedient: { 1. By protestation, I tell you the truth. 2. By demonstration, If I go not away, the Comforter will not come vnto you, but if I depart, I will send him, and he when he is come shall { Correct the world in 3. things, euidently rebuking it of { Sinne. Righteousnes Iudgement. Direct you in all things, he will lead you into all truth.

I goe my way] Christ went away two waies, in his death and in his ascension: in the one considered as man totally, in the other finally; he went away by death on the crosse totally, for his [m] body went away to mother earth, and his [n] soule went away to his Father, and yet within three daies he came againe, but in his ascension he left the world finally; so the Text [o] expresly, whom the heauen must containe vntill the time that all things be restored, which God hath spoken by the mouth of his holy Prophets since the world began. [p] As the Griffin is like the Lambe in his legge, the Lion in his backe, the Eagle in his beake; so Christ in his passion was a Lambe, in his resurrection as a Lion, in his ascension an Eagle, for he went away to his Father, and of this finall departing, this text is to be construed, and therefore chosen fitly for a Sunday betweene the feast of his glorious resurrection and ascension.

None of you asketh me whether I goe.] [q] S. Peter did aske Lord, whither goest thou? [r] S. Thomas did aske, Lord, we know not whether thou goest: how then is it true, none of you asketh me whether I goe? [s] S. Augustine doth answer thus: In mine ascension I will goe to my Father in such sort, that none of you need aske whither I goe; [t] for ye shal behold with your eyes, and stand gazing on me when I shall be taken vp into heauen.

[u] Rupertus assoileth the doubt otherwise: Yee did aske whither I went, and were forward to goe with me, till I told you that I should die, but now none of you asketh whither I goe, being as it should seeme more ready to flie then to follow.

But [x] Euthymius in my iudgement most aptly: Ye did aske me before, but I did not answer you fully, why then doe you not continue questioning and further asking, vntill yee be resolued? assuredly the reason hereof is, because your hearts are full of sorrow, considering only that I goe, not whither I goe. [y] Nemo vestrum expendit verè, quò & cur abeam.

The Papists in hunting too much after the carnall and grosse presence of Christ in the Sacrament, [z] erre with the Disciples here. [a] So doth euery worldling in being too much afflicted for the death of his friend, wife, childe, grieuing because they be gone, not vnderstanding whither they be gone; let vs learne then that euery childe of God, after his departure, goeth vnto his Father, euen to sweet rest, as in the [b] bosome of a father, where [c] all teares are wiped from his eyes and cares from his heart. As Christ, the Sonne of God by nature, so the Christian a Sonne of God by grace, [d] may well say when he dieth, I goe my way to him that sent me, neither ought any doubt whether I goe. [e] S. Stephen at his martyrdome, as Christ on his crosse, cried, Lord receiue my spirit.

I tell you the truth.] He being the truth, in whose mouth was no guile, spake the truth alway, but he doth vse this earnest asseueration, to shew the [f] weight of the matter, and inforce the greater credence thereunto. By this example we may learne to forbeare swearing in our ordinarie communication howsoeuer wee speake the truth, and a truth of importance. Many men are so prodigall of their soules health and Credit, that they will pawne both at euery word for euery trifle; but when our report is neglected, it is enough to say with Christ, I tell you the truth; I assure you, verily verily, or the like protestations.

It is expedient for you.] It is very [g] remarkable, that he saith not expedit mihi but expedit vobis, euery one will make much of one, [h] seeking their owne, saying with [i] Caiaphas, It is expedient for vs, but Christ, it is expedient for you, preferring our welfare before his owne good. It was not expedient for him, [k] who was the Sonne of God, to take on him the shape of a seruant, and yet [l] for vs men and our saluation he came downe from heauen, and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost. It was not expedient for him to be called conjurer and Samaritan, to be scoffed, scorned scourged, and yet he [m] suffered all this for vs, leauing vs an ensample, that we should follow his steps. It was not expedient for him that he should die: Father, [n] O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup passe from me; but yet he was [o] wounded for our transgressions, he was broken for our iniquities, and with his stripes are we healed; he then that will follow Christ must [p] not seeke his owne, but euery man one anothers good.

So long as children hang on the teat, they cannot away with strong meat; that therefore they may digest hard diet, it is expedient they should be weaned. Our Sauiours bodily presence was vnto his disciples as [x] milke; for it was but a weake faith they then had in him, and a very carnall loue they bare toward him, in comparison of that which followed afterward; they still imagined that he was an earthly Monarch, and that he would highly [y] preferre them in his glory, setting some on his right hand, and other at his left; euen the last houre when he was departing all of them said ioyntly, [z] Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdome to Israel? It was time therefore to weane them, and by going away to shew that his kingdome was not of [a] this world, that they might no more depend vpon his bodily presence, but auouch with [b] S. Paul, Henceforth know we no man after the flesh, yet though we had knowne Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. [c] Gods holy Gospell and the Holy Ghost are the glasse wherin we must behold Christ. Christ remaining here below was not so well fitted to giue, for ascending vp on high, he gaue gifts vnto men: and the Disciples were not so capable to receiue, [f] for the more they delighted in the flesh, the lesse fit to be comforted by the spirit: *Consule Iansen. concord. cap. 75. bibliothec. concionum tom. 3. fol. 106. He will rebuke the world] [k] To wit, by your preaching and miniſtrie; ſo Noe led by the Spirit rebuked the old world; Moſes by the ſame Spirit rebuked Pharao, Iohn Baptiſt rebuked Herod, Elizeus and Eliah the Kings of Iſrael, and ſo Chriſt his Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors in all ages. It is the Spirit rebukes the world, that is, worldlings, all men vnregenerate, who continue ſtill in their ſinnes and ignorance, called here the world, becauſe there is a world of ſuch men, as the vulgar Latine Eccleſiaſtes 1. 15. infinitus numerus, a number without number. Or as [q] other, all men in the world, for the [r] whole world lieth in wickedneſſe, and is by nature guilty before God of ſinne. The ſpirit therefore conuinceth all men of ſinne, Gods elect for their conuerſion, the reprobate for their confuſion, according to that of [s] Paul, If all prophecie, and there come in one that beleeueth not, and is vnlearned, he is rebuked of all men, and iudged of all men, and ſo are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt, and he will fall downe on his face, and worſhip God, and ſay plainly that God is in you indeed.

Of righteouſneſſe, becauſe I goe to my Father.] This may be conſtrued either of Chriſts righteouſneſſe imputed to vs, or of his perſonall inherent righteouſneſſe in himſelfe. This is [y] our righteouſneſſe, that Chriſt died for our ſinnes and roſe againe for our iuſtification, that he went away to the Father, and there pleads our cauſe before God as an Interceſſor and Aduocate, which is the reconciliation for our ſinnes, 1. saying of Christ was fulfilled on Whitsunday: for no sooner had the Holy Ghost descended on the blessed Apostles, and giuen vtterance, but Peter instantly began to preach, and the maine point of his Sermon was this [g] Hearken, O ye men of Israel, Iesus of Nazaret, a man approued of God among you with great workes, and wonders, and signes, which God did by him in the midst of you, as your selues also know; him I say haue ye taken by the hands of the wicked, being deliuered by the determinate counsell and fore-knowledge of God, and haue crucified and slaine &c. *Therefore let all the house of Israel know for a surety, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ. The Papists haue [l] no ground here for their vnwritten traditions, nor Anabaptists for their infused reuelations; he taught the Disciples, and the Disciples wrote as they were [m] taught. And the word written is the rule of faith, a guide to leade vs into all truth: he did not preach another Gospell, nor a new Christ, as it is in the text, he shall not speake of himselfe, but whatsoeuer he shall heare, that shall he speake, and he will shew you things to come, he shall glorifie me, for he shall receiue of mine, and shall shew vnto you: all things that the Father hath, are, mine therefore said I vnto you, that he shall take of mine and shew vnto you. Christ spake from his [n] Father, the Spirit from Christ, the blessed Apostles from the Spirit. Whatsoeuer then is contrary to sacred writ, is not an illumination of the Holy Ghost, but an illusion of the prince of darkenesse, [o] blinding the mindes of vnbeleeuers, that the light of the glorious Gospell, which is the image of God, should not shine vnto them. And therefore let vs [p] search the Scripture, [q] to the law, to the testimonie, to the Gospells and Epistles, as they be recorded in the holy Bible, for by these and in these the Comforter leads vs into all truth, [r] in this life giuing vs all fit, in the next all full knowledge, when as we shall see God face to face.

A Scripture which cannot better fit this time of the yeere, than this age of the world; wherein [s] too many make perfunctorie hearing of Sermons all both dutie and fruit of their religion, as if they did owe nothing but their eares vnto the Lord; whereas he who speaketh by the eare to the heart, speaketh to the eare but for the heart; and that we may both heare with reuerence, and beleeue to obedience, requireth a kinde of [t] circumcision both of heart and eare, yea he denounceth them to be of vncircumcised eares and [u] vncircumcised hearts, who by not obeying the word resist the Holy Ghost.

[t] Deut. 10. 16.

[u] Act. 7. 51.

The

The whole text of it owne accord falls into 2. parts:
- An exhortation, See that ye be doers of the word, and not hearers only.
- A double reason inforcing the same:
  1. A periculo, for such as declare not the word by their workes, are vaine in their deuotion, and deceiue themselues.
  2. A præmio, who so looketh in the perfect law of libertie, and continueth therein (if he be not a forgetfull hearer, but a doer of the worke) the same shall be happy in his deed.

See that ye be doers.] All the bels of Aaron and Christ ring this peale; [x] Hearken, O Israel, vnto the lawes which I teach you to doe: [y] for the hearers of the Law are not righteous before God, but the doers of the Law shall be iustified. [z] Blessed are they that heare the word of God and keepe it. He that hath my commandements and keepeth them, is he that loueth me, Ioh. 14. 21. [a] Qui habet in memoria & seruat in vita; qui habet in sermonibus, & seruat in moribu; qui habet audiendo, & seruat faciendo: aut qui habet faciendo, & seruat perseuerando ipse est, qui diligit me. [b] Lex enim Dei tenetur non audiendo, sed obediendo; non lectione, sed dilectione. So [c] S. Hierome, Scripturarum cupimus verba in opera vertere & non dicere sancta, sed facere: so the rest of the [d] Fathers haue well obserued, that Christian religion consists in practise more than in theorie, being an occupation rather than a meere profession. De virtute loqui minimum, virtutibus vti, hic labor, hoc opus est, quoth Persius, hoc Sampsonis opus est, said Tertullian.

[c] Our Apostle doth not meane that we must satisfie Gods law, declaring his word by our workes in euery point fully; (for, as [f] Aquine determineth, Implentur præcepta in patria perfectè, sed in via imperfectè) but that we should vndoubtedly beleeue Gods holy Gospell, and so much as we can, endeuour to shew forth our faith in our honest conuersation among men; [g] he doth the will of God, who doth the best he can to doe it, [h] illud pro facto reputat Deus, quod homo quidem verè voluit, sed non valuit adimplere.

Not hearers only.] [i] We may not hence neglect hearing to lessen our damnation for ignorance which ariseth out of contempt doth accuse more than excuse, [k] Dauid hath branded the wicked with this indeleble blot, noluit intelligere, vt benè ageret, and [l] S. Paul saith, If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant. [m] If he will not be taught, he must remaine ignorant to his owne perill. Or as it is in the vulgar Latine, ignorans ignorabitur, [n] he that will not know God, shall not be knowne of God; for Christ in the last day will say to such as haue refused his counsell and cast his words behinde them, I neuer knew you, Matth. 7. 3. We must therefore be first hearers, and then doers of the word. A man may know the will of God, and yet not doe it, but he cannot doe it except he know it.

For if any man heare the word of God, and declareth not the same by his workes, he is like vnto a man beholding his bodily face in a glasse.] God hath giuen euery one two glasses in which he may behold himselfe, the glasse of the creatures, and the glasse of the Scriptures. He may see what he is for his life naturall in the glasse of the world, what he should be for his life spirituall in the glasse of Gods holy Saints and of his owne conscience: but the [o] Scriptures are the most cleare glasse wherein he may behold both, and conforme himselfe according to Gods image.

Now then as he that dresseth himselfe by the glasse, doth not only behold the blemishes of his countenance and vnhandsomnesse of his trimme, but instantly correct all things amisse, that his fashion and face may be comely: [p] so we must not reade the Scriptures and heare Sermons only to know the sins of our soules and deformities of our life, but we must amend all [q] euen by ruling our selues according to the word; otherwise, saith our Apostle, we deceiue our selues, and our deuotion is in vaine. For pure religion arising from the root of a liuely faith, euermore brancheth forth into workes of charity, visiting the fatherlesse & widowes in their need; and into works of innocencie, keeping our selues vnspotted of the world.

If any man among you seeme to be deuout, and refraineth not his tongue, but deceiueth his owne heart, his religion is vaine, [r] becauſe it doth not attaine the end, as phyſicke is vaine that procures not health to the body; [f] for in Ieſus Chriſt neither circumciſion auaileth any thing, neither vncircumciſion, but faith which worketh by loue, ſhewing it ſelfe in our pure thoughts and vndefiled workes, [t] in cordis intentione religio munda, in operis executione immaculata.

But who ſo looketh in the perfect law of libertie, and continueth therein (if he be not a forgetfull hearer, but a doer of the worke) the ſame ſhall be happie in his deed How the Law gendereth vnto bondage, and the Goſpell vnto freedome, ſee Epiſt. 4. Sunday in Lent. The Papiſts haue no ground here for their iuſtification by merit; for as [u] themſelues acknowledge, not the Law but the Goſpell is the perfect doctrine of libertie, the chiefe worke whereof is to beleeue. [x] Secondly S. Iames ſaith not ex opere ſuo, but in opere ſuo beatus, he ſhall be bleſſed in his worke, not for his worke. He ſhall be iuſtified by faith in Chriſt, manifeſting it ſelfe in ſpeaking well and liuing well, vndefiled before God vnſpotted of the world, refraining his tongue that it hurt none, and endeuouring himſelfe to doe good vnto all, eſpecially to ſuch as moſt want helpe, the fatherleſſe and widowes in their aduerſitie.

An hypocrite makes a maske of religion, or rather a very vizard, with mouth, eyes and noſe fairely painted for his purpoſe, ſeeming (ſaith our Apoſtle) to be deuout; but he that looketh in the perfect law of libertie, and continueth therein, [y] is made perfect indeed vnto all good workes, not to ſome kinde of good workes only, but to all and euery good worke, ſaith [z] Thophylact, and that not after a vulgar manner (as Oecumenius vpon the place) but perfect and abſolute, ſo farre as a [a] humane frailtie will permit.

The Goſpell. IOHN. 16. 23.

Verily, verily, I ſay vnto you, whatſoeuer ye aske the Father in my name, he will giue it you.

THis weeke is termed vſually Rogation weeke, à [b] rogando Deum, as being extraordinarily conſecrated aboue all other weekes in the yeere vnto prayers and ſupplications. A religious ordination of ſincere antiquitie, not a ſuperſtitious inuention of vpſtart poperie; for it is more then probable, that Rogations were in the Church before the dayes of S. Auguſtine, as it is [c] obſerued out of his 173. Sermon de tempore, preached on Aſcenſion eue, as alſo out of the titles of other his Sermons, De Dominica in rogationibus, and feria ſecunda, & tertia in rogationibus, tom. 10. fol 691. 694. 695.

And though haply ſome ſuſpect this authority, yet it is acknowledged as well by [d] proteſtant Writers as [e] Popiſh, that this ancient order was either inuented, or elſe reſtored by Mamercus or, Mamertus Biſhop of Vienna, long before the time of Pope Gregorie the great, anno 452. The reaſons of this holy cuſtome I finde principally to be [f] two: firſt, becauſe Princes about this time of the yeere vndertake their warres, a point at this inſtant too well knowne in France. Secondly, becauſe, the fruits of the earth, being in their bloſſome, are in greateſt hazard; in both which reſpects all Chriſtians haue good occaſion at this ſeaſon eſpecially to pray. The Church then hath well fitted the time with a Text, a Goſpell of Rogation againſt the weeke of Rogation, inciting all people to pray, and inſtructing them how to pray.

There be three words in this Scripture, which encourage vs to pray:
1. Becauſe God is our Father.
2. Becauſe he loueth vs, verſ. 27.
3. Becauſe he hath promiſed to heare our prayers, aske and ye ſhall receiue, verſ. 24. and in the firſt words, I ſay whatſoeuer ye aske the Father in my name he will giue it you.

So

So that Almighty God being tied vnto vs as it were by a three-fold bond, of his father-hood, loue promiſe, cannot but heare our prayers and grant our requeſts. I ſay, yea I ſweare, Verily, Verily, I ſay, whatſoeuer, [h] excepting no ſuite, ye ſhall aske, not another for you, it ſhall be giuen you, it ſhall coſt nothing, only aske and ye ſhall haue, ſeeke and yee ſhall finde, knocke and it ſhall be opened vnto you.

Yea, but God heares not the petitions of all men at all times. It is true that he denieth the ſuits of ſome daily, becauſe they aske not duly, according to that of [i] S. Iames, Ye aske and receiue not, becauſe ye aske amiſſe.

Chriſt therefore teacheth vs here,
1. What to aske, Whatſoeuer, &c.
2. Of whom to aske, of God the Father.
3. How to ask, of God as of a Father in the name of Chriſt his Son, intimating two rules obſeruable in our oriſons:
1. That we be not timidi, becauſe God is our Father.
2 That we be not tumidi, ſtanding vpon our owne deſert, but relying vpon the merits of Chriſt Whatſoeuer ye aske the Father, in my name, he will giue it you.

Whatſoeuer.] [k] This generall is to be reſtrained vnto ſuch ſuits as are meete for vs to begge as dutifull children, and for God to beſtow as a louing and wiſe Father, otherwiſe he doth croſſe our deſire,

when as we craue [l] vel mala, things in their owne nature bad, or not good for vs.
malè, good things for bad ends.

Firſt, when we ſhall aske mala, things vnlawfull and hurtfull, as exquiſite knowledge in poyſoning, ſorcerie, coniuring, witchcraft, and the like damnable ſciences; [m] Non petitur in nomine Saluatoris, quicquid petitur contra rationem ſalutis. If ye, ſaith [n] Chriſt, which are euill can giue to your children gifts that are good, how much more ſhall your Father in heauen? what man if his Sonne aske him bread, would giue him a ſtone? or if he aske a fiſh, would giue him a ſerpent? In like manner, Almighty God, as an indulgent father, giueth vs our daily bread, and all other things expedient for children, as well concerning this as the next life, but he will not giue vs a ſerpent, leſt it ſhould hurt vs, nor a ſtone, leſt vnhappily we ſhould hurt other, leſt, I ſay, we take this ſtone and fling it at the head of ſome of his friends; and therefore [o] Damaſcenus aptly deſcribed prayer to be petitio decentium, a requeſt of ſuch things as are fit for God to giue and vs to haue.

For God denieth often not onely bad things in their owne nature, but alſo good, if not good for vs. Our Father knoweth that Bees are drowned in honie but liue in vineger, and that his children are beſt affected, when they be moſt afflicted: he therefore will not grant vnto the prodigall childe all his portion, leſt he ſpend it in riot; nor to the luſtie gallant alwaies health, that his inward man may be cured, while the outward is diſeaſed, that the ſinnes of his ſoule may be leſſened, while the ſores of his fleſh are increaſed.

As the learned Phyſitian procureth his patient a gentle ague, that he may cure him of a more dangerous diſeaſe, vt curet ſpaſmum procurat febrim: ſo the ſpirituall Phyſitian of our ſoule, ſæpè facit opus quod non eſt ſuum, vt ita faciat opus, quod eſt ſuum, he doth often croſſe our ſuits, a worke contrary to mercy, that ſo he may ſhew his greater mercie; and [p] albeit in the time of the ſhowre we cannot ſee thorow the cloud, yet in the end we ſhall finde it was for our weale, ſaying with the [q] Pſalmiſt, It was good for me that I haue beene in trouble.

Againe, God will not giue, when we ſhall aske good things for bad ends, according to that of [r] S. Iames, Ye luſt and haue not, ye aske and receiue not, becauſe ye aske to conſume it on your luſts. As ſome deſire to be great, that their neighbor may be little, whereas they ſhould deſire goods of the world to doe good in the world, for riches are called [ſ] bona, non quod faciant bonum, ſed vnde faciat bonum, and ſome deſire the gifts of the body, not to ſerue God, or preſerue the State, but to be tall in tipling and [r] ſtrong in drinking, And ſome deſire the gifts of the minde, as learning and vnderſtanding, not for inſtruction of Gods people, but for deſtruction of the Church; as the Schiſmatickes in their factious inuectiues, againſt the preſent gouernment, contrary to Chriſt, for he made of [u] two one but [x] they make of one two. Chriſt conioyned Iewes and Gentiles, and made them one Congregation, fecit vtraq́, vnum, of both one; but they perceiuing the Church at vnitie within it ſelfe, diuide the coat of Chriſt without ſeame, as Auguſtine of the Donatiſts in his 171. Epiſtle.

So that it is ordinarie with God for theſe cauſes, and the like to giue a curſt cow ſhort hornes, and to diſmiſſe impudent beggers without an almes, becauſe they begge amiſſe. For all that is of the world, as the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and pride of life, is not of the Father, it is no gift for a Father to giue, ſaith 1 S. Iohn. It is not [z] quid, but a nothing, and therefore not within the large compaſſe of quæcunque petieritis.

It is true that the bleſſed virgin did [a] aske wine of Chriſt, and [b] Iames and Iohn deſired that one of them might ſit at his right hand, and the other at his left in his kingdome; and in [c] another place they deſired fire from heauen, and yet Chriſt ſaith in my text, hitherto haue yee asked me nothing; becauſe theſe things were bad things, at leaſt not good things for them.

But if we ſhall aske good things and for good intents, according to the good will of our Father, he will beſtow them vpon vs, howſoeuer he deferre our ſuit for a time: firſt, that we may deſire [d] Magna magnè, great things with great earneſtnes, as our Sauiour declares in the parables of the importunate friend, Luk. 11 and importunate widow, Luke 18. Secondly, that God hereby might the more commend his benefits and bleſſings, for that which is eaſily got is ſoone forgot itaque cùm aliquando tardiùs dat, commendat dona ſua non negat. Thirdly, God heares not all men at all times for all things, leſt we ſhould imagine that he grant our requeſts out of fatall neceſſitie, not as a louing father out of liberall bountie. [e] Si ſemper exaudiret omnes, non iam ex voluntate liberâ, ſed ex quadam velut neceſſitate facere videretur. Fourthly, God doth often denie the ſame thing that we craue, that he may conferre vpon vs better things, [f] non tribuit ſæpè quod volumus, vt quod malimus attribuat.

Fiftly, God heares our prayers in ſpirituall things, albeit we doe not inſtantly feele ſo much; [g] as a traueller after meat recouereth his ſtrength to trauell further although he eat ſometime without any taſte or appetite; ſo meditations and prayers, which adminiſter both fewell and flame to deuotion, incenſe in vs ſome ſpirituall ſtrength, howſoeuer for a time we feele little ſpirituall ſolace. So that in concluſion, if we continue deuoute, we ſhall aſſuredly finde our Sauiours promiſe to be moſt true, Whatſoeuer you ſhall aske the Father in my name, he will giue it you

The ſecond maine point of this Scripture to be further examined, is, of whom we muſt aske to whom we muſt pray?

[h] The Church of England requireth eſpecially foure conditions in ſuch a one:

1. That he be able to helpe.
2. That he be willing to helpe.
3. That he be ſuch an one as may heare our prayers.
4. That he vnderſtand what we lacke better then our ſelues.

If theſe things are to be found in any other, ſauing only God, then we may call vpon ſome other beſides God. If not, [i] idem eſt fingere multos Deos & ſanctos mortuos inuocare, to worſhip old ſaints is to make new Gods, praying vnto dead men is diſhonorable to the liuing God, a ſpeech highly taxed by [k] Bellarmine in the ruffe of his Rhetorick, yet handled gently with the fiſt of his Logick; for himſelfe being a Ieſuite, is aſhamed of the blaſphemous phraſes vſed in the Romane Miſſals, as Maria mater gratiæ, ſancte Petre miſerere mei, ſalua me, aperi mihi aditum cœli, &c. Theſe are our words indeed, but our meaning is not ſo, ſaith the [l] he, that the Virgin, or Peter, or any Saint ſhould conferre vpon vs any grace in this life, or glory in the next; the which is acknowledged alſo by the Rhemiſts in their annotations vpon the firſt of Timothy, 2. 5. Herein agreeing with [m] Aquin and other Schoolemen, affirming that our prayers are to be made to God alone, tanquam per eum implenda, but vnto the Saints, tanquam per eos impetranda; yet [n] S. Paul ſaith expreſly, there is one God and one mediatour between God and man, the man Chriſt Ieſus. And [o] S. Iohn; If any man ſinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father Ieſus Chriſt the iuſt, and he is the propitiation for our ſinnes; and my text here, whatſoeuer ye ſhall aske, not in Maries or Peters name, but in my name, &c.

The Papiſts haue coyned three diſtinctions for anſwering to theſe three places; vnto that of Paul, they ſay, Chriſt is the ſole mediator of redemption, but not of interceſſion, [p] opus eſt mediatore ad mediatorem Chriſtum, we need a mediator of interceſſion vnto Chriſt the mediator of redemption: [q] but this diſtinction will not ſerue, becauſe Paul in that text ſpeakes of prayer and interceſſion, as it is apparent in the beginning of the Chapter; I exhort you that firſt of all prayers, ſupplications, interceſſions and giuing of thanks be made for all men.

To that of S. Iohn; If any man ſinne we haue an aduocate, &c. [r] Their anſwer is, that Chriſt is our chiefe aduocate, Saints and Angels are ſecondarie: but [s] Auguſtine, citing this Scripture, ſaith, if S. Iohn had offered himſelfe to be an aduocate, as Parmenian placed the Biſhop betweene God and the people, he ſhould haue beene no good Apoſtle but Antichriſt, for the word Aduocate is borrowed of Lawyers, and ſignifieth him onely that doth plead the iuſtice of his Clients cauſe. A ſtranger in the Court may become a petitioner vnto the Iudge, and intreat fauour for the perſon guilty, but aduocates are procters and patrons of their Clients, as [t] Ciuilians tell vs, and therefore though Angels in heauen & Saints on earth are petitioners in our behalfe to God, yet Chriſt alone is our aduocate, who can plead his iuſtice beſtowed vpon vs; for Chriſt is our aduocate in that he is the reconciliation for our ſins: If any man ſin, we haue an aduocate with the Father, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous. & he is the reconciliation for our ſins; as if S. Iohn ſhould argue thus; [u] he which muſt be an aduocate muſt firſt of all be a reconciliation for vs, no Saints can be a reconciliation for vs, ergo, no Saints can be aduocates.

The laſt diſtiction is [x] Bellarmines, intimating that a man may become mediator betweene diſagreeing parties three waies:

1. By declaring which hath wrong, and ſo there is no controuerſie, for Proteſtants and Papiſts agree, that God is the partie grieued.
2. By paying the creditor for the debtor, and ſo Chriſt alone is our mediatour.
3. By deſiring the Creditor to forgiue the debtor; aud in this ſenſe, ſaith he, Saints and Angels are our mediatours.

I anſwer, that this diſtinction is contrarie to the doctrine of their Schooles, and practiſe of their Church; [y] Aquin doth auow that our prayers are effectuall by the merits of Saints; and Bonauentura, that Mary can and may by the right of a mother command her ſonne Chriſt: and [z] Giſelbertus; Maria conſolatio infirmorum, redemptio captiuorum, liberatio damnatorum, ſalus vniuerſorum: and [a] Ozorius the Ieſuit; Caput gratiæ Chriſtus, Maria collum, quia omnis influxus à capite per collum deriuatur: and [b] ſo Chriſt in his kingdome of glory continueth in ſubiection vnto his mother; it is Mary that doth bruiſe the ſerpents head, ipſa conteret caput, as their new Bible corrected and allowed by the Tridentine Councell, although (as [c] Ribera confeſſeth ingenuouſly) the Hebrew text, the Chalde paraphraſe, the tranſlation of the Septuagint, & all good Latine copies read otherwiſe

And as for their practiſe, Chriſt in their publike prayers and priuate deuotions is made a mediatour [d] by the patronage of Apoſtles, interceſſion of martyrs, interuention of Confeſſors, by the bloud of S. Becket, by the helpe of S. Rook, by the merits of all Saints. And howſoeuer they bragge, that the concluſion of all their Collects is per Ieſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum; yet indeed they make Christ but halfe a mediatour and aduocate. Whatsoeuer the Iesuit prates in the Schooles, this the people practise in the Church, holding Angels and Saints immediate mediators able to satisfie and to saue, peruerting the whole Psalter of Dauid with Te Deum, Benedictus, Quicunque vult, Nunc dimittis, all to the honor, or rather indeed to the dishonour of the blessed Virgin.

Moreouer, if we shall admit euery particular Saint in the Popes Calender for a mediatour and aduocate, we shall not only worship vnknowne gods, as Paul told the Athenians, Acts 17. 23. but also vnknowne men. For it is doubted, and by Papists of best note, whether there were any S. George, S. Christopher, S. Katherin; Cardinall [c] Bellarmine doth confesse that the legends of these three Saints are vncertaine and apochryphall, according to the censure of Pope [f] Gelasius; and [g] Cæsar Baronius hath acknowledged as much of Quiriacus and Iulitta, [h] declaring plainly that their acts are written either by fooles or heretikes, and in his annotations vpon the Roman martyrologie 23. April, he take vp Iacobus de Voragine, for his leaden legend of our English George.

I thinke the Papists in great anger and malice to the State haue robbed England of her Saint; S. Dennys is for France, S. Iames for Spaine, and other Saints are allowed and allotted for other countries, onely poore England is bereaued of her George, they leaue none but God to reuenge all our quarrels, as we pray in our Liturgie, Giue peace in our time ô Lord because there is none other that fighteth for vs, but onely thou ô God. For which honour and fauour all English hearts are bound heartily to thanke them.

I write not this to dishonour that noble Order of the Garter, [i] dedicated vnto S. George by the most renowned King Edward the third. For (vnder correction and saluo semper honore ordinis) I take the George, which adornes those right honorable Worthies, to be symbolicall only, signifying, that a valiant Christian Knight should alway be ready to fight against the Dragon, and other enemies of the Church and State whatsoeuer.

But grant that all the saints in the Popes Calender were sometime men liuing on earth, and now blessed soules in heauen; how shall we know, whether they know the particular wants of euery particular man? our [k] prayer is a lifting vp of the minde and powring out of our soule before God, not a labour of the lips onely; but an inward groning of the spirit; now Saints and Angels vnderstand not the secrets of our thoughts, only God [l] trieth the very heart and reines, and therefore we must inuocate God alone.

Againe, suppposse they did know the meaning of the soule, yet to worship and inuocate them is derogatorie to the gratious promise of Christ in the Text, verily verily, I say vnto you, &c. Christ is the Master of Requests in the Court of heauen there is no need (as [m] Chrysostome speakes) of any porter, or mediatour, or minister but say thou thy selfe, Lord haue mercy vpon me, and God will be present, while thou art yet praying, he will say, I am come.

Thus I haue shewed whom we must aske, namely God alone, not the Father only, but the Son and Holy Ghost also: for albeit Father be taken here personally, for the first person in the Trinitie, yet being a word of relation, it implieth the Son, and the Father and the Son are not without the spirit: wee cannot consider God the Father but in the Sonne, and the Sonne makes vs his children by the Holy Ghost, called the spirit of [n] adoption, and the spirit of the [o] sonne crying in our hearts Abba Father; and therfore we must pray to God the Father in the name of God the Son, by the [p] powerfull assistance of the holy Ghost. And to what person soeuer the prayer is directed in word, we must alway remember to include the rest in minde, neither confounding the persons nor diuiding the substance, as Athanasius in his creed. If this one principle were well vnderstood, it would be no difficultie to conceiue how Christ may both pray for vs, and in vs, and be prayed to of vs. [q] Orat pro nobis, orat in nobis, oratur á nobis: he prayeth for vs, as our aduocate in vs, by his holy spirit; prayed to of vs as our euerlasting Father, Esay. 9. 6. Oramus, ergo, saith Augustine, ad illum, per illum, in illo; We pray to him, by him, in him

The first clause teacheth vs to pray with great [r] confidence; for what can he denie to vs, who made of vs his enemies, seruants; of seruants, sonnes; of sonnes, heires? Galat. 4. 7. and yet with all [s] reuerence, for a sonne honoureth his Father: if God then be our Father, where is his honour? Malac. 1. 6.

The second clause forbids all presumption and swelling with an opinion of our owne vertue, for we must not begge of our Father in our owne name, nor in any Saints name, but in the name of Christ; and when our suit is obtained, it is grace, not desert, it shall be giuen you. For as Dauid out of his loue to Ionathan was louing also to [t] Mephibosheth, although he was deformed and lame: so God is mercifull vnto vs wretched and deformed sinners for Christs sake in whom he is well pleased. And the words in nomine meo may comfort vs [u] against two great impediments in prayer; vnworthinesse, and distrust. For when our Sauiour saith, aske in my name, he would haue vs set his worthinesse against our vnworthinesse, and his promise against our distrust, in so much that a Christian soule may dispute with God after this manner: O most gratious Lord God thou hast said it and thy blessed Sonne hath sworne it, aske and ye shall haue. At this instant I arrest thy promise, beseeching thee most humbly to pardon all my sin, the matter of this suite is expedient for me to craue, and fit for thee to giue. And I desire it for good ends, according to thy good will; and as for the manner of my petition I begge it as a dutifull childe, of thine hands alone who art a most mercifull Father, willing and able to grant my request, and to ponder aright the voice of mine humble desire, and that not in mine owne but in his name who came into the world to saue sinners, of which I am chiefe. Thou wilt not the death of a sinner, and he will the life of a sinner. O Father of compassion and God of mercy whose word is a will and whose will is a power, who doest promise nothing but that which thou doest purpose, and purpose nothing but that which thou doest performe; suffer me, I pray thee, which am dust and ashes, to speake a few words vnto thy mercie. Lord if thou wilt not the death of a sinner, what necessitie is there that I should be damned? and if thou desire that a sinner should be conuerted, what difficultie is there that I should be saued.

No, no, good God, the deuill trembleth at thy presence, and if all the sinnes of ten thousand worlds were ballanced with the least of thy mercies, they could hold no weight, much lesse can the wickednesse of one poore soule sway thy powerfull and euer-mercifull will.

O sweet Sauiour, I beleeue that verily, which thou saist here, verily, verily I haue asked the Father, and the Spirit witnesseth to me that the Sonne hath obtained my suite: because O God it is easie to thy power, and vsuall to thy mercie, and agreeable to thy promise: Verily, verily, I say vnto you whatsoeuer yee shall aske the Father in my name he will giue it you.

All

All which exhortations he doth raiſe from this one ground, that the end of all things is at hand.

Now there be two kinds of end:

Finis conſummans, according to that of the [x] Wiſeman, Heare the end of all, feare God and keepe his commandements.

Finis conſumens, [y] as in this place, the end, that is, the deſtruction of the world, and of all things in the world is at hand, [z] we are they vpon whom the ends of the world are come: ſo S. Peter expounds himſelfe, verſ. 5. Chriſt is readie to iudge quicke and dead, the particular death of euery man ſeuerally, the generall doome of all men and all things ioyntly. [a] Thy end, and the end is at hand, be ye therefore ſober.

Is at hand] That Chriſt will come to iudgement is certaine, when he ſhall come moſt vncertaine: See before Goſpell 2. Sunday in Aduent: but his comming cannot be farre off, [b] Yet a very little while, and he that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry. For as a man who is a little world; ſo the world which is a great man, hath his infancie, childhood, youth, middle-age, old age. The time (ſaith [c] Auguſtine) from Adam to Noe was the worlds infancie, from Noe to Abraham his child hood, from Abraham to Dauid his youth, from Dauid to the captiuitie of Babylon his middle-age, from the captiuitie of Babylon vnto Chriſt his old age, from Chriſt vnto the end of all things his dotage. For euer ſince the world hath as it were gone vpon crutches, and therefore now cannot ſtand long. If S. Iohns age was the [d] laſt houre, then our times are ſurely the laſt minute. Let not Atheiſts aske, [e] Where is the promiſe of his comming? for the Lord is not ſlacke concerning his promiſe (as they count ſlackneſſe) but is patient toward vs, and would haue no man to periſh, but would haue all men come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a theefe in the night, in which the heauens ſhall paſſe away with a noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with heat, and the earth with the workes that are therin ſhall be burnt vp; ſeeing therefore that all theſe things muſt be diſſolued, what manner perſons ought we to be in holy conuerſation and godlineſſe? Almightie God hath alreadie [f] whet his ſword, and bent his bow and made it readie; now (ſaith Gregorie) the longer his draught, the ſtronger his ſhoot. His feet are of wooll, but his hands of iron; he is long in comming, but when he doth come he will ſtrike home: bruiſing his enemies with a rod of iron, and breaking them in peeces as a potters veſſell. Oppreſſe not your hearts with ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe, as [g] Chriſt, but be ſober and watch vnto prayer, as our Apoſtle, leſt that day come on you at vnawares.

I will not contend with the Romiſh and Rhemiſh Interpreters about the tranſlation of σωφρονήσατε, ſeeing [h] Papiſts of the beſt note reade as we doe, be ye ſober and not according to the vulgar Latine, be ye wiſe. The [i] Philoſopher excellently, σωφροσύνη dicitur quaſi σῴζουσα τὴν φρόνησιν: or as [k] other, quia σῴζει τὴν φρόνησιν. There is ſo great agreement betweene ſober men and wiſe, that I make no difference between them in this text; only note S. Peters order, firſt we muſt be ſober, and then watching in prayer. A drunken man is vnfit for euery good office, that therfore we may watch, it is neceſſarie we ſhould be ſober; and that we may pray, we muſt watch alſo. Some will be ſober and yet not watch, other will watch but not to pray for themſelues, but to pray vpon other, vt iugulent homines ſurgunt de nocte. Some will pray, but their ſpirits are ſleepie. This exhortation then is fit and full, Be ye ſober and watch vnto prayer.

Watch] The beſt remedie for the ſweating ſickneſſe is to haue a good keeper who will not ſuffer vs to ſleepe: ſo watchfulnes is the beſt keeper of our drowſie ſoules. He that is ſober and awake hath his wits about him alway both to defend himſelfe and offend his aduerſarie. [l] We are the children of light, and children of the day, we are not of the night, neither of darkneſſe. Therfore let vs not ſleepe as other doe but let vs watch and be ſober, and that in regard of our { Tenement. Landlord. Enemies.

He

He that dwells in a ruinous house dares not sleepe in a tempestous night, lest it fall vpon him, or lest theeues digge thorow his walls and rob him: our bodies in which our soules dwell are [m] earthly tabernacles, as houses of [n] clay, whose foundation is in the dust, euery storme of trouble doth impugne, euery little disease impaire the state of this our citie.

[m] 2 Cor. 5. 1.
[n] Iob. 4. 19.

Good cause then haue we to watch and pray, lest our house fall suddenly, and the fall thereof be great. And so much the rather because we know not when our great Landlord will come to reckon with vs, quò hora & mora incertior, eò magis vigilandum. Other farmers know certainly the terme of their lease, but euery man is Gods tennant at will, he may put vs out of house and home when he list. Againe, Cathedrall Churches and Colleges vsually let leases of houses for three lines: but God neuer demiseth any tenement longer then for one life, the which being expired shall neuer be renewed againe. He will not suffer vs to dwell in any of his houses [o] aboue threescore and ten, if happily some few continue fourescore yeere, their terme is exceeding long, and yet of all this time they cannot be secured one halfe houre, for our enemies are many and mighty which assault this earthly Tent and tenement daily.

[o] Psal. 90. 10.

Ferro, pestle, fame, vinclis, algore, calore,
Mille modis, miseros mors rapit vna viros.

Seeing then our enemies are so strong, and our houses so weake, the comming of our Landlord vnknowne, and the terme of our lease vncertaine, let vs be sober and watching in prayer.

Three things especially moue men to pray, namely the { facilitie, necessitie, vtilitie } of prayer

[p] Christ saith in the plurall number, pray yee; but speaking of almes and fasting in the same chapter, he doth vse the singular number especially, when thou giuest thine almes and when thou fastest: all must not giue almes, because some be poore and cannot, and all must not fast, because some are weake and may not, therefore giue thou, and fast thou, but pray yee. All men may pray, therefore all men must pray. For albeit our heauenly Father knoweth our need before wee pray, [q] yet we must aske to fulfill his command.

[q] August. epist. 120. cap. 29.

[r] Call vpon me in the time of trouble. Secondly, that thereby we may acknowledge him to be the giuer of [s] euery good and perfect gift. Thirdly, that we may finde ease by powring of our soules before the Lord, according to that of the [t] Psalmist, Commit thy suit to the Lord, and put thy trust in him, and he shall bring it to passe. So that there is a double oportet in prayer, the one necessitatis, and the other officij. prayer is needfull in respect of our dutie to God, for he made all other creatures for man, and man for himselfe, that he might be glorified in all things through Iesus Christ. And needfull in respect of our owne necessitie, for faith is the key which openeth the coffers of Gods treasure, and prayer is the hand to draw it out. Aske and ye shall haue, seeke and yee shall finde, knocke and it shall be opened vnto you. See Gospell appointed for the last Sunday.

[r] Psal. 50. 15.
[t] Psal. 37. 5.

Wherefore seeing euery man may pray, and must pray, let vs be watching in prayer, [u] not in one, but in many prayers, [x] assiduous and frequent in deuotion, and that not with a drowsie but with a waking spirit, vigilate in orationibus. See before, Cum spiritu tuo, and Sursum corda.

[u] Aquin in loc.
[x] Lorin. & Glossa.

But aboue all things haue feruent loue] For he that hath loue will be sober and watch in prayer, lest in disorder he might haply wrong his neighbour. He that hath loue will be harborous and that without grudging. He that hath loue will as he hath receiued the gift euen so minister the same, that God in all things may be glorified through Iesus Christ. See Epistle for Quinquagesima Sunday.

Loue shall couer the multitude of sinnes] [y] He doth not meane that charitie coueret hour owne sinne, but the trespasses of other, and that not before God, but before men only. For our Apostle doth allude vnto that of [z] Salomon, hatred stirreth vp strife, but loue couereth all trespasses. A [a] rule concerning our ciuill life, teaching vs not to be curious or cruell in examining the faults of our brethren, but rather to diſſemble many things amiſſe, [b] forgiuing one another, euen as God for Chriſts ſake forgaue vs. And therefore the gloſſes of Papiſts vpon this text, Loue ſhall couer the multitude of ſinnes (in [c] futuro iudicio ne pateant æternæ vltioni, [d] Charitable workes of mercy cauſe remiſſion of ſinnes in the ſight of God, [e] operit, id eſt, condonari facit à Deo, [f] ne ſit quod puniat Deus) are both impious and improbable

Whereas it is obiected, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, for ſhe loued much, anſwer is made, that our Sauiours argument is not from the cauſe to the effect, but from the effect to the cauſe: many ſinnes are forgiuen Marie, therefore ſhe loued much, as the words following intimate, to whom a little is forgiuen, he doth loue a little. Our loue towards other is not the cauſe of Gods loue toward vs: but contrariwiſe Gods loue is the cauſe of our loue. When he doth forgiue many ſinnes, and giue much grace, then we loue much and couer a multitude of ſinnes in other. If he forgiue but a few ſinnes, and giue but little grace, then we ſhew but little mercy. For as a man walking vnder a wall in a cold ſunnie day is heated of the wall which firſt receiued heat from the Sunne: ſo he that ſheweth mercy to other, hath firſt receiued mercy from God. And this our bleſſed Sauiour declareth in thh parable of the two debtors (as [h] S. Ambroſe notes) according to man he treſpaſſeth more, who did owe more: but by the mercies of the Lord, the caſe is altered, he loues more, which ought more, when his debt is forgiuen How euery man ought to miniſter according to the meaſure of his gift and abilitie; ſee Epiſtle 2. and 3. [i] Petrus Tenorius Archbiſhop of Toledo, hauing a long time conſidered the weightie reaſons on each ſide whether King Salomon was damned or ſaued, in fine cauſed him to be painted vpon the walls of his Chappell halfe in hell, and halfe in heauen. This picture is a liuely repreſentation of a Chriſtian, in reſpect of his manifold troubles he ſeemes halfe in hell: againe, hauing taſted the firſt fruits of the Spirit, he is halfe in heauen. Now the reaſon why God hath mingled croſſes and comfort together, are many: firſt, to ſhew the difference betweene this world and the next, in the life to come we ſhall either in heauen haue all comfort without any [k] croſſe, or elſe in hell all croſſes without any comfort [l] Diues tormented in that infernall flame, cannot get ſo much as a drop of cold water to coole his tongue: but in this life mercy and miſerie, griefe and grace, good and bad are blended one with the other. If we ſhould haue nothing but comfort, earth would be thought heauen; if nothing but torment, hell would be be reputed a fable. God therefore makes vs taſte of his Spirit, and the worlds ſpight, couering our bitter pills with ſweet ſugar, our excommunication with his comfortable communication, that our whole pilgrimage might be nothing elſe but a ſorrowes ioy.

Secondly, God doth mingle theſe to keepe vs in the right way: for if wee ſhould haue nothing but comfort, we would be too proud, [m] nimium boni nihil mali: if nothing but the croſſe too poore; but both theſe together make a good temper. Worldly trouble weineth vs from the vanities of this life, ſpirituall comfort makes vs deſire the ioyes of the next, [n] eſteeming all things dung and droſſe to gaine Chriſt.

[n] Philip. 3. 8.

Thirdly, God doth adde the croſſe to comfort for the triall of our faith and patience, that in our greateſt miſerie we might ſtirre vp the gifts of his ſpirit in vs, aſſuring our ſelues if God be with vs, nothing can preuaile againſt vs.

Affliction and perſecution doth bring vnto the worldly man a [o] threefold incommodite: { Before it come, feare. / When it is preſent, ſorrow. / When it is paſt, hatred againſt his enemie.

[o] Ferus ſer. 2 in dominic. exaudi.

But the Comforter is a preſent helpe againſt all theſe: Firſt, he taketh away feare before trouble: for as fire doth harden the Potters earthen veſſell, making it ſtiffe and ſtrong; ſo when our hearts are enflamed with that heauenly fire of Gods holy Spirit, it makes vs of an vndaunted courage, willing and able to ſuffer tribulation. Example hereof, [p] S. Paul, who when Agabus foretold that the Iewes ſhould binde him at Ieruſalem, and thereupon the brethren earneſtly, beſought him that he would not goe thither: anſwered, What doe yee weeping and breaking my heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but alſo to die at Ieruſalem for the name of the Lord Ieſus.

[p] Acts 21.

Secondly, the Comforter doth allay preſent ſorrow, for S. Stephen being [q] full of the Holy Ghoſt, did make (ſaith [r] Greg. Nyſſen.) the ring of his enemies round about him as a crowne to his head, and euery ſtone they caſt at him as a diamond enduring his martyrdome ſo cheerefully, that giuing vp his ghoſt he laid his head vpon the hard ſtones as vpon a ſoft pillow to ſleepe, and that ſleepe was portus mortis & porta vitæ.

[q] Acts 7. 55.

Thirdly, the Comforter being the ſpirit of meekeneſſe and loue, takes from vs in our perſecution all reuenge, making vs to loue our enemies, and to bleſſe them that hurte vs and hate vs.

Here by the way note the reaſon why the Church allotted this Scripture for this Sunday, betweene the Feaſts of Chriſts Aſcenſion and Whitſuntide: Chriſt in his Aſcenſion promiſed to ſend the Comforter, Acts 1. 18. and at Pentecoſt he performed his promiſe, Acts 2. 4. Againe, Chriſt at his Aſcenſion inioyned his Apoſtles [t] to teach all nations, and on Whitſunday he gaue them the bleſſed Spirit to comfort and aſſiſt them in that great and troubleſome buſineſſe, that as their preaching ſhould procure tribulation, ſo the Comforter aſſure conſolation.

[t] Matth. 28. 19.

When the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend vnto you from the Father.] Theſe words (as [u] Expoſitors obſerue) firſt point out all the three perſons in the ſacred Trinitie, then paint out, as it were, the perſon and offices of the Holy Ghoſt in particular. We may deſcry the three diuine perſons, in that Chriſt ſaith, I will ſend the Spirit from the Father.

[x] Du Bartas ex Lombardo ſent. lib. 1. diſt. 2. Idē Auguſt. de Trin. lib. 1. cap. 3.

For explanation of this ineffable myſterie, Diuines vſe many familiar examples, of of all which I will only propound one. [y] If three perſons in the world called Peter, Paul, and Iohn, ſhould haue one and the ſame ſoule, and one and the ſame body, they ſhould be called three perſons, becauſe one is Peter, another Paul, and the third Iohn: and yet they ſhould be one man only, and not three men, not hauing three bodies, nor three ſoules, but one body and one ſoule. This is not poſſible amongſt men; becauſe the being of a man is determinate and limited, ſo that it cannot be in many perſons. But the being of God is infinite, and therefore the ſelfe-ſame being and the ſelfe-ſame diuinitie of the Father is found in the Sonne, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and yet they are but one God only, becauſe they haue the ſame being, the ſame power, the ſame wiſdome, the ſame goodneſſe, &c. But leauing this high point, which I deſire rather humbly to adore, than curiouſly to explore, I come to the deſcription of the third perſon, as the words of my text lead me, When the Comforter, &c.

God the Father is a comforter, euen the [z] father of mercies and the God of all comfort: God the Sonne is a comforter, euen the [a] conſolation of Iſrael: how then is God the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter? Anſwer is made, that as in holy Bible works of power are aſcribed eſpecially to God the Father, and works of wiſdome to God the Sonne, ſo workes of loue to God the Holy Ghoſt. Comfort then being a great worke of loue toward vs, is attributed principally to the bleſſed Spirit, [b] who doth helpe our infirmities, and maketh requeſts for vs with ſighs which cannot be expreſſed.

Hierome*, that the Spirit ſent Chriſt iuxta fragilitatem carnis aſſumptæ, not as he was God, but as he was man. [h] Againe, the redemption of the world being opus ad extra, was common to all the three perſons in Trinitie, ſo God the Father did ſend, God the Holy Ghoſt ſend, God the Sonne himſelfe ſend himſelfe, the Father in reſpect of his eternall election, the Sonne in reſpect of his meritorious paſſion, the Holy Ghoſt in reſpect of his effectuall application is author of our ſaluation. But if we conſider here ſending tanquam opus ad intra. God the Holy Ghoſt did not ſend the Sonne but the Father and the Sonne ſend the Holy Ghoſt. The Father alone begets, only the Sonne is begotten, and the bleſſed Spirit proceeds from both.

[k] Againe, this clauſe doth abundantly confute that error of the Greeke Church, holding that the Holy Ghoſt did only proceed from the Father, and not from the Sonne: I from the Father will ſend, ergo the bleſſed Spirit proceeded from both. crieth Abba Father. And Rom. 8. 9. If any man hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, the ſame is not his.

Now then as the Holy Ghoſt is called the Spirit of the Father, not onely becauſe ſent of the Father, but alſo becauſe proceeding from the Father, (as Chriſt in the text, When the comforter is come, whom I will ſend vnto you from the Father, euen the ſpirit of truth which proceedeth of the Father) ſo likewiſe the ſpirit of the Sonne, not onely becauſe he is ſent of the Sonne; [n] but alſo becauſe he proceeds from him and receiueth of his. And therefore the firſt Conſtantinopolitan Councell added to the Creeds Apoſtolicall and Nicene this clauſe, that we ſhould beleeue in the Holy Ghoſt, the Lord and giuer of life who proceedeth from the Father and the Sonne, who with the Father and the Sonne together is worſhipped and glorified, [o] As a lake is deriued from ſome riuer, and the riuer from ſome fountaine, and yet all is one and the ſame water: ſo the Father as a fountaine produceth the Sonne as a riuer, the Father and the Sonne as a fountaine and a riuer produce the Holy Ghoſt as a lake: and yet the Father and the Sonne and the Holy Ghoſt are not three Gods, but one God only.

The Spirit] Glorious Angels and bleſſed ſoules are both ſpirits and holy, how then doth this title diſtinguiſh the third perſon in the bleſſed Trinitie? [p] becauſe God is called the Holy Spirit Catexochen, as being the chiefe ſpirit and moſt holy maker of all created ſpirits, and giuer of all holineſſe, from whom commeth euery good and perfect gift. Why this name is attributed to the third perſon in Trinitie, rather than to the firſt or ſecond; ſee before the creed: Art. I beleeue in the Holy Ghoſt.

Of truth] It is obſerued by [q] Maldonate, that truth among the Hebrewes is vſed ſometime for ſtabilitie, ſo the Comforter may be called the Spirit of truth, in that he ſhall abide with vs for euer, Iohn 14 16. But I follow the common current of Interpreters, affirming that the comforter is the Spirit of truth, & formaliter & effectiuè, being himſelfe truth, and [r] leading vs into all truth; and here we muſt obſerue a ſecret [s] Antitheſis, other ſpirits who deſpiſe Chriſt and his Goſpell, are ſpirits of error, but the Comforter is the Spirit of truth and cannot lie. This ſpirit, ſaith Chriſt, ſhall teſtifie of me, and yee being [t] filled with this ſpirit ſhall witneſſe alſo: no man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghoſt, and who is a lier, (ſaith our [u] Euangeliſt) but he that denieth that Ieſus is Chriſt? If his ſpirit dwell in you, ye need not that any man teach you, but as the ſame annointing teacheth all things, and it is true and not lying. All ſuch as want this guide are toſſed hither and thither with euery blaſt of contrary doctrine; but the children of God, [x] led by the ſpirit of truth, are like mount [y] Sion which cannot be remoued.

If any ſhall aske whether the Spirit ſhall teach euery truth, anſwer is made that he leads vs into all knowledge which is meet and neceſſarie for vs in this preſent world. He doth not deliuer euery truth vnto euery man, nor all that ſhall be knowne hereafter vnto any man: for in this life we receiue but [z] the firſt fruits and the [a] earneſt of the Spirit. Now the firſt fruits are properly but an handfull or twaine of corne to a whole field containing many furlongs and acres of ground, and the earneſt in a bargaine it may be is but a penny layd downe for the paying of a thouſand pound. Here the gifts of the ſpirit are by meaſure, [b] We know in part, and prophecie in part: but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is imperfect ſhall be aboliſhed. In this world Moſes ſaw but Gods backe, Iohn but his ſhade, but hereafter all that loue the comming of the Lord ſhall ſee God face to face. We receiue the firſt fruits here, but in heauen we ſhall enioy the full harueſt of our hopes.

Which proceedeth of the Father.] The Papiſts to maintaine that all doctrine neceſſarie to ſaluation is not contained in holy Scriptures, affirme that the Godhead of the Holy Ghoſt and the proceeding from the Father and the Sonne, cannot be found in [c] expreſſe words of the Bible, but only proued by their vnwritten traditions: as if the bleſſed Spirit could not be God, vnleſſe he be allowed of the Church of Rome, Niſi homini Deus placuerit, Deus non erit, as [d] Tertullian in the like cauſe. We ſay that Athanaſius, Baſil, Nazianzen, Ambroſe, Cyril, Auguſtine, in their ſeuerall treaties of this one point alleage manifold teſtimonies of holy writ, which euidently demonſtrate the Holy Ghoſt to be God. I will only name two: the firſt is Acts 5. verſ. 3. Then ſaid Peter, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart, that thou ſhouldeſt lie vnto the Holy Ghoſt? And then in the next verſe following, thou haſt not lied vnto men, but vnto God. Vpon which words [e] Auguſtine and [f] Ambroſe reaſon thus: In that Peter firſt named the Holy Ghoſt and inferred inſtantly thou haſt lied vnto God, it is plaine that the holy Ghoſt is called God.

The ſecond Text is, 1. Cor. 6. 20.: Glorifie God in your body: [g] what God, but the holy Ghoſt, whoſe temple our bodies are? verſ. 19. Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt. And therefore Frier [h] Ferus honeſtly writes, ex ſcripturis aperte conſtat Spiritum Sanctum eſſe Deum.

Now concerning the proceeding of the holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Sonne, [i] S. Auguſtine doth auow peremptorily that it is the doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles, and that he proues in his owne iudgement ſo ſufficiently, lib 15. de Trin. cap. 26. that he concludes in the 27. chapter of the ſame booke: cum per ſcripturarum ſanctarum teſtimonia docuiſſem de vtroque procedere Spiritum Sanctum, &c.

And whereas the Papiſts in this point are all for the bare letter, and expreſſe words, it is plaine that the bleſſed Spirit proceedeth from the Father, in this Text and as plaine that he proceedeth from the Sonne, Reuel. 1. 16. and 19. 15. conferred with Eſay 11. 4 and 2. Theſſ. 2. 8.

If any ſhall aske the difference betweene begetting and proceeding, and why the holy Ghoſt is not ſayd to be begotten, as well as to proceed: I anſwer with [k] Auguſtine, Fides adſit, & nulla quæſtio remanebit: and with [l] Ambroſe, Non philoſophis ſed piſcatoribus creditur, non dialecticis ſed publicanis. Auſer argumenta vbi fides quæritur. And with our Euangeliſt, the ſpirit muſt teach vs, and not we the Spirit, it doth ſuffice that we ſpeake as he will haue vs ſpeake, namely that the Father is made of none, neither created, nor begotten. The Sonne is of the Father alone not made, nor created, but begotten. The Holy Ghoſt is of the Father and of the Sonn, neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding.

They ſhall excommunicate you.] Where [m] note that the chiefe perſecutors of Chriſt and his followers are not open Atheiſts, or Turkes, or Iewes, but ſuch as hold great places in the Church, Antichriſtians and Pſeudo-chriſtians, and therefore this prophecie doth aime at the preſent Church of Rome directly, whoſe cut-throat diuinitie conſiſts eſpecially in excommunication and killing. Nay the Romiſh butchers in their helliſh crueltie goe farre beyond this prophecie, for they doe not only thruſt the liuing Saints out of the Church, but alſo the dead at reſt out of the Church-yard. When [n] Harding wanted arguments, he came to this terrible threat: I aduiſe you Maſter Iewel and your brethren not to beſtow great charges about your tombes and places of buriall, leſt the time come, as moſt certainly it ſhall come (vnleſſe God for our ſinnes vtterly forſake our country) when your carcaſes ſhall be digged out againe, and ſerued as the carcaſes of heretickes haue been many hundred yeeres. As the bloud of Abel ſhed by Cain, ſo the bones of Martin Bucer abuſed by theſe Canibals, cry to God from the earth. I pray thee therefore good Reader examine theſe words of my text againe and againe, and conſider of whom and by whom, and for whom they were ſpoken. And know that the clauſe, whoſoeuer killeth you will thinke that he doth God ſeruice, doth euidently demonſtrate that an erroneus conſcience is no warrant for thee why thou ſhouldeſt not ioyne with the conformable Proteſtant, againſt theſe Bull-mungers and bloud-ſuckers, of whom our bleſſed Sauiour here, They ſhall excommunicate you, &c.

WHIT SVNDAY.

The Epiſtle. Acts. 2. 1. vide p. 12.

When the fiftie daies were come to an end, they were all with one accord together in one place, &c.

THe whole Bible may be diuided into [a] three parts, anſwerable to the three perſons in holy Trinitie: to God the Father is attributed our creation, eſpecially deſcribed in the Old Teſtament: to God the Sonne our redemption, eſpecially declared in the Goſpells: to God the holy Ghoſt our ſanctification eſpecially taught in the Acts and Epiſtles. For as the former bookes of the New Teſtament euidently demonſtrate the true Chriſt: [b] ſo this hiſtorie the true Church: In them, he that hath eyes to ſee may reade the text of the Goſpell, intimating what Chriſt is in himſelfe: but in this as it were the comment of the Goſpell vnfolding more fully what Chriſt is in his members; [c] in the one, what he did for vs in his humiliation; in the other, what he did for vs in his exaltation.

[a] Lorin. præfat. in Act. Apoſt. c. 3

[b] Rhemiſt in ſum of the new Teſtament.

[c] Marlorat. argument. in Act. Apoſtol.

The Scripture read is a relation how Chriſt himſelfe being abſent, hath graciouſly prouided another comforter for the Church in her [d] widowhood: and it containes briefly the whole myſterie of this ſolemne feaſt, wherein three points are principally remarkable:

[d] Rupert. de diuinis offi. ijs. lib. 10. cap. 1.

The { Comming of the Holy Ghoſt in the three firſt verſes.
Working after his comming, verſ. 4.
Publiſhing of this working, in all the reſt following.

In the comming and deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt, foure circumſtances are to be noted eſpecially: the - Time: When the fiftie daies were come to an end.

- Place: at Hieruſalem in an vpper chamber, chap. 1. verſ. 12. 13.
- Perſons on whom: all the bleſſed Apoſtles abiding with one accord in one place.
- Manner how: ſuddenly there came a ſound from heauen, &c.

Whereas the [e] Noueliſts obiect, that this and other portions of holy Scripture taken out of the Prophets, Acts, and Apocalyps, cannot truly be called Epiſtles: anſwer is made, that as S. Paul called a text of the [f] Law, Goſpell, as containing the glad tydings of ſaluation vnto mankinde, Galat. 3. 8. God preached the Goſpell vnto Abraham, ſaying, in thee ſhall all the Gentiles be bleſſed. And as [g] that ancient and much eſteemed Diuine, called the fifth booke of Moſes, a pure Goſpell, as being a tract of faith and loue: ſo we may terme theſe without vntruth, Epiſtles, as reporting reporting the Lords meſſage to his beloued ſpouſe; for in this reſpect, [h] Antonius, [i] Auguſtine, [k] Chryſoſtome, [l] Macarius, [m] Gregorie, ſpeaking of the whole Bible, generally call it Gods Epiſtle, ſent from the Court of Heauen vnto the Church militant on earth.

[e] Norfolke Miniſters obiect againſt the Communion booke.

[f] Gen. 12. 3.

[g] M. Tyndall in prolog. Deuteronom.

2. We ſay that the Corinthians are termed Pauls [n] Epiſtle written in his heart: an epiſtle (as Theophylact vpon the place) for that they were in ſtead of an epiſtle; ſo this text, howſoeuer not an epiſtle, may ſtand, I hope, with their good liking in ſtead of an epiſtle.

3. Denomination is from the better and greater part, but moſt of our epiſtles are taken out of the Canonicall epiſtles, and but a very few from the Prophets, Acts, and Apocalyps. Ergo, the Nouelliſts in this obiection are ſyllabarum aucupes, as [o] Tully writes of Lawyers, in hawking after a flie they loſe the fowle.

When the fiftie dayes] Almighty God ordained in the old Teſtament ſundrie feaſts, to put his people in minde of his great benefits beſtowed vpon them among the reſt, there were [p] three ſolemne feſtiuals euery yeare, namely, the Paſſeouer, the Pentecoſt, and the feaſt of Tabernacles, as we finde in the [q] firſt leſſon appointed for this morning prayer: the Paſſeouer was inſtituted in remembrance of the deliuerance from Egypts bondage; Pentecoſt in remembrance of the Law giuen in mount Sinai; the feaſt of Tabernacles in remembrance of Iſraels dwelling in Tents fortie yeares in the Wilderneſſe: [r] In ſtead of thoſe three Iewiſh feaſts, our Chriſtian Church hath ſubſtituted Chriſtmas in honor of Chriſts incarnation, Eaſter in honor of Chriſts reſurrection, Whitſuntide in honor of Chriſt confirmation of the Goſpell, by ſending vnto vs the Holy Ghoſt; and we retaine ſtill two names of the three, to wit, [s] Paſſeouer and Pentecoſt. Againſt which ancient cuſtome that of S. Paul is obiected, Galat. 4. 10. Ye obſerue daies and moneths, and times and yeers: I feare leſt I haue beſtowed on you labour in vaine. But our [t] Church (herein agreeing with the learned Fathers, [u] Auguſtine, [x] Baſil, [y] Hierome, [z] Leo) doth anſwer, that the Iewiſh Paſſeouer and Pentecoſt were types of our Eaſter and Whitſuntide: Chriſt Ieſus is our Paſſeouer, ſaith Paul, 1. Cor. 5. 7. The Lord did paſſe ouer the doores where the bloud of the Paſchall, Lambe was ſprinkled, Exod. 12 to ſignifie that he will paſſe ouer all the tranſgreſſions of ſuch as apply to their owne ſoule, the merit of Chriſts blood, who is the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinnes of the world. So the Iewiſh Pentecoſt was a memoriall of the Law, which is an hidden * Goſpell: but our Whitſuntide a memoriall of the Goſpell, which is a reuealed Law: the Law was deliuered in mount Sinai, the Goſpell in mount Sion: the Law was written in tables of ſtone, but the Goſpell in the tablets of our heart by the Spirit: the Law was giuen fiftie dayes after their Paſſeouer, and the Goſpell through the power of the Holy Ghoſt, fiftie daies after our Eaſter: and hereupon this holy feaſt is called [a] Pentecoſt, euen of the number of daies as it is in the text, When fiftie daies.

The Law was giuen, becauſe of the tranſgreſſion, Galat. 3. 19. [b] that is, to reueale ſinne to the ſinner, [c] as it were to keepe ſinne aliue; that it might be felt and ſeene; as a corroſie is laid vnto an old ſore, not to heale it but to ſtirre it vp, and make the diſeaſe quicke, that a man may know in what danger he ſtands: he therefore who thinkes to iuſtifie himſelfe by the Law, goeth about to cure his wounds with fretting corroſies.

If the Iewes then had a feſtiuall in remembrance of the Law, which is full of terror, and (as [d] S. Paul expreſly) the miniſtration of death, how much more ſhould Chriſtians obſerue this holy time in remembrance of the Goſpell, which, is the [e] power of God vnto ſaluation, and the [f] glad tydings of great ioy to all people? Chriſtmas is a merrie time kept in honor of our Sauiours comming in the fleſh but at Whitſuntide we muſt reioice more for his comming in the ſpirit. This as [g] Auguſtine ſpeakes, is a double ioy, quod abeuntem Chriſtum non amiſimus, & venientem ſpiritum poſſidemus. I conclude with [h] Bernard, if we ſolemnize the memoriall of the ſanctified, allotting one day to praiſe God in his holineſſe for S. Iohn, another for S. Peter, a third for S. Stephen, &c. how much more ſhould we celebrate Whitſunday, conſecrated as a memoriall to the Sanctifier who makes all Saints.

If any ſhall further aske, why Chriſt deferred the ſending of the Comforter fortie daies after his reſurrection, and ten after his aſcenſion; [i] anſwer may bee, that he did it haply to trie the patience and faith of his Apoſtles. And here wee muſt imitate their good example, who continued with one accord in prayer and ſupplication, Act. 1. 14. expecting the Lords good pleaſure, who dealeth euermore with his ſeruants according to his word. [k] It is probable that Zacharie prayed for children when he was young, and ſo continued vntill he was old. Simeon aſſuredly looked a long time for the conſolation of Iſrael, and at the laſt he ſung his Nunc dimittis. If we ſhall vnceſſantly perſeuere in our deuotions, the Father of mercies in our greateſt extremitie will ſend vs comfort, as he did to the bleſſed Apoſtles here the Comforter.

The place was Hieruſalem, and Hieruſalem was the [k] citie of God, vnto which [l] all people reſorted at Pentecoſt, as it is in the text, of euery nation vnder heauen Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the inhabitants of Meſapotamia, &c. [m] This may teach all men to take their beſt hint to doe the moſt good: we muſt not put our candle vnder a [n] buſhell, or vnder a [o] table, but ſet it on a candleſticke, that it may giue light to the whole familie. For this cauſe [p] Chriſt and [q] Paul vſed to preach and worke wonders at Hieruſalem vpon the ſolemne feaſt daies, intending hereby to doe the greateſt good, among the greateſt companie. The more particular place was an vpper chamber: [r] allegorically, the Spirit of God deſcends vpon ſuch as are fartheſt off the earth, and neareſt vnto heauen, vpon ſuch as are in an high garret, ſeeking the things aboue; not in a low roome buried in the buſineſſe of the world: [s] literally, the diſtreſſed Apoſtles were thruſt together in an vpper chamber, becauſe they could not well at this great feaſt obtaine more conuenient roome: they might haue ſeparated themſelues, and ſo peraduenture haue beene better fitted in ſeuerall houſes: but according to their maſters [t] commandement, all of them kept together in one place with one accord.

The perſons on whom the holy Ghoſt deſcended, were the bleſſed Apoſtles; but the promiſe concerning the Comforter appertaineth vnto vs as well as vnto them. [u] I will pray the Father (ſaith Chriſt) and he will giue you another comforter, that he may abide with you for euer: and Matth. 28. the laſt verſe, Loe I am with you alwaies vntill the end of the world. The Spirit deſcended vpon the Diſciples in viſible formes, as vpon this day: but if we make cleane our ſoules and bodies as fit temples for the Holy Ghoſt, he will deſcend on vs in inuiſible fauours euery day, leading vs into all truth, and making our whole life a merrie Whitſuntide: but the point more principally to be noted, is, that they were all ὁμοθυμαδὸν, with one accord together in one place. The Church is not Babel, but Hieruſalem. It is not a number of ſtragling ſheepe, but a communion of Saints, an vnited flock vnder one [x] ſhepherd, hauing but one [y] Lord, one ſpirit, one baptiſme, one hope, and but one [z] heart: and therefore the brethren of diuiſion and ſeparation, are not in their ſchiſme led by the Spirit of God, who is [a] Loue, [b] making men to be of one minde in an houſe; but by the luſts of the fleſh ingendring [c] hatred, debate, emulation, contentions, ſeditions, hereſies, ennie, &c. The ſpirit of [d] man doth not quicken any member or part ſeparated from the body: the drie bones which [e] Ezechiel ſaw ſcattered in the field, had no life in them till they were gathered together bone to his bone: ſo the Spirit of God doth not animate and comfort thoſe, who cut off and diuide themſelues from Chriſts myſticall body. [f] Behold then how good and ioyfull a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in vnitie; for they who be [g] like minded hauing the ſame loue, being of one accord and one iudgement, enioy conſolation in Chriſt, and fellowſhip of his Spirit: to ſuch hath the Lord promiſed his bleſſing, and life for euermore.

Suddenly there came.] The gifts of the Spirit are [h] free, not obtained by labour and induſtrie, but infuſed by grace: [i] The winde blowes where it liſteth, and thou heareſt heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it commeth, or whither it goeth: euen ſo is euery man that is borne of the ſpirit. The Holy Ghoſt is not tied vnto places and perſons, vnto times and tides, he comes [k] ſuddenly when he will, and where he liſt: a ſound from heauen, [l] inſinuating that it was not in the Diſciples power, but in Chriſts promiſe that he came downe, the worke of God in heauen not of any man on earth.

As it had beene the comming of a mighty winde.] [m] For as the winde blowes in euery coaſt and corner without reſiſtance: ſo the Goſpell of Chriſt is gone out into all [n] lands, and his words vnto the ends of the world, neither can any [o] reſiſt the powerfull operation of the Holy Ghoſt; he will inſpire whom he liſt, and when he liſt, making [p] young men to ſee viſions, and eſpie the truth, and ſuffering old men to dreame dreames, and [q] wander in phantaſies. Or as a winde becauſe the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt is as it were the breathing of the Father and the Sonne: [r] velut expiratio quædam, & reflatio ex intimo præcordiorum calore, & amore, Patris atq; filij. Or as a winde, to ſhew that gods ſpirit is the fountaine of ſpirituall life, as our ſpirit is of naturall life, which in the beginning God [s] breathed into man; anima quaſi ἀναπνοὴ; according to that of [t] Auguſtine, the Holy Ghoſt is in Chriſts myſticall body, like the ſoule in our naturall body. You may further examine the reſemblance betweene winde and the Spirit, in Geminian. de ſimilitudin. lib. 1. cap. 73. Berchorius in dictionar. verb. ventus & ſpiritus. Lorin comment. in Act. 2. 2.

[u] Some thinke there came a ſound from heauen as it had beene the comming of a mightie winde, and filled all the houſe; to terrifie them, at leaſt to make them humble, that ſo they might be fit to receiue this high and heauenly gift, for the Lord doth reſpect the lowlineſſe of his ſeruant, and will alſo [x] dwell with him that is of a meeke ſpirit, reſiſting the proud, but giuing grace to the humble, Iames 4. 6.

And there appeared vnto them] The Spirit was giuen vnto the ſonnes of God in old time, [z] but not in ſuch a meaſure, nor in ſuch a manner as vpon this day: not in ſuch a meaſure: the Patriarkes and Prophets, and other holy men of God had taſted of the Spirit, ſpeaking as they were [a] moued thereby; but the Diſciples are ſaid here to be filled with the holy Ghoſt. Eadem ſemper fuit virtus chariſmatum, quamuis non eadem ſemper menſura donorum, ſaith [b] Leo, not in the ſame manner; appearing in the ſhapes of clouen and fiery tongues. Appearing.] They did not ſee the [c] ſubſtance of the Spirit, for that is inuiſible, but the [d] ſigne which is viſible: that whereas before they did not throughly beleeue Chriſts ſaying, they might now beleeue their owne ſeeing, all things being accompliſhed according to his word.

Clouen tongues as they had beene of fire] [e] Hereby ſignifying that it is the Spirit, which giueth eloquence and vtterance in preaching of the Goſpell: it is he which openeth our lips to declare the mightie workes of God, it is he which engendereth a burning zeale toward the word, giuing vs a tongue, yea a fierie tongue, boldly and cheerefully to profeſſe the truth in the face of the whole world. [f] In linguis, vt in omni genere linguarum & ſermonum facundi eſſent; in igneis, vt inflamarentur amore charitatis. If Chriſt had giuen his Apoſtles only clouen tongues and not fiery, then they ſhould haue beene full of knowledge, but voyd of zeale: if fiery tongues and not clouen, they ſhould haue abounded with zeale, but not according to knowledge. Chriſt therefore did ſend downe the Spirit, both in fierie tongues, and clouen, that the man of God might be perfect to all good workes: [g] vt feruor diſcretionem erigat, & diſcretio feruorem regat: zealous in his knowledge, and diſcreet in his zeale: Verbis Ulyſſes, factis Achilles, as one [h] wittily.

Theſe tongues are called clouen, [i] in reſpect of themſelues, as being diuers, and in reſpect of the Diſciples, as being diſperſed, and ſitting vpon each of them, according to that of [k] Paul, All theſe things worketh euen the ſelfe-ſame Spirit, diſtributing to euery man as he will ſeuerally. [l] Chriſt aduiſeth his Apoſtles to be like ſerpents serpents in wisdome. Now the serpent hath a clouen tongue; and the Gentiles in old time, sacrificed vnto Mercurie the god of eloquence, [m] linguam dissectam A clouen tongue then is an [n] eloquent, expedite, subtile, quicke, ready tongue: and he that will preach the word must be furnished with such a tongue, adorned with all varietie of learning, a walking librarie, like the [o] tower of Dauid (as [p] Baronius of Bellarmine, friendly, but falsly) a compleat armorie, built to defend the truth of holy religion against all opposites whatsoeuer.

As they had beene of fire The fire hath, seuen properties [q] answerable to the seuen gifts of the Spirit: the properties of the fire are, to melt that which is hard, heat that which cold, enlighten that which is darke, make stiffe paste, and other things of the like nature, which are soft, examine that which is impure, to ascend vpward, and being dispersed to multiply. The gifts of the Spirit, as [r] Esay telleth vs, are wisdome, vnderstanding, counsell, fortitude, knowledge, pietie, and the feare of the Lord. Now the Holy Ghost doth soften our hard hearts by the spirit of feare, heat our cold zeale by the spirit of pietie, enlighten our darke and dull vnderstanding by the spirit of knowledge, strengthen all our weakenesse by the spirit of fortitude, examine our vncleanenesse by the spirit of counsell, making vs ascend in seeking the things aboue by the spirit of vnderstanding, and increasing all our gifts by the spirit of wisdome: for as the fire being dispersed increaseth; euen so the gifts of the Spirit, the more they be well imployed, the more will they be multiplied. Here we may further obserue by the way Gods vnspeakable wisdome, who doth bring light out of darkenesse, and makes that a [s] blessing which was a curse; for the diuision of tongues hindred the building of [t] Babel; but diuision of tongues at this time, furthered the bulding of Hierusalem: if the blessed Apostles had not spoken all languages, how should they by preaching of the Gospell haue conuerted all lands? except the word had beene published in euery tongue. how should [u] euery tongue confesse that Christ is the Lord? if these tongues had not beene clouen, how should [x] all people, nations and languages haue serued him? and therefore this signe doth [y] well agree with the thing signified thereby. The Spirit came in stead of Christ the Word, and so most fitly descended in the likenesse of a [z] tongue. To shut vp all these notes in one short glosse: the [a] light of this fire doth signifie wisdome, the heat of the same doth signifie charitie, and the forme of a tongue signifieth eloquence.

And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost.] The gifts of the Holy Ghost are giuen in a threefold measure;

For as a learned [b] schooleman acutely, there is Sancti Spiritus { Infusio. Diffusio. Effusio.

The Disciples had infusion, haply diffusion, heretofore when Christ breathed on them, and said, [c] receiue the Holy Ghost: but now their cup did ouerflow they were so filled with his gifts and graces, as that they [d] could not but speake the things which they had seene and heard of Christ: they were now like the [e] wine that hath no vent, and like the new bottles that brast, and this was effusio sancti spiritus: heretofore they were timorous, and so not willing, rude in speech, and so not able to teach the Gospell, and speake the great workes of God. but now being filled with the Holy Ghost, all of them suddenly, yet soundly began to speake with other tongues, euen as the same spirit gaue them vtterance: for as [f] Leo sweetly Vbi Deus magister est, quàm cito discitur quod docetur, where God is the tutor the lesson is soone taught: [g] Celeriter sine discursu argumentationis, suauiter sine strepitu disputationis, & veraciter sine concursu deceptionis: He that beleeueth in me (saith [h] Christ) shall haue riuers of liuing water flowing out of his belly. (This spake he of the spirit, which they that beleeued in him should receiue) i. for if a man be led by the Spirit, all good workes and gifts of grace spring out of him naturally: thou needest not to wring and wrest good deeds out of him, as a man would wring veriuice out of a crab; they flow from him as springs out of rockes, of their owne accord, and therefore, Come Holy Ghost is a fit fit Hymne to be ſung at the conſecration of Biſhops; and Lord take not thy Spirit from vs, a neceſſarie ſuffrage to be repeated in our Church euery day.

O but how ſhall a man know whether the Holy Ghoſt is in him or no? ſeeing Anabaptiſts, and browniſts, and Papiſts, in a word, all heretikes and ſchiſmatikes haue boaſted of the Spirit? Chriſt telleth vs in the [k] Goſpell, euery tree is knowne by his owne fruit: now the fruits of the Spirit, ſaith [l] Paul are theſe, loue, ioy, peace long ſuffering, gentleneſſe, &c. Here is a [m] glaſſe, wherein thou mayeſt behold thy ſelfe, and diſcerne whether thou be led by the fleſh or by the Spirit. The brethren of ſeparation, as they bewray in their name, ſo manifeſt in their nature, that they want exceedingly, loue, peace meekeneſſe, long-ſuffering; howſoeuer they ſeeme to be of the houſhold of faith, it is not likely they be of the familie of loue The Papiſts in their writings extoll vnitie and peace ſo farre, that, [n] Cardinall Hoſius acknowledged none other expreſſe word of God, but onely this one word Ama, or Dilige; but if we ſhall examine the preſent Romane Church in her [o] title, iuriſdiction, life, doctrine, we ſhall finde her farre from loue: for the firſt is preiudiciall to all Biſhops, the ſecond derogatorie to all Emperors and Kings, the third deteſtable to all men, the fourth iniurious againſt Chriſt, and all that is called God.

[p] If any man haue not the Spirit of Chriſt the ſame is not his. And by [q] turning the words, it may be ſayd as well, if any man be not of Chriſt, the ſame hath not his Spirit. Now to know who be Chriſts, and who be not, we haue this rule giuen vs, [r] his ſheepe heare his voice, [s] he that is of God, heareth Gods word: but the Papiſts obey not Chriſts voice, nor delight in his law; for as the malitious [t] Philiſtins ſtopped the wells of Abraham, and filled them vp with earth, to put their memoriall out of minde, that ſo they might challenge the ground: [u] in like ſort the Papiſts haue ſtopped vp the veines of life, which are found in the Scripture, with the earth of their owne tradition, falſe ſimilitudes, vnfit allegories, and all for this end, to make the Bible their owne priuate poſſeſſion and merchandize, ſhutting vp the kingdome of heauen, which is Gods word; neither entring in themſelues, nor ſuffering them that would, hereby ſhewing plainly, that they are not of Chriſt, nor in this poſſeſſed with his Spirit.

But here they will obiect, that there be diuers neceſſarie points vnto ſaluation not expreſſed in holy Scripture, which were left to the reuelation of the Spirit, who being now giuen vnto the Church according to Chriſts promiſe, hath taught many things from time to time, which the bleſſed Apoſtles [x] could not then beare. To this obiection, [y] anſwer is made, that the proper office of the Holy Ghoſt is not to broach any new contrary doctrine, but to confirme and explaine that which had beene taught before: When the Comforter is come (ſaith Chriſt) he ſhall lead you into all truth: he ſhall not ſpeake of himſelfe, but whatſoeuer he ſhall heare, that ſhall he ſpeake; he ſhall receiue of mine, and ſhew vnto you, [z] bringing all things to your remembrance which I haue told you. We may not then vnder pretence of the Spirit, bring into the Church any dreames or phantaſies of our owne braine, but as the Diſciples, after they were filled with the holy Ghoſt, [a] ſpake ſuch things as they had ſeene and heard: ſo the very ſumme and ſubſtance of all that we preach after the ſpirit giueth vtterance, muſt be nothing elſe, but that heauenly doctrine, which we finde and read in Gods holy Bible.

With other tongues.] as it is in [b] S. Marke, with new tongues, not [c] with that old [d] ſlow tongue of the Law, but with Euangelicall vtterance: Moſes had but one tongue for one people, but the Diſciples had clouen tongues, all languages for all lands: hereby ſignifying that in [e] Chriſt, there is neither Iew, nor Grecian, neither bond nor free, but that the [f] Lord ouer all is rich vnto all that call vpon him. It is not ſayd they ſpake with one tongue, and many languages were heard, (as [g] Carthuſianus and ſome other imagine) [h] for then the miracle ſhould haue beene in the hearers, and not in the Preachers: but they began to ſpeake with other tongues, and ſo euery man of euery nation heard his owne dialect.

As the ſame ſpirit gaue them vtterance] There are diuerſities of gifts, but the ſame ſame Spirit; to one is giuen by the Spirit the word of wiſdome, and to another the word of knowledge by the ſame ſpirit, to another is giuen faith by the ſame Spirit, and to another the gift of healing by the ſame ſpirit, to another prophecie, to another diſcerning of ſpirits, to another diuerſities of tongues; all theſe things worketh euen the ſelfe ſame ſpirit, diſtributing to euery man as he will ſeuerally: for all men haue not all gifts, and ſuch as haue the ſame graces, haue them not in the ſame meaſure: whatſoeuer we ſay well, is as the Spirit giueth vtterance; whatſoeuer we doe well, is[i] according to the grace that is giuen vnto vs. Here the Diſciples vttered eloquently the great workes of God, not out of their owne wit, nor out of their owne will, [k] ſed quid & quantum & quomodo Spiritus Sanctus dabat: all was the meere gift of the ſpirit, both for the matter and the manner. in that they ſpake with other tongues, it was the gift of the ſpirit: in that they ſpake with other [l]tongues, other things in ſtead of vanitie, veritie, magnalia Dei, whereas heretofore they ſpake carnalia mundi, this alſo was the gift of the ſpirit. See Epiſtle Dom. 2. after Epiphan. and Epiſtle Dom. 4 à Paſch,

There were dwelling at Ieruſalem deuout men]. The ſummarie pith of all the text following is briefly this: [m] all the religious and deuout men preſent at this miracle, wondered at it, and enquired after it; but the wicked, as we read, verſ. 13 mocked and ſayd, they are full of new wine. The wonders and workes of God euer had and euer ſhall haue this effect, [n] all that are ordained to eternall life, beleeue; but the reprobate deſpiſe the Prophets, and [o] ſtone ſuch as are ſent vnto them. Vnto the godly Chriſts Goſpell is the [p] ſauour of life vnto life, but vnto ſuch as periſh, euen the ſauour of death vnto death: in this [q] ſenſe S. Iohn ſaith in his Apocalyps, He that is vniuſt, let him be vniuſt ſtill; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous ſtill; and he that is holy, let him be holy ſtill. And therefore let vs I beſeech you pray with the Church humbly and heartily.

God which as vpon this day haſt taught the hearts of thy faithfull people, by ſending to them the light of the holy Spirit: grant vs by the ſame Spirit to haue a right iudgement in all things, and euermore to reioyce in his holy comfort, through the merits of Chriſt Ieſus our Sauiour, who liueth and raigneth with thee in the vnitie of the Spirit, one God world without end. The Goſpell, IOHN. 14. 15.

Ieſus ſaid vnto his Diſciples, if ye loue me, keepe my commandements, and I will pray the Father and he ſhall giue you another comforter.

THe quinteſſentiall point of all this long Goſpell, and that which is moſt anſwerable to the preſent Feaſt, is contained in the 18. verſ. I will not leaue you comfortleſſe, but I will come vnto you. For this chapter is a Caſtle of comfort, and this text is as it were the Bellauiew of the whole chapter, in which a Chriſtian may behold all ſufficient fortifications againſt the batteries and aſſaults of all his enemies. I will not part this goodly frame, becauſe it is like [r] Hieruſalem, at vnitie within it ſelfe, and I wiſh with all my heart, that you would rather ponder than number the towers and powers thereof: only for order ſake, you may firſt take a generall view of the whole ioyntly, then a particular ſuruey of euery pinnacle and pin ſeuerally.

For the firſt, euery little creature is a great wonder; out of which, euen the moſt ignorant, who cannot reade, may notwithſtanding ſee that there is a God of infinite power and wiſdome: but man is a [s] greater wonder, as being an abridgement of all wonders: for concerning God, we beleeue that he is a [t] ſpirit; concerning the world, we ſee it to be a body: man is an Epitome of both; of God, in regard of his [u] ſoule; of the world in the compoſition of his body, as though Almighty God the Creator, vpon purpoſe to ſet forth a mirror of his workes workes, intended to bring into this one little compasse of man, both the infiniteneſſe of his owne nature, and the hugeneſſe of the whole world together: it is ſaid diuinely, that man is Gods Text, and all other creatures are [x] commentaries vpon it: heauen reſembles our ſoule, earth our heart, placed in the middeſt as a center, the liuer like the ſea, from whence the liuely ſprings of blood doe flow, the braine giuing light, and vnderſtanding, is like the ſunne, the ſenſes ſet round about like ſtarres: in which reſpect a man is fitly termed Epilogus operum Dei, the world being a great man, and man a little world; and yet behold a greater myſterie, magnum miraculum homo, maximum miraculum Chriſtianus homo; euery man is a wonder, but a Chriſtian is a wonder of wonders (as [y] S. Paul ſpeakes) a gazing-ſtocke, at which all the men on earth, all the deuills in hell, all the glorious Angels and Saints in heauen ſtand amazed: he is in the world, and yet not [z] of the world, as it were one of the Antipodes, he runs contrary courſes vnto other men, [a] He taketh pleaſure in reproches, in neceſſities, in perſecution, in anguiſh for Chriſts ſake: when he is weake, then is he ſtrong: afflicted on euery ſide but not in diſtreſſe: in pouerty, but not in want: perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt downe, but not caſt away: whatſoeuer vnto other is euill, vnto him is good, [c] all things working for the beſt vnto ſuch as loue God. Here is a bundle of wonders

Famine is exceeding grieuous vnto other, but the good man ſhall euen laugh at deſtruction and dearth, Iob. 5. 22. Sinne is [d] damnable to other, but profitable to the Chriſtian, occaſioning repentance not to be repented, 2. Cor. 7. 10. Paul was buffeted in the fleſh, leſt he ſhould be puffed in his minde, 2. Cor. 12. 7. little infirmities in regenerate men, are occaſions often to withhold them from greater offences, and ſo God, as [e] one ſaid, healeth ſinne by ſinne.

[f] Te docuit lapſus magis vt veſtigia firmes,
Atque magis Chriſto conſociere tuo,
Vtque tua melius ſtudeas hareſcere cauſæ:
Sic mala non rarò cauſa fuere boni.

Sickneſſe and other croſſes, vnto other are inſupportable, but, ſaith [g] Dauid, it was good for me that I haue beene in trouble. [h] Death vnto the man of the world is moſt bitter, but vnto the man of God it is [i] aduantage: wherefore the Martyrs and holy Confeſſors in old time reputed the day of their death their birth day. The Gentiles and Heathen, who knew not the Ioyes of another life, made great feaſts on their birth-dayes, as Herod, Matth. 14. 6 and Pharao, Gen 40. 20. But the Chriſtians as we find in [k] Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie) celebrated euermore the funerals of the Martyrs, [l] inſinuating that the day of our death is better then the day of our birth, and that then onely we begin truly to liue, when once we die. Iob, patient Iob cried out impatiently, [m] Let the day periſh wherein I was borne, and the night wherein it was ſaid, there is a man childe conceiued: and the Prophet Ieremiah, chap 20. verſ. 14. Curſed be the day wherein I was borne, and let not the day wherein my mother bare me be bleſſed. On the contrarie, bleſſed is the houre of our death: euen ſo ſaith the Spirit, bleſſed are they who die in the Lord, for they reſt from their labours, and their workes follow them Apocal. 14. 13. So bleſſed a thing is death, as that no man is or can be fully bleſſed [n] vntill his death.

Thus (as you ſee) the Chriſtian doth gaine much in loſing a little, by ſlipping he ſtands the faſter, in affliction he cheereth moſt, in death he begins to liue; theſe put together afford a world of wonders; and the reaſon of all this our Sauiour rendreth in my text; I will not leaue you comfortleſſe, but I will come vnto you.

The deuill crieth, ego [o] interficiam, I will deſtroy you; the world, ego deficiam, I will leaue you: the fleſh, ego inficiam, I will corrupt you: Chriſt only, ego [p] reficiam, I will refreſh you; I will not leaue you comfortleſſe.

The deuill [q] goeth about like a roaring Lyon, ſeeking whom he may deuoure; the which Text is thus excellently gloſſed by [r] B. Latimer: he ſtands not idle but goeth about in euery corner of the world, as a Lion, ſtrongly, boldly, proudly, roaring, for he will not let ſlip his opportunitie, to ſpeake or roare out when he ſeeth his time: ſeeking, not ſleeping; [s] Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath deſired to winnow

I will not.] As the Father is the God of [p] all comfort, and the Holy Ghoſt the [q] Comforter, ſo likewiſe I am annointed and appointed to preach glad tydings vnto the poore, to binde vp the broken hearted, to comfort all that mourne, to giue them beauty for aſhes, and the garment of gladneſſe for the ſpirit of heauineſſe, as the prophet Eſay foretold in his 61. chapter: If then I were ſent from a comforter and and am my ſelfe a comforter, and will alſo ſend another comforter, how can it be that I ſhould leaue you comfortleſſe?

I will not leaue you but I will come to you. The ſtile of man is, I will if God will, [r] if the Lord will, and if we liue we will doe this or that: but Gods ſtile is, I will, as his name is, [s] I am that I am, ſo his ſtile is, I will that I will: for [t] whatſoeuer he pleaſeth he doth in heauen and in earth, and in all deepe places: [u] he ſpeakes the word and it is done, he commandeth, and it is effected: and therefore let none doubt of his mercie, who ſaith in abſolute tearmes, I will not leaue you, but I will come to you.

[a] Iohn 17. 6.

Comfortleſſe] ὀρφανοὺς is one that is fatherleſſe; [b] he therefore doth promiſe, that he will be their Father, and that they ſhall be his children, he will be their Tutor, and they ſhall be his ſchollers; euen led by his Spirit: as if Chriſt ſhould ſpeake thus vnto the Church; I am your husband, and you my beloued ſpouſe, but I will not leaue you comfortleſſe like a deſolate widow, for I will not be long abſent bodily, and I will be preſent euer ſpiritually: behold I am with you alwaies vntill the worlds end.

[b] Auguſt. Beda, Caietan. in locum.

But will come to you] That cannot be conſtrued of Chriſts firſt comming, for he was come long before, and was euen now going away.

There are therefore beſide his firſt, two ſorts of comming,
- Vnto men
  - Paſt, in his reſurrection.
  - To come, in the laſt and dreadfull day.
- Into men
  - Sending the Holy Ghoſt to the bleſſed Apoſtles on this day.
  - Comming into our mindes through his grace euery day.

Interpreters expound this Text of all thoſe kindes of comming: [c] ſome conſtrue this of his reſurrection; a matter of ſuch comfort, that [d] our Church aptly calleth it the very locke and key of all Chriſtian religion: according to that of [e] S. Paul, if Chriſt be not riſen then is our preaching vaine, and your faith is alſo vaine; for the Bible is the ſumme of all Diuinitie: the Goſpell the ſumme of all the Bible: the Creed the ſumme of all the Goſpell: and this one article concerning our reſurrection, is the ſumme of all the Creed, on which all other golden linckes of our beleefe depend: but nothing proues our reſurrection, ſo much as Chriſts reſurrection; If it be preached that Chriſt is riſen from the dead, how ſay ſome among you that there is no reſurrection of the dead? 1. Cor. 15. 12. See before, Goſpell on Eaſter day, and after the Goſpell on Saint Thomas day.

[d] Serm for Eaſter day.
[e] 1 Cor. 15. 14

[f] Other expound this of his comming to iudge the quicke and the dead, and this comming is ſo comfortable to the godly, that [g] S. Paul ſaith, Euery creature groaneth with vs and trauelleth in paine together, vntill that glorious redemption and libertie. See before Goſpell, Dom. 2. Aduent.

most fitly; becauſe[k] the ſonnes of God are led by the ſpirit of God, which is their comforter vnto the end and in the end. Thus Goſpell and Epiſtle paralell excellently: for that which Saint Iohn reports our bleſſed Sauiour promiſed in the one Saint Luke reports how he performed it in the other.

O God make cleane our hearts within vs,

ALbeit this booke were laſt written of all the Bible: yet (as[m] ſome Diuines haue noted) it was firſt expounded by the primitiue Doctors, [n] Irenæus, [o] Iuſtin Martyr, [p] Hippolytus, [q] Melito, [r] Victorinus, and [s] other, as a Scripture moſt neceſſarie to be knowne of all Chriſtians. [t] Oecolampadius called it the Prophets Paraphraſe, [u] Bullenger, the Goſpels epitome, [x] Balæus, the complete ſumme of the whole Bible; the which Almighty God the Father gaue to Chriſt his ſonne, chap. 1. verſ. 1. Chriſt after he was aſcended vp on high committed it to the bleſſed ſpirit, the bleſſed ſpirit deliuered it to S. Iohn, the peculiarely beloued Apoſtle of Chriſt, and S. Iohn left it to the Church, and the Church hath commended it to vs, and now we to you, as a iewell of ineſtimable value, containing as many [y] miſteries as it hath words, yea that which is more, manifold hidden ſenſes in one ſentence.

After this I looked.] [c] After S. Iohn had ſeene the former viſion, according to Chriſts iniunction, he did caſt vp his eye toward the skie, lifting vp his heart alſo to giue thankes vnto God, and as he ſeriouſly beheld the face of the firmament he ſaw a doore open in heauen, which was a ſigne, God intended to reueale more ſecrets, and hidden myſteries vnto him. Hence then thou may eſt learne to lift vp thy ſoule to God, that God may let downe his ſpirit to thee: ſaying with [d] Auguſtine, Boni ſi quid habeo, à Deo ſumpſi, non a me præſumpſi, nec in eo quod adhuc non donauit incredulus, nec in eo quod iam donauit ingratus.

A doore was open in heauen] As God openeth a doore of [e] vtterance before we can ſpeake the myſteries of Chriſt, ſo likewiſe a doore of entrance before we can behold the ſecrets of heauen: [f] in this then appeares the great goodneſſe of God vouchſafing to ſet open the doore of his priuie cloſet vnto a mortall man; and whereas many ſee the Kings chamber of preſence open, and yet dare not enter in as being afraid and baſhfull, it is further added in the text, that the firſt voice S. Iohn heard was to comfort and make him bold: Come vp hither, and I will ſhew thee things that muſt be fulfilled hereafter. In a [g] myſticall ſence, [h] Chriſt is heauens doore, through whom and for whom our conuerſation is in heauen, and the kingdome of God is already within vs, Luke 17. 21.

It is the nature of earth to fall downward, and not to rise vpward, but if thou wilt consider God and his workes aright, thou must lift vp thy selfe, aboue thy selfe, suspending thine owne will, and suspecting thine owne wit, ascending vp in soule by the wings of faith aboue the world, aboue the flesh, and aboue reason too: [o] for the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the Spirit of God: his [p] wisdome and knowledge makes him rebell, insanit cum ratione, too much learning makes him mad; well may he say with Ouid, Ingenio perij. Cunning heretikes in hauing too much wit, offend God and the Church, more then silly schismatikes in hauing too little, Come vp hither. and I will shew. [q] We must purge our earthly affections, if we will behold heauenly things.

I will shew thee things that must be done. For albeit in euill accidents and actions, there is not vnto Gods people an oportet officij, yet there is an oportet necessitatis: according to that of [y] Paul, oportet hæreses esse, there must be heresies among you, that they which are approued among you might be knowne.

Hereafter.] [z] Ergo, such as interpret this vision of things done vnder the old Testament, begin at the wrong end, sith he saith expressly that he will shew things to be fulfilled after the time that he spake with him, and not things done before. This also may teach vs not to reuell in the Reuelation, ouer-venturously making an Apocalyps of the Apocalyps, vndoubtingly determining of euery text and title contained in this booke, seeing as yet, many things are to be fulfilled hereafter. As in all mine annotations vpon other places of holy Scripture; so most specially in many glosses vpon any part of the reuelation, I desire to be rather a reporter, then an expositor; assuring my selfe, that this course will be profitable to the most, and acceptable to the best; for as the Spiders web is not the better because wouen out of his owne brest; so the Bees honie neuer the worse because gathered out of many flowers.

And

And one ſate on the ſeat.] [k] Prepared as it were to determine and heare cauſes; as you may reade, Daniel 7. and Eſay 6. [l] readie to iudge the quicke and the dead God is not ſayd here to ſtand or lie, but to ſit in his throne, [m] ſignifying the ſetled gouernment of his kingdome, who cannot be moued from the right with any perturbations or affections as other Iudges are: [n] God forbid that iniquitie ſhould be found in God, and wickednesse in the Almighty. The Lord gouerneth all the world, as one that ſits in a chaire at eaſe, without any trouble: for howſoeuer his prouidence be ſeene in the leaſt things, in culice, & pulice, ſaith [o] Auguſtine in feeding the fowles of heauen, and clothing the flowers of the field, as Chriſt in the [p] Goſpell: and therefore much more in the greater things, in ordering and [q] caring for his Church, in ſuch ſort, that an holy [r] Doctor cried out; O bone omnipotens, qui ſic curas vnumquemq; noſtrûm, tanquam ſolum cures, & ſic omnes tanquam ſingulos: O good God, who doeſt guard and regard all thy children, as if all were but one, and ſo reſpect euery one, as if one were all: yet all this (as one ſayd) is but cura ſecura, a care without care, for he doth alway reſt, and ſit in his throne.

Like vnto a Iaſper and a Sardine ſtone] [s] Plinie writes that a Iaſper is a greene ſtone, which is of a freſh and pleaſant hue, the colour of many things which are luſtie and liuely, by which [t] Interpreters vnderſtand Gods immortall and incorruptible nature, which liueth for euer and euer, which was, and is, and is to come: being himſelfe euerlaſting, and giuing vnto all things their [u] breath and being, preſeruing them in greene and luſtie freſhneſſe.

A [x] Sardine ſtone hath a fierie colour, repreſenting on the contrary, Gods heauy iudgements vpon ſinners vnrepentant; and ſo both together expreſſe his abſolute power, to condemne and abſolue whom he will in his throne. Or the Iaſper is of a waterie nature, the Sardine of a fiery; [y] to ſignifie that the Iudge of the world doth puniſh and purge by water and fire: he did puniſh that old world by water in the [z] floud; and he doth purge his new creatures alſo, by water in holy Baptiſme, which is a bathe of regeneration, as the [a] Scripture termeth it. Againe, God doth proue by fire, 1. Cor. 3. 13. and puniſh by fire, 2. Pet. 3. 7. The heauens and earth are reſerued vnto fire againſt the day of iudgement, in which the heauens ſhall paſſe away with a noyſe, and the elements ſhall melt with heat, and the earth with the workes that are therin ſhall be burnt vp.

And there was a Raine-bow about the ſeat] [b] It is very comfortable, that Gods ſeate is compaſſed about with a Raine-bow: for the Raine-bow is a [c] ſigne of his couenant made with vs, and a ſeale of his perpetuall mercy toward vs: if God ſhould enter into iudgement with his ſeruants according to iuſtice, [d] no man liuing could be iuſtified. But he hath ſet his Raine-bow round about his throne, that he can looke no way but he muſt ſee it: and therefore now Gods ſeat vnto ſuch as are made partakers of his couenant, is not a terrible throne, but as [e] Saint Paul ſweetly calleth it, a throne of grace, whereunto he may well approach in time of need with boldneſſe, and finde readie helpe. The colour of the Rainebow (ſaith the Text) is in ſight like vnto an Emerald; [f] which hath a freſh and pleaſant luſtre [g] ſo nothing is ſo delectable to Gods children as his couenant of grace and mercie, which is euer [h] freſh and greene toward all ſuch as beleeue in him: howſoeuer lightnings and thundering proceed out of his throne, yet all is well ſo long as there is a Raine-bow ſtill about it.

Or as [i] other, in the Raine-bow there is an admirable varietie of colours, according to that of the [k] Poet:

Mille trahens varios aduerſo ſole colores.

So Gods exceeding wonderfull perfection of beauty ſhines in the creation of ſo many diuers and ſundry creatures in the world, being as * Ambroſe truly, Mirabilis in maximis, & mirabilis in minimis.

them is found no lie; and crowned with victory for conquering Satan, and enlarging Gods kingdome.

[o] Other expound this of the Preachers of Gods holy word, being graues moribus, and senſu maturi: but [p] moſt interpret this of the Saints departed out of this world, and now raigning with the Lord Ieſus in heauen. Indeed their number is without number. Apocal. 7. 9. [q] but the ſet number in holy Scriptures of foure and twenty, or twelue, or the like, notes a certaintie of Gods promiſe toward them; or (as Bullinger vpon the place) the twelue Patriarches haply repreſent all Iſrael vnder the Law: the twelue Apoſtles all the beleeuing Gentiles vnder the Goſpell; and ſo [r] theſe twenty foure ſignifie the whole triumphant Church, conſiſting of Iewes and Gentiles.

Sitting.] An [r] illuſion is made to Kings in the world, which haue their counſellers, and noble men ſitting about them in their throne: for ſuch as haue [f] followed Chriſt in the regeneration, ſhall ſit vpon twelue thrones, and iudge the twelue tribes of Iſrael: they ſhall not be Iudges in ſtead of Chriſt, but they ſhall ſit in iudgement with Chriſt, allowing his ſentence, yea reioycing in all that he doth, and in all that he ſaith. [t] Or the twenty foure Elders are ſayd to ſit, becauſe they [u] reſt from their labors, and haue quiet affections, altogether free from any troubleſome paſſions of the minde: [x] Abrahams boſome doth aptly figure the ioyes of heauen, inſinuating that the Saints departed are now quieted, as children in their mothers lap, or in their fathers boſome.

Clothed in white rayment] For Chriſt hath [y] purged them, and made them [z] faire, clothing them with his owne [a] righteouſneſſe and puritie: [b] He that knew no ſinne, made himſelfe to be ſinne, that we ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him: as Chryſoſtome vpon that Text, the iuſt was reputed a ſinner that the ſinner might be iuſt. This white garment is termed [c] elſewhere by S. Iohn, a long white robe: becauſe Chriſt is the [d] propitiation for our ſinnes, [e] couering not only ſome, but all our vnrighteouſneſſe from the top to the toe: [f] Si texit peccata Deus noluit auertere, ſi noluit auertere, noluit animaduertere, ſi noluit animaduertere, noluit punire, noluit agnoſcere, maluit ignoſcere. Chriſts righteouſneſſe imputed vnto vs, is not pallium breue, but talaris tunica, not a ſhort cloake, but a long gowne, couering all our inconformities, all our deformities, all our weakneſſe, all our wickedneſſe, all the ſinnes of our youth, all the ſinnes of our age, from his eye who ſitteth on the throne.

And had on their heads crownes of gold] Cyrus ſayd to his ſouldiers, he that is a foot-man ſhall be an horſe-man, and he that hath an horſe ſhall haue charriots: but all ſuch as fight vnder Chriſts banner, are ſure to be rewarded better for euery true Chriſtian ſouldier [g] ouercommeth, and to him that ouercommeth is giuen a crowne of gold. To him that ouercommeth I will grant (ſaith [h] Chriſt) to ſit with me in my throne, euen as I ouercame, and ſit with my Father in his throne The Saints haue through faith [i] ſubdued kingdomes, [k] euen Satan the prince of darkeneſſe; and therefore now crowned in the kingdome of glory, becauſe they were conquerours in the kingdome of grace. By this deſcription of ſtately thrones, and goodly garments, and golden crownes of the Saints in heauen, we may be well aſſured of their happineſſe and felicitie. Let vs not therefore faint in our affliction and miſerie, ſeeing they paſſed through the ſame croſſes, and now triumph in eternall ioy.

The [l] Gentiles only led by the light of nature, taught the youth of their time, that vertue dwelleth vpon the top of an high hill, and the way to this hill is rough and troubleſome, but when once a man is come to the top, he ſhall finde a faire plaine, goodly greene medowes, and all manner of pleaſure. Chriſtians inſtructed by wiſdome it ſelfe, know that the way to heauen is very [m] ſtrait, and that [n] thorow many tribulations we muſt enter into the kingdome of God: but as ſoone as we ſhall come thither, [o] it can neither be ſpoken nor thought what happineſſe each of vs ſhall enioy, when we ſhall ſit in thrones, and be clothed in white rayment hauing palmes in our hands, and crownes on our heads.

And out of the seat proceeded lightnings, and thundrings, and voices] All which insinuate the [t] diuers operation of Gods holy word: it is a lightening, when it rebuketh and condemneth a sinner: it is a terrible thunder, when it doth threaten and command things contrary to the flesh: it is a solatious voice, when it [u] bindes vp the broken hearted, and preacheth vnto the poore glad tydings of Saluation; it is lightning and thunder in the Law, but in the Gospell a milde voice, speaking comfortably to such as mourne in Sion. Our hearts are all sinne, but as [x] one wittily notes) our eares are full of mercy: he therefore that will sing vs a song, must set it to the tune of the Gospell. We can heare nothing but pax vobis, and see nothing but ecce Agnus: as if the Law like an old Almanacke were out of date but Moses and Christ meete vpon the mount, and here thundrings as well as comfortable voices are heard to proceed from Gods throne; both are [y] effects of his Spirit: for when the minds of Gods elect are illuminated, when the wicked are terrified and horribly stricken with his threats, as it were with lightning, when the Preachers of the word thunder against the corrupt manners of the world, when they sing the sweet notes of the Gospell; in a word, when they deliuer any good exhortation or doctrine to the people, all proceedeth out of Gods throne, from whom commeth euery good and perfect gift.

by the Spirit, and ſhining in their good workes as the cleere Cryſtall; [n] other of a plentifull vnderſtanding of the veritie, firſt giuen vnto Chriſt by the Father, and then vnto the Church by the Spirit of Chriſt; and it is like Cryſtall, cleere, beautifull and pure, without any corruption of humane phantaſies: haply by this glaſſie ſea like Cryſtall, is meant the Cryſtalline heauen, as being next the heauen of heauens, in which Almighty God ſits in his throne.

[o] Other are of opinion that the world is meant by this glaſſie ſea, for as the raging ſea cannot [p] reſt:

[q] Vná eurúſq́, notúſq́, ruunt, creberq́, procellis,
Affricus, & vaſtos tollunt ad littora fluctus.

Hence called [r] æquor, quia minime æquum & ſemper æſtuans, and fretum ab vndarum fremitu: ſo there is much toſſing and tumbling in the world; great vnſtableneſſe, innumerable changes and turnes, and it is as brittle as glaſſe: mundus tranſit ſaith our Euangeliſt in his [s] firſt Epiſtle; the world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof: [t] S. Auguſtine diuinely, Multi cruciatus ſuſcipiuntur certi, vt pauci dies adjiciantur incerti: we ſuffer a great deale of trouble which is certaine, to prolong our daies a little time which is vncertaine: for this world is not our manſion houſe or [u] permanent citie, but an [x] Inne: Omnia quibus vteris in hac vita, ſic tibi debent eſſe tanquam ſtabulum viatori, non tanquam domus habitatori: memento peregiſſe te aliquid, reſtare aliquid, diuertiſſe te non ad defectionem ſed ad refectionem here we muſt ſo lodge this day, as that we muſt be readie to depart the next day.

The world is like Rumney marſh, [y] hyeme malus, æſtate moleſtus, nunquam bonus affecting vs like a fit of an ague, ſometime too cold, ſometime too hot, alwaies vncertaine.

This ſea of glaſſe is like to Cryſtall, excelling in cleerenceſſe: [z] for as in Cryſtall there is not any thing ſo little, but that it may be ſeene: ſo there is nothing done in the world ſo ſmall, as that it can eſcape Gods [a] all-ſeeing knowledge. This ſea is before the ſeat, inſinuating that our actions are not ſubiect to fortune, but only gouerned by Gods iudgement and throne, furious Sennacharib did not what he liſt againſt God and his people, for the Lord [b] put a hooke in his noſtrils, and a bridle in his lips, and brought him backe by the ſame way that he came: yea whatſoeuer he did againſt Hieruſalem, he did it by Gods appointment: for thus ſaith the Lord by the mouth of his holy [c] Prophet, O Aſſur the rod of my wrath, and the ſtaffe of mine indignation; I will ſend him to a diſſembling nation, and I will giue him a charge againſt the people of my wrath to ſpoile ſpoiles and to tread them vnder feete like the mire in the ſtreet.

Nabuchodonoſor did not what he liſt againſt Sion. [d] I will beſiege thee (ſaith God) and fight againſt thee on a mount, and will caſt vp rampards againſt thee: ſo likewiſe of another king, [e] thou art mine hammer and weapons of warre, for with thee will I breake the nations, and with thee will I deſtroy kingdomes. Tamberlaine the great did not what he liſt againſt the Turkes, he was (as he called himſelfe) Gods ſcourge. Iudas and the Iewes did not what they liſt, but what God would in putting to death the Lord of life. So [g] S. Peter expreſly, Him haue you taken by the hands of the wicked, being deliuered by the determinate counſell and foreknowledge of God, and haue crucified and ſlaine.

It is reported in [h] prophane hiſtorie, that blinde fortune made Agathocles of a potter a potentate; aduancing him from the dirtie clay, to the golden crowne: on the contrary, that ſhe pulled downe Dionyſius, once the terror of the world, from his princely throne, and made him a poore ſchoole-maſter in Corinth. Adramittenus by the ſame fortune, borne in a fulling-houſe, was honored with the regall ſceptre, when as the young Prince being right heire, was conſtrained in his extreme need to turne black-ſmith: and by the ſame fortune Pompey being little was made great; and being great was again made little: but we which are verſt in holy Bible, know that it is God only, [i] which hath put downe the mighty from their ſeat, and hath exalted the humble and meeke: [k] who taketh vp the ſimple out of the

A man of the Pharisies] It is sayd in the former chapter at the 23. verse, that when Iesus was at Hierusalem at the feast of the Passeouer, many beleeued in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did. Among those many, Nicodemus (as [y] it is thought) was one: for he was a[a] sweet rose, springing from a pricking thorne: the Pharisies, as [a] S. Iohn the Baptist told them flatly, were a generation of vipers; and yet Nicodemus a Pharisie beleeued in Christ: for [b] God is able of stones to raise vp children vnto Abraham. [c] He that will haue all sorts of men to be saued, will haue all sorts of men come vnto the knowledge of the truth; All that the Father giueth me saith [d] Christ) shall come to me: [e] whom he did predestinate, them also he called, and whom he called, them also he iustified, and whom he iustified, them also he will glorifie. Wherefore seeing Gods secret will in electing and calling men to saluation is [f] vnsearchable, let vs not [g] iudge, [h] before the time: Matthew, though a Publican, may become an Apostle; Magdalen, though an harlot, may become deuoute; Paul, though a persecutor, may become a Preacher; Iustin Martyr a Gentile, may turne Christian; Augustine a Manichee turne Catholike; Luther a Monke, turne Protestant; and here Nicodemus a Doctor among the Pharisies, is turned scholler vnto Christ.

[q] Other note the meekenesse of Nicodemus, who being a Doctor, desired to learne; and being a chiefe Ruler did not send for Christ, but went vnto him. Whose modestie condemnes exceedingly the presumption of some pettie Rulers in our age, who will not vouchsafe to come to Christ, (if he will be serued) Christ must come to them, the Supper of the Lord must be brought vnto their table, the Minister of Christ must church their wiues at home, baptise their children at home, reade the publike prayers at home: whereas [r] Dauid sayd, One thing haue I desired of the Lord, which I will require still, euen that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the dayes of my life. These gallants imagine they doe God a fauour when they tread in his Courts, and a grace to his Ambassadors, when they lend their eares to an houres audience. The renowned * Captaine Huniades was of another minde, who when he felt himselfe in danger of death, desired to receiue the Sacrament before his departure, and would in any case (sicke as he was) be carried to the Church to receiue the same; saying, that it was not fit that the Lord should come to the house of his seruant, but the seruant rather to goe to the house of his Lord and Master.

By night] If he did this vpon the sight of Christ great miracles, hungring and thirsting after righteousnesse, not suffering his eyes to sleepe, or his eye-lids to take any rest, vntill he had found the way, the truth, and the life; then his fact is imitable: for we may not procrastinate our comming vnto Christ, but [t] seeke the Lord while he may be found, and call vpon him; while he is neere. Or if he came by night to gaine the fitter opportunitie, to talke priuatly with Christ, it is also commendable; for opportunities are so gratious, as that good houres are the suters best friends. Or if he did this out of feare, lest he should displease the [t] Pharisies, and be cast out of the Synagogue; then it was an imperfection in him: and yet considering that it was the first time that he came to Christ, in some sort excusable. The first time, for after once we know the truth, and haue subscribed thereunto, we may not play the part of Nicodemus, [u] halting betweene God and Baal, betweene Christ and the Pharisies, holding with the hound and running with the hare. [x] Naaman the Syrian was such a Nicodemus, as desirous to serue the liuing Lord, and yet to worship his rotten Idoll Rimmon. [y] Aaron was such a Nicodemus, in fearing the peoples displeasure more than the wrath of God. [z] Obadiah was such a Nicodemus, he did hide the Prophets of the Lord, and feed them with bread and water, and yet he durst not openly protect them. In our age the Church-Papiſt, or meere Paliament-Proteſtant, is an arrant Nicodemus, his heart is ſet for Babel, , and yet his face lookes toward Hieruſalem, equiuocating with God and the King. He come to Chriſt by night, he will be preſent at Diuine Seruice, but in a cloſe pew, no man ſhall ſee or heare what he doth and ſaith vnto Chriſt: nay the Ieſuited Papiſts are worſe than Nicodemus for although he did ſomething ill openly, yet he did good ſecretly: but they doe much hurt ſecretly, though they ſeeme to doe ſome good openly: ſo that it may be ſaid of theſe cloſe Fauxes and Foxes, vndermining our Chriſtian eſtate by night, which [c] Ammianus Marcellinus wrote of the Saracens in his time, Nec amici nobis vnquam, nec hoſtes optandi: they be ſuch as we can neither haue found peace, nor yet faire warre with them: [d] A ſword they be whoſe ſcabard is in England and France, but the handle of it is in Rome, and Spaine; for the firſt motion to draw this ſword comes from thence.

Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God] Nicodemus auoucth in this Preface three things of Chriſt, [h] which ought to be found in euery good Paſtor:

[h] Ardens.

He muſt be for his { Learning, a Rabbi. / Licence, ſent of God. / Life, doing ſuch workes, as that other may ſee God is with God.

Rabbi, is a [i] title of honour giuen vnto men of great diſcretion and learning, according to that of Chriſt in the [k] Goſpell, yee loue greetings in the market, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi: ſo the Miniſter of the word muſt be both [l] apt and able to teach: a Doctor in Iſrael, a Rabbi. See Goſpell eight Sunday after Trinitie.

[i] Beauxamis.

[k] Matth. 23. 7.

Secondly, the Paſtor muſt come from God, as being the [m] man of God and [n] mouth of God: and therefore no man ought to take this honour vnto himſelfe, but he that is called of God, as Aaron was, Hebr. 5. 4. See Goſpell, firſt Sunday after Eaſter.

Thirdly, whereas the Miniſter cannot doe ſuch miracles, he muſt endeuour to doe ſuch morals, as that other may ſee God is with him: Ego (quoth [o] Luther) hoc video, non eſſe quod Theologum magna ſciat, multa doceat, ſed qui ſanctè & theologicè viuit: a good Prelate muſt reſemble the Planet [p] Iupiter, which is in his effect benevolus, calidus, humidus, diurnus:

Chriſt

Christ did not [u] condemne his pusillanimitie for comming in the night, though he taxed his ignorance, for that being a Master in Israel, he knew not that a man must be borne againe, before he can see the kingdome of God. Hence we may learne to reprehend and exhort with all [z] long suffering and doctrine: we must direct by doctrine, correct in patience; when any come to conferre with vs about the points of holy religion, we must vse them familiarly, as Christ did Nicodemus.

[u] Euthymius.

[z] 2 Tim. 4. 2.

And as the Pastor may take this and many more good instructions here from Christs example; so the people may learne two things of Nicodemus: it is their dutie to question with their Teacher, How can a man be borne when he is old? and againe, not dissembling their ignorance, How can these things be? Secondly, that which is deliuered by the iudicious Pastor in generall, they must apply in particular: Christ sayd, Except a man be borne againe: Nicodemus answered, How can an old man? applying it as it should seeme to himselfe. Thus much concerning the men, I come now to the matter.

Verily, Verily] [y] This double asseueration, Amen, Amen, is not vsed in any Gospell, excepting this of S. Iohn, and in no part of this Gospell so much as in this argument, As then the Huntsmen gather that there is some game when the Hounds open loud and free: so when the Scripture vseth importunitie in a point it is an euident signe, that there is some great thing to be marked; and indeed the Problem discussed here, betweene Christ and Nicodemus concerning our iustification, is one of the maine questions in all Diuinitie.

Christ in this disputation vrgeth his aduersarie with } Authoritie, I say, we speake. &c. } Arguments, except a man be borne againe, &c.

Nicodemus acknowledged that Christ was a Teacher sent from God, but Christ to shew that he was [z] the Prophet, yea the Lord of the Prophets; he doth not speake like [a] Moses, I am sent me; nor as the rest of the Prophets in their preaching, Thus saith the Lord: but [b] authoritatiuè, with command, I say, we speake that we know, we testifie that we haue seene.

[z] Iohn 6. 14.

[a] Exod. 3. 14.

[b] Caietan. in loc.

Secondly, Christ vseth arguments against his aduersarie. Nicodemus imagined that a man is iustified by the pharisaicall obseruation and externall workes of the Law. This opinion is confuted by Christ: [c] first in generall, Except a man be borne from aboue he cannot see the kingdome of God: then in more particular, explaining the proposition: Except a man be borne of water and of the Spirit.

[c] Melanct. enar. in locum

[d] S. Paul saith, that was not first made which is spirituall, but that which is naturall, and after that which is spirituall. A man therefore must be first borne naturally to come into the world, then borne againe from aboue supernaturally and spiritually to ouercome the world: [e] non nascimur sed renascimur Christiani: men are made not borne Christians: all that is borne of the flesh is flesh: euery man is [f] borne in sinne, and conceiued in iniquitie, [g] not vnderstanding the things of the spirit of God: corrupt seed begets corrupt sonnes, all of vs are by nature [h] prius damnati quàm nati, found guilty to die before we be borne to liue, the children of wrath, as the [i] Scripture plainly.

[i] Ephes. 2. 3.

Now the Law cannot deliuer vs from this bondage of sinne, nor from the wages thereof eternall death: and therefore no man is iustified by the workes of the Law, but by the faith of Iesus Christ, Galat. 2. 16. that which is borne of the spirit is spirit: eternall life is not carnall but spirituall: hee therefore that will be the sonne of God in his kingdome of grace, the saint of God in his kingdome of glory, must be borne againe from aboue by the Spirit. [k] How this is done Christ sheweth here more particularly.

[k] Euthymius in locum.

Except a man be borne of water] [l] Some few moderne Diuines haue conceited, that these words are not to be construed of externall baptisme, because, say they, Christ taketh water here by a borrowed speech for the Spirit of God, the effect whereof it shadoweth out; and so water, and the Spirit are all one. To this interpretation answer is made; first, that it is an old rule in expounding of holy Scripture, that where a litterall sense will stand, the farthest from the letter is commonly the worst; and that there is nothing more dangerous in a Christian Vniuersitie, than this this licentious and deluding art, changing the meaning of words, as Alchymie doth or would doe the ſubſtance of metals; euerting the truth in peruerting the text: of theſe men Auguſtines poſition is a prophecie: Si præoccupauerit animam alicuius erroris opinio, quicquid aliter aſſeruerit Scriptura, figuratum homines arbitrantur. De doct. Chriſt. lib. 3. cap. 10.

Secondly, we tell them, if water were put here for explanation or declaration, it ſhould not be placed before, but after the word Spirit, as in their owne example, Matth. 3. 11. He will baptiſe you with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire.

Thirdly, that Origen, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Cyril, Beda, Theophylact, Euthymius, in their Commentaries vpon this place; [m] Iuſtine Martyr, [n] Tertullian, [o] Ambroſe, [p] Hierome, [q] Baſil, [r] Gregorie Nyſſen, and many moe, yea moſt of the Fathers, [s] Hooker, a man of incomparable reading, openeth his mouth wider, auowing peremtorily, that all the Ancients haue conſtrued this Text as [t] our Church doth of outward Baptiſme. See Bellarm. de effectu Sacrament cap. 3. §. Ad hunc locum; & de ſacramento bap. lib. 1. cap. 4. §. Secundo Caluinus: Maldonat. com. in loc. Hooker Eccleſ. polit. lib. 5. §. 59. & 60. Beza maior. annot. in locum.

By Baptiſme then a man is made a member of Chriſt, a childe of God, and an inheritor of the kingdome of heauen, as our Church out of this place [u] teacheth: and in Baptiſme there is a viſible ſigne, which is water, and an inward grace, which is conueyed vnto vs by the Spirit inuiſibly: for as the winde bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but thou canſt not tell whence it cõmeth nor whither it goeth; ſo is euery one that is borne of the Spirit: as the Spirit is an inward neceſſarie cauſe, ſo the water is an outward neceſſarie meane to our regeneration: For [x] Baptiſme is not only a ſigne of profeſſion, and marke of difference, whereby Chriſtian men are diſcerned from other that be not chriſtned: but it is a ſigne of regeneration, wherby as by an inſtrument they that receiue Baptiſme rightly, are graſted into the Church. And as [y] Leo ſpeakes, incorporated into Chriſt: Vt ſuſceptus á Chriſto, Chriſtumq; ſuſcipiens, non idem ſit poſt lauacrum qui ante baptiſmum fuit, ſed corpus regenerati fiat caro crucifixi: [z] fleſh as it were of Chriſts fleſh, and bone of his bone: [a] Quoniam ſicut factus eſt Dominus caro noſtra naſcendo; ita & nos facti ſumus ipſius renaſcendo: the Spirit in this our new birth is [b] in ſtead of a Father, the water, in ſtead of a Mother: in this ſenſe the Scripture termes Baptiſme a [c] bath of regeneration, [d] whereby God cleanſeth his Church, vnto [e] remiſſion of ſinnes: [f] Omni homini renaſcenti, aqua Baptiſmatis inſtar eſt vteri virginalis, eodem Spiritu Sancto replente fontem, qui repleuit & virginem, vt peccatum quod ibi enacuauit ſacra conceptio, hic miſtica tollat ablutio.

Haply ſome will obiect, if this expoſition be true, then no man can be ſaued except he be baptized. In caſes of extremitie, when publike Baptiſme cannot be had, [g] priuate is ſufficient: and when not ſo much as priuate may be well obtained, votall is enough, as our [h] Popiſh aduerſaries acknowledge: [i] Satis eſt, ſi adſit mentaliter, vbi non poteſt haberi ſacramentaliter. If thou canſt get Baptiſme for thy childe, deſpiſe not this bleſſed Sacrament, for although it be not an immediate cauſe, yet it is a mediate channell of grace, whereby the mercies of God in Chriſt are conueyed vnto vs: according to that of [k] Hugo, fideles ſalutem ex iſtis elementis non quærunt, etſi in iſtis quærunt: non enim iſta tribuunt quod per iſta tribuitur: but if in extreme neceſſitie thou canſt not enioy this holy water, aſſure thy ſelfe, God accepteth a deſire for a deed.

If any ſhall aske, why Chriſt in this diſpute concerning iuſtification, doth treat firſt of Baptiſme, then of Faith; [l] anſwere is made, that the outward miniſtrie, which eſpecially conſiſts in preaching the word, and adminiſtring the Sacraments is like Iohn Baptiſt, pointing vnto Chriſt, and ſhewing how much we ſtand in need of his mercy. This great Rabbi therefore begins his Sermon of regeneration with outward Baptiſme. but ends it with faith, in the worlds Sauiour; by which all the Sacraments and other workes of the miniſtrie are powerfull and effectuall in vs. It is impoſſible for any man to ſee God without a Mediator, appeaſing the wrath of God of himſelfe; no man aſcendeth vp to heauen, but he that came came downe from heauen, euen the Sonne of Man which is in heauen: [m] he is the ſole mediator betweene God and, man, opening the kingdome of heauen to all beleeuers.

As therefore Moſes liſt vp the Serpent in the wilderneſſe, euen ſo muſt the Sonne of Man be liſt vp, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him periſh not, but haue euerlaſting life.] [n] He doth aptly teach a Doctor of the Law, by a figure of the Law; [o] ſhewing that the Law and the Goſpell agree; the Serpent being a type of the Sauiour: [p] the children of Iſrael murmuring againſt God, and his ſeruant Moſes, were ſtung with the fiery ſerpents in ſuch ſort, that many of the people died; and therefore they deſired Moſes, that he would pray to the Lord to take away theſe Serpents from them; hereupon, Moſes according to Gods expreſſe commandement, made a Serpent of braſſe, and ſet it vp for a ſigne, and when a Serpent had bitten a man, then he looked to the ſerpent of braſſe, and liued; he was healed inſtantly without any medicine, or other helpe; yea without any other reaſon, but that God had ſayd it ſhould be thus: all men haue murmured againſt God, and are ſtung with the [q] fiery darts of that [r] old Serpent Satan; and yet all ſuch as repent and behold with Faiths eye Chriſt exalted on the croſſe, ſhall be ſaued from euerlaſting death, of pure grace, without and before their good workes, albeit afterward being deliuered from their enemies, it be their dutie to ſerue God in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, all the daies of their life.

The [s] vertue of Chriſts death is better deſcribed by this one ſimilitude, then thou couldeſt declare with a thouſand words, it is an vniuerſall medicine, whoſoeuer; it pertaineth to all, but all pertaine not to it; none pertaine to it, but they that take benefit by it; and none take benefit by it, no more then by the brazen Serpent, but they that [t] fixe their eyes on it: He that beleeueth in him ſhall not periſh, [u] It is not enough to beleeue in him, except a man alſo beleeue in him: [x] except he wholly depend on him, as his only Mediator and Redeemer. [y] And thus a man is borne againe by faith in Chriſt, begotten, and confirmed in vs euermore by the bleſſed word and Sacraments.

Yea, but what is all this to the feaſt of holy Trinitie? wherefore did the Church allot this Scripture for this Sunday? The reaſon hereof is very plaine [z] becauſe this Goſpell expreſſeth all the three ſacred perſons, as alſo their appropriate attributes; it ſheweth the perſon of the Father, verſ. 2. We know that thou art a teacher come from God: the perſon of the Sonne ſpeaking throughout the whole dialogue; the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, verſ. 5. except a man be borne of water and of the Spirit: vnto the Father it aſcribeth eſpecially power, no man could doe ſuch miracles as thou doeſt except God were with him. Vnto the Sonne wiſdome, we ſpeake that we know; to the Holy Ghoſt goodneſſe and loue, the winde bloweth where it liſteth, &c. And therefore let vs praiſe the ſacred Trinitie with other Churches out of [a] S. Paul, of him, and through him, and for him are all things, vnto him be glory for euer, Amen. [b] Auguſtine is of opinion, that theſe prepoſitions, of, through, for. are not to be confounded; becauſe ex, doth note the Father, per, the Sonne, in, the Holy Ghoſt: ex, the Father, of whom are all things; per, the Sonne, through whom are all things; in, the Holy Ghoſt, in whom are all things, as [c] Peter Lombard wittily.

Vnto theſe expoſitions of Auguſtine and Lombard, I thinke [d] our Church alludeth, vnfolding the Text thus, of him, that is, euery good and perfect gift, comes downe from the Father of light: through him, that is, Chriſt Ieſus our Sauiour is the meane by whom we receiue his liberall goodneſſe; in him, that is, in the power and vertue of the Holy Ghoſt: God the Father is the fountaine of all goodneſſe, God the Sonne the conduit, God the Holy Ghoſt the ciſterne.

Almightie and euerlaſting God, which haſt giuen vnto vs thy ſeruants grace, by the confeſſion of a true faith, to acknowledge the glory of the eternall Trinitie, and in the power of the Diuine Maieſtie, to worſhip the Vnitie. we beſeech thee, that through the ſtedfaſtneſſe of this faith, we may euermore be defended from all aduerſitie, which liueſt and raigneſt one God without end. Amen.

The Epistle. 1. Iohn. 4.7.

Dearly beloued, let vs loue one another, for loue commeth of God, &c.

THis Epistle consists of a { Salutation, dearely beloued. / Exhortation, let vs loue one another. / Confirmation, for loue commeth of God, &c.

In the first, obserue two vertues in Saint Iohn, his { Loue, saluting so kindly. / Discretion, because commending loue to other, he sheweth abundant loue himselfe Dearely beloued] This gratious and kinde compellation is vsuall in the writings of the blessed Apostles, and therefore the Minister beginning euery solemne act in our Liturgie, with this or the like phrase, is Apostolike: Dearely beloued brethren the Scripture moueth vs in sundry places, &c In the set order for morning and euening prayer, at the communion, We be come together at this time, dearly beloued, to feed at the Lords Supper: at publike Baptisme, Dearely beloued, for so much as all men be conceiued and borne in sinne, &c. At the solemnization of Matrimonie, Dearely beloued friends, &c. At the visitation of the sicke, Dearly beloued, know this, that Almightie God is the Lord of life and death: at the buriall of the dead, For as much as it hath pleased Almightie God of his great mercy, to take vnto himselfe the soule of our Deare brother here departed, at the Commination, Brethren in the primitiue Church, &c.

These gratulatorie termes and turnes of loue should be reciprocall betweene the Pastor and the people: [e] we dissemble before God and man, if we doe not loue you dearly, when often in our Sermons we call you dearely beloued; and you dissemble more with vs, if you neither respect our person, nor reuerence our place, when, you terme vs ordinarily, spirituall Pastors, and reuerend Fathers in God.

But herein the discretion of S. Iohn is most remarkable, for that exhorting other to loue, himselfe giues so good example of loue, Beloued, let vs loue. For whereas there be two waies to teach, one by precept, and another by patterne men are led more by that which they see, then by that which we say. [f] Diuines obserue, that S. Iohn is no where so great an Orator, and so subtile a Logician as in this argument of loue, for albeit he writes in this Epistle [g] both of faith and hope, so well as of loue; yet the greatest part thereof is spent in loue: [h] Locutus est multa, & prope omnia de charitate: speaking much, almost all of charitie. For as he was the most loued Apostle, so likewise the most louing Apostle, preaching and practising, and so by both instantly pressing this one point, sundry wayes, againe and againe, Let vs loue one another. And therefore seeing S. Iohn out of his loue, doth exhort vs so much vnto loue; [i] Quicquid amor iussit, non est contemnere tutum.

[i] Ouid.

In the second part of this Epistle note the { Act, Let vs loue. / Obiect, One another.

Let vs loue] The [k] Schoolemen acutely distinguish betweene amor, dilectio, and charitas: amor is common to beasts with men; dilectio proper only to men electio quasi: charitas is an [l] infused grace by the Holy Ghost, only proper to Saints, as in my text, Euery one that loueth is borne of God: now this loue which is only from God, [m] is in God, and for God only: for how can he loue his neighbour, who doth not loue God? [n] Quomodo diligit proximum tanquam seipsum, quandoquidem non diligit & seipsum? How can he loue his neighbour as himselfe when as he doth not loue himselfe? for the wicked man who loues not God, hateth his owne soule, Psalm. 11. 6. Qui diligit iniquitatem, odit animam suam, as S. Hierome and Augustine reade.

[l] Idem 2. 2æ. quæst. 24. art. 2 & 3.
[n] August. tract. 83. in Ioan. & Tho. 2. 2æ. quæst 25. art 7.

This loue comming from God, and continuing for God, [o] consists in thinking well, speaking well, and doing well, as Saint Paul teacheth in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, chapter 13. Loue (saith he) thinketh not euill, it enuieth not, that is, for the thought; it disdaineth not, it doth not boaste it selfe, it is not prouoked vnto anger, that is, for words; it is bountifull, and seeketh not her owne, that is for workes: and therefore God in his Law (whose complement is loue) forbiddeth all iniuries against our neigbours; in deed, thou shalt not kil, thou shalt not commit adulterie, thou shalt not steale; in word, thou shalt not beare false witnesse; in thought, thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, &c. See the Decalogue.

[o] See Epistle for Quinquagesima Sunday

One another.] [p] Imitating the good, tolerating the bad, louing all; howsoeuer we may loath the faults of many, yet we may loue the persons of all, according to that of the Emperor [q] Otho, Pacem cum hominibus, Bellum cum vitijs; and that of [r] Augustine, Diligite homines, interficite errores, and that of [t] Aquine, we must loue wicked men, not as wicked, but as men.

For loue commeth of God] This confirmation is taken from the first author of loue, which is God.

For loue commeth from God [t] as
- Giuing it, Iames 1. 17. Euery good and perfect gift is from aboue.
- Commanding it by precept: For it is the fulfilling of his Law, Rom. 13. 10.
- Commending it by practise, ver. 8. For God is loue, shewing his loue to bee great, in respect of
  - Himselfe, the giuer; bestowing a great gift, his only begotten Son; with great affection, in this appeareth the loue of God.
  - Vs, the receiuers: enioying such a gift as we did most want, for when we were * dead in sinnes, he sent his only begotten Sonne into the world, that we might liue through him.

God is loue] This is a short, but a singular commendation, insinuating that howsoeuer in enumeration loue be but one vertue, yet in estimation vpon the point the only vertue.

God is loue [u] foure wayes,
- Substantialiter.
- Causaliter.
- Actiuè.
- Passiuè.

Substantialiter: for there is nothing in God, but God; [x] nihil habet in se, nisi se God is [y] all in all, and yet without [z] accidence at all, as being most great without [a] quantitie, most good without qualitie. [b] Bernard obserued truly, that these propositions in abstracto, God is Wisdome, Iustice, Mercy, Goodnesse, are more congruent, than God is wise, iust, mercifull, good. In this sense God is not only [c] louing as men accidentally, but essentially loue.

Secondly, God is loue, causaliter, as making concord in all his creatures: he doth accord the disagreeing elements, and so temper our differing humors,

As that [d] Their warre, our bodies peace maintaines.

He makes men to be of one [e] minde in a priuate house, and of one [f] heart in the publike Church: it is [g] charitas substantia, which giues charitatem accidentalem: his loue may be termed [h] ignis accendens, ours ignis accensus, as [i] Augustine calls his wisdome, lumen illuminans, ours lumen illuminatum: as then he that walketh in the burning day light is sayd to be in the Sunne, and the Sunne in him; euen so whosoeuer dwelleth in loue, dwelleth in God, and God in him.

Thirdly, God is loue, actiuè, louing [k] all that he made, man especially: louing vs first in our election, when we could not loue him, in our redemption, when [n] Rom. 8. 32.

God is not only louing for a time, but conſtant in his loue : Pſal. 118. 1. The Lord is gratious, and his mercie endureth for euer ; his right hand is mercy, his left iuſtice. Now that hand is greateſt which is moſt vſed, but God doth giue more with his right hand of mercy, then puniſh with his left hand of iudgement : as [o] Danid ſweetly, Gratious is the Lord and righteous, yea our God is merciſull : as [p] S. Ambroſe notably, Bis miſericordiam poſuit, ſemel iuſtitiam : he ſaith once only that God is righteous, but twice in one verſe that he is gratious : and in the ſecond commandement Almightie God ſaith of himſelfe, that he will puniſh but the third and fourth generation of ſuch as hate him : whereas he will ſhew mercy to thouſands to ſuch as loue him and keepe his Commandements.

[o] Pſal 116. 5.

It is very remarkable, that God in going to puniſh Adam, is ſaid only to [q] walke a ſoft pace : but in ſhewing mercy toward the Prodigall child, to [r] runne, ſignifying hereby that he is [s] ſloweſt to conceiue a wrath, and readieſt to forgiue, he will not alway be chiding, neither keepeth he his anger for euer : his diſpleaſure toward his children is ſoone at an end, but his merciſull goodneſſe endureth for euer, vnto the end, in the end, without end.

[r] Luke 15. 20.

[s] Pſalm. 103. 8. 9. 17.

Fourthly, God is loue, paſſiuè being louely, moſt worthy to be loued, maximè diligibilis, as the [t] Schoole ſpeakes : O taſte and ſee, ſaith [u] Dauid, how gratious the Lord is. [x] O how plentifull is thy goodneſſe, which thou haſt layd vp for them that feare thee, and that thou haſt prepared for them that put their truſt in thee, euen before the ſonnes of men. If loue then occaſion loue, let vs loue God a little, who loueth vs exceeding much, and indeed we cannot anſwer God well in any thing but in loue : for if God be angry with thee, thou muſt not anſwer him in anger ; if he iudge thee, thou mayeſt not againe iudge him ; if he chide thee, thou muſt be patient ; if he command, thou muſt obey ; but in that he loueth thee thou mayeſt, yea thou muſt loue him againe. [y] Nam cùm amat Deus, non aliud vult quàm amari : quippe non ad aliud amat, niſi vt ametur, ſciens ipſos amore beatos qui ſe amauerint.

[y] Bernard ſer. 83. in Cantica.

As God is loue, [z] ſo the deuill is extreme malice : ſuch then as ſpend themſelues or their meanes in hatred, enuie, malice, needleſſe quarrels of law, contention, vniuſt vexations, hindring their neighbour, are darlings vnto Satan ; and for the time being vntill they repent, heires apparent of hell. On the contrary whoſoeuer loueth is borne of God, and knoweth God, [a] in this life by faith, in the [b] next by face : knowing God [c] experimentally, and knowne of God as a childe moſt [d] reſembling his father : in one word (as [e] ſome confidently ſpeake) by this as it were made God, for God is loue.

The Goſpell and Epiſtle well agree, for Abraham, the Father of the faithfull and his ſonne Lazarus, who loued God aboue all things, and their neighbour as themſelues, are ſayd to be comforted in heauenly Paradiſe : whereas the rich Glutton, who by louing himſelfe too much, altogether neglected his loue toward other, is tormented in hell : and therefore ſeeing the end of vncharitableneſſe is ſo terrible, the reward of loue ſo comfortable ; Dearly beloued, let vs loue one another.

The Gospell. Luke. 16. 19

There was a certaine rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine white, and fared deliciously euery day, &c.

[f] Lanſen. Con. cap. 97. Caietan & Maldonat. in lec. ex Iuſtin, & Poſtil. Dom. 1. poſt Trin.

CHriſt in this [f] hiſtoricall Parable, or Parabolicall Hiſtorie, deſcribes the ſtate of a careleſſe Epicure, and a cureleſſe Begger. In the firſt (as [g] Melanchthon obſerues) he doth exhort vs to compaſſion; in the ſecond to paſſion: to compaſſion, in that Abraham denied vnto Dines a drop of water in hell, becauſe Dines had denied vnto Lazarus a crumme of bread on earth. To paſſion and patience in aduerſitie: for as much as Lazarus afflicted with ſcornes in his minde with ſores in his body while he liued, is ſayd to be carried by glorious Angells into bleſſed Abrahams boſome when he died.

[h] Bonauentura diet. ſalut. cap. 8

The Glutton is deſcribed according to his [h] foure-fold death:
- Naturall: There was, but is not.
- Ciuill: a certaine man, not worthie the naming.
- Spirituall: clothed in purple, and fine white, faring deliciouſly euery day, making too much of himſelfe, too little of Lazarus.
- Infernall: in hell torments, he liſt vp his eyes, &c.

Or this Epicure is painted out vnto vs according to his three-fold eſtate, as he was in his
- Life: which he ſpent in iollitie, clothed richly, fareing deliciouſly.
- Death: the rich man alſo died, and was buried.
- Hell: In hell torments he cried, &c.

The deſcription of his life is taken
1. From the circumſtance of time wherein he liued, There was.
2. From his name, or rather indeed, no name: a certaine man.
3. from his poſſeſſions, a rich man.
4. From his manners & behauiour toward
   - Himſelfe, concerning his
     - Backe: clothed in purple and fine white.
     - Belly: faring deliciouſly euery day.
   - Lazarus, in ſinnes of
     - Omiſſion, in that he
       1. Denied Lazarus.
       2. Denied him bread.
       3. A crumme of bread.
       4. A crumme of bread, which fell from his table.
     - Commiſſion, or permiſſion, in that he ſuffered his dogs to ſucke the beggers blood.

In which Interpreters, I confeſſe, note generally the dogs to be more kinde then their maſter, in licking the poore mans ſores with their medecinable tongues: and yet for as much as our Sauiours intent in this Text, is to exaggerate the miſerableneſſe of Dines, and miſeries of Lazarus, I miſlike not [i] their opinion, who thinke the dogs did rather hurt then heale Lazarus, [k] as taking him not for a liuing man, but for a dead carcaſe: for this wretched caitiffe cared more to fill his dogs then to feed the poore: whereas he ſhould haue taken from his dogs to beſtow vpon Lazarus; he tooke from Lazarus to beſtow vpon his dogs, who fared the better by ſucking his blood, and licking his ſores: a true patterne of a baſe cormorant, who maketh vſe of euery creature that walketh by his doore, or crawleth on his ground, or lieth at his gate; like to [l] S. Peters fiſh, who though his mouth be full of gold, yet is he nibling at euery bait.

[l] Matth. 17. 27

There was] Abraham was rich, and Iob rich, and Herod rich, and Salomon ſo rich, rich, as that he gaue Cedars as the wilde figtrees, and siluer as stones, 1. King 10.17. all these were, but now they be dead, and returned naked to the graue. The Grammarian, who declineth all other nounes in euery case, cannot decline death in any case.

Flectere per varios, docuit qui nomina casus,
Heu cadit, & casum hunc flectere non potuit.

Great [m] Iupiter had but a little tombe. [n] Tamberlaine the terror of his time, died with three fits of an ague. Henrie the first, King of England,[o] decus olim. nunc dolor orbis.

[p] Iam cinis est; & de tam magno restat Achille,
Nescio quid: paruam quod non bene compleat vrnam.

This Epicure, who whilome was a gallant, clothed in purple and fine linnen, a man of a daintie diet, a iollie hunter, hollowing and hoiting after his hounds; is now dead, and buried, and tormented in hell: [q] erat, non est: indeed there was such a rich man, but he is not now.

Here then is a monition for the rich, and a munition for the poore: for the rich an admonition, that [r] they be not high minded, and put their trust in vncertaine riches: and [s] boast themselues in the multitude of possessions; for they shall carrie nothing away with them, when they die, but leaue their goods for other. All this world passeth away, and the lust thereof, [t] riches auaile not in the day of wrath, nor gold in the day of vengance, Ezech. 7. 19. Money is a queene, and therefore rich men are kings in this world, ruling, ouer-ruling all by corruption and briberie; but when death, as Gods bayliffe, shall shew his habeas corpus, they cannot redeeme the soule; that will cost more, saith Dauid, Psal. 49 8. O foole, this night will they fetch away thy soule from thee, Luk. 12. 20.

This also may comfort the poore: for albeit the rich oppresse for a time; yet ere it be long, they shall lye in hell like sheepe, death gnawing vpon them, Psal. 49. 14. [u] Fret not thy selfe then because of the vngodly, neither be thou enuious against the euill doers; for they shall soone be cut downe like the grasse, and be withered euen as the greene herbe: haue patience for a while, and the wicked shall bee cleane gone, thou shalt looke after his place, and he shall be away: There was a rich man he is not now.

A certaine rich man] The poore mans name is mentioned here, There was a begger named Lazarus: but the name of the rich man is omitted; homo quidam is his stile: which our blessed Sauiour did for sundry reasons, as Interpreters obserue. First, to shew that [x] his waies are not as our waies are: for we [y] scorne the poore, and take notice of the rich only. Genealogies of Princes, and pedegrees of Nobles, are so well knowne vnto vs as our fingers: but if any shall aske the name of a begger: [z] he is a certaine man, old father, what shall I call him. Alas silly wretch he hath no name, except it be some by-name, as blinde Bartimæus, or lame Giles; and therefore Christ, quite contrary to the worlds humour, acknowledged the poore, but not the rich.

Secondly, Christ omitted this Epicures name, [a] because he knowes not the wicked, Matth. 7. 23. I neuer knew you: God knoweth his owne children by their names, Exod. 33. 12. Esay 43. 1. for their names are written in heauen, Luk. 10. 20. and so being told in his booke he doth agnize them for his sheepe Ioh. 10. 14. I am the good shepherd, and know mine and am knowne of mine. A great comfort to the godly, because they be in the booke of life; not only secundum eorum opinionem, as the wicked are, Psal, 69. 29. but secundum rei veritatem, as [b] Augustine speakes in his enarration of that Psalme: not only [c] in libro præsentis iustitiæ, but in libro prædestinationis æternæ: not only written on the [d] outside of Gods booke, from whence they may be wiped away, but in the inside. out of which it is impossible they should be blotted: for if an inconstant man said, quod scripsi, scripsi; [e] then how much more God, in whom there is no variableness nor shadow of change? Iames 1. 17. I will not put out his name out of the booke of life, but I will confesse his name before my Father, and before his Angels

[g] Euthymius in Psalm 68. & Psalm. 138.

I know God knoweth the wicked as well as the godly: for there is a [g] threefold booke of his knowledge.

1. An vniuersall common-place-booke, wherein both good and bad are written; of which it is sayd, Psal. 139. 15. In thy booke were all my members written.

2. A priuate booke, Gods Vade mecum, in which only the names of his elect are written, whose waies he doth know, that is, approue, Psal. 1. verse last, The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous.

3. His booke of accounts, or blacke booke, wherein only the wicked are written, Daniel 7. 10. The iudgement was set, and the bookes opened: so that Almightie God knoweth the wicked in the world to come, but to their condemnation; and he knoweth them in this life, but not to their commendation, hee will not vouchsafe [h] to make mention of them with his lips; as in the Text he concealeth the rich Epicures name.

Thirdly, Christ ommitted the Gluttons name, [i] to signifie that the [k] memorial of the iust shall be blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. [l] The remembrance of Iosias is like the composition of the perfume that is made by the Art of the Apothecarie, it is sweete as hony in all mouthes, and as musicke at a banquet of wine: Abel being dead, yet speaketh, Heb. 11. 4. A good name, saith [m] Fulgentius, is the godly mans heire: but God saith of Amaleck, [n] I will vtterly put out the remembrance of Amaleck from vnder heauen. Either the names of the wicked are pretermitted altogether, as in this place, there was a certaine man; or else recorded to their eternall infamie: as Ieroboam is mentioned in the Chronicles of Israel Pontius Pilate in the Creed, and Stephen Gardiner in our Martyrologies.

Fourthly, Christ did omit this Epicures name, [o] to pull downe the mightie from their seat, and to exalt the humble and meeke. The proud builde cities to get them a name, Gen. 11. 4. Is not this great Babel that I haue built, for the honour of my Maiestie? Dan. 4. 27. [p] they ioyne house to house, and lands to lands, imagining their mansion shall endure from generation to generation, calling their Manours after their owne names, Psalm. 49. 11. Christ therefore concealeth here the rich mans name, [q] for wherewith a man sinneth, by the same shall he bee punished.

These reasons are common among the Fathers and other interpreters. Vnto which I will adde, how Christ haply named not this Epicure, [r] because he spake much in his dispraise. Here then is a good lesson for all Christians, especially Preachers in this vncharitable detracting age, wherein euery State-critike, like [s] Augustus Cæsar, taketh vpon him to taxe all the world, and to coniure all publike actions, vnder the narrow circle of their prinie censure, [t] as if men held the copie of their liues by the breath of their mouth, and by the dash of their pen: it is our dutie, [u] laying aside all malitiousnesse, enuie, guile and euill speaking, to follow Christs example: when we censure the facts of great ones liuing, or the faults of rich ones dead, let vs not doe it in partiall and personall inuectiues bitterly; but in generall and discreet termes charitably, there was a certaine man.

Wherefore seeing Christ hath not expressed this Gully-guts name for so many good reasons, it is idle curiositie for other to say that it was [x] Nabal, or [y] Ninensis or [z] Herod, who beheaded Iohn the Baptist: assuredly such inquisition is to schoole Gods Spirit, and to teach that eternall Word to speake.

Rich man] It is apparent in this Scripture, that goods in themselues are not euill: Ne putentur mala, dantur & bonis; & ne putentur summa bona, dantur & malis: as [a] Augustine told Boniface: lest they should be reputed euill, they are giuen vnto the good, as to Father Abraham: and on the other side, lest they should be thought the chiefe good, often bestowed vpon the bad, as here

vpon this Epicure, There was a certaine rich man. Againe, Lazarus is said, verſ. 22. to be tranſlated into Abrahams boſome. Conſider therefore not only [b] qui ſublatus, ſed quo ſublatus; poore, but good Lazarus, is carried into rich but good Abrahams boſome, to ſignifie that neither pouertie demerits heauen, nor riches hell; as Auguſtine diſputes in his 89. Epiſtle to Hilarius: and therefore the ſame Father in his Tract againſt [c] Adimantus, cap. 20. citing the text of Paul, 1 Tim. 6 Truſt not in vncertaine riches, but in the liuing God, who giueth all things abundantly concludes in fine, that it is not, culpabile habere iſta, ſed ea præferre & conferre: to preferre riches, or compare riches with faith and a good conſcience, by which our ſoule is inriched; and ſo the Glutton is condemned here, [d] not for hauing, but for abuſing riches in riot, or not vſing them in hoſpitalitie.

[b] Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 51.

[c] Tom. 6. p. 141.

Such then are non reſident from the text, who diſallow large reuenewes in Clergie men, becauſe ſome get them ill, and ſpend them worſe: Poſſunt hæc in quoſdam veraciter dici & noſtros & veſtros, qui ſi vtriſq; noſtrum diſplicent, neq; noſtri, neq; veſtri ſunt: as Saint [e] Auguſtine told the Donatiſts. Inuey ſo long as you will, and ſo much as you can againſt pride, negligence, couetouſneſſe, but let euerie Aſſe beare his owne burden, and euery malefactor anſwer for his owne fault, Is any Prieſt a ruffin in apparell? I am ſure the [f] Statutes appoint modeſt habits, and the thirtith Iniunction requires execution of the ſame. Doth any Diuine frequent the Tauerne more then the Tabernacle? examine the [g] Canons of our Church, and Statutes of our Colledges, and you ſhall vnderſtand theſe (if there be any of theſe) to be the very ſcorne of the conformable clergie; Quia nec ordinem tenent, nec ab ordine tenentur, as [h] Bernard of Abelardus. Let God haue his honor, the Church her reuerence, the State her commendations, euery one his due. Shoot not at randome, as blinde men at crowes, or like mad men ſtriking ſuch as are next you: but particulariſe the fault, as Chriſt in the text, inſinuating that this Epicure did get his goods wrongfully, keepe them baſely, ſpending alſo that he did ſpend riotouſly: with the laſt he begins firſt, ſhewing the rich mans exceſſe in gorgeous attire, being clothed in purple for [i] oſtentation, in fine linnen for delectation.

And as moſt women, ſo ſome men are blotted worthily for their vanities in this kinde; as popiſh *D. It is reported of Monſieur Biroon, [x] lately executed in France, that he would not ſuffer the deaths-man to touch his haire, but intreated a Gentleman of his acquaintance to performe that kinde office vnto him, as to compoſe his locks in ſuch order, that the hangman might not cut off one haire. So Seneca writes of ſome who ſpend many a good houre betweene the combe and the glaſſe: but [y] *S. This sheweth also that the Glutton is tormented in hell, [k] not for that he did hurt, but for that he did not helpe Lazarus: he was rich indeed, but of his owne; clothed in purple, but of his owne; faring deliciously, but he did eate his owne. This was his fault, and in conclusion his fall, that he refreshed not hungry Lazarus at his gate with a few fragments of his table: [l] Non quod abstulerit aliena, sed quod non donarit sua. [m] What hell then, and how many torments are prouided for oppressing Dines, who taketh from Lazarus, if this Epicure be so tortured in endlesse flame for not giuing to Lazarus? And it fortuned that the begger died, and was carried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome] You heare what these two were in their life, now you shall heare what they were in and after their death. Lazarus was comforted in Paradise, Dines tormented in hell: in the one, paine was turned into pleasure; in the other, pleasure into paine: both died alike, for [n] it is appointed that all men shall once die: but their comfort in dying, and iudgement after death is not alike. rich man died, and his ſoule was [o] againſt his will fetched away, Luke 12. 20 but Lazarus died, and his ſoule was yeelded vp into the hands of his Redeemer. cheerefully. Dives was ſnatched away by foule Fiends into hell, Lazarus carried away by good Angels into heauen:

He that in this life was ſcorned of men, and had no compamions but dogs, is now ſo regarded of God, as that Angels are his [p] ſeruants: he that could neither goe, nor ſit, nor ſtand, is now carried, not on the ſhoulders of men, as the Pope the proudeſt in earth: but he rides on the wings of Angels, in the plurall, for many good Angels attend [illegible]od man, to make the [q] quier full and the ioy perfect.

But whither did they carry him? out of this worlds tumult and troubles, into the port and hauen of happineſſe: here called Abrahams boſome, a metaphor taken from [r] Saylers, who carrie their ſhips out of the tempeſtuous waues into the good harbour or quiet boſome of the ſea, where they may repoſe themſelues: And it is called Abrahams boſome, for that he was the [s] Father of all them that beleeue. Such then as before Chriſt departed in the faith of Abraham, were carried into the boſome of Abraham, that is, tranſlated into the bleſſed eſtate wherein Abraham was. [t] Abrahæ ſinum intellige remotam ſedem quietis atq; ſecretam, vbi eſt Abraham. This could be no popiſh Limbus, or part of [u] hell it was an heauen aſſuredly, that is, an happie ſtate wherein Abraham and all other departed in Abrahams faith enioyed the preſence of God: an heauen, howſoeuer it be not neceſſarie to determine peremptorily that it was the heauen, ſo called properly; becauſe the [x] way into the holieſt of all was not yet opened, while the firſt Tabernacle was yet ſtanding. See the notes of the Geneua Bible in Engliſh, Hebr. 9. 8. and 12. Caluin Inſtitut. lib. 3. cap. 20. §. 20. & eiuſdem lib. cap. 25. ſect. 6. Bullinger in 1 Pet. cap 3. verſ. 19. Luc. 16. 23, Hebr. 9. 8. Peter Martyr, 2. Regum 2. 8. 11.

The rich man alſo died] Chriſt ſpeaking of their eſtate in this life, [y] began with the rich, and ended with the poore; but ſhewing their eſtate in the world to come, firſt he ſpeakes of the poore, then of the rich. It is worth obſeruing alſo that the poore man who liued in miſerie died firſt, and the rich Epicure wallowing in pleaſure laſt, [z] intimating that God doth haſten to ſhew mercie, but is ſlow in proceeding to iudgement.

And was buried] There was nothing ſayd of the poore mans buriall; but about the rich mans funerall vſually there is great [a] pompe, and much noiſe: for albeit he were ſo blacke as the blacke horſe mentioned Apoc 6. that nothing were in him but darkeneſſe and ſhadow, [b] yet he ſhall finde a blacke prophet, with a blacke mouth, and a headlong tongue, for a blacke Gowne, to make him as white as the white wooll, or as white as the white ſnow: and if a falſe tongue may color him more then that, it is ſet to ſale and may be bought eaſily. For although he was buried in hell, as being the deuills [c] pariſhioner all his life, yet his heires haply for a little money got ſome prieſt to commend, and canonize him for a Saint when he was dead.

And being in hell torments he lift vp his eyes] A fearefull deſcription of hell, [d] which is { Large, / Long, / High, / Deepe.

Large, containing all kinde of paines, as well ſenſus, as damni: for this Epicure was depriued of all comfort, which he deſired either for himſelfe or his friends: and endured all ſorts of torment which he would not: his ſight being afflicted with vncomfortable darkeneſſe, and vgly Deuills, his hearing with hideous and horrible cries, his ſmelling with noyſome ſtincks, his taſte with rauenous hunger and bitterneſſe of gall, his feeling with intolerable fire.

law: Losse, Bonds, Ignominie, Talio, Stripes, Exile, Seruitude, Death. [c] All which are found in hell: as first, the reprobate lose God, and all that is good, as well in hap as in hope. Secondly, they be bound hand and foot in that darke dungeon, Matth. 22. 23. Thirdly, they suffer ignominie, seeing all their wickednesse in thought, word, deed, and the punishment inflicted on them for all this wickednesse, is knowne vnto men, Angels, Saints, deuills, vnto their best friends, and worst enemies. I will bring an euerlasting reproch vpon you, and a perpetuall shame which shall neuer be forgotten, Ierem. 23. 40. Fourthly they make satisfaction and recompence so farre as they can: [f] Reward her euen as shee hath rewarded you, giue her double according to her workes: in as much as she glorified her selfe, and liued in pleasure, so much giue yee to her torment and sorrow. So Father Abraham in the text, Sonne, remember that thou in thy lifetime receiuedst thy pleasure, and Lazarus on the contrarie receiued paine, but now he is comforted, and thou punished. Fifthly, [g] Iudgements are prepared for the scorners, and stripes for the backe of the fooles. Sixthly, the reprobate shall be shut [h] out of Gods kingdome, and [i] cast as exiles out of his presence into vtter darknesse. Seuenthly, the reprobate are the [k] sonnes of sinne, and made tributarie to Satan, euer praying, and yet neuer satisfying their debt. Eightly, they suffer the [l] second death, a death after death, a death and yet euerlasting; for as hell is large, so long: betweene vs and you, saith Abraham in Paradise, to Dives in hell, there is a great space set, so that they which would goe from hence to you, cannot, neither may they come from thence to vs. Infortunate Dives in hell flames is euer dying, and yet neuer dead.

O immortall death, O deadly life, what shall I terme thee? for if thou beest life, wherefore doest thou kill? if death, how doest thou still endure? there is neither life, nor death, but hath some good in it: for in life there is some ease, and in death an end, but in thee neither ease nor end. [m] Prima mors animam dolentem pellit de corpore, secunda mors animam nolentem tenet in corpore. The damned shall [n] seeke death and shall not finde it, for [o] their worme shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched. [p] Vermis conscientiam corrodet, ignis carnem comburet, quia & corde & corpore deliquerunt. And therefore such as hold with Origen, that the deuill and his angels one day shall be released from their tortures, and that the words of Christ, [q] Depart from me yee cursed into euerlasting fire, were spoken minaciter potius quam veraciter, are confuted by the Scripture, planissimè atque plenissimè, saith [r] Augustine.

Hell is high also, for the torments of it are most bitter in the highest degree without intermission, abatement, or change; without which, all things not only painfull, but euen pleasant (as it appeared by the Manna) become insupportable [s] We can see nothing but this Man, our soule loatheth this light bread.

Lastly, botomlesse hell is deepe, for that hellish paines are absolute without any mixture of comfort: Dives cannot get one drop of cold water to coole the tip of his tongue, tormented in the flame.

Desideranit [t] guttam, qui non dedit micam, he that denied a crum of bread in his life, was denied a drop of water in hell: alas, what are ten thousand riuers, or the whole sea of water, vnto that infinite world of fire? yet Dives, vnhappy Dives, who wasted in his time so many tunnes of wine, cannot now procure water enough, a pot of water, an handfull of water, a drop of water to coole the tip of his scorched tongue: as he did offend in all the powers of his minde, and in all the parts of his body; so was he doubtlesse tormented in all them vniuersally, yet most in his tongue, because he did sinne most in his taste: for God punisheth in [u] proportion, inflicting a paine for sinne, correspondent to the pleasure in sinne. Because Pharaoh drowned the men children of the Hebrewes in a riuer, Exod. 1. 22. himselfe and his host were ouerwhelmed in a sea, Exod. 14. 28. Because the tyrannous Ægyptians compelled the children of Israel extraordinarily to labour and sweat in [x] making bricks, by which haply lice were bred in their bodie; Almightie God in his iust iudgement afflicted this persecuting people with such [y] lice that no [z] medicine could destroy them. They haue Moses and the Prophets, let them heare them.] Vngodly men hauing too little faith, and too much curiositie, will not beleeue that there is an heauen, or an hell, except one come vnto them from the dead. Christ therefore teacheth in the person of Abraham, that the Scriptures ought to be a lanterne to our feete, the which are not farre off, that we should say, [*] who shall goe vp for vs to heauen, and bring it vs? neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, who shall goe ouer the sea for vs? and cause vs to heare it, that we may doe it? but the word is very neere to thee, euen in thy mouth and in thine heart. Moses and the Prophets are read daily, let vs heare them instructing vs sufficiently concerning heauen and hell, [*] Deut. 30. 12 13. 14.

and all other points appertaining necessarily to saluation. [f] The Law doth intimate how we must liue, the Prophets how we must beleeue: by these two we may learne to shun the torments of hell, and obtaine the ioyes of heauen: if we will not heare Moses and the Prophets, assuredly neither will we beleeue, though one arose from death againe. [t] For Christ raised another Lazarus from the dead, and yet the pharisies continued in vnbeleefe.

By this one sentence foure Popish assertions are confuted: as first, their [u] denying the Bible to lay Lazarus in a vulgar tongue, by which he may know the way the truth, and the life. Secondly their opinion concerning the Scriptures insufficiencie: for if the Prophets and the Law were sufficient to warn and instruct the brethren of Dives, [x] how much more shall Moses and the Prophets and Gospell too, [y] make the man of God absolute and perfect vnto all good workes? Thirdly, their [z] inuocation of Saints departed. And lastly, their obambulation of spirits and apparitions of [a] dead men, reporting the miseries of Purgatorie, Let none be found among you that asketh counsell at the dead, for all that doe such things are abhomination vnto the Lord. To the Law, to the Testimonie: if they speake not according to this word it is because there is no light in them. If a Saint should arise from death againe, ye would not beleeue him: if an [d] Angell from heauen should preach another Gospell, yee may not beleeue him: it is sufficient if you search the Scriptures, hearing Moses and the Prophets, [e] for in them ye shall finde eternall life.

Marueil not my deare brethren though the world hate you, &c.

THe [g] louing Disciple being euer like himselfe, prosecuteth in this text his accustomed argument of charitie:

- Firſt, exhorting vs to loue by two reaſons, [h] à
  - Bono diligentium, We know that we are translated from death vnto life, because we loue the brethren.
  - Malo non diligentium, He that loueth not his brother, abideth in death, vers. 14. 15.
- Secondly, shewing how wee must loue, to wit,
  - Affectionately, not shutting vp our compassion from the brethren, vers. 17
  - Effectually, let vs not loue in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in veritie, ver. 18 and these two points are enforced by a thre-fold argument:
    - 1. From Christs example, who gaue his life for vs, v. 16.
    - 2 From Gods expresse commandement, for it is his commandement that we loue one another, verse 23.
    - 3. From the [i] fruits of loue which are
      - Peace of conscience: hereby we may know that we are of the veritie and can quiet our hearts, verse 19. 20. 21.
      - Assurance that God heareth our prayers: whatsoeuer we aske we receiue of him, vers. 22.
      - Ioy in the Holy Ghost: hereby wee know that hee abideth in vs, vers. 24.

Maruell not] It is neither new, nor rare that the louers of the world ſhould hate the godly; not new, for it was ſo from the beginning, [k] Cain hated Abel, [l] Eſau Iacob, [m] Iſmael Iſaack: not rare, but exceeding common at all times, in all places: and therefore [n] thinke it not ſtrange concerning the fierie triall which is among you, to proue you, as though ſome ſtrange thing were come vnto you.

For firſt, contrarie diſpoſitions of Saints and worldlings occaſion contentious oppoſitions. [o] Oderunt hilarem triſtes, triſtemq; iocoſi,
Sedatum celeres, agilem gnauumq; remiſſi,

[p] What fellowſhip hath righteouſneſſe with vnrighteouſneſſe, and what concord hath Chriſt with Belial, and what communion hath light with darkeneſſe? [q] Ephraim is againſt Manaſſes, and Manaſſes againſt Ephraim, and both againſt Iuda. Cain ſlew his brother, and wherefore ſlew he him? our Apoſtle telleth vs in the words immediatly before my text, becauſe his owne workes were euill and his brothers good. Abel ſaid, ſacrum pingue dabo, macrum non ſacrificabo: but Cain on the contrarie, ſacrificabo macrum, non dabo pingue ſacrum.

Secondly, the children of God by the Spirit of God, [r] reproue the world of ſinne: hating the manners of the wicked, euen with a perfect hatred, Pſal. 139.21. Now [ſ] veritas odium parit: and am I therefore become you enemie, ſaith [t] Paul becauſe I tell you the truth? and Chriſt, Iohn 7.7. The world cannot hate you, but it hateth me, becauſe I teſtifie that the workes thereof are euill. And therefore be not aſtoniſhed, (as [u] Tertullian and Fulgentius read) for it is a folly to feare that ye cannot flie; neither maruell, (as our Church and other Interpreters generally) for it is not a point of wiſdome to wonder at that which is neither [x] magnum, nor nouum, nor rarum; it were a more ſtrange wonder if the world ſhould not hate you, ſeeing [y] the friendſhip of the world is enmity with God: and [z] he that pleaſeth men is not the ſeruant of Chriſt. I pray ceaſe to maruell, not to loue; nay rather tie the bond of peace faſter, and loue thy brethren ſo much the more, becauſe the world hateth you.

We know that we are tranſlated from death vnto life] By faith in Chriſt we know that we ſhall be tranſlated from [a] corporall death vnto eternall life: or as [b] Auguſtine, that we are now tranſlated from the death of ſinne to the life of grace: for the iuſt doth liue by faith, Galat. 3.11. euen that faith which worketh by loue Galat. 5.6. S. Iohn doth not ſay, [c] tranſimus, ſed tranſlati ſumus; he that is dead in ſinne cannot raiſe himſelfe, but it is God [d] who deliuered vs from the power of darkeneſſe, and hath tranſlated vs into the kingdome of his deare Sonne: neither doth he ſay, transferemur, we ſhall in the future, but in the preſent we are tranſlated, [e] intimating an vndoubted certaintie, that we [f] ſhall not come into condemnation, but paſſe from death vnto life: now we ſeeme to be dead, our life being hid with Chriſt in God, but when Chriſt which is our life ſhall appeare, then ſhall we alſo appeare with him in glory, Coloſſ. 3.3. Viget enim gloria, ſed adhuc in hyeme, viget radix, ſed quaſi aridi ſunt rami, intus eſt medulla quæ viget, intus ſunt folia arborum intus fructus, ſed æſtatem expectant.

Becauſe we loue the brethren.] [h] This argument is not from the cauſe but from the effect. We are not tranſlated from death vnto life, becauſe we loue; but becauſe we loue, it is a [i] ſigne that we are borne of God, [k] for God is loue, and the [l] fruit of his Spirit is loue, ioy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſſe, &c. [m] Emmanuel Sa, who was a Ieſuite, (as [n] Ribadeneira notes of him) In omni diſciplinarũ genere diligentiſſimè verſatus, accords with this expoſition: it is an argument (ſaith he) that we be tranſlated from death vnto life, becauſe we loue the brethren. And [o] Lorinus another Ieſuite more fully; Cauſalis particula cauſam continet non rei, ſed cognitionis: For quoth he, we are not tranſlated from death vnto life, becauſe we loue: but by this action as an effect of grace, we know that wee liue the life of grace. S. Iohn here, doth reaſon as his maſter [p] elſe-where, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, becauſe ſhee loued much: her loue was not the cauſe of Gods loue, but on the contrarie, Gods loue the cauſe of her loue: for to whom a litle is forgiuen, he doth loue a little. Chriſts argument is from the effect to the cauſe, not from the cauſe cauſe to the effect: as [q] Ireneus, [r] Hierome, [t] Gregorie the Great, and Cardinall Tollet obſerue, See Epiſtle Sunday after aſcenſion in fine.

He that loueth not his brother abideth in death] An argument ab incommodo; from the diſcommoditie of not louing, he that loueth not, is not [u] riſen againe with Chriſt from death vnto newneſſe of life: which our Apoſtle prones by this ſyllogiſme: No man-ſlayer hath in him eternall life: whoſoeuer hateth his brother is a man-ſlayer: Ergo, No man hating his brother hath eternall life. The Maior propoſition is true, without ſhall be murtherers, Apoc. 22.15. The workes of the fleſh are manifeſt, adulterie, fornication, vncleanneſſe wantonneſſe, idolatrie, witchcraft, hatred, debate, emulations, wrath, contentions, ſeditions, hereſies, enuie, murthers, &c.[x] They that doe ſuch things ſhall not inherit the kingdome of God. And the propoſition is vniuerſall, No man-ſlaier hath eternall life. Whether he deſtroy the life ciuill of his brother, as the backbiting ſlanderer; or the life ſpirituall, as the ſoule-ſlaying heretike: or the life naturall, as the cut-throat murtherer. [y] Euery man-ſlayer abideth in death, as well he that killeth himſelfe, as another: he that actually murthereth, and he that intentionally killeth; occidiſti quem odiſti, ſaith [z] Auguſtine; euery man-ſlayer, as well he that taketh away from Lazarus, as he that giueth not vnto Lazarus in extremitie things neceſſarie for his ſuſtenance: ſo the [a] Wiſeman expreſly, The bread of the needfull is the life of the poore, he that defraudeth him thereof is a man of blood: Si non pauiſti (quoth Ambroſe) occidiſti: and [b] Seneca diuinely, Qui ſuccurere perituro poteſt & non ſuccurrit, occidit: he that ſeeth his brother ready to ſtarue for hunger, and doth not, if he can, fill him, is ſayd to kill him. The Minor, or aſſumption is as true: for truth it ſelfe ſaith, [c] It was ſayd vnto them in old time, thou ſhalt not kill, for whoſoeuer killeth ſhallbe culpable of iudgement: but I ſay vnto you, whoſoeuer is angry with his brother vnaduiſedly, ſhall be in danger of iudgement. See Goſpell ſixt Sunday after Trinitie.

Hereby perceiue we loue, becauſe he gaue his life for vs, and we ought to giue our liues for the brethren] How Chriſt loued vs, and how we muſt in louing our brethren imitate his example, ſee Epiſtle 3. Sunday in Lent, and Epiſtle 2. Sunday after Eaſter. [d] When the people wondered at the bountifulneſſe of Iohannes Eleemoſynarius, he ſayd vnto them, O my brethren, I haue not yet ſhed my bloud for you, as my maſter commanded me. For in times of perſecution, when our ſuffering may ſtand the brethren in better ſtead, than our flying; we muſt [e] neglect our temporall eſtate, for their eternall good: as the bleſſed Apoſtles, and holy martyrs in all ages. It is not enough (as that [f] valiant Champion in Gods cauſe ſtoutly) to profeſſe the Goſpell, ad ignem excluſiuè, but we muſt (quoth he) ſticke to God, ad ignem incluſiuè: we muſt forget our ſelues, and as it were forget our ſoules in a fierie zeale, with [g] Moſes and [h] Paul for our brethrens ſake.

But whoſo hath this worlds good, and ſeeth his brother haue need, and ſhutteth vp his compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the loue of God in him] [i] Liberalitie conſiſts in beneuolence and beneficence, for it is not ſufficient to wiſh well, except we doe well: and againe not ſufficient to doe well, except we wiſh well vnto our brethren, giuing [k] cheerefully, with open bowels and [l] enlarged hearts, euen with a [m] ſympathy, feeling their infirmities, and being touched with their bonds, as if our ſelues were bound with them, Hebr, 13. 3. The [n] Arke was pitched as well within as without: if in almes we ſhall open our purſe, bnt ſhut vp our browes and bowels, how dwelleth the loue of God in vs? A bountifull man hath an open heart, ſo well as an open houſe. The [o] Latine tranſlators vſually reade, clauſerit viſcera ſua, for the bowels are the ſeat of our affections: and therefore [p] Paul willeth vs to put on the bowels of mercies: inſinuating (as Oecumenius vpon that place) that our affection muſt not be fraternall only, but parentall alſo: becauſe we muſt be [q] mercifull, as our father in heauen is mercifull, and God is mercifull, [r] as a father who pittieth his owne children: and children, as [s] S. Hierome ſpeakes, are viſcera parentum, euen the bowels of their parents. Hence then wee may learne, not only to forbeare a brother that treſpaſſeth againſt vs vnto ſeuentie times ſeuen times: but alſo when he ſhall haue need, to beare him in our [t] bowels, and boſome, pitying him as our owne childe; which is fleſh of our fleſh, and bone of our bone.

My babes] All of vs haue but [u] one Father in heauen, the Father of [x] lights, and [y] euerlaſting life, of whom is named all the familie in heauen and earth, Epheſ. 3. 15. Yet notwithſtanding the Paſtors are deputie parents, and ſpirituall Fathers in God, [z] begetting Children in Chriſt, [a] not of mortall ſeed, but of immortall by the word of God, able to make men perfect vnto all good workes, 2. Tim. 3. 17. In this ſenſe Paul called Oneſimus his [b] owne ſonne begotten in bonds and his owne [c] bowels, [d] of whom he did traueile in birth, vntill Chriſt was formed in him. Our Apoſtles diminitiue, filioli, repeated eight times in this one Epiſtle, [e] doth argue more tender affection, becauſe men naturally loue little children, which want helpe moſt of all, beſt of all.

Let vs not loue in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in veritie.] Saint Iohn would neuer haue vſed ſo many kinde words, as little children, dearly beloued, brethren, my babes, if it had beene vnlawfull to loue in word: his meaning is (as [f] Auguſtine and [g] other obſerue) that we muſt not only loue in word and in tongue, but in deed and in truth: [h] oppoſing workes vnto words, and veritie to vanitie Let vs not boaſt and ſay, but euidently demonſtrate and ſhew that we loue. [i] For if a brother or a ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food, and one of you ſay to them depart in peace, warme your ſelues, and fill your bellies, notwithſtanding ye giue them not thoſe things which are needfull to the bodie, what helpeth it? Idle complements are not implements: if we promiſe kindneſſe in ſhew, but performe nothing in ſubſtance, we cannot quiet our hearts before God, nor haue truſt that we ſhall receiue whatſoeuer we aske, nor aſſuredly know that he dwelleth in vs, and we in him. See Goſpell fourth Sunday after Trinitie.

This

This man, is God: called Man, for the capacitie and comfort of men. In executing his seuere iudgements he is as a Lion, and a Leopard: Hosea 13. 7 I will be vnto them as a very Lion, and as a Leopard in the way of Assur. I will meet them as a Beare, that is robbed of her whelpes, and I will breake the Kall of their hearts. But in shewing his mercie like to man (as [k] Interpreters obserue:) for a man if he be not transformed into an inhumane beast, hath compassionate bowels, and a soft heart: or if with [l] Augustine we construe this of Christ, he was a certaine man: homo verus, albeit not homo merus: and this supper is the [m] whole worke of our saluation, euen that heauenly banket which Almightie God ordained before the foundations of the world, for his elect people, begun in his kingdome of grace, but accomplished in his kingdome of glory, when as we shall see him face to face. The riches of his abundant mercie then appeare both in his preparation, and inuitation. First, in his prouision, his guests bring not any thing with them to furnish his feast: [n] He hath killed his fatlings, drawne his wine, prepared his Table. He that is all in all, hath himselfe prouided all, and enioyneth his seruants to tell this vnto all; Come, for all things are now ready. Paradise was made before man was created, a great supper ordained, the guests as yet not inuited. Here then is no place for [o] merit, we cannot bring one dish vnto the Lords table, not one daintie to this heauenly banket, nay we cannot bring so much as a little sauce to quicken our appetite, not one good [p] thought to stirr vs vp vnto a good worke, but all our [q] sufficiencie is of God: electing alone creating alone, redeeming alone, glorifying alone. The preparation and participation of all this great supper is, [r] gratia sine merito, charitas sine modo: grace beyond merit, loue beyond measure.

This feast is commended here by a double name: 1. Because a supper. 2. Because a great supper.

There be foure kinds of suppers, as [t] one wittily, the { Sinners, Deuills, Good mans, Lords } Supper.

The sinner maketh a supper vnto the deuill, when in gaining the world, [t] he loseth his owne soule: fœnus pecuniæ, funus animæ: for as there is [x] ioy in heauen when a sinner is found, which once was lost: so there is as were a feast in hell, when a sinner is vtterly lost, which once was likely to be found.

Secondly, the deuill Prepareth a blacke banket for sinners in hell, where there shall be but these two dishes only, [y] weeping and gnashing of teeth. At other feasts (as it is in the prouerbe) the more the merrier, but at this sorrie supper the more people, the greater miserie: fathers howling for their children, wiues for their husbands, euery friend and fellow lamenting each other.

Thirdly, the good man prouideth a supper vnto God himselfe, when as he doth open the doore of his heart, and suffer the words of exhortation and doctrine to come in: Behold [z] (saith Christ) I stand at the doore, and knocke, if any man heare my voice, and open the door, I will come in vnto him, and will sup with him and he with me. [a] I will here sit with him at the feast of his cheerefull conscience while he liueth: and hereafter he shall be filled with the great supper of my glorie, when he is dead. For God ordaineth a feast also for his elect, begun in this life, which is our [b] ioying in the holy Ghost, and [c] feasting in our conscience: continued in the next, when as we shall haue perfect consummation and blisse both in bodie and soule.

If we construe this of the [d] preaching of the Gospell, of the feast of grace by Christ, it may well be tearmed a [e] supper: because Christ was manifested in the last [f] daies, in the worlds euening, as the Paschall Lambe was offered about the going downe of the Sunne, Deut. 16. 6. But if we take this (as [g] Gregorie the great and [h] Hilarie) for the cheere which heauen affords, it may most fitly be called a supper: for the promulgation of the law was as it were a breakfast in the beginning of the day: the first preaching of the Gospel a dinner in the noone of the Church:

[k] Philip. 2. 12.

Let vs examine now why this Supper is called great, and that is in respect of the { Feast-maker. / Cheere. / Companie. / Place.

The Feast-maker is so great, as that all the tongues of men and Angels cannot report how great: and therefore they tell of his greatnesse, not in the positiue degree, but in the comparatiue: [l] A great King aboue all Gods: and in the superlatiue, optimus maximus: euen [m] all in all: [n] Est super omnia, sine quo nulla essent omnia: for of him, and through him, and for him are all things, Rom. 11. 36

[l] Psal. 95. 3.

[n] Augustin. Confess. lib 6. cap 6.

Secondly, the Supper is great in respect of the great cheere, which exceedeth all sense, and all science: for as our eye cannot see; so our heart cannot conceiue what daintie fare [o] God hath prepared for them that loue him. If the transfiguration of Christ on the mount accompanied only with two Saints, Elias and Moses, amazed Peter in such sort, that he cried out [p] Master it is good for vs to be here; then how good will it be for vs to [q] rest on Gods holy hill, where we shall euer enioy the companie of all the Patriarkes, of all the Prophets, of all the Saints, of all the glorious Angels, yea the presence of God himselfe, seeing face to face?

[o] 1 Cor. 2. 9.

[q] Psal. 15. 1.

Thirdly, this Supper is great in respect of the companie, which is not only good, as I haue said, but also great: such as come to this feast are many, such as being inuited earnestly will not come, are more. Gods elect compared with the reprobate, are but [r] a little flocke, but consider them in themselues, and you shall finde them many: for all the poore, feeble, blinde, and halt come to this feast: and our Sauiour saith expresly, that [s] many shall come from the East, and West, and shall sit downe with Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob in the kingdome of heauen: yea the number of such as eate of the Lambs supper is without number, Apocal. 7. 9.

[r] Luke 12. 32.

[s] Matth. 8. 11.

Fourthly, this Supper is great in respect of place: for the finest things are situate in highest places: as for example: the earth as grossest is put in the lowest roome, the water aboue the earth, the aire aboue the water, the fire aboue the aire the spheres of heauen aboue any of them, and yet the palace where this feast is kept is aboue them all, in the heauen of heauens.

[t] See Cooper in Rom. 8. 18.

[t] Euery childe of God at three sundry times, hath three sundry places of residence: the first is our mothers wombe, the second earth, and the third heauen. If we compare these three together in time, bounds and beauty, we shall finde the second doth not so farre excell the first, as the third excels the second: in our first house we remaine ordinarily nine monethes; in our second house some continue [u] threescore and ten times twelue moneths: but in our third house we liue for euer, as being an [x] euerlasting habitation. If we compare them in largenesse, we shall finde that as the belly of a woman is but of narrow bounds in regard of this ample vniuerse; so this is nothing in comparison of that high palace, being infinitely greater then the whole firmament; one starre whereof is bigger then the whole earth: if we compare them in beauty, the firmament, which is the seeling of our second house, beautified with Sunne, Moone, and Starres, and shining more gloriously then all the precious stones in the world, shall be no other thing but the neather side of the pauement of our third house.

[u] Psal. 90. 10

[x] Luke 16 9.

If then the rule be true, that foure things especially perfect a good feast: [y] Homines belli collecti, locus electus, tempus lectum, apparatus non neglectus: assuredly this this Supper is very great, as being ordained by the best Feast-maker, and furnished with the best cheere, in the best place, for the best company. I will end this meditation with [z] Augustine, Merces tua Domine, magna nimis, magnum enim magna decent; neq; enim magnus es tu, & parua merces tua. sed vt magnus es tu, ita magna merces tua: Great, O Lord is thy reward, for great things doe well become great persons; as thou then art great, so thy feast is great: A certaine man ordained a great Supper.

And bade many.] First his speciall guests and peculiar people of the Iewes, inuiting them, [a] at sundry times and in diuers manners, in old time by the Prophets, in these last dayes by his Sonne. But when they put of their calling, God caused his seruants to [b] turne to the Gentiles. As soone as the bidden guests all at once began to make excuse, God commanded his inuiters, the Prophets and the preachers to goe into the streets, high waies, and hedges, and to compell all such as they met, to come vnto the feast: that is, (as [c] Christ expounds himselfe) when the Iewes the children of his kingdome were cast out, he called the Gentiles dispersed ouer the face of the world, from the East, and West, to sit downe with Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, in the kingdome of heauen: for [d] God is no accepter of persons, but in euery nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousnesse, is accepted with him: [e] he will that all men should be saued, and come vnto the knowledge of the truth.

As God doth call many, so many waies; inuiting some gently, compelling other more forcibly, [f] not by fetters and fire, but by strong reasons of powerfull exhortations out of the Scripture: [g] for lightnings and thundring proceeded out of his throne, as well as mild voices:

He calleth vs vnto this great suppper, as [h] Salomon insinuates especially foure wayes:
1. By the outward preaching of his word.
2. By the inward operation of his holy Spirit.
3. By manifest iudgements.
4. By manifold benefits.

By these meanes he calleth vs; as he did our fore-fathers heretofore: the number of Preachers amongst vs is [i] great, and his Spirit [k] dwelleth in vs, his iudgements vpon our nations haue beene many, and his mercies aboue all: and therefore let vs not [l] harden our heart, but heare his voice, lest he sweare in his wrath, that we shall not enter into his rest. I beseech you let vs not while he calleth vs vnto this great supper in season, and out of season, so friendly, so freely, so frequently, make friuolous excuses, and say that we cannot, or will not come: lest he protest in his displeasure that we shall not taste of his Supper.

They all at once began to make excuse] The [m] way to heauen is narrow, and few finde it; the gate strait, and few enter in: many be called, but few come to this heauenly supper. Here then if there were no more text in all the Bible, wee may learne not to doe as the most, but to doe as we must. It is better to haue good company in heauen, then great company in hell: euery man almost affects to be singular in his fashion, and singular in his faction also: but if any will bee singular in deed, let him be Christs guest; let him come to the supper of the Lambe. For many are bidden and most refuse to come: the first saith, I haue bought a farme. It is lawfull to purchase a farme, to buy bullockes and to marry but these things hinder vs in our comming to this feast, when as wee preferre them before this feast; as [n] S. Paul expounds this parable notably: Let such as haue wiues, be as though they had no wiues, and they that buy, as though they possessed not, and they that vse this world, as though they vsed it not. The [o] first stop in our way to Christ is ambition, I haue bought a farme, and I must needs goe to see it. The second is couetousnesse, I haue bought fiue yoke of oxen, and I goe to proue them. The third pleasure, I haue married a wife, and therefore cannot come. For [p] all that is in the world, is, lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and pride of life. [q] Lust of the flesh, I haue married a wife: lust of the eyes, I haue bought fiue yoke of oxen: pride of life, I haue bought a farme.

Here [f] some note the proud mans absurd folly: for whereas he should haue first seene, and then bought his farme; he first bought it, and then desired to see it: indeed none are more blinde then the proud, who to satisfie their ambitious humour, forget often their profit and ease. The Court is the sea wherein aspiring minds desire to fish; but what get they? You demand, said that [t] old Courtier, what I do in the court? mine answer is, I doe nothing, but vndoe my selfe: and I can say this of other suiters, If ten be dispatched ninetie be despighted. It is worthily noted that ambition is charities ape: for as loue giueth almes to the poore; so pride bribes to the rich: as loue is patient for eternall things; so pride is patient for earthly things: as loue suffereth long for veritie; so pride suffereth long for vanitie: in a word, as [u] loue, so pride, beleeueth all things, hopeth all things, indureth all things: [x] Ambitio crux ambientium, Ambition is the proud mans racke whereon he is tortured in the middest of his honour, as neglecting all religion, acquaintance, mirth, ease, good fellowship: preferment in the court, offices in the citie, Lordships in the countrey must be got, vncouth, vnknowne, vnseene, I haue bought a farme, and I must needs goe to see it.

But his greatest fault was [y] in losing an euerlasting kingdome, not for a Popedome, or Dukedome, or Earledome, or for some great Lordship, but for a little land, a vile village, villam emi. Without all question if the proud man had thorowly considered, and knowne his farme before [z] he bought it, he would neuer haue purchased it at such a deare rate. The couetous is such an arrant foole too, [a] respecting his base cowheard, more then his soules shepheard: and the voluptuous man is not a whit [b] wiser in forsaking eternall ioy, for a short pleasure: [c] breuis est, & non vera voluptas.

Most of the popish Postillers, especially the Friers, obserue that the married man is more wicked and vnciuill then the rest: for whereas they make formall excuses, and craue pardon for not comming, he saith in plaine termes, I cannot come. Their words indeed are better, but their practise worse: [d] Sonat humilitas in voce, sed superbia in actione: [e] the voice is Iacobs voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau: they seeme more religious and ciuill before men, but they be no better affected to God, and his supper, then the greatest ruffins in the world: nay this hypocriticall holinesse is more damnable then open wickednesse.

[f] S. Ambrose by these three sorts of men excluded from the great Supper, vnderstands mystically, Gentiles, Iewes and Heretikes: [g] other, otherwise, but the best exposition is neerest the letter.

Submit you selues euery man one to another] The eight beatitudes mentioned Matth. 5. are [n] like Iacobs ladder, reaching from earth vnto heauen: and the first step thereof is humilitie, Blessed are the poore in Spirit. For as God hangeth the earth vpon [o] nothing, that it might wholly depend vpon him: [p] euen so doth he found the world of his Christian Common-wealth vpon nothing, and this nothing is an humble dispriſing and forsaking of all our owne abilities, and an only relying vpon his Almightie power, and grace: submit your selues therefore ye younger, especially to such as are Elder in [q] order, or in [r] age. The [s] Deacon in obedience to the Priest, the Priest to the Bishop, and the Bishop to Christ: and so downeward in humilitie: the Prelate to the Priest, the Priest to the People, being ensamples to the flocke, not Lords ouer Gods heritage, 1 Pet. 5. 3. euery man seruing one another in loue, Galath. 5. 13.

The latter English Bibles interpret ἐγκομπώσασθε, decke your selues inwardly with lowlinesse of minde. For a faire woman hath not a better ornament then modestie, nor a great man a more comely garment then humilitie. And the Church is an [f] army with banners, in battell aray: we must therefore be knit together in lowlinesse, euery one obseruing one another in his ranke, strictly: for if any shall either out of feare play the coward, or out of ambition be to forward, and so disorder the fight, he doth open a gap to the common enemie, who goeth about as a roaring Lion seeking whom he may deuoure. The foreward in all battells euen by

If we looke into our ſelues; our conſcience will ſhew that our ſinnes are for their number great, and for their nature grieuous. If we looke round about vs one neighbour hath more wit, another more credit, many more wealth, and all (for any thing we can learne truly) more worth: haply we may gueſſe at ſome few follies in other, but we certainly know many faults in our ſelues. If we looke what is againſt vs, our aduerſarie the deuill as a roaring Lion, walketh about ſeeking whom he may deuoure. If we looke downward, we behold our mother earth, as the wombe from whence we [k] came; and the tombe to which one day we muſt returne againe: cùm ſis humi limus, cur non humilimus? If we looke vpward; God in heauen reſiſteth the proud, and giueth grace to the humble: he reſiſted proud [l] Pharao, proud [m] Haman, proud [n] Herod, the proud [o] Phariſie, thruſting proud [p] Luciſer out of heauen, proud [q] Adam out of Paradiſe, proud [r] Saul out of his kingdome, proud [s] Nabuchodonoſer out of mens ſocietie, to conuerſe with beaſts. He did exalt humble Dauid from the ſhepheards crooke, to the Kings crowne: he gaue ſuch grace to meeke Daniel and Ioſeph, as that of poore priſoners he made them companions of Princes: and he ſo regarded the lowlineſſe of the Virgin Marie, that all generations account her bleſſed. It is [t] recorded in holy writ, that the Lord went by the Prophet Eliah, and a mightie ſtrong winde rent the mountaines and brake the rockes, before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the winde: and after the winde, came an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake: and after the earthquake came fire, but the Lord was not in the fire: and after the fire came a ſtill and ſoft voice, and then the Lord ſpake to the Prophet: inſinuating, that God will not reſt in a turbulent ſpirit, puft vp with the winde of vaine-glorie; nor in a cholerike angry ſoule which is euer in combuſtion and heate; nor in an auarous heart, buried in furrowes of earth and cares of the world: but he will [u] dwell in a contrite and humble ſpirit, [x] taking vp the ſimple out of the duſt, and lifting the poore out of the mire, pulling downe the mightie from their ſeats, and exalting the lowly, reſiſting the proud, and giuing grace to the humble.

For he careth for you] [u] Dauid ſaith, I am poore and needy, but the Lord careth for me. For how ſhall he (quoth Auguſtine vpon that place) not care for thee now, who did care for thee being yet [x] vnborne? Qui habuit curam tui antequam eſſes, quomodo non habebit curam tui cùm iam hoc es quod voluit vt eſſes? He is our maker, and we are as [y] clay in the potters hand. If then we fall from him at any time, we ſhall be daſhed in [z] peeces as a potters veſſel: but if we be not wanting vnto our ſelues and him, he will neuer be wanting vnto vs; as the ſame Father in the ſame place ſweetly, Nuſquam tibi deeſt, tu illi noli deeſſe, tu tibi noli deeſſe.

The [a] Patriarke Iacob pondering in his minde Gods exceeding great care towards him in his pilgrimage, breakes forth into this excellent confeſſion: I am not worthy of the leaſt of all thy mercies and all thy truth which thou haſt ſhewed vnto thy ſeruant; for with my ſtaffe came I ouer this Iordan, and now haue I gotten two bands. Euen ſo many a poore ſcholler borne in the North and in the South too, may well ſay with holy Iacob; I came to Cambridge with my walking ſtaffe only deſtitute of meanes and money; yet Almightie God hath ſo bleſſed me, that I now poſſeſſe two benefices, as a reward of my labour, and for further imployment: I am taken vp out of the duſt, and lifted out of the mire, to ſit with Princes of the people, Pſalm. 113. 6, 7.

This heauenly meditation: O good God, thou doest so behold my waies and my paths, and so watch and ward night and day for my safetie, like a continuall watch man, as though thou haddest forgot all thine other creatures in heauen and earth, and haddest cast all thy care vpon me alone, hauing no care at all of the rest; for the light of thine vnchangeable sight neither increaseth, doe thou see but one, nor diminisheth, if thou behold things diuers and infinite. Thou seest all things as one thing, and one thing as all things; and therefore thou being whole in all time, and without time, doest behold me wholly together and alwaies. euen as if thou haddest nought else to consider of: yea so thou standest vpon my guard, as though thou wouldest forget all other things, and bend wholly to me alone: for alway thou shewest thy selfe present, if thou finde me ready to receiue thee; goe I, where I will, thou wilt neuer [c] forsake me, vnlesse I forsake thee first.

[c] Iosua 1. 9. Heb. 13. 5.

Here the Gospell and Epistle meet: for God so careth for vs as a good Shepherd, which hauing an hundred sheepe, if he lose one of them, instantly leaueth ninetie and nine in the wildernesse, and goeth after that which is lost vntill he finde it: or as a woman hauing ten groats (if she lose one) doth light a candle and sweepe the house, and seeke diligently till shee finde it.

The Gospell, Luke. 15. 1. vnto v. 11

Then resorted vnto him all the Publicans and sinners to heare him.

IN this Gospell obserue three points especially:

1. Resorting of sinners vnto Christ, vers. 1.
2. The murmuring of the Pharisies against it, vers. 2.
3. Christs apologie for it: intimating in two [m] quicke parables, one of the lost sheepe, another of the lost groat, that he came into the world to seeke and saue that which was lost: and therefore conuersing with sinners, he did not (as the scribes imagined) infect himselfe, but affect their persons, and effect their good.

[m] Et viua & vnificantia sunt verba: Luther in locum.

Then resorted vnto him all the Publicans and sinners] We finde in holy Scripture, that [n] the Lord is farre off from the wicked, and that [o] saluation is farre from the vngodly, bacause their [p] iniquities haue separated between them and God, and haue hid his face that he will not heare them. How then I pray doe sinners, or rather how can sinners resort vnto Christ? answer is made by [q] distinction, impenitent, retchlesse, incorrigible sinners, heaping vp wrath against the day of wrath, euery day pulling downe greater damnation vpon their head, make wals of separation betweene themselues and Christ: but the contrite being sorrowfull for that which is past, and carefull to preuent all occation of sinne to come, [r] draw neere to God, and he doth draw neere to them: he drew them first by [s] grace, then they ranne after him by repentance. Cant. 1. 3. Draw me (saith the Church to Christ) and we will runne after thee: for [t] no man can come to me (saith our Sauiour) except my Father draw him.

In the comming then of sinners vnto Christ, three things are regardable:

1. [u] Terminus à quo receditur, from whence they come.
2. Terminus ad quem acceditur, whither they goe.
3. Motus per quem proceditur, vpon what feete and how.

[u] Bertrandus Dom. 3. post Pentecost.

They went from their sinne to their Sauiour, from the wolfe to the Shepherd, from death vnto life, from the paths of hell, in which are found all sorts of [x] darknesse, [x] darkeneſſe, namely, ſuperiour darkneſſe, as wanting the [y] beatificall viſion: inferiour darkeneſſe, hell being a botomleſſe pit, Abyſſus ſine baſi, profundum ſine fundo: interiour darkeneſſe, in the ſoule, which is the labyrinth of conſcience, for vngodly men are [z] wearied in the waies of deſtruction, as one prettily, [a] Labyrinthus, quaſi labor intus: exteriour darkneſſe, as being full of vgly blacke ſins; out of this way, leading vnto ſuch vncomfortable darkeneſſe, theſe Publicans and ſinners returne to Chriſt the [b] light of the world, [c] inlightning all ſuch as ſit in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death. He giueth vs externall light, for his word is a lanterne to our feet, Pſal. 119. 105. internall light, [d] leading vs into all truth euen with his owne Spirit: eternall light, for the Saints in heauen ſhall ſhine as ſtarres for euer and euer, Dan. 12. 3.

The feet on which all theſe come to Chriſt was repentance, [e] conſiſting in { Contrition. Faith. Obedience.

First, a penitent muſt haue ſorrow, Come vnto me (ſaith [f] Chriſt) all ye that are wearie and laden, and I will eaſe you. The proud ſinner who doth not finde his ſinne, the careleſſe who doth not feele his ſinne, is not entertained of Chriſt, only ſuch are refreſhed as weigh the burden of their ſins, and groane vnder the ſame: Come all ye that are laden.

In this ſorrow, leſt a ſinner diſpaire, he muſt adioyne faith, apprehending the merits of Chriſt for the free pardon of all his ſinnes. At this time, and in this buſineſſe he may not meddle too much with the Law, but account Moſes (as [g] Luther boldly ſpeakes) an excommunicate perſon, and ſo caſt his eyes vpon Chriſt alone, being the [h] Lambe of God which taketh away the ſinnes of the world.

Vnto faith he muſt adde obedience, that vnderſtanding how he is deliuered out of the hands of all his enemies, he may ſerue God in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the daies of his life. Theſe vertues appeared in theſe Publicans: heartie ſorrow, for that they turned from their old courſe: true faith, in comming to Chriſt the Sauiour of the world: vnfained obedience, for that they came nigh him and heard him. If we ſhall be like theſe, Chriſt aſſuredly will [i] euer be like himſelfe: when any ſhall proue ſuch ſinners, he will not faile to be ſuch a Sauiour. When [k] S. Baſil asked Ephreem why he would not be a Prieſt; Ephreem anſwered him, becauſe he was a great ſinner: vnto whom S. Baſil replyed, I would to God I were ſuch a ſinner: and ſo well were it for vs, if we were ſuch ſinners as theſe Publicans: otherwiſe this Goſpell affords no comfort for vs. The Text indeed ſaith that there ſhal be ioy in heauen ouer a ſinner, but it is ouer a ſinner that repenteth: as [l] one doth aptly gloſſe the place, Non ſuper vno peccatore pœnitentiam cogitante, aut ſuper vno pœnitentiam dicente, aut ſuper vno pœnitentiam docente, ſed ſuper vno pœnitentiam agente. Chriſt embraceth here ſinners, but ſuch as heare him, and come nigh him; erant appropinquantes, as it is in the vulgar Latine.

In matching cloth and horſes, we ſay that ſuch are vnlike, come not neere one to the other, albeit they be in the ſame place; but of things that are like, we ſay, that they come nigh one another: in like ſort, this neerenes is not in reſpect of place, for ſo the moſt vnrepentant wretch is neere God, according to that of [m] Dauid, Whither ſhall I flie from thy preſence? but this neereneſſe is in reſpect of grace, drawing neere to God in qualitie, being [n] merciſull, as our Father in heauen is merciſull, and [o] perfect as he is perfect.

Againe, theſe Publicans came to Chriſt, not only to wonder at him, or as the Phariſees here to murmure againſt him, and entrap him; but with an honeſt heart to heare, that is, (according to the [p] Scripture phraſe) to obey him. A Preacher [q] offereth vp his hearers vnto God, euery pariſhioner therefore muſt examine himſelfe, whether his Paſtor haue ſacrificed him or not. If vncleane perſons, as the Sow, returne to their mire, and drunkards, as the dogge, returne to their vomit; they be not offered vp vnto the Lord, but are like the beaſt which hath broken the rope, and will not be ſacrificed. He that hath eares to heare, let let him heare. Let him resort vnto the Church as the Publicans vnto Christ, not to sleepe, nor to carpe, nor to gaze, but to marke whatsoeuer is sayd out of Gods holy word attentiuely, to lay it vp in hi heart faithfully, to practise it in obedience fruitfully.

The Pharisies and Scribes murmured] [r] Murmuring is betweene secret backbiting and open rayling; they could not vtterly conceale their hatred, and they durst not openly vent it: they murmure therefore. Now there be [f] many causes of this murmuring: the first is enuie, by which a man in creation little lesse than an Angell, is in this respect made a great deale worse than a deuill; for one deuill enuieth not another, and yet the proud Pharisies enuie the poore publicans in their comming to Christ. It is [t] obserued truly, that we may saue our selues from the lier by not speaking with him, and from the proud by not accompanying him, and from the slothfull by not troubling him, and from the glutton by not eating with him, and from the contentious by not disputing with him: but from the spightfull it is not sufficient either to flie or flatter him, he cannot be well if another he better; and therefore God, as it may seeme, should wrong him exceedingly to send him vnto heauen, where one doth [u] excell another in glory, and God aboue all; he must be cast into the pit of hell, where he may finde no matter of enuie, but all obiects of extreme miserie.

The second cause was their intollerable pride, highly scorning the Publicans as dogs, in so much as they would neither eat nor enter into an house with them as [x] one notes wittily, The deuill being cast out of the Pharisies by prayer and fasting enters againe at the stately gate of pride and priuie staires of enuie.

A third cause was their preposterous zeale, making the Commandements of God a cloake to their murmuring: for the Law saith, an Israelite may not conuerse with a Cananite or wicked Idolater: [y] Thou shalt not make couenant with them, neither shall they dwell in thy land, lest they make thee sinne against me. They pretend in deepe hypocrisie zeale to God, yet intend to slander his only begotten Sonne, saying, He receiueth sinners and eateth with them: insinuating to the common people, that Christ was such a one as they were with whom he was conuersant: I will therefore turne the words of the [z] Poet vpon them:

——— quantum vertice ad auras
Æthereas, tantum radice in tartara tendunt.

The wicked [a] bend their tongues like their bowes, and then they [b] shoot at such as are true of heart, [c] euen mightie and sharpe arrowes: and aptly doth the Scripture compare bitter words vnto the winged dart: [d] for as a warre-arrow makes a double wound, one in piercing the flesh, another in the pulling of it out: euen so scandalous imputations at the first hurt by the report, and then at the last, albeit they be wiped out, leaue still a skarre. This made the [e] Wiseman say, that the slanderer is a terrible man in his country, terribilis, as the vulgar Latine, or as [f] other, Formidandus est in ciuitate sua vir linguax.

As in cases of mortalitie, one scabbed sheepe infects a whole flocke: so in moralitie, [g] with the cleane thou shalt be cleane, and with the froward thou shalt learne frowardnesse, a [h] little leauen sowreth a whole lumpe: yet Christ being the Sonne of righteousnesse, could not be corrupted in shining vpon the dunghill of sinne, but in accompanying the bad he made them good, [i] feeding them spiritually, while they fed him corporally. The Pharisies obiection, he receiueth sinners, is false; for he did not consent vnto their sinne, but correct it: as then an [k] vnbeleeuing wife is sanctified by dwelling with a beleeuing husband: so these sinners eating and conuersing with Christ our [l] righteousnesse are made Saints: it is a good rule, Keepe company with such as thou mayest make them better; or they thee, them better, [m] infirmum fratrem assumite; thee better, nunc te melioribus offer, as a Poet, according with a Prophet, With the holy thou shalt be holy, and with a perfect man thou shalt be perfect, Psal. 18. 25.

But he put forth this parable.] [n] Some Diuines attribute seuerally these three parables in this chapter, vnto the three persons in holy Trinitie, referring the parable parable of the loſt ſheepe vnto God the Sonne, of the loſt groat to God the Holy Ghoſt, of the loſt childe to God the Father:

All referre the firſt parable to Chriſt which is the [o] good Shepheard, in whom our Euangeliſt notes eſpecially foure things:
1. He ſeekes a loſt ſheepe vntill he findes it.
2. When he hath found it, he layeth it on his ſhoulders.
3. He doth reioyce.
4. He brings it home.

So [p] Chriſt in his Life, ſought the loſt ſinner vntill he found him.
Death, he layd him on his ſhoulders.
Reſurrection, he reioyced for him.
Aſcenſion, he did open the doores of heauen, and bring him vnto his owne Fathers houſe and home.

The [q] fowler doth not affright the birds with any terrible noiſe, but allure them them vnto his ginne with a ſweet call.

Fiſtula dulcè canit volucrem dum decipit auceps.

Almightie God in giuing the law terrified the people with [r] thunders and lightnings: Ephraim therefore fled away like a bird: but our bleſſed Sauiour in deliuering the Goſpell vſed an inticing voice, Come vnto me all ye that are laden, and I will eaſe you. Yet the beſt tricke the fowler hath, is to bring game to his ſnare by a ſtale or quoy duck: ſo Chriſt that he might the better call home ſinners and winne men vnto God, [t] appeared in the ſhape of a ſeruant, and conuerſed with ſinners: he being the Sonne of God became the Sonne of man, that the ſonnes of men might be made the ſonnes of God. He did leaue ninetie and nine ſheepe in the wildernеſſe, and went after one that was loſt vntill he found it: that is (as [u] Origen, [x] Ambroſe, [y] Hilarie, [z] Chryſoſtome, [a] Euthymius expound it) he did leaue the Angels, and for vs men and our ſaluation came downe from heauen, and was incarnate by the Holy Ghoſt. Other, as [b] Hierome epiſt. ad Damaſum, Auguſtin quæſt. Euangel. lib. 2. cap. 32. Theophylact, in loc. Anſelmus in Matth. 18. and moſt of our new writers, he did leaue the iuſt, and ſought after ſinners only.

If we take the firſt expoſition, it may be ſayd that he did leaue the good Angels in the mountaine, [c] that is, in heauen, as hauing no need of repentance, the damned Angels in the wilderneſſe, that is, in [d] hell, as being vncapable of grace. Now the reaſons are manifold, why Chriſt did ſeeke loſt Adam, rather then the loſt Angell: as firſt the deuill was the partie ſeducing to ſinne, but Adam the partie ſeduced: [e] Angelus ergo, quanto ſublimior in gloria, tanto maior in ruina; ſed homo quanto fragilior in natura, tanto facilior ad veniam. Secondly, Satan inſtantly fell from heauen as [f] lightning, and [g] was vtterly loſt, and therefore could not be found againe: but Adam had ſpace and grace giuen him alſo to repent. Thirdly, [h] all Angels did not fall with Luciſer, and ſo none were partakers of his puniſhment, but ſuch as had beene partners in his ſinne; but in [i] Adam all men were loſt. Fourthly, [k] man is Gods groat, bearing his ſuperſcription and image more fully then Angels: and therefore Chriſt leauing the deuills in hell, and Angels in heauen, came into the world to redeeme man out of the hands of all his enemies. If we take the latter interpretation, Chriſt is ſayd to leaue the [l] iuſt in an eſtate of grace, to ſeeke and ſaue the loſt ſinner; [m] or rather he leaueth in the wilderneſſe all ſuch as hold themſelues iuſt, and thinke they need no repentance, that is, the Scribes and Phariſies, and embraceth all Publicans and ſinners, acknowledging themſelues to be ſicke, and that they need a Phyſition: for he came not to call the righteous, but the ſinners to repentance, Mat. 9. 13

Chriſt finding the loſt ſheepe in his life, laid him on his ſhoulders at his death; his [n] owne ſelfe bare our ſinnes in his body on the croſſe, that we being deliuered from ſinne ſhould liue to righteouſneſſe: Humeri Chriſti crucis brachia ſunt illic peccata mea depoſui, in illa patibuli nobilis cernice requieui, ſaith [o] Ambroſe: the braces of the croſſe are the ſhoulders of Chriſt, I haue laid all the burden of my faults vpon them, able to beare the ſinnes of the whole world: I will lie downe and take my reſt in the boughes and boſome of that ſweet tree. But how how can this be conſtrued of the croſſe, ſeeing the Text ſaith, he laid it on his ſhoulders with ioy? Chriſt cried on the croſſe, [p] Behold and ſee if euer there be any ſorrow like vnto my ſorrow. Chriſt himſelfe doth anſwer this obiection, Ioh. 10. 17. I lay downe my life for my ſheepe, no man taketh it from me, but I lay it downe of my ſelfe. And [q] ſo Chriſt is ſayd to lay the loſt ſheepe on his ſhoulders ioyfully, for that he died willingly, [r] Quia voluit, quando voluit, & quomodo voluit.

And as Chriſt died for the ſinnes of the loſt ſheepe, ſo he [ſ] roſe againe for his iuſtification: and then he reioyced ſaying [t] peace be to you: but in his aſcenſion, as ſoone as he came home, he called together his louers and neighbours, ſaying vnto them, reioyce with me, for I haue found my ſheepe which was loſt: and ſo there ſhall be ioy in heauen ouer one ſinner that repenteth, more then ouer ninetie and nine iuſt perſons which need no repentance. If we conſtrue this clauſe (which need no repentance) of ſuch as are iuſtified and ſtand in the ſtate of grace, [u] neither God, nor Angels, nor men eſteeme more a penitent ſinner, then they doe of them that continue iuſt and godly: [x] for the greateſt meaſure of grace requireth alway the greateſt meaſure of our loue: but in this vnexpected alteration and happy change, there is a [y] newer occation of ioy, and thankſgiuing to God in another kinde, then for the perſeuerance of the iuſt: as a [z] Captaine for the preſent reioyceth euer one coward ſtoutly charging vpon his enemie, more then ouer ninetie nine tall ſouldiers who neuer forſooke the field: and as a plough-man in a ſudden motion reioyceth euer one bad acre that brings him a good crop, more then ouer all the reſt of his land: or as [a] Aquine, an hundred markes beſtowed vpon a begger, is a greater gift then if it had beene giuen vnto a King. And thus (as [b] Cyprian obſerued) Chriſt ſpeaking to mans capacitie, ſheweth here that the conuerſion of euery ſinner is exceeding acceptable to God.

But alas, [c] all we like ſheepe haue gone aſtray, we haue turned euery one to his owne way from the paths of God; all therefore need Chriſt to fetch vs home: all need repentance, for there is none [d] righteous; quis illa genere vna eſt, non ſpecie, ſaith Ambroſe vpon the place: by this one ſheepe is meant all ſuch as are ſaued by Chriſt, it is one in kinde, but not in particular: for all are [e] one body, but many members. I ſubſcribe therefore to their iudgement, who by ſuch as need no repentance, vnderſtand hypocriticall Iuſtitiaries, hauing ſuch an high conceit of their owne puritie, that they thinke they need not amendment: and ſo there is greater reioycing in heauen ouer one penitent ſinner, then ouer many ſuch impudent Saints.

Firſt the glorious Angels haue ioy, for that they ſee ſo good fruit of their [f] miniſtrie. Secondly, for that their number is [g] increaſed, and ſo the moe the merrier: againe, the whole Trinitie reioyceth at the conuerſion of a penitent God the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt.

An earthly father hath ioy when his ſonne is conceiued: as [h] Abraham reioyced at the conception of Iſaak: when he is borne; ſo [i] Zacharias at the birth of S. Iohn Baptiſt: when he is growne vp and ſtandeth at the table, Pſal. 128. 4. So God our heauenly Father hath ioy when a man is made his childe, begotten and borne by the ſeed of his word, eſpecially when he comes home to [k] eat bread at his table in his houſe.

God the Sonne likewiſe doth ioy: firſt, in ſeeing ſuch a good effect of his paſſion, implied in the parable of the loſt ſheepe. Secondly, for that his image decayed in man is reſtored fully, deſcribed in the parable of the loſt groat. Thirdly for that his [l] brother which was loſt is found againe, declared in the parable of the loſt childe. Laſtly, God the Holy Ghoſt hath ioy, for that the [m] dens of Satan and [n] inſtruments of ſinne, from one iniquitie to another, are now become his ſanctified [o] members, his dwelling [p] houſes, his holy temples, 1. Cor. 6. 19.

The Church of God on earth hath her part in this heauenly reioycing alſo: [q] Qui ſunt iſti pater, paſtor, & mulier? nonne Deus pater, Chriſtus paſtor, mulier Eccleſia? Chriſtus te ſuo corpore vehit, qui tua in ſe peccata ſuſcepit, quærit te Eccleſia, recipit pater.

[r] Three things moue men to compaſſion: Simplicitie. Propinquitie. Neceſſitie.

So theſe three moue God to pitie: firſt, our ſimplicitie, noted in the parable of the loſt ſheepe, which is a ſillie creature. Secondly, our propinquitie, ſignified in the parable of the loſt groat, for a Chriſtian hath Gods image, and beares Chriſts name. Thirdly, neceſſitie, ſhewed in the parable of the loſt ſonne: How many hired ſeruants, at my fathers haue bread enough, and I die for hunger? O ſweet Ieſu, who diddeſt leaue the glorious Angels in heauen, the damned ſpirits in hell, the iuſt men on earth, and cameſt into the world to call ſinners only to repentance; ſeeke me thy loſt ſheepe, ſaue me thy loſt ſonne, that there may be mirth on earth, and reioycing in heauen ouer one ſinner that repenteth, more than ouer ninetie nine which need no repentance.

The Epiſtle. Rom. 8. 18. vide V. 24

I ſuppoſe that the afflictions of this life, are not worthy of the glory which ſhall be ſhewed vpon vs.

SOme things in the writings of S. Paul are [s] hard to be vnderſtood: This Epiſtle containing the [t] chiefe myſteries of all Diuinitie, ſo difficult as any: this Scripture more darke then other parts of this Epiſtle: [u] whether we conſider the matter, or the words. It is a tract of eternall glory which is not fully [x] reuealed vnto vs here, but ſhall be ſhewed vpon vs hereafter: and it hath a phraſe or two not vſed [y] elſe-where throughout the whole Bible: but leauing curious and criticall annotations vnto ſuch as liſt to read (*Auguſtin. lib. quæſt. 83. quæſt. 67. & lib. expoſit. quarund. propoſition. ex epiſt. ad Rom. [y] Cowper in lot.

Our Apoſtle then in the text read, comforteth all ſuch as are vnder Chriſts croſſe by [z] three reaſons eſpecially:

The firſt is taken from the bleſſed end of our afflictions and happy [a] Cataſtrophe, verſe 18. wherein obſerue,
- Who ſpeakes, I ſuppoſe.
- What is ſpoken, the afflictions of this life are not worthy of the glorie which ſhall be ſhewed vpon vs: inſinuating [b] foure excellencies in the celeſtiall reward.
  1. Dignitie, for that it is a glory.
  2. Eternitie, not a preſent, but a glory which ſhall be.
  3. Claritie, for that it ſhall be ſhewed.
  4. Veritie, for that it ſhall not only be reuealed vnto vs, but alſo reuealed in vs or ſhewed vpon vs.

[z] Melanchon. Tileman. Royard
[a] Martyr. in loc.
[b] Aquin. in loc.

The ſecond argument is from the communion of ſufferers, [c] Euery creature fernently deſireth and hopeth for our redemption, yea, groaneth with vs, and trauelleth in paine together: and therefore let vs not be diſcouraged in our affliction, hauing ſo great companie:

Solamen miſeris ſocios habuiſſe doloris.

The third argument is from the patterne and patience of the bleſſed Apoſtles, and other deare children of God: Not only the creature, but alſo we which haue the firſt fruits of the Spirit, mourne in our ſelues, and wait for the adoption of the children of God, euen the deliuerance of our bodies: and therefore hauing ſo good company let let vs [d] chuſe rather to ſuffer aduerſitie with the people of God, than to enioy the pleaſures of ſinne for a ſeaſon.

I ſuppoſe] The [e] Wiſeman ſaith, He that hath good experience can talke of wiſdome. Paul then hauing tryed both; affliction, as [f] being in labours more abundant, in ſtripes aboue meaſure, in priſon more plenteouſly, in death oft, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in ieopardies of his owne nation, in ieopardies among the Heathen, &c. and glory, being [g] taken vp into the third heauen, and hearing words which cannot be ſpoken, which are not poſſible for man to vtter: I ſay, Paul who ſuffered more preſent affliction, and had ſeene more future glory than vs all, out of his owne experience concludes, I ſuppoſe: the verbe [h] λογίζομαι doth import thus much; After iuſt reckoning this is the ſumme which I collect and gather, or after long reaſoning I thus poſitiuely determine: ſo that it is not only Pauls opinion, or meere coniecture; but (as ſome [i] popiſh Interpreters obſerue with vs) his certaine knowledge, That the paſſions of this life are not worthy the glory which ſhall be ſhewed vpon vs.

The firſt excellencie noted in our felicitie which in the world to come ſhall be reuealed, is, that it is a glory: the [k] very name whereof is acceptable, for what would not a Heathen man doe to winne glory? [l] Q. Mutius Scenola burnt his owne hand for ſtriking amiſſe: Curtius in glittering armour and well mounted on his horſe, caſt himſelfe into a gulfe to deliuer his country from the plague: Brutus alſo being ambitious of honour, to preſerue the liberties of his natiue ſoyle, neglected the liues of his owne ſonnes.

If [n] Infidels endure ſo much affliction only for a puff of a little vaine-glory; what ought a Chriſtian to ſuffer for [o] a farre more excellent and eternall weight of true glory? The Burgeſſes of Hieruſalem aboue be not of baſe linage, but truly noble; for by their [p] ſecond birth all of them are the [q] ſonnes of God, and [r] brothers of the Lord Ieſus. The Citizens of Tyrus are deſcribed by the Prophet [ſ] Eſay to haue beene companions vnto Princes; but in that heauenly Hieruſalem euery citizen is a crowned King, and none but Kings are free-men of that incorporation, knit among themſelues by the bond of one ſpirit into ſuch an holy communion, as that euery one of them accounteth the glory of his brother an increaſe of his owne glory: for it is not in heauen as vpon earth; here the ioy of one doth occaſion oft ſorrow to another; here the light of the Sunne doth darken the Moone, and the light of the moone doth obſcure the luſtre of the Starres here when halfe the earth is illuminated, all the reſt is in darkneſſe: but in heauen albeit [t] there is another glory of the Sunne, and another glory of the Moone, and another glory of the Starres, one Starre differing from another in glory: yet the light of the one doth augment the light of another, the glory of one ſhall be the glory of all: [u] Diſpar eſt gloria ſingulorum, attamen communis lætitia omnium.

2. This glory is not now, but ſhall be: noteing a ſecret oppoſition betweene the [x] preſent troubles of this life, which are but for a now, and the future ioyes of the next, which endure for euer: our light affliction which is but for a moment, cauſeth vnto vs a farre more excellent and eternall weight of glorie, 2. Cor. 4. 17. And as the croſſe which is now comes ſhort of that crowne which ſhal be, both in weight and eternitie: ſo the pleaſures of ſinne continuing but for a ſeaſon, are not of any worth to be compared with that infinite weight of eternall wrath due to them. As the ſeuen yeeres of famine in Ægypt [y] did eate vp the former ſeuen yeeres of plenty: ſo ſhall the endleſſe paines of the reprobate make all their former pleaſure to be forgotten, the day will come wherein they will ſay, we haue no pleaſure in them, Eccleſiaſtes 12. 1.

3. We note the claritie of this glory, [z] for that it ſhall be reuealed or ſhewed vpon vs: it was from [a] euerlaſting prepared for vs, but it is not as yet poſſeſſed of vs, indeed [b] we are now the ſonnes of God, but yet it doth not appeare what we ſhall be [c] for our life is hid with Chriſt in God, but when Chriſt which is our life ſhall appeare then ſhall we alſo appeare with him in glory. [d] Then the reprobate ſhall change their minde, minde, and ſigh for griefe, and ſay this is he whom we ſometime had in deriſion, and in a parable of reproch; we fooles thought his life madneſſe, and his end without honour, but now is he counted among the children of God, and his portion is among the Saints.

Eternall happineſſe is granted in our election, promiſed in our vocation, confirmed in our iuſtification, but not throughly poſſeſſed vntill our glorification: for [c] while we are ſtrangers in the bodie we are abſent from the Lord: non queras in via, quod tibi ſeruatur in patria (ſaith [f] Auguſtine;) ſeeke not that in the way which is reſerued for thee till thou come to thy countrie. There is [g] a time to weepe and a time to laugh; here the time is to weepe, for [h] in the world ye ſhall haue affliction: hereafter our mourning ſhall be turned into mirth, Iohn 16. 20. for [i] they that ſow in teares ſhall reape in ioy. Let vs therefore [k] poſſeſſe our ſoules in patience, [l] reioycing in the Lord alwaies, and againe, I ſay, reioycing. O taſte and ſee (ſaith [m] Dauid) how gratious the Lord is, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him. If thou wilt draw me (quoth the [n] Church vnto Chriſt) we will run after thee, we will reioyce and be glad in thee. [o] Si ſic bonus es ſequentibus te, qualis futurus es conſequentibus? If thou Lord be ſo good to ſuch as ſeeke thee, what wilt thou be to ſuch as finde thee? for we may be well aſſured that the firſt fruits of the ſpirit and earneſt of our heauenly inheritance, wherein our greateſt comfort conſiſts in this life, ſhall appeare as nothing, when that infinite maſſe of glory ſhall be broken vp and communicated vnto vs, according to that of our Apoſtle, [p] When that which is perfect is come, then that which is imperfect ſhall be done away.

Laſtly, [q] Diuines obſerue the veritie or ſoliditie of this glory, for that it ſhall be ſhewed vpon vs, or as other reade, in vs Here then is a remarkable difference betweene the glory of a Chriſtian, and the glory of a worldling: [r] the Kings daughter is all glorious within, but the worldling is all glorious without. Now the [ſ] Philoſopher hath taught truly, that ciuill honour is not in the power of the perſon honoured, but in the perſon honouring: and therefore the worldlings glorie depending vpon the breath of vaine men, and poſſeſſion of vaine matters, is altogether vncertaine: but the Chriſtians glory, which is within, [t] cannot bee taken from him.

Firſt, this doctrine concerning our glory to come, confutes euidently the Popiſh opinion of merit: for there muſt be an equall proportion betweene the labour and the reward, where the labour deſerueth the reward: but there is a great diſproportion here, betweene our preſent affliction and future glory, not only [u] cognitione, ſed conditione: the reward infinitely ſurpaſſing the worke both in truth, and in time. Therefore no paſſion or action can be worthy of the glory which ſhall be ſhewed vpon vs: as ſome read, non ſunt pares: as Arius Montanus, non ſunt dignæ paſſiones nunc temporis ad futuram gloriam, as the Rhemiſts according to the vulgar Latine, the paſſions of this time are not condigne to the glory to come. For although a man could ſerue God moſt feruently for the ſpace of a thouſand yeeres and ſuffer, if it were poſſible, ten thouſand deaths euen for Chriſts ſake, yet he ſhould not deſerue to liue one halfe day in the courts of heauen, as their owne [x] Anſelmus ingenuouſly.

This collection I finde in the Commentaries of the moſt ancient [y] Fathers, as alſo ſtoutly maintained in our new writers: ſee Goſpell for Septuageſima Sunday Fulke in loc. and defence of Engliſh tranſlation againſt Martin. cap. 9. from the firſt to the ſeuenth ſection: Doctor Abbot againſt Biſhop, tit. Merit. pag. 667. Doctor Morton appeale, lib. 2. cap. 11. §. 5.

Secondly, this ouerthroweth [z] Epicurus, denying Gods prouidence, becauſe the wicked ſurfet in pleaſure, while the godly ſuffer in paine: for there is another reckoning in another life, where the mirth of the one ſhall be turned into mourning, and the griefe of the other into glory.

Thirdly, the meditation of our felicitie to come, ſhould thruſt out of our vnbeleeuing hearts, all doubtfull and all carnall conceits of heauen; it is a glorie, not not hidden as in this life, but reuealed, and ſo reuealed, as that it is not only without vs, or vpon vs, but reuealed in vs, and that not for a now, but for euer.

Laſtly, this ſhould incite men vnder the croſſe to runne with patience the race that is ſet before them, as being aſſured that their reward in heauen is a life, and ſuch a life as is [a] eternall: a glory, and ſuch a glorie as is a [b] crowne of glory: a kingdome, and ſuch a kingdome as cannot be [c] ſhaken: it is an inheritance, and ſuch an inheritance which is [d] immortall and fades not away. [e] Tell O man what thou moſt deſireſt? Is there any thing thou loueſt better than life? Is there any better life than a life of glory? Is there any greater glory than a kingdome of glory? Is there any ſurer kingdome than that which is thine by the right of an immortall and permanent inheritance? Yet all theſe things are prouided and reſerued for them who patiently ſuffer with the Lord Ieſus.

Be yee merciſull] He ſaith, [n] eſtote, non fingite, not only ſeeme but ſhew your ſelues merciſull in deed and in truth, as S. Iohn expounds his Maſter, 1. Epiſt. chap. 3. verſ. 18. The [o] Romans vſually painted friendſhip with her hand on her heart, heart, ſignifying that a true friend ſhould haue nothing in the circumference of his lips, which at the firſt came not from the center of his loue: ſaluting, iudgeing, giuing, forgiuing from the heart. Hypocrites are ſo preciſe, that comedies and other like paſtimes are reputed by them either heliſh or heatheniſh; and yet by their good leaue, themſelues are the greateſt ſtage-keepers, and the moſt vſuall maskers in the whole world: as [p] Auguſtine and [q] Ambroſe ſpeak, Theatricall actors of other parts and perſons, appearing in [r] ſheeps clothing, when as inwardly they be rauening wolues. If a diſtreſſed neighbour come to their gate, they will ſhew him more diuinitie than humanitie, cloying his memorie with texts againſt idleneſſe and beggerie, but I warrant you, not ouer-charging his ſtomacke with meat againſt hunger: and for that a Papiſt will rather loſe a pennie than a Pater noſter; they to croſſe the ſuperſtitious in all their damnable poſitions, are more willing to giue a pater noſter than a pennie. The wicked will giue panem promptuarij, but they forſooth are ſo mercifull as to giue panem ſanctuarij: as if an hungry ſoule were like [f] Charles of Prage, who ſupped oft with a few ſentences and argumentes in the ſchoole.

Againe, Chriſts eſtote makes againſt apiſh Courtiers, as being more curious to ſalute, than carefull to ſalue their brethren. That old faſhion of ſaluting hand in hand is left, and now embracing one another we caſt armes in armes: but (as one well obſerued) an handfull of that old friendſhip is better than an armefull of the new courteſie. This fault heretofore was vpon the point a Courtier only, but now citizens and countrymen too can [t] ſpeake friendly, imagining miſchiefe in their heart. Howſoeuer they ſeeme to be like Plato, who was accounted an [u] honie mouth, or Bernard, ſo called, [x] quaſi bona nardus: as ſweet as ſpicknard: or Theophraſtus, ſo termed for his heauenly language: yet if you will examine their actions, you ſhall finde them as faithleſſe as Peter, denying their maſter as trecherous as Iudas, betraying their Lord, as cruell as Doeg, ſlaying their Prieſts, as malitious as Cain, killing their brother, as vnnaturall as Nero, murthering their mother: [y] melle linguæ ſitæ atq; orationes, lacteq;; corda ſunt felle lita atq; acerbo aceto: ſo that we may conclude with [z] Bernard, periculoſa tempora iam non inſtant, ſed extant: the dangerous daies fore-told by [a] Chriſt, wherein our charitie ſhould wax cold, are not inſtant only, but extant.

Moſes to prouide men of courage, fearing God, and hating couetouſneſſe, and to place them Rulers and Iudges ouer his people: ſtrictly charging all men vnder the Goſpell alſo, to [m] ſubmit themſelues vnto ſuperior powers. Neither doth he condemne priuate iudging of our ſelues and other vpon ſufficient ground: not of our ſelues, for euery man muſt examine himſelfe, ſaith Paul; and therefore whereas our bleſſed Sauiour here, Iudge not, and ye ſhall not be iudged: he not confounding, but expounding his matter: [n] If we would iudge our ſelues, we ſhould not be iudged. It is lawfull alſo to paſſe our iudgement of other in ſome matters, and at ſome time; for if a brother offend thee, ſaith [o] Chriſt tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he will neither heare thee nor the Church, hold him as an Heathen man and a Publican. The ſinnes of ſome men (as [p] Paul ſpeakes) are open before hand, and goe before vnto iudgement: and therefore knowing ſuch by their [q] fruits, it is lawfull to iudge and condemne them too, ſaying, that a rancke Atheiſt obſtinately dying an Atheiſt is damned. If any matter appeare ſo manifeſtly, [r] Woe to them that ſpeake good of euill, and euill of good, which put darkneſſe for light, and light for darkneſſe, that put bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for ſowre.

Our Sauiours meaning then is not (as [s] Interpreters generally note) to forbid all kinds of iudging, but only raſh and vncharitable cenſuring of our brethren: it is our part to commend in another euery thing which is apparant good, and to make the beſt of any thing which is doubtfull: as Chriſt conſtrueth himſelfe; we may not be curious in obſeruing, nor criticall in condemning a mote in anothers eye, not ſeeing the beame that is in our owne eye: we may not be forward to finde peccadilloes in other, ouerſeeing groſſe faults in our ſelues. Hypocrite, caſt out firſt the beame that is in thine owne eye, then ſhalt thou ſee perfectly to pull out the mote that is in thy brothers eye.

Condemne not] If we iudge raſhly, let vs not proceed to condemne vncharitably: [t] for he that ſeemeth in our eye reprobate, may be iuſt before God; or if to day bad, he may to morrow be better: and therefore let vs not iudge, much leſſe condemne [u] before the time. [x] S. Auguſtine hath well obſerued that raſh iudgement conſiſts in two things eſpecially; to wit in condemning a man, and in condemning his meaning: as for example, thy neighbour is bountifull in releeuing the poore; thou ſeeſt his maundie, but thou knoweſt not his minde, and therefore condemne not his meaning: if afterward it be made manifeſt vnto thee, that he beſtowed his almes not out of true charitie, but out of vaine-glorie; yet condemne not vtterly the man, he may liue long, and loue better: non ergo reprehendamus ea quæ neſcimus quo animo fiant, neque ita reprehendamus quæ manifeſta ſunt vt deſperemus ſanitatem. Here then the Goſpell is expounded in the Epiſtle, Iudge not, condemne not, ſaith Chriſt in the one; becauſe it doth not appeare who be the ſonnes of God in this life, ſaith Paul in the other.

Forgiue, and it ſhall be forgiuen, giue, and it ſhall be giuen vnto you] Our iuſtification before God is not by theſe good workes, as the Papiſts ordinarily note; but only by faith in Chriſt, as the Scripture teacheth [y] elſe-where: yet becauſe iuſtifying faith is operatiue, working through loue, Gal. 5. 6. this giuing and forgiuing are [z] ſignes and ſeales of our faith: hereby we make [a] our calling and election ſure, knowing that we are tranſlated from death vnto life, becauſe we loue the brethren, 1 Iohn 3. 14. leſſer debt, and I will forgiue you the greater ſumme, thou wouldeſt entertaine his kinde offer greedily: yet ſuch is the caſe betweene God and thee, forgiue but a penny, and you ſhall be forgiuen a pound, forgiue but an hundred, and you ſhall be forgiuen a thouſand: forget but a mote, forgiue but a mite, and God will forgiue thee a maſſe, yea a mine.

Good meaſure, and preſſed downe, and ſhaken together, and running ouer.] He [d] that ſeeketh good things getteth fauour, but he that ſeeketh euill it ſhall come vnto him: all men for the moſt part loue the mercifull, and loth the miſer: but albeit inconſtant men oft proue ingratefull, [e] rewarding euill for good; almightie God is euer ſo good as his word, [f] yea better then his promiſe, giuing to ſuch as giue, [g] an hundred fold now at this preſent, and in the world to come eternall life. They that ſowe ſparingly, ſhall reape alſo ſparingly; but they that ſowe liberally ſhall reape liberally, 2. Cor. 9 6. Prou. 11.24. and 28.27. Deut. 24.19. In a word God giueth vs [h] good meaſure, in the gifts of the world; [i] making our garners full and plentuous with all manner of ſtore: preſſed downe in the gifts of nature: giuing vs health and ſtrength of bodie, teaching our hands to warre and our fingers to fight, [k] making our feet like Harts feete, and our armes able to breake a bow of ſteele: ſhaken togither in the gifts of grace; running ouer in the gifts of glory: for all that we can giue or forgiue to men, is not worthy of the glorie which ſhall be beſtowed vpon vs: and [l] here the Goſpell and Epiſtle meet againe.

The Lord of his infinite goodneſſe encreaſe and multiply vpon vs his mercie: that he being our rule and guide, we may ſo reſpect his holy word, and expect his heauenly reward, that paſſing through things temporall, we loſe not finally the things eternall: Amen.

This is our calling, and euery man ought, saith [e] Paul, abide in that vocation wherin he was called: a Christian in this case must say to the sonnes of Belial, as [f] Balam once to the seruants of Balake if Satan would giue me an house full of siluer and gold, or as he vainly promised, Christ, if he would and could giue me [g] all the kingdomes of the world, I cannot goe beyond the word of the Lord my God to doe lesse or more; seeing his will is that I should blesse, I may not render euill for euill, or rebuke for rebuke.

For he that doth long after life and loueth to see good daies] [h] The Doctors vsually construe this of eternall life; for the present is not indeed a life, but rather a death: in which are not good, but euill daies; according to that of the Patriarke Iacob, [i] Few and euill haue the dayes of my life beene. So S. Paul, Ephes. 5. 16. Redeeme the time, for the dayes are euill: and so S. Augustine in Psal 33. Semper mali dies in seculo, sed semper boni dies in Deo. Yea but some will obiect, heauenly Hierusalem [k] hath no need of the Sunne, neither of the Moone to shine vpon it, for Christ the Sunne of righteousnesse is the light of it: how then are dayes in the world to come? [l] Answer may be, that our Apostle speakes in the plurall, insinuating the great light and eternitie which the Saints haue, [m] for the iust shall shine as the Starres for euer and euer: here we liue but a short day, giue vs this day our daily bread; but hereafter in the world to come we shall haue dayes, and those good dayes, and great dayes, euen such as shall haue no night. Or haply S. Peter heere spake plurally, to signifie that the Father of lights hath two daies, [n] one of grace another of glory. Thou canst enioy neither, except thou refraine thy tongue from euill and thy lips that they speake no guile.

ſpeaking in [n] generall, and thy lips that they ſpeake no guile: in particular, refraine thy tongue from [x] ſlandering thy neighbour behinde his backe, and thy lips from flattering him before his face. Thy tongue (ſaith Aquine) from open euill, and thy lips from ſecret hurt. This leſſon is hard, for the [y] tongue is an vnruly euill, full of deadly poiſon, it muſt be kept with a [z] watch, and with a [a] bridle, yea with [b] doores and barres.

It is recorded in [c] Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie, that the reuerend Hermite Pambo being ignorant himſelfe, deſired another to teach him a Pſalme: who hearing the firſt verſe of the 39. Pſalme, Dixi cuſtodiam, I ſaid I will take heed to my waies, that I offend not in my tongue; would not ſuffer his tutor to proceed vnto the ſecond verſe; for (ſaith he) the firſt is leſſon enough: and excuſing himſelfe for not reſorting vnto his ſchoole-maſter in three moneths after, he confeſſed ingenuouſly, that as yet he had not learned well his firſt lecture: yea fortie nine yeeres after being asked of the ſame matter, his anſwer was ſtill the ſame, that as yet hee had not fully kept this one leſſon, which is our leſſon here, refraine thy tongue, &c.

Let him eſchew euill and doe good] An [d] abridgement of the Law, whoſe negatiue part forbids all euill, and affirmatiue commands all that is good: now, ſaith [e] S. Iames, he that faileth in one point is guiltie of all: and therefore we muſt not not only decline that which is bad, but alſo [f] cleaue to that which is good: [g] ceaſing to doe euill, learning to doe well; [h] hating euill, louing iuſtice; [i] deſtroying vice, planting vertue. The [k] tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire, [l] leaues are not ſufficient, it muſt not keepe the ground barren, Luk. 13.7. The ſlothfull and vnprofitable ſeruant [m] hiding his maſters talent in the earth, haply did eſchew euill, and yet he was caſt into vtter darkneſſe for that he did no good: bonum enim non eſt defectus, ſed effectus; neque ponitur in non officiendo, ſed in proficiendo.

Let him ſeeke peace and enſue it] Inquirat, [n] id eſt intus quærat: let him earneſtly ſeeke it with all his heart, peace with God, [o] which paſſeth all vnderſtanding; and peace with men, [p] if it be poſſible with all men. [q] Inquirat affectu, ſequatur effectu: let him affectionately ſeeke it, and effectually follow it; if thou ſee it going away, run after it, purſue it with eagerneſſe, vſing all meanes poſſible that it depart not from thee: [r] perſequere donec aſſequaris, inſue it vntill thou canſt enioy it.

For the eyes of the Lord are ouer the righteous] And therefore ſeeing the God of [ſ] conſolation is euer ready to confound our enemies, and comfort vs in extremitie: Be not afraid of any terrour of them, neither be ye troubled, but ſanctifie the Lord God in your heart. In doing good there is a great labour, yet a greater reward: [t] Grandis labor, ſed grande præmium eſſe quod martyres, eſſe quod Apoſtoli, eſſe quod Chriſtus.

Who is he that will harme you if you follow that which is good?] For [u] when the wayes of a man pleaſe the Lord, he will make his enemies at peace with him: or if we conuerſe with ſuch as will not haue peace; yet happie are you when any trouble happeth vnto you for righteouſneſſe ſake: your temporall harme ſhall occaſion an eternall good; for [x] great is your reward in heauen; or as [y] Auguſtine moſt diuinely, inimicus in terra geminat conuitia, tu in cœlo lucra.

When the people pressed vpon him] Our blessed Sauiour drew men vnto him in such sort, that neither his Maiesty nor their miserie, neither [b] hunger, nor [c] night, nor [d] strangenesse of place, nor straitnesse of passage could keep them from him: vt magis irruerent quam rogarent, & medicinam salutis non sperarent per humilitatis gratiam, sed per importunitatis iniuriam: as [e] S. Ambrose doth glosse this text: They came to Christ, and comming they pressed vpon him: and they pressed to heare and to heare the word of God. Whose [f] zealous diligence condemnes exceedingly the want of deuotion in many people, who being crop-sicke, doe not hunger after the righteousnesse of Gods kingdome, nor thirst after the water of life; but loath the Gospell of Christ, euen that heauenly Manna, which is the spirituall food of their soules. When the people pressed, Christ preached: Hereby directing vs to strike with the [*] hammer of his word while the zeale of our hearers is hot, being [g] instant in season and out of season.

And he entred into one of the ships which pertained to Simon] It is a very common note, that Simons ship is a [h] type of the Church militant, floting in the waues of this troublesome world. The politicians accuse it of folly, the superstitious of heresie, the schismaticall of idolatrie, the Iewes iest at it, the Separatists runne out of it, the Turkes despise it. In this ship Christ is tossed, but the people stand on the shoare. The [i] Pastor is exposed to greater perill then his parishioners, if any tempest arise. [k] Literally: Christ taught in the wildernesse, in the city, sometime conferring with [l] one, sometime instructing multitudes, in the synagogue, in the streets, on the land, in the water; in euery place where he came it was his meat and his drinke to do the will of his Father, and therefore being here pressed vpon vpon, and oppreſſed with troupes of auditors, he makes a ſhip his [m] pulpit, [n] that he might with greater conuenience teach them. Euery man therefore muſt labour in his ſeuerall vocation and office to follow Chriſts example, doing ſo much good as he can at all times and in all places.

And prayed him that he would thruſt out a little from the land] He did intreat who might haue commanded: hereby ſhewing his [o] meekneſſe; as [p] alſo that his [q] yoke is eaſie and his burden light: And laſtly, that no [r] ſeruice is acceptable to God; except it be done with our heart and good will cheerfully, Prou.23.26. Myſtically, Chriſt aduiſing Peter to thruſt out a little from the land, doth inſinuate that ſuch as do inſtruct the people muſt neither be ſhallow, nor yet too deepe in their doctrine: they muſt thruſt off from earth, and yet but a little: [s] Vt nec terrena eis præcipiantur, nec ſic à terrenis in profundiora ſacramentorum recedatur vt ea penitus non intelligant. Or as [t] other, he thruſt off a little from the land, to ſignifie that his fiſhing is not as our angling: we ſtanding on the ſhore draw fiſh out of the ſea, but he riding on the ſea caught men on the ſhore: for the Church his [u] plant is a tree turned vpſide downe, whoſe root is in heauen, albeit her boughes are on earth.

He ſate downe] This geſture ſheweth his [x] Maieſtie, teaching as one that hath authoritie, Mark.1.22. as alſo that his words are [y] ſetled and ſure like to mount Sion which cannot be remoued: heauen and earth ſhall paſſe away, (quoth he) but my words ſhall not paſſe away, Matth.24 35.

And taught the people] Firſt he taught men, and then caught fiſh; [z] preferring the ſpirituall food before the corporall: he gaue both in due time; firſt a Sermon, and after a Salmon. It is ſaid in generall only, that he taught: [a] intimating that his inſtruction at this time, and in this place, was ſuch as at other times, and in other places. Now Chriſts other Sermons ſtood vpon two points eſpecially; repentance and faith: Repentance, Matth.4.17. From that time Ieſus began to preach, amend your liues, for the kingdome of heauen is at hand: Faith, Luk.4.18. The Spirit of the Lord is vpon me, that I ſhould preach the Goſpell vnto the poore, &c. This was the ſummarie pith of all his doctrine, and ought to be the ſubſtance of all our hearing and preaching. [b] For euery Chriſtian hath two contrarie natures, one of the fleſh, another of the Spirit; and that he may become perfect in Chriſt, his earneſt endeuour muſt be to tame the fleſh, and comfort the Spirit. The Law is the [c] miniſterie of death, and ſo ſerueth fitly for the ſubduing of the fleſh: and the Goſpell is the [d] power of God vnto ſaluation, and ſerueth as aptly for the ſtrengthening of the Spirit.

And when he had left ſpeaking] [e] After his words he comes to works: hereby teaching that our good deeds are the beſt gloſſe we can ſet vpon any text. It is recorded in the ſtories of England, that [f] Ethelburga reclaimed her incontinent and lewd husband more with one example, then ſhe could with infinite precepts: and that [g] Egbertus in a great difference concerning the celebration of Eaſter, was heard and embraced of each ſide, Quoniam & doctor ſuauiſſimus, & eorum quæ agenda docebat executor doctiſſimus.

Launch out into the deepe] Albeit euery good and perfect gift be from aboue; [h] yet we may not neglect ordinary labour in our vocation. An husbandman muſt [i] haſte to riſe vp early, late take reſt, eat the bread of carefulneſſe, and then haply his ground ſhall ſtand ſo thicke with corne, [k] that it laugh and ſing: then his [l] garners may be full and plenteous with all manner of ſtore: then his ſheepe may bring forth thouſands, and ten thouſands in his field; his oxen ſtrong to labour, and no decay in his cattell. If the Preacher plant with Paul, and water with Apollos; in his doctrine plant, water in his exhortation; plant in the Pulpit, water in the Preſſe; plant in his inſtruction, and water in his conuerſation; aſſuredly the Lord will giue an increaſe; He ſhall incloſe within the net of the Church a very great multitude of ſoules. He that hath an office muſt attend his [m] office, the ſea-man ought to keepe his ſhip, and the tradeſman his ſhop, vſing ordinarie meanes, and ordinary labour about theſe meanes; according to that of the [n] Psalmist, Thou shalt eat the labours of thine hands; O well is thee, and happy shalt thou be. First feare God, then labour, and so eat: if Peter will haue fish, he must launch out into the deepe, and let slip his nets.

We haue laboured all night and haue taken nothing, neuertheless at thy commandement I will loose forth the net] [o] Many things might hinder Simon in his faith and obedience. First, for that he was already wearied, we haue laboured. Secondly, for that Christ, as it might seeme, commanded a thing both hard and fruitlesse. Hard, because to launch out into the deepe, is more dangerous than to ride neere the shore. Fruitlesse, we haue laboured in the [p] fittest time, to wit, in the night, and all night, and yet haue caught nothing, neuertheless at thy command, &c. [q] Ye sow much, and bring in little; yee eat, but haue not enough; yee drinke, but are not filled; yee clothe you, but yee be not warme: because, saith the Lord, mine house is waste, and yee runne euery man vnto his owne house. So Peter here laboured in vaine, till he tooke Christ into the ship with him; after at his word, and in his name loosing his net, hee caught a great number of fishes. It is the [r] blessing of the Lord that makes a man rich. Against which rule two sorts of men offend especially, the faithlesse, and the careless. The faithlesse, imagining that increase of wine and oyle dependeth altogether vpon their owne wit, industrie, cunning, and sometime couin. Against this follie Dauid composed the 127. Psalme, Except the Lord build the house, their labour is but lost that built it. The careless, who neuer thinke on God in obtaining a blessing, nor thanke God in vsing his blessing. [s] Let vs learne therefore by this present miracle, that euery man ought to labour in his vocation, and that the successe of his labour commeth only from God: for it is not said, [t] duc in alium, but duc in altum; insinuating that if Christ blesse Simon, he shall euen with the same net, and in the same deepe where he could take nothing, inclose a great multitude of fishes.

In a misticall sense: the reason why the fishers of men labour much all night, and all day too, yet catch nothing, is either the fishes fault, or the fishers fault.

The fishes fault, because [u] some are { Craftie and will not. / Slipperie and cannot. / Great and may not. / Little and dare not.

The worldling is so wise that he will not bite at the bait, or come neere the net: the proud man holds Peter idle when he preacheth of humilitie: the wanton cannot endure so much as a text against incontinence: the miserable wretch accounts his Pastor vncharitable, when he makes a Sermon against couetousnesse: He stoppeth his eares euen like the [x] deafe Adder, and will not heare the Charmer, although he charme neuer so sweetly: but what saith the Scripture; the Lord [y] catcheth the wise in their owne craftinesse. Such as will not be caught in their life, will they nill they, shall be caught at their death: [z] Agree with thine aduersarie (saith our Sauiour) quickly whilest thou art in the way: [a] that is, labour to be reconciled to God while thou liuest, and hast time to repent, lest God in his anger bring thee to the Iudge, which is Christ; and Christ deliuer thee to the goaler, which is the deuill; and the deuill cast thee into prison, which is hell: I tell thee thou shalt not depart thence till thou hast paid the vtmost farthing; and therefore better it is to be caught in S. Peters net here, then to be bound in euerlasting chaines hereafter.

Hypocrites are slippery like Eeles, aud cannot be taken: a fisher cannot tell whether they be caught or no; when Peter hath them inclosed in his net, and as he thinks in his hand sure, they will shew him a slippery trick:

Qui capit anguillam per caudam non capit illam.

Statesmen of eminent place may not be taken; it is policie for Peter, if he launch out into the deepe, and let slip his net, not to touch them. I will get me to the great men and speake to them (saith the Prophet [b] Ieremie) but these men haue broken the yoke and burst the bonds, as the great flie breakes the cobweb.

[c] The Kings of the earth ſtand vp, and the Rulers take counſell together, againſt the Lord and againſt his annointed, ſaying, let vs breake their bonds aſunder, and caſt away their cords from vs. And therefore Paul who was an excellent fiſher, and had throughly conuerted many, caught but a peece of King Agrippa. So the [d] text, almoſt thou perſwadeſt me to become a Chriſtian: almoſt is a great deale for ſo great a perſon: for [e] not many noble, not many mightie, not many wiſe men after the fleſh are called: One Gamaliel or two may be caught among the wiſe, ſome few Zachees among the rich, haply Nicodemus among the Phariſies, a Centurion among the mightie, a Theophilus among the noble: moe would bee caught if they were not too great to be taught. It was once ſaid by a [f] reuerend Father boldly: The Kings Chaplaines are of the cloſet, and they muſt keepe his faults cloſe. The leaſt ſinnes of the greateſt are like mount Sinai which may not be touched. Laſtly, ſome fiſhes are ſuch minnumes as that they dare not be taken: albeit they wiſh well vnto the fiſhers, and their fiſhing; yet they feare to come neere, leſt their hookes hurt them. If any perſecution ariſe for the truth in the ſhip, inſtantly they ſlip out of the net againe. Now [h] three ſorts of men ought to be great venturers, a Souldier, an Husbandman, and a Merchant. Euery Chriſtian is Gods ſouldier, promiſing in holy Baptiſme to fight vnder Chriſts banners againſt the world, the fleſh, and the deuill. He muſt therefore [i] ſuffer affliction as a good ſouldier of Ieſus Chriſt. Euery Chriſtian is an husbandman in Gods field, he muſt therefore venture his ſeed: for [k] he that obſerueth the winde ſhall not ſow, and he that regardeth the clouds ſhall not reape. Euery Chriſtian is a factor in Gods buſineſſe, Luk. 19.13. negociamini donec venero: he muſt not therefore feare to put out his talent for his maſters aduantage. But howſoeuer ſome fiſhes are too great, and ſome too little, ſome too ſubtile, ſome to ſilly; yet we muſt launch out into the deepe and let ſlip our nets, It is Chriſts iniunction, and we muſt obey. [l] Such as ſay they will not preach, becauſe they ſee little fruit of their labours, are troubled with that God gaue them no charge of; and leaue that vndone God chargeth them with. And haply ſome fault may bee found in the fiſhers alſo that nothing is taken, and that as we may gather out of the text in foure reſpects:

[k] Eccleſiaſtes 11.4.

[l] B. Latymer Serm. at Stanford.

1. When they doe not fiſh in a good place: namely, when they doe not launch out into the deepe.

2. When they doe not fiſh with good nets, but broken.

3. When they doe not fiſh in a good time: to wit, in the night, and not in the day.

4. When they doe not fiſh at Chriſts command: in verbo Ieſu.

Firſt the fiſhers of men ought to launch into the deepe, [m] opening vnto the people great myſteries of godlineſſe, 1. Tim. 3. 16. ſpeaking vnto the [n] ſou'e and conſcience. The multitude, and moſt for the multitude ſake, giue paſſage rather to that which is ſuperficiall, then vnto that which is ſubſtantiall: our time reſembling a riuer or ſtreame which carieth downe vnto vs that which is light and blowne vp, but ſincketh all that which is waightie and ſolide, and ſo while Peter fiſhes in the ſhallow plaſhes of moraltie, not in the deepe places of Diuinitie, no maruell if his taking be ſmall. The ſlant and froth of a faire phraſe without ſoundneſſe of argument, and depth of iudgement, is like the firſt letter of a patent, or limed booke, which though it hath flouriſhes at large, yet is it but a letter, and by reaſon of thoſe curious ornaments, not ſo well read as another plaine character. [o] Pigmalions frenzie is a good embleme of this vanitie; for words are but the images of matter; and except they haue life of profoundneſſe and quicke inuention, to fall in loue with them, is all one as to fall in loue with a picture.

Secondly, the fiſhers of men catch little when they fiſh with broken nets, and ſuch are they who teach learnedly and liue lewdly: their accurate ſpeech haply doth incloſe many, but their ill example preſently maketh holes in the net, and ſo ſo they ſeldome draw men out of darkeneſſe into light, out of the gulfe of the dead ſea into the land of the liuing: and therefore they muſt waſh their nets, as the fiſhers here, and mend them, as Iames and Iohn [p] elſewhere.

Thirdly, when they fiſh in the night, [q] that is, in the darkeneſſe of their ignorance, not in the light of holy Scripture. [r] They would be Doctors of the Law, and yet vnderſtand not what they ſpeake, neither whereof they affirme. Or when they doe not obſerue the beſt hint and time: for if Peter will haue any fiſh, he muſt [s] caſt out the net on the right ſide of the ſhip: he muſt [t] diuide the word of truth aright and teach dexterouſly.

Laſtly, [u] when they doe not fiſh in the word and in the name of Ieſus. [x] I haue not ſent theſe (ſaith the Lord) yet they ranne, I haue not ſpoken to them, and yet they propheſied. He that is Gods Ambaſſadour muſt not deliuer his owne errand, but the [y] words of God, in the [z] name of God: for this (as [a] one notes) is to caſt out the net on the right ſide of the ſhip.

They incloſed a great multitude of fiſhes] Here we may note Chriſts exceeding goodneſſe, and wiſedome. [b] Goodneſſe, in paying to Peter ſo great a fare for his ſhip. [c] Wiſedome, for that he called a fiſher by this extraordinarie draught of fiſh, as he did the ſtar-gazing-wiſe by a ſtar, Mat. 2.

But their net brake] S. Peters fiſhing at the right ſide of the ſhip, Ioh. 21 6. is a [d] type of the Church triumphant; for Gods elect are ſaid to ſtand at his [e] right hand: but his fiſhing here doth repreſent the Church militant, the draw-net whereof incloſeth [f] all kinds of things, the bad with the good; and therefore [g] ſchiſmatickes and heretickes breake the net and ſlip away; but the Lord knoweth [h] his, and no man ſhall [i] plucke them out of his hand; rumpitur rete, ſed non labitur piſcis, as venerable Beda notes vpon the place. The reprobate may breake the net, but not one of Gods elect ſhall periſh.

And they beckened to their fellowes which were in the other ſhip, that they ſhould come and helpe them, and they came] It is obſerued truly, [k] that the people are like the ſea, and the Preachers are like to winde: as the ſea of it ſelfe would be quiet, if the windes did not moue and trouble it: ſo the people would be tractable, and peaceable, if ſedicious Orators did not ſet them in agitation. When we deſire they ſhould draw with vs, they pull from vs; if we pull one way, and they draw another way, how ſhall we fill the ſhip with fiſh, the Church with Conuerts? It is confeſſed, at the leaſt profeſſed on each ſide, that both of vs are partners, and haue ſhare in the fiſh: and yet becauſe we firſt beckened and called them to vs, and they want power to fetch vs to them; either they draw not with vs, or elſe they draw againſt vs: And this (as [l] one ſaid) is a plaine quarrell betweene diſcretion and ſtomacke. If peace-makers are bleſſed, aſſuredly ſuch as plant by writing, and water by ſpeaking, the bitter roots of contention among vs, are moſt accurſed. Auicenna reports out of Rufus an ancient Phiſition, that there was a young maid, who being fed and nouriſhed long time with poiſon, liued her ſelfe in perfect health, and yet her venimous breath infected all thoſe who came nigh her. Our Sciſmatickes haply finde no great annoyance in their owne eſtate, yet their breath vndoubtedly poiſoneth other of more weake iudgement. For, alas, what ſhall ſilly fiſh doe, when as they ſee S. Andrew row to the North, and S. Peter call vnto the South: when they ſupplant one another, who ſhould ſupport one another?

When [m] Ioab vnderſtood that his enemies were encamped both before and behinde him, he diuided his armie betweene himſelfe and his brother Abiſhai, with this direction: If the Aramits be ſtronger then I, thou ſhalt helpe me: but if the children of Ammon be too ſtrong for thee, I will come to ſuccour thee. So likewiſe I would to God our partners in S. Andrewes boat would aſſiſt vs in S. Peters ſhip againſt Atheiſts, and our helpe ſhould neuer be wanting vnto them againſt the Papiſts. O that all our armies and forces once might be combined againſt our common aduerſaries. If it be poſſible (good Lord) let there be peace betweene the meſſengers of peace, the fiſhers of men, that helping one another mutually, mutually, both ships may be filled with fishes vntill they be ready to sincke. The Gospell and Epistle meete here; for this president of vnitie doth excellently glosse the Text in the Epistle, be ye all of one minde and of one heart, loving as brethren.

When Simon Peter saw this he fell downe at Iesus knees, saying, Lord go from me, for I am a sinfull man] [n] If Peter were so great a sinner, he should rather haue desired to keepe with him his Sauiour, for the sick need a Physitian: and therefore [o] some thinke that he spake this out of amazement, as not well considering what he said: other, that it is an [p] humble speech of a true [q] contrite: [r] like to that of the Centurion, Matth. 8.8. Master, I am not worthie that thou shouldest come vnder my roofe. Hence all men, especially the fishers of men, may learne, when any good is done by their ministerie, not to magnifie themselues, but glorifie God. The Epistle. Rom. 6.3. vide ℣. 12

Know ye not that all we which are baptized in Iesus Christ, are baptized to die with him, &c.

S Aint Paul in this Chapter mooues a question, and makes an answer. The question is, Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? vnto which he doth answer:

1. With an absit, God forbid: for the [t] grace of God appearing, teacheth vs that we should deny vngodlinesse and worldly lusts. [t] Tit. 2.11.
2. With an argument, How shall we that are dead to sinne liue yet therein? A [u] dead nature cannot worke: such then as are dead to sinne may not, yea cannot, as dead; liue in sinne. So the Church in the [x] Canticles: I haue put off my coat, how shall I put it on? I haue washed my feet, how shall I defile them againe. [u] Aquin. in loc. [x] Cap. 5.3.

He proues his reason to be good, in [y] respect of our life
- Past, as being dead and buried to sinne, which is our mortification.
- Present, as walking in a new life, which is our viuification.
- Future, beleeuing that we shall liue with him also, which is our glorification.

[y] Gorran in loc.

Or as other, he doth argue from the [z] fruit and [a] end of holy Baptisme: namely, [b] repentance, consisting in
- Mortification
  - Begun, which is our dying to sinne, vers. 3.
  - Continued and increased, which is our buriall, vers. 4.
- Viuification, which is our arising from [c] dead workes, and liuing vnto God in newnesse of life.

Know ye not] [d] Hence we may learne, that in Pauls age the people well vnderstood the doctrine of the Sacraments, and other mysteries of holy beleefe. The which as it doth vtterly condemne the carnall Gospellers negligence; so confute sufficiently the learned Papists opinion of ignorance: for it is not, as they fondly conceiue, the mother of deuotion, but as the Councell of [e] Toledo determined, a grand-dame of all errour. It is our duty so to learne Christ, and [f] grow in knowledge, as that being asked a reason of our hope, we may giue vp a verdict without an ignoramus: as S. Peter exhorteth in his first Epistle, chap. 3. vers. 15. And [g] Gregorie the Great sitting in S. Peters chaire, qui ea quæ sunt Domini nesciunt, à Domino nesciuntur.

Baptized

Baptized in Iesus Christ] We may not here collect with [h] Ambrose, that it is sufficient to be baptized in the name of Christ, without any mention of the Father and Holy Ghost. [i] For to be baptized in Christ, is to be baptized according to Christs institution, and that is, [k] in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghost. Not implied only, but expressed also: [l] for as the matter of Baptisme, so likewise the forme must be sensible. See Lombard 4. sent. dist. 3. § de forma baptismi. Thom. ab Argentin. Altissiodor. & reliqnos scholast. ibidem. Aquinat. vbi in margine. Mel Can. loc. Theolog. lib 6. cap. 8. Bellarm. de Sacramento Baptismi, cap. 3. §. præter hos errores. Apostol. Can. 49. & 50. apud Balsamon. fol. 119.

Or as [m] other, to be baptized into the death of Christ, is to be baptized in the faith of his death: or as Paul expound himselfe, to be baptized into the similitude of Christs death. He speakes not of the forme of Baptisme; but of our [n] conformitie to Christ by Baptisme. For [o] all that are baptized into Christ, haue put on Christ: [p] euerie where bearing about in their bodie the dying of the Lord Iesus.

Now the custome in old time was to dip, and as it were to diue the whole bodie of the baptized in the water; as may be shewed in the monuments of the [q] Ecclesiasticall histories, as also by the register of Gods owne record: for Iohn the Baptist is said to haue baptized in Enon beside Salim, [r] because there was much water there. And S. Luke reports, Acts 8. 38, 39. that the great Eunuch of Æthiopia went into the water, and came out of the water at his Baptisme. For this cause the sacred Fonts in our Churches are so large, [s] that the Minister at his discretion, according to the temper of the weather, and the strength of the childe, might either dip it in the water, or else powre water vpon it. For charitie and necessitie may dispense with ceremonies, and mitigate the rigour of them in equitie.

This immersion in the primitiue Church (as the [t] Doctors obserue) was threefold, to signifie the three persons in holy Trinitie, God the Father, God the Sonne, God the Holy Ghost: as also that Christ continued in the graue three dayes: Augustin. citat. in Decret. dist. 4. Lombard. lib. 4. sent. dist. 3. §. de immersione. Thom. part. 3 quæst 66. art 8. Bellarm. de sacramento Baptismi, cap. 26. §. quarta est. Or as [u] Durandus addeth further, to shew that in Baptisme we are cleansed from three sorts of sinne; to wit, offences in thought, word, and deed. But when the wicked Arrians abused this ancient ceremonie to proue three natures in the Trinitie (not as the Catholikes intimating three persons and one God, according to Christs owne forme: Baptize them in the name, not in the names; [x] vnum enim nomen est, vna Diuinitas) [y] it pleased the Church in processe of time to change this order, and instead thereof to vse but once dipping only. Where note by the way, that ancient and [z] Apostolicall traditions, according to the present occasions of the Church, are alterable.

This once dipping hath three parts:

- Putting into the water, [a] noting the mortification of sinne by the power of Christs death: Know ye not that all wee which haue beene baptized in Iesus Christ, are baptized to die with him? Our old man is crucified with him also, that the bodie of sinne might be vtterly destroied.
- Continuance in the water, insinuating the buriall of sinne, to wit, a continuall increase of mortification: We are buried with him by Baptisme for to die.
- Comming out of the water, confirming our spirituall viuification to newnesse of life, in all holinesse and righteousnesse, obtained by the power of Christs resurrection: Like as Christ was raised from death by the glory of the Father; euen so we should walke in a new life: for if we be grafted in death like vnto him, euen so shall we be partakers ō of the holy resurrection.

The summe of all is, that by Baptisme we die to sinne and liue to God: our death and buriall is, in [b] respect of sinnes imputation and efficacie. First, in respect of imputation: for albeit some reliques of old Adam remaine in the new man, man, yet [c] all his offences are couered, as the Scripture plainly, [d] there is no condemnation vnto such as are in Christ. And as for [e] nnes efficacie; whereas the motions of sinnes in the members of an vnregenerate man haue force to bring forth fruit vnto death, Rom. 7.5. [e] he that is borne of God sinneth not. He doth not liue to sinne, but to [f] Christ who died for his sinne.

Thus I liue (quoth Paul) yet not I now, but Christ liueth in me. [g] Christ himselfe is the life which I now liue, in this regard he and I are both one. This seemeth a very strange manner of speaking, I liue, I liue not; I am dead, I am not dead, I am a sinner, I am not a sinner; I liue not now as Paul, but Paul is dead. Who is it then that doth liue? The Christian. [h] Our corrupt state subiect to sinne and concupiscence, is called the old man: but our person reformed in and by Christ, is termed the new man. I liue indeed in the flesh, but not through the flesh, or according to the flesh; for [i] I am crucified vnto the world, and the world is crucified vnto me. The truth is, I liue by faith in the Sonne of God: or as the text here speakes, I am grafted into Christ. Now the [k] graft doth liue not of it selfe, but by the sap of the stocke: we are twigs, and Christ is the tree: [l] without him we can doe nothing, but in him and through him [m] all things. If all then which are baptized into Christ, haue put on Christ, and are dead with him, and buried with him, and risen againe with him, I hold the saying iustifiable, that the baptized partie going into the water of holy baptisme foule, commeth out of it cleane. So [n] S. Augustine, Lauacrum regenerationis purgat à reatu omnium peccatorum quæ humana traxit natiuitas, & contraxit iniquitas. So [o] Lactantius:

Candidus egreditur, nitidis exercitus vndis,
Atq; vetus vitium purgat in amne nouo.

So [p] Paulinus:

Inde parens sacro ducit de fonte sacerdos,
Infantes niueos corpore, corde, habitu.

For this Sacrament (as [q] Aquine speakes) is a commemoration of Christs passion which is past, a demonstration of his grace which is present, and a prognostication of his glory which is to come.

The Gospell. MATTH. 5. 20. vnto v. 27

Except your righteousnesse exceed the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisies, ye cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen, &c.

THis Gospell hath two parts, a { Generall proposition, except your righteousnesse, &c. / Particular exposition, ye haue heard that it was said vnto them of old time, &c.

In the proposition obserue three points especially. First, that we cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen without righteousnesse, nisi iustitia. For [r] without shall be dogs, enchanters, and whoremongers. [s] All they that doe such things shall not inherit the kingdome of God. Only that man shall rest vpon the Lords holy hill, that leadeth an vncorrupt life, doing the thing that is right, and speaking the truth from his heart, Psalm. 15. A Christian by good workes ought to manifest his faith vnto [t] God, [u] his neighbour, and his [x] owne soule.

Secondly, this righteousnesse ought to be our owne righteousnesse, and not others, iustitia vestra. [y] The same soule that sinneth shall die; the sonne shall not answer for the fault of the father, neither shall the father beare the iniquitie of the sonne, but the righteousnesse of the righteous shall be vpon him, and the wickednesse of the wicked vpon himselfe. The [z] Papists affirme that the Church hath a treasurie of good workes, to be disposed at the Popes discretion. As for example: Iohn the Baptist did fast more then he was commanded, and the blessed Marie liued more strictly then God required: if any then in the Church of Rome be inioyned to fast, or doe some like penance, for his siluer he may get an an Indulgence, [a] tesseras veniales vænales, he may purchase a great deale of iustice for a little money. The Pope being Gods Vicar, can apply the fasting of S. Iohn Baptist, and the superabundant righteousnesse of Marie to any penitent at his owne pleasure. The which is a pretty tricke to fill his owne coffers, and empty the peoples.

Qui [b] fore debuit gratiæ datiuus, factus est Ecclesiæ rerum ablatiuus.

Christ here sings another note to his Disciples, except your righteousnesse, &c. insinuating that we cannot enter heauens gate without a righteousnesse in our selues, how soeuer it be not of our selues. A iustice not of our parents, or of our Pastors, or of any friend liuing, or Saint dead: but a righteousnesse [c] inherent in our owne persons, according to the tenour of Scriptures elsewhere. [d] God will reward euery man according to his workes: and blessed are they who die in the Lord, for their workes follow them, Apocalyps 14.13. The Protestants, as [e] Maldonate confesseth, all the Protestants, as [f] Stapleton, affirme that a iustifying faith is operatiue, working through loue. [g] Roffensis as it were composing the difference: Fides absq; partu operum, hoc est cùm nondum peperit opera, iustificare potest At iam parturit nihilominus, & est operibus grauida, nihil præter tempus partus expectans, id est, paritura est cùm occasio fuerit. I conclude this point in [h] Martin Luthers allegorie, faith is like S. Iohn in Christs bosome, possessing all the merits of Christ; and good workes are like S. Peter following his Master. Here the Gospell and Epistle meete. Our old man is crucified, and we are dead to sinne that we may liue to God in righteousnesse.

Thirdly, this Euangelicall righteousnesse, must exceed the Pharisaicall iustice, nisi abundauerit. There be three sorts of schollers in a Schoole: incipients in the lowest forme, for the most part taught by their fellowes: proficients in the second, directed by the Vsher: perfect in the first or highest seate, instructed by the Schoole-master himselfe. [i] Christ is our Doctor, and the world is his Vniuersitie wherein he hath had three sorts of schollers. Afore the Law, incipients, as it were spelling of Gods name, learning the first elements or A, B, C, of religion in the beginning, and therefore Christ taught them by their fellow creatures: [k] heauen declaring vnto them the glorie of God, and the firmament shewing his handie worke.

[l] The world's a booke in folio, printed all
With Gods great workes in letters capitall.

Proficients vnder the Law, taught by Moses and the Prophets, vnder Vshers as it were to Christ: but such as liued after the Law, to wit, in these dayes, had Christ himselfe to be their Tutor: as it appeareth in the first words of this chapter, When his Disciples came to him, he opened his mouth and taught them: his owne schollers hauing wisdome it selfe for their instructor, ought to surpasse [m] all other in Christian learning and religious duties. Except your righteousnesse exceed the righteousnesse of incipients afore the Law, yea of the Scribes and Pharisies great proficients (in their owne conceit) vnder the Law, ye shall neuer be made victors ye shall neuer be crowned for your industrie, ye shall not, ye cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen.

Euangelicall iustice must excell Pharisaicall righteousnesse in foure points especially, to wit, [n] in { Contrition. Faith. Inuocation. Consolation.

But we shall best vnderstand this generall axiome, by Christs particular instance: Ye haue heard that it was said vnto them of old time, thou shalt not kill whosoeuer killeth is in danger of iudgement. But I say vnto you, whosoeuer is angry with his brother vnaduisedly, shall be in danger of iudgement. Except your righteousnesse exceed the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisies, in expounding and obseruing the Law concerning homicide, ye shall not enter into the kingdome of heauen. First he shewes the [o] defect in the Pharisies interpretation, then he deliuereth his owne construction of the Commandement, Thou shalt not kill. The Pharisies (as being all

Ye haue heard that it was said] Christ came not to destroy, but to [t] fulfill the Law. So that his but I say, repeated oft in this Sermon on the mount, was not a contradiction or a correction of the law: but a confutation of the false glosse the Pharisies had set vpon the law. Christ I say doth not here confound, but expound the text of Moyses truly, which other had interpreted corruptly. For it is well [u] obserued that he saith not, it is written, but it is said. Not written n the commandement it selfe, but said by the Scribes, arresting by their summons and censures all the whole law, making it a nose of wax to serue their owne turnes. Which occasioned our Sauiour in this Sermon to deliuer a full explication of many particular commandements, as in the 31. vers. of this chap. It hath beene said, whosoeuer shall put away his wife, let him giue her a bill of diuorcement: but I say vnto you, whosoeuer shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, causeth her to commit adulterie. And 33. verse: It was said vnto them of old time, Thou shalt not forsweare thy selfe: but I say vnto you, sweare not at all. So likewise here, it was said vnto them in old time, thou shalt not kill, whosoeuer killeth shall be in danger of iudgement: But I say: whosoeuer is angry. This obseruation is not as [x] Maldonate conceiues hereticall, if either his owne [y] Iansenius, or [z] Bertrandus, or S. Paul himselfe be catholike, for he writes also plainly; [a] The law is holy, iust, and good. Christ therefore did not correct the Text, but the glosse.

Of old time] Where note that it is not any when, or any who, who may priuiledge error or preiudice the truth: according to that of [b] Tertullian: Veritati nemo præscribere potest, non spacium temporum, non patrocinia personarum, non priuilegium regionum, Dominus enim noster se non consuetudinem, sed veritatem cognominauit. The power of a King is great, [c] if he bid his subiects make warre one against another, they doe it: if he send them out against his enemies, instantly they goe and breake downe mountaines, and wals, and towers. If he bid kill, they kill: if he say spare, they spare. The reputation of a learned man is likewise so forcible, that Cicero said he would rather erre with Plato, then conceiue the truth aright with other. [d] One gaue it out in Basil, that he did attribute non minus Farello quam Paulo: no lesse to Farellus then he did to Paul. And [e] Zanchius reports, how that a Frenchman in Geneua protested, if S. Paul and Caluin should preach at the same houre, that he would leaue Paul and goe to Caluin. Reuerend antiquitie preuaileth also, for we may not [f] remoue the ancient bounds. And Paul aduiseth his beloued Timothie, [g] Keepe that which is committed vnto thee, deuitans prophanas vocum nouitates, as it is in the vulgar Latine. [h] Non dixit antiquitates, sed nouitates, nam si vitanda est nouitas, tenenda est antiquitas, prophana est nouitas, sacrata vetustas. Which occasioned a [i] great Clerke to say, that he was euer an enemie to nouell opinions, and a friend to old bookes. And yet when old Doctors in old time did erre, Christ had a but for them here: Ye haue heard that it was said vnto them of old time, &c. but I say, &c. The truth is greater and stronger then all, 1. Esdras 4.35. I write not this as if truth and antiquitie were at variance, for Christ in mending the glosse which is old, restored the Law which is more old.

Whosoeuer is angry with his brother vnaduisedly] Christs exposition is partly { Negatiue, shewing what wee should not doe: vers. 22. / Affirmatiue, shewing what wee should doe: vers. 23, 24, 25.

In the negatiue part we may note three degrees of sinne, and three degrees of punishment.

The degrees of sinne mentioned against the Law, Thou shalt not kill,[k] are { Angrie thoughts. Scornfull gestures. Opprobrious words.

The degrees of punishment, { Iudgment. Counsell. Hell fire.

First, concerning anger: it is truly said by [l] S. Hierome, to strip men of passions is to make them no men: Est hominem de homine tollere. [m] Dauid and [n] Paul in aduising to be angry and sinne not, allow that which is [o] naturall, and condemne that only which is culpable. Now lest our Anger should proue faultie, Christ here sets downe two rules for the gouerning of it.

First, concerning the matter and obiect of it, we must not be angrie with a brother.

Secondly, for the manner and measure, we may not be transported with this affection vnaduisedly.

There bee three sorts of brethren in holy Scripture: by
- Race { Such as haue the same father and mother, as [p] Iacob and Esau. / Such as are of the same kindred and family: so Lot and Abraham are called brethren, Gen. 13. 8.
- Place { Such as are of the same nation: as the Iewes are termed brethren in the [q] Law: To a stranger thou maist lend vpon vsurie, but not vnto thy brother.
- Grace, { Common, and so all men are brethren in respect of their generation. / Speciall, and so Christians only be brethren in respect of their regeneration.

Now by brother in the Text is not meant a brother only by race, as if it were lawfull to be angrie with a stranger, albeit not with a kinsmen or mothers sonne: neither is it vnderstood of a brother by place only, as if a man might be angry with an Alien, howsoeuer not with his owne countrey-men: but by brother here Christ meaneth a brother by grace, and that in the largest sense. For as euery man is our [r] neighbour, so likewise in this regard euery man is our [s] brother. A man may iustly be displeased and angry with the fault of his brother, but not with the person of his brother, as [t] Augustine iudiciously: Non fratri irascitur qui peccato fratris irascitur. Againe, Iudges, and warriours, and other publike ministers of the State may kill; not vpon any priuate grudge, but as an act of iustice, for the common good; destroying one to saue many. So [u] Christ vnto Peter; All that strike with the sword, shall perish with the sword: Ergo, there is a sword to punish him that strikes with the sword. As if Christ should say, whosoeuer doth strike with the [x] priuate sword of reuenge, shall perish with the publike sword of iustice. Magistrates in executing their office may be [y] zealous, not furious. [z] He that in iudging a brother is more violently carried against the man, then against his manners, is in danger of iudgement himselfe.

Vnaduisedly] The word (εἰκῆ) is omitted in the vulgar Latine, and in the [a] Romane Missale, and in other as well [b] old as new translations. But some Greeke copies, as Erasmus acknowledgeth, and such as are [c] ancient retaine it, and the reuerend [d] Fathers in their writings vsually recite and quote it, reading as the Church of England, Omnis qui irascitur fratri suo temerè: Whosoeuer is angry with his brother vnaduisedly or rashly. [e] He may not beginne anger without a iust cause, nor continue in it beyond measure. Both are vnaduised, and against this rule. We must be slow to wrath, Iames 1. 19. and soone appeased, Ephes. 4. 26. There be [f] foure kindes of angry men. In some the raging heat of wrath is soone kindled and soone put out: and these cholericke people, like gun-powder are no sooner touched, but instantly they be in your face, yet all their anger is but a sudden flash, as fire in dry reeds. In other some this heat is long long in kindling, and long ere it goe out: and these heauie melancholike persons are like the Christmas logge, if once they beginne to flame, they will continue burning all the day, yea all the night too. In a third sort this fire is soone kindled, and long in burning: and these wretches are worst of all. On the contrary, some be long in kindling and quickly coole, and these last are best. Euen like to God, [g] the slowest to conceiue wrath, and readiest to forgiue. They will not begin anger vnreasonably, nor continue anger vnseasonably. From hence then we learne two conclusions especially: First, that our anger doe not arise vainly without a good occasion; as Caine was angrie with Abel, Ahab with Naboth, Saul with Dauid. And secondly, that being iustly raised, it doe not rage too long or too much.

That anger arise not in vs toward other vnaduisedly, we must obserue both our selues, our neighbours, and God. First, let vs consider our owne corrupt nature, which is as easily kindled by wrath, as gunpowder and flax by fire. As then a Merchant hauing such commodities, and knowing their qualitie, doth by warinesse preserue them long from burning: euen so may we our natures that they be not consumed with anger, if we will watch ouer them. It is an old prouerbe, that euery man is either a foole or a Physitian. So likewise in this respect, euery man is vnto himselfe a Deuill or a Diuine. A Deuill, if he neglect; a Diuine, if he take heed of his owne cholericke disposition. Againe, let vs in our selues abandon all vncharitable suspitiousnesse, a good disposition makes a good exposition. But as the suspitious man thinketh, his neighbour clinketh; he will wring our words to wrong our meaning, of a little sparke of a sillable, kindling a great fire of contention.

As for our neighbours, it is good to marke their vglie behauiour in anger, that seeing how vnseemly it is in other, we might beware of it our selues. [h] The wicked are like the raging sea; they are of their owne disposition vnquiet, but if you stirre them a little, they fume, they fome like the sea, whose waters cast vp dirt and mire.

[i] Ipsa sibi est hostis vesania, seq; furendo
Interimit, moriturq; suis ira ignea telis.

And as a [k] moderne Poet:

Angitur iracundus homo, non re modo verum
Nomine, quam prope sunt anger & angor idem.

The [l] Fathers aptly terme this distemper the drunkennesse of the soule. So that as [m] Plato counselled all reuellers to view themselues in a glasse when they are in their loathsome drunken humour; and as the [n] Lacedemonians vsed to make some of their pezants drunke and shew them vnto their youth, hereby deterring them from this beastly sinne, in beholding the senseleſse and vncouth misdemeanour of drunkards: in like sort, it is comely for vs to note the rude language, the murthering eye, the countenance distorted, and in a word, the mad and vnmanlike behauiour of an angry bedlem carried away from himselfe with heat and choler.

Lastly, let vs consider in God, his mercy, prouidence, and iustice. First, his mercy, who forgiueth vs much, and shall not we forgiue our brother a little? [o] When a railing fellow did reuile Pericles all the day, and followed him home to his gate when it was night, Pericles answered not a word againe, but commanded one of his seruants to light a torch and to bring the brawler home to his owne house. Shall heathen people goe beyond vs that profesſe Christ, and that in a point of Christianitie? Shall reason preuaile more with them, than religion with vs? The Father of mercies, and God of all grace, forgiueth our sinnes of ignorance, sinnes of infirmitie, sinnes of malice, sinnes of riper age, sinnes of youth, open sinnes, hidden sinnes; and therefore (being [p] followers of God as deare children) if a brother offend vpon ignorance, we should neglect it; if vpon infirmitie, forbeare it; if vpon malice, forget it: howsoeuer forgiue it, being mercifull as our heauenly father is mercifull.

Secondly, let vs remember Gods all-seeing prouidence; to which if we doe not yeeld in all humilitie, we are not so much angry with men, as displeased with God. He disposeth of libels, of slanders, of all scandalous actions of the bad, to trie the patience and faith of such as are good. [q] Ad alıquem vsum sanctorum ordinatur omnis actus impiorum à summo Deo, qui prosui regiminis æquitate, bene vtitur etiam malis: vt qui suo arbitrio iniustè viuunt, illius iudicio iustè disponantur. It is reported in [r] sacred historie, that a certaine man drew a bow ignorantly, and smote the King of Israel betweene the ioynts of his brigandine: the poore man shot at randum, but the Lord so directed his arrow, that it fell vpon wicked Ahab. In like sort, when our aduersaries shall whet their tongue like a sword, and shoot out their arrowes euen bitter words, as it is in the [t] Psalme, then we must acknowledge that these darts are guided by Gods prouidence to hit vs. As [t] Dauid said of railing Shimei; Suffer him to curse, for the Lord hath bidden him: it may be the Lord will looke vpon my affliction, and doe me good for his cursing this day. We are not to consider so much how wicked they be by whom we suffer, as how iust he is who disposeth of their wickednesse. Non venit sine merito, quia Deus est iustus; nec erit sine commodo, quia Deus est bonus.

Thirdly, let vs obserue God in his iustice, who is said here to punish anger with iudgement; a scornefull racha with a counsell: an opprobrious word with hell fire. But if notwithstanding all these caueats our anger arise, the next care must be that it continue not too long: and it continueth too long, when it hindereth or lesseneth any dutie of godlinesse or charitie. Let not the Sunne go downe vpon thy wrath. If it arise in thee, let it not raigne in thee, let it not rage in thee. To this purpose Philosophers and Diuines haue giuen vs an excellent rule, namely, that we doe nothing suddenly while this humour stirreth in vs: for rash anger is a bad [u] agent, and a worse [x] counseller. He that either acteth or plotteth any thing in heat, commonly repents in cold bloud. [y] Finis iræ, initium pœnitentiæ: Where choler ends, our penance begins.

——[z] qui non moderabitur iræ
Infectum volet esse, dolor quod suaserit aut mens,
Dum pœnas odio per vim festinat inulto.

[a] Basil the Great abstained three whole yeares from writing against Eustatius, lest in his heat and haste he might play the ruffin with his pen. [b] Architas said he would haue corrected his seruant, but that himselfe was angrie. [c] Frederick the Duke of Saxonie, when he was angrie would shut himselfe vp in his closet, and let none come at him till he had mastered his passion.

That anger arise not in other toward vs vnaduisedly, let vs obserue this one precept of [d] Paul; Studie to be quiet, and to meddle with your owne businesse. The contention of the Church of England hath especially beene bred by the fond intermedling with the Ministers office, while busie-bodies haue spent all their time in disputing what we should be, not considering in the meane while what themselues are. The Pelican finding a fire nigh her nest, and fearing the danger of her young, seekes to blow it out with her wings vntill she burne them, and makes her selfe a prey in her vnwise pitie: [e] so they which indiscreetly meddle with the flame of dissention kindled in the Church, rather increase then quench it; rather fire their owne wings then helpe others. I had rather a farre off bewaile the fire then stirre in the coales. I would not grudge my ashes to it if those might abate the burning: but since it is increased daily with partaking, I will behold it with sorrow, and meddle no otherwise then by prayers to God, and intreaties to men; seeing mine owne safetie and the peace of the Church in the freedome of my thought and silence of my tongue.

Whosoeuer saith vnto his brother racha] [f] Some deriue this word of the Greeke ῥάκος, in English as much as ragged, or shake-ragge; [g] other from the Syrian raca, which is a disgraciue terme, much like our English thou, when it is spoken in contempt and scorne. [h] Saint Hierome thinkes it comes of the Hebrew rec, signifying idle head, or emptie braine. But seeing Interpreters haue generally noted a gradation here, racha must necessarily be placed in the [i] middle betweene secret anger, and open railing. I subscribe therefore to their [k] opinion, who make racha an interiection, or broken speech of an angry minde, breaking out and bewraying it selfe somewhat, though not fully in token of mislike; whereof there be diuers in euery language, as tush, fie, pish, in ours. And this rakel-like behauiour is not in imperfect words only, but in [l] all scornefull gestures of contempt; as in countenance, when we carry murthering lookes, in mocks and mowes, in putting forth of the [m] finger, Esay, 58.9. in gnashing of the teeth, in making a loud and absurd noise, shouting and wondring at men as at owles: Ephes. 4.31. Let all bitternesse and anger and wrath and crying be put away from you.

To these I will adde another vnseemely carriage, the like whereof I finde not in the Bible, nor in any Comment vpon my text; and that is disdainfully to sleepe at Sermons in contempt of the Preacher: I say, sleepe, not vpon infirmitie, but vpon malice; which is a dogs sleepe, dreaming and awaking at once. By racha then are inclusiuely forbidden all hatefull gestures of despight: and all the contrarie duties are commanded, as Christian salutations, humble behauiour, respects and courtesies according to the commendable fashions of the countrey wherein we liue.

I am occasioned here to meet with a peeuish and vncharitable people, who practise themselues, and teach other, that it is vnlawfull for a Christian to salute passengers ordinarily with a good morrow, or God be with you. I will not pledge them in their owne cup, and answer them in their owne vaine, but call them vnto strict rules of dispute, res cum re, causa cum causa, ratio cum ratione confligat, as [*] Augustine to the Manichees. I will therefore first set downe their arguments, and then our solutions. Their reasons as I haue gathered from their owne mouthes are principally three.

1. We know not whether euery passenger be a brother or no.

2. Though a brother, haply, yet we cannot tell whither he goeth, and about what.

3. Suppose we well vnderstand what he will, and who he be: yet suddenly to say God blesse you, God saue you, &c. is to take the name of the Lord in vaine.

To the first, as euery man is a neighbour: so likewise a brother in this case. For if Christ be so good as his word in this Chapter at the seuenteenth verse, namely, that he came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it: he must vnderstand by brother in this text all sorts of men, and all men of all sorts. And whereas they distinguish and say that euery passenger is not a brother in Christ: Answer is made, that salutations are to be performed euen toward such as beleeue not the Gospell, and are not as yet of the household of faith. A precept hereof is found in Christ, [n] When ye come into an house salute the same, [o] saying, Peace be to this house. A patterne in the Prophet Elisha, who said vnto Naaman the leper an Aramite, [p] Goe in peace. The Prophet approued not his act, yet after the common manner of speech he biddeth him farewell, as the Geneua note vpon that place. Secondly, we may well out of charity presume that all ordinary passengers of England are our brethren in Christ, as being baptized in the faith of Christ, and professing the Gospell of Christ vnder the same Christian King, after the same Christian order; and so by consequence to be reputed as members of Christ, and children of God. According to the tenour of our common Catechisme, if once we would vouchsafe to learne and vnderstand it. As for differences about matters of indifferency, S. Paul teacheth vs, Ephes. 4. that the most ancient and true bonds of vnity are not one discipline, one ceremony, one policy: but one God, one faith, one baptisme. Yea but S. Iohn speakes of some to whom we may not say God speed. These were notorious apostates, at the least exceeding dangerous hereticks, as it is apparent in the context, who did not only broach another discipline, but another doctrine, [q] that is a contrary doctrine, [r] preaching another Gospell: and therfore not to be receiued into our priuate house, because they will not communicate with vs in Gods house. Their words [s] fret as a canker, and therefore they must must be [t] reiected after once or twice admonition. A kinde salutation is a step to familiar conference with them, and that is [u] insufferable. [x] Nulla cum talibus commercia, nulla conuinia, nulla colloquia misceantur, tamus ab illis tam separati quam illi sunt ab ecclesia profugi. Secondly, S. Iohn wrote this Epistle to a vertuous Ladie the which might easily be seduced by cunning heretikes, euermore ready to [y] creepe into houses, and leade captiue simple women: as S. Hierome shewes by manifold pregnant instances in his Epistle to Ctesiphon tom. 2. fol. 253. So that if wee consider of whom and to whom S. Iohn speakes, this ob. will appeare not to be worth an halfepenny.

To their second argument: I say with Christ, [z] Iudge not. It is a rule both in law, and loue, that euery man is to be reputed honest, vntill the contrarie be proued. [a] Charitie thinketh not euill, it suffereth all things, it beleeueth all things. [b] In Friceland there was a phantasticall prophet named George Dauid, who calling himselfe Gods nephew, said heauen was emptie, and that he was sent to chuse the children of God, and appoint such as should be saued. In our time there bee many such prophets electing and damning whom they please. But I am sure they haue no more authoritie to make Deuils, then the Pope hath to make Saints. As then a number of his saints are in hell: so questionlesse many of their deuils are, now glorious Saints in heauen. But suppose this passenger hath an intent to kill, and that to robbe; yet our good wish God be with you, may diuert them haply from their bad courses, if not conuert them throughly. For they cannot act any wicked designe so long as God is with them, and directs them with his spirit.

To their third obiection; I say that the teaching of such doctrine, making the Scriptures a ship-mans hose to serue their owne malitious humours, [c] is to take the name of God in vaine. But let vs examine their proofe. Men take Gods name in vaine, because they thinke not of God, in saying God be with you. But why should we thinke that they thinke not of God, [d] for what man knoweth the things of a man, saue the spirit of a man which is in him? Or if they thinke not of God sometime in their salutation, why should any forbid it at all times? Our deuotion is ordinarily more setled, I confesse, when we pray for our brethren in the congregation; yet these short eiaculations vpon the way, many times are so profitable to our brethren, and acceptable to God, as any long prayer whatsoeuer. For what can we say more briefly or sweetly then the Lord be with you? For [e] if God be with vs, who can be against vs? And lastly, though we grant, which they can neuer gaine, that we thinke not of God when we thus speake of God; yet it is no more blasphemie, then for a little childe to say Grace, or to [f] learne the Chatechisme, who neither knoweth God, nor vnderstandeth what he saith of God. I conclude therefore that these captious obiecters are not literati, but [g] litteriones: and I pray with [h] Augustine; Cum non sint idonei spiritualia capere, vtinam saltem desinerent carpere.

Thou foole] In this one word are inclusiuely forbidden [i] all other opprobrious termes of the like or worse meaning; as knaue, dolt, asse, &c. whereby we disgrace the partie who is our flesh, and Gods image, [k] the which are the two principall grounds of the law, Thou shalt doe no murther. Whereas it is obiected that [l] Paul called the Galathians foolish; [m] answer is made that he did this out of loue to conforme, not out of malice to confound them; and so mens & propositum distinguunt maleficia, saith the law. Freindly to shew thy brother his follie is not a wound, but a [n] precious balme, better than the [o] kisses of an enemie: qui non corrigit, corrumpit; in some case not to correct is to corrupt thy friend. Another question is moued here, whether superiours, especially Princes, may be transported with anger vnaduisedly towards their vassals, abusing them in reproachfull termes at their pleasure. To this obiection the King of Kings hath giuen answer; [p] Fathers prouoke not your children to wrath. A superiour may rebuke sharply, but faults rather than men, and men only in hatred of faults, and both in long-suffering and loue. The master Bee (saith Basil) hath no sting, the greater power

King of France, that he paſſed his time in making and vndoing men; as if he were placed in his throne, non vt proſit, ſed tantùm vt præſit, as [r] Auguſtine ſpeakes. I finde [s] in hiſtorie, that wiſe men inuented the game of Cheſſe to mitigate the cruelneſſe of Gouernours, in which it is inſinuated, that the King hath need of his Biſhops, of his Knights, yea of the meaneſt pezant that toyleth in his land. Concerning the degrees of puniſhment: [u] all ſinnes are mortall in reſpect of their owne merit, how ſoeuer pardonable to the truly penitent by Gods mercie. Chriſt in this gradation doth not allow the papiſticall diſtinction of mortall and veniall ſinne; for the [x] wages of euery ſinne is death, and in it nature deſerueth hell fire. But he doth [y] allude to the proceeding of the Iewes in their Ciuill Courts, among whom a ſmall matter was heard and decided by the iudgement of three men, other of greater importance determined in a Counſell of 23. Iudges, and laſtly the greateſt of all ended by the ſentence of 71. The [z] Romanes held almoſt the like formes of iudgement. Chriſts intent then is to ſhew that as among men, ſo before God there be different degrees of puniſhment, according to the different degrees of ſinne. See S. Auguſt de ſerm. Dom in monte, lib. 1. Marlorat, & Beza in loc. concerning the word Gehenna; Galatin. de Arcanis lib. 6. cap 7. Euthym in loc. Beauxamis Harmon. tom. 2. fol. 201. *Ianſen. If thou offereſt the gift at the Altar, and there remembreſt thy brother hath ought againſt thee, leaue there thine offering before the Altar, and goe thy way firſt and be reconciled vnto thy brother] Our offering is acceptable, when we ſacrifice that which is our owne, with a good intent toward God, and loue toward our brethren. Firſt, we muſt offer our owne, [a] thy gift. [b] He that giueth an offering of vnrighteous goods, offereth a mocking ſacrifice, and he doth as one that ſacrificeth the ſonne before the fathers eye.

Secondly, we muſt offer with a good intent, as hauing reſpect vnto Gods Altar, and not vnto the [c] commendations of men. If the gift of the wicked be an abomination vnto the Lord, [d] how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked minde? If thine eye be ſingle (ſaith our Sauiour) thy whole bodie ſhall be light; but if thine eye be wicked, then all thy bodie ſhall be darke, Matth. 6. 22, 23. This eye, ſaith [e] Auguſtine, is our intention, if that be ſingle, directed to the right end, then all the bodie of thy good workes is acceptable to God. I meane ſuch an intent, as is begun, continued, and ended in a liuely faith.

Laſtly, we muſt offer in loue, being reconciled vnto our brother, and much more to the Catholike Church, which is the whole [f] brotherhood of Chriſtian men: for God expects and reſpects [g] mercie rather than ſacrifice. The partie nocent ought to ſeeke for reconciliation firſt: but for as much as euery man almoſt is readie to pretend innocencie, [h] ſeeing a mote in his brothers eye, but not conſidering the beame in his owne eye: thou muſt examine thine owne [i] conſcience ſtrictly, whether thy brother hath ought againſt thee, be it neuer ſo little, if enough to make variance, [k] though he conceiue diſpleaſure without a iuſt cauſe. For [l] if thy brother hath iniured thee, forgiue him, and be patient. If thou haſt offended thy brother, aske him forgiueneſſe, and make ſatisfaction [m] anſwerable to the fault. If thou haſt ought againſt thy brother, [n] it is enough thou freely pardon him at the Altar, deſiring forgiueneſſe as thou forgiueſt other: but if thy brother hath ought againſt thee, then go from the Altar, and be reconciled. Chriſt ſaith not [o] if thou haſt offended againſt thy brother in ſecret thought only, for that were to make difference, not to ſeeke peace: but if thou haſt openly treſpaſſed

As an Epigram reſembling the Bee, doth carrie the chiefeſt ſting in it taile; ſo the maine ſtrength of all this text is in the concluſion. I will therefore begin at the end. The reward of ſinne is death, but eternall life is the gift of God, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. As if our Apoſtle ſhould ſay, [t] Compare God with the deuill, ſanctimonie with ſinne, life with death, and you ſhall find that it is better to ſerue God whoſe gift is eternall life, then Satan whoſe wages for ſinne is euerlaſting death. A ſcripture like the Phyſitians γλυκύπικρον, ſowre-ſweet: for what can be more ſharpe then the firſt clauſe, The wages of ſinne is death? And againe, what more ſweet than the latter, eternall life is the gift of God through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord? The firſt ſentence may be conuerted thus, Death is the wages of ſinne.

[t] Eraſmus Paraphraſ.

Now there be three kindes of death: of the

- Bodie, which is the naturall death.
- Soule, which is the ſpirituall death.
- Bodie and ſoule, which is eternall death.

Naturall death is the [u] ſeparation of the ſoule from the bodie, common vnto the good with the bad: for it is a ſtatute law decreed in the great parliament of heauen, that [x] all men ſhall once die, [y] for as much as all men haue ſinned. Hence it is that many are ſicke and weake and die, 1. Corinth. 11. 30. All men, euen the deareſt children of God (albeit their ſinnes be forgiuen) ſhall taſte of the firſt death, but it is not a curſe, but rather a bleſſing vnto them. It is true that death in it ſelfe, and to the reprobate wicked, is the curſe of God, the very ſuburbs of hell, and, as it is called here, the ſtipend of ſinne. Neither is it vniuſt dealing in God, that he ſhould incurre the death of his bodie, who reiected the life of his ſoule. But conſidered in Chriſt, and ioyned with a good life, to Gods elect it is [z] aduantage: nothing elſe but a bridge whereby we ſhall paſſe from a valley of teares into a paradiſe of ioyes. According to that of Salomon, Eccleſiaſtes 7. 3. The day of death is better then the day that one is borne. See Nunc dimittis.

Spirituall

Spirituall death in the faithfull is threefold: to wit, a death of

- Sinne: for [a] how shall we that are dead to sinne liue therein?
- The law: through the Law I am dead to the law; Galat. 2. 19. [b] Against that accusing and condemning law, I haue another law which is grace and libertie, the which accuseth the accusing, and condemneth the condemning law.
- The world
  - Actiue; whereby the world is dead vnto them, as renouncing the pomps thereof, and [c] accounting all things losse to winne Christ.
  - Passiue: whereby they be dead vnto the world, which [d] hateth and persecuteth them for Christs sake; reputing them [e] as the filth of the earth and off-scouring of all things. Our Apostle comprehends both in one line: Gal. 6. 14. God forbid that I should reioyce but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ, wherby the world is crucified vnto me, and I to the world.

[c] Philip. 3. 8.

[d] Matth. 10. 22

[e] 1. Cor. 4. 13.

None of these spirituall deaths are the reward of sinne, but on the contrarie the gifts and graces of God. For all such as are dead to the world and sinne liue to God; so the Scripture plainly, [f] The iust doth liue by faith, euen by faith [g] in the Sonne of God, who [h] dwelleth in their hearts, and [i] quickneth them with his spirit. There is then a spirituall death in vnbeleeuers, and all such as are not led by the spirit of God. For as the soule is the life of the body; so God is the life of the soule. When he taketh his spirit from vs we walke in the shadow of death; as the faithfull are dead to sinne, so the faithlesse dead in sinne. Matth. 8. 22. Let the dead burie the dead; [k] that is, let such as are spiritually dead bury those which are corporally dead. For [l] a widow liuing in pleasure is dead while she liueth. And this kinde of spirituall death is a fruit of sinne, because sinne onely [m] makes a separation betweene God and vs.

The third kinde is the death of bodie and soule, and that is eternall destruction [n] in hell fire, called in holy Scripture the [o] second death, or death after death. Of which almighty God by the mouth of his [p] Prophet, as I liue I desire not the death of the wicked, but that he should turne from his way and liue. To these three kinds I might adde a fourth. And that is, as the Lawyers call it, a ciuill death, an vndoing of our credit and honest reputation in the world. And this death is the wages of sinne likewise, for [q] the name of the wicked shall rot. But S. Paul here meaneth especially that eternall death is the reward of sinne, as eternall life is the gift of God. And the reason hereof is plaine, [r] a man in sinne doth offend God an infinite maiestie, and therefore deserueth an infinite miserie. But for as much as being finite, he cannot suffer a punishment infinite in greatnesse, intensiuè simul & semel: he must endure a paine which is infinite in time, successiuè sine fine, an eternall death in an euerlasting fire. The reward] τὰ ὀψώνια, doth [s] signifie victuall properly, wherewith in old time souldiers were allured to fight. His meaning is, that eternall death is the deuils [t] earnest penny, wages and as it were presse-money which he bestowes vpon all his souldiers. Here then obserue that it is the most vnthriftie course to march vnder the colours of Satan, and to haue [u] fellowship with vnfruitfull workes of darknesse. For hereby men gaine nothing but losse both of body and soule. Who would serue such a master as hath neither will nor abilitie ao preferre his followers? The deuill hath no will, for he was [x] a murtherer from the beginning, [y] whose name in Hebrew is Abaddon, in Greeke Apolyon, a roaring lion seeking whom he may deuoure, 1. Peter 5. 8. and as for his abilitie, though he promise [z] kingdomes, he cannot dispose of a few swine without [a] Christs permission. Alas poore wretch; he hath nothing of his owne but sinne and death. And in nature they be [b] nothing: for God made all things, and all that was made was good, yea very good, Gen. 1. 31. But the deuill begat sinne, and sinne bred death. And so by consequence men serue the deuill for a very nothing, his wages is death, and death death is nothing. I say, nothing in nature, none of the workes of Gods [c] hand. It were a blessed turne for the wicked if death in Scripture were nothing, if it were a morall nothing; but the truth is, eternall death is such a thing, as that the reprobate shall finde it a priuation of all that is blissefull, and a possession of all that is hatefull and hurtfull. So great is the difference betweene the reward of Satan and the gift of God.

[c] Wisdom. 1. 13

Sinne] The [d] Scriptures haue defined sinne to be the transgression of the law: and it is either originall, or actuall. [e] Originall is a priuation of goodnesse, and a corruption of nature, deriued from our first parents Adam and Eua, whereby tht faculties of our soules, and members of our bodies are disposed and prone to sinne; that euery man may confesse with [f] Augustine: Tam malus puer tantus peccator. And with [g] Dauid, I was shapen in wickednesse, and in sinne hath my mother conceaued me. This contagion is not, as Pelagius imagined, onely by imitation and example: but as Saint Augustine hath excellently proued in [h] two bookes against him, it is by propagation from the parents vnto the children. I say from the parents, albeit neuer so righteous and holy. [i] Regeneratus quippe non regenerat filios carnis, sed generat; ac per hoc in eos non quod regeneratus, sed quod generatus est traycit. Sic igitur, siue reus infidelis siue absolutus fidelis non regenerat absolutos vterq; sed reos; quomodo non solum oleastri sed etiam oleæ semina, non oleas generant sed oleastros. I will not here curiously dispute whether our soules are infected by the contagion of our bodies, as good oyntment by a fustie vessell: or whether God in the very moment of creation and infusion of soules into infants after a sort forsake them. It is sufficient to know that originall sinne, being as a common fire in a towne, men are not so much to search how it came, as to be carefull how to put it out. For death is the wages euen of this sinne also, otherwise little children, who neuer committed actuall offence, should not die. The text is plaine that all men are by [k] nature the children of wrath. As Bernard in his [l] meditations sweetly, Parentes ante fecerunt damnatum quam natum; peccatores peccatorem in peccato suo genuerunt, & de peccato nutriuerunt; miseri miserum in hanc lucis miseriam induxerunt: nihil ex eis habeo nisi miseriam, & peccatum, & corruptibile hoc corpus quod gesto. The new borne babe was dead in sinne, before he was borne, trespassing in Adam, and so made partaker both of his transgression and guiltinesse, as our Apostle sheweth in the former chapter, concluding in the 18. verse; By the offence of one the fault came on all men to condemnation.

[l] Cap. 2.

Yea but it is hard and vniust that one should be punished for the fact of another. [m] Answer is made, that Adam is not to be considered in this respect as a priuate man, but as a publike person, representing all mankinde, and therefore looke what good he receiued from God, or euill elsewhere, both were common to vs with him. And it is iust before God, and man; before God, because we receiue more benefit by the death of Christ, then we did hurt by the fall of Adam. [n] As in Adam all men die, so in Christ all are made aliue. By one mans disobedience many were made sinners, and by the obedience of one, many made righteous. It is iust; also before man, for rebellion is punished not onely in the partie delinquent, but in all his posteritie. Now Adam was an arrant traytor to the King of all Kings, and therefore such as issue from his loynes haue worthily felt the smart of his fall.

[o] Rom. 5. 19.

Thus (as I haue shewed) originall sinne is the tree, but actuall sinnes are the fruits. Originall is the root, actuall are the branches. Iames 1. 15, When lust hath conceiued it bringeth forth sinne, and sinne when it is finished bringeth forth death. He doth vnderstand by lust, [p] originall, and by sinne finished, actuall sinne; [q] the one being as mother, and the other as daughter: originall sinne being the seed of all actuall transgressions against the diuine lawes, vnum essentia multiplex efficentia. because, saith [r] Aquinas, in originali peccato præexistunt virtualiter omnia peccata actualia.

There be sundrie diuisions of actuall sinnes, as in respect of their obiect; sinnes against God, and sinnes against our neighbours: And against both these, some are sinnes of [s] omission, other of commission. And in regard of our intention and minde, there be [c] ſinnes of infirmitie, ſinnes of ignorance, ſinnes of malice, Sinnes of infirmitie are ſaid to be committed againſt God the Father, whoſe ſpeciall attribute is power: ſinnes of ignorance, againſt God the Sonne, whoſe ſpeciall attribute is wiſdome: ſinnes of malice, againſt God the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſpeciall attribute is loue. And theſe ſinnes of malice are either directly committed againſt grace receiued and the good motions of Gods ſpirit in vs, as the blaſphemies againſt the Holy Ghoſt: or elſe conſequently, as Idolatrie and adulterie, the which if once they grow to be habits, exceedingly [n] grieue the ſpirit of God. Beſides theſe, and many moe partitions of ſinne, the [x] Papiſts affirme that ſome ſinnes are mortall, and other veniall. Herein contradicting the text, intimating that death is the reward of euery ſinne, be it neuer ſo little. For [y] whoſoeuer ſhall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point, is guiltie of all. Howſoeuer he doe not tranſgreſſe totum legis, yet he doth breake totam legem. And ſo the leaſt ſinne legally conſidered is damnable, though euangelically the greateſt of all be pardonable. Sinne in vnregenerate men is [z] regnant, and therefore mortall. According to that of Saint [a] Iohn; he that beleeueth not is condemned already: but in a regenerate man, ſinne doth not reigne as a king, howſoeuer it rageth as a tyrant; it is not admitted with plenarie conſent, but committed, or rather indeed ſuffered with reluxation and griefe. He that is borne of God ſo ſinneth, as if he did not [b] ſinne, doing that euill which he [c] would not. And therefore veniall, according to that of Paul, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſu, which walke not after the fleſh but after the ſpirit: Rom. 8. 1. In this ſenſe [d] Martin Luther, [e] Philip Melanthon, and [f] other Proteſtant Diuines, approue the diſtinction of mortall and veniall ſinne. The which one point vnderſtood aright, is the conſolation of Iſrael, and the Chriſtians heauen vpon earth, as the Prophet Dauid ſheweth in the 32. Pſalme: Bleſſed is the man whoſe vnrighteouſneſſe is forgiuen, and whoſe ſinne is couered.

But the Papiſts herein erre, becauſe they make this difference, non reſpectu perſonarum, ſed peccatorum. Extenuating their owne miſchiefe, not amplifying Gods mercie. Teaching that ſinnes of omiſſion and ignorance be [g] præter legem Dei, but not contra legem Dei: beſides Gods law, not againſt Gods law: the which is a dangerous doctrine deluding many. The words, I confeſſe, [h] drop as an honey combe, and are more ſoft then oyle, but the end of it is bitter as wormwood, and ſharpe as a two-edged ſword. [i] Ægypt was tormented with ſmall flies, as with greater plagues: and we may not neglect our ſinnes becauſe they be little in nature, but tremble becauſe they be many in number. We commonly diſcerne ſinne as we doe the Sunne; which we iudge to be little becauſe we be farre from it. The neerer we come to ſinne, the greater it will appeare: for if we conſider it in the lawes glaſſe, we ſhall finde that as a bemired dogge it doth defile with fawning, and that the reward thereof, as it is in the text, is eternall death. Haply ſome will obiect, if the wages of all ſinne be death, and that euerlaſting, then as the [k] Stoicks and [l] Iouinianiſts hold, all ſinnes are equall and alike. This cauill is anſwered by Chriſt in the Goſpell allotted for the laſt Sunday, Mat. 5. 22. Whoſoeuer is angry with his brother vnaduiſedly, ſhall be culpable of iudgement: and whoſoeuer ſaith vnto his brother racha, ſhall be in danger of a councell: but whoſoeuer ſaith thou foole, ſhall be in danger of hell fire. Where (as I haue ſhewed) are three degrees of ſinne againſt one and the ſame commandement; and three degrees of puniſhment accordingly. Circumſtances of place, time, perſon, either leſſon or aggrauate faults. As for example; the [m] King of Babylon offended more in taking [n] ſacrum de ſacro, conſecrated veſſels out of Gods houſe, then if he had ſtolne them out of a priuate houſe. The cutpurſe who doth exerciſe his craft at a ſermon, is worſe then a theefe robbing vpon the common way. Iudas an Apoſtle ſinned more in betraying his maſter Chriſt, then if Barrabas a murtherer had done the deed. He that deliuered me to thee (ſaid [o] Chriſt to Pilate) hath the greater ſinne.

According to theſe differences in ſinning, there be degrees in ſuffering: for as in in heauen [p] one starre differeth from another in glorie: so in hell one damned soule differeth from another in griefe; being so much the more wretched by how much the more wicked: Matth.11.24. and 23.15, Luk.20.47.

Eternall life is the gift of God through Iesus Christ our Lord] Gods eternall decree to elect is without beginning, but it shall haue end, when we see God face to face. The possession of this eternall life shall haue a beginning, but no end: For [q] the iust shall shine as the starres for euer and euer. Gods mercie in both hath neither beginning nor end, for it is from euerlasting to euerlasting. There be three kinds of life correspondent to the three kinds of death, and all of them are the gift of God, who is the [r] Lord of life. The life naturall of the bodie is Gods gift, for [s] in him we liue and moue and haue our being. The life spirituall of the soule is Gods gift, for it is the [t] life of Christ, and of [u] God in vs. Eternall life both of bodie and soule mentioned in the text is taken either pro via, for the way to life euerlasting, as Iohn 3.36, He that beleeueth in the Sonne of God hath euerlasting life: For [x] it is eternall life to know God, and whom he sent, Iesus Christ. Or else pro vita, for the blessed estate of Gods elect in heauen, as Matth. 25.46. Marke 10.30. And both are the free gift of God. In receiuing eternall life, we receiue [y] grace, for grace, [z] that is, the gift of glorification for the gift of iustification. And therefore whereas Paul saith here the wages of sinne is death, if there were any merits in our good workes, the sequell of his speech should haue beene, the wages of righteousnesse is eternall life. [a] But least iustice should lift vp it selfe of mans good merit, as mans ill merit is not doubted to be sinne; he saith not so, but eternall life is the gift of God: and lest it should be sought any other way then by the Mediator, he doth adde further, through Iesus Christ our Lord. And so by that which he doth not say, as also by that which he doth say, sheweth euidently that there is no place for merit. The Gospell. Marke 8.1. vulv ℣. 10

In those dayes when there was a verie great companie and had nothing to eat, &c.

CHrists miraculous feeding of many people with a few loaues, is read in the Church euery yeere thrice; to wit in Winter, when wheat is Sowen: in Lent when it is in hopefull Spring: and in Harueſt when it is readie for the Barne. The reason hereof is manifold.

1. [c] That in sowing, seeing, and reaping our Corne we might not ascribe this wonderfull increase to the fatnesse of our land, or greatnesse of our skill, or goodnesse of our seed: but only to the blessing of God, [d] opening his hand, and filling all things liuing with plenteousnesse, [e] who doth euery yeare make a great haruest of a few graines, as he did here make a great feast of a few loaues.

2. [f] That we may be well assured of Christs bountie towards all his followers, hungring and thirsting after righteousnesse, prouiding for them aboundantly, lest they faint in their way. [g] Caring for such as cast their care vpon him, as he promised in his holy Gospell: First seeke the Kingdome of God, and then all other things shall be ministred vnto you, Matth.6.33.

3. That we may learne to vse these temporall blessings in [h] thanksgiuing to God, in [i] hospitalitie towards the poore, feeding such as haue nothing to eate, in [k] frugalitie, taking vp the broken meat, not suffering any of Gods good creatures vnprofitably to be spoiled, or wastfully to be cast away.

The whole may be diuided into three parcels, a
- Defect, of
  - Food in the people; There was a very great company, and had nothing to eat.
  - [l] Faith in the Disciples; where should a man haue bread here in the wildernesse to satisfie these, &c.
- Affect; I haue compassion on the people.
- Effect; About foure thousand did eat, and were sufficed with seuen loaues, and a few small fishes.

All which ioyntly considered, may serue for the confirmation of our
- Faith,
- Hope,
- Charitie.

[l] Ardens, Theophylact, Caietan.

It may confirme our beleefe concerning Christs Humanitie and Diuinitie, [m] both together against Eutyches; his compassion is a demonstration of his manhood, for God is not compassionate [n] secundum affectum, but only secundum effectum. The reason is, because [o] pittie is a griefe for anothers miserie, [p] misericordia dicitur, quia miserum cor facit, and that is not properly competent to God. So that Christ [q] being touched with the feeling of our infirmities, euidently shewed himselfe to be very man; and his feeding of so much people with so little prouision, is an argument of his Diuinitie. The children of Israel in the wildernesse disputed with God after this manner: [r] He smote the stonie rocke indeed, and the water gushed out; but can he giue bread also, or prouide flesh for his people? shall God prepare a table in the wildernesse? As if they should argue thus: If the God of Israel can doe this, then he is God, then he is among vs and with vs. Goe to then ye stiffe-necked Iewes, and incredulous generation, resisting the holy Ghost, and not acknowledging Christ for the Messias. If he be God that can prouide a table for his people in the wildernesse, and giue abundance of bread in the deserr, haue so much patience as to consider a little this miraculous act of Christ, amplified by many remarkable pregnant circumstances in the text. As 1. we may reason from the place, Christ was in the wildernesse, farre from all townes, all villages, all houses, in so much that he could [s] neither buy nor begge any bread or meat.

2. From the slender prouision, seuen loaues and a few small fishes. Insinuting that Christ can fill with a little, so well as with a great feast: according to that of [u] Ionathan; It is not hard to the Lord to saue with many or with few. If they had beene loaues and many, many loaues might haue filled many mouthes: or if loads not loaues, seuen loads of bread haply might haue refreshed much people. But answer is made by the Disciples in the 5. verse, that they had onely loaues, and of those but seuen, and a few small fishes. Fish, small fish, a few small fishes. Euery word hath his weight, for solid flesh might haue contented hungry people better than fish; or if these fishes had beene so great as Whales, or so many as [x] S. Peter tooke at his strange draught, there might haue beene rendred some probable reason of this wonderfull miracle: but they were flaggie for their substance, little for their quantitie, few for their number, a few small fishes, euen so few, so small, that (as it is said in the like storie, Ioh. 6. 9.) a little boy carried them all about him. And whereas it may be thought, that these men had prouision of their owne; S. Marke preuents that obiection in the very beginning of this text, a very great companie which had nothing to eat.

3. From the persons who were fed and filled, as it is in the first words of this Gospell, a very great companie; and as it is said in the last more particularly, about foure thousand, beside women, and children, according to [y] S. Matthewes report. This great multitude comming from farre, verse 3. continuing in the wildernesse open piercing aire, verse 4. [z] which of necessitie must increase their hunger, and hauing not any thing of their owne to stay their stomach, verse 2. sate all downe, verse 6. not as vnto a scrambling beauer, but as at an orderly dinner, and all did eat and were satisfied, verse 8.

[y] Matth. 15. 38.
[z] Maldonat in Matth 15. 32.

4. From the meat which was left, they tooke vp of the broken meat that was left, seuen baskets full. Baskets, full baskets, seuen full baskets. All these being put together, amplifie Christs omnipotent power in working this wonder, and are able to make men acknowledge with the Prophet [a] Esay, Lord thou art my God, I will exalt and praise thy name, for thou hast done wonderfull things. And with [b] Moses: O Lord, who is like to thee among the gods? who like to thee, so glorious in holinesse, fearfull in praises, doing wonders? And with [c] the Psalmographer, Among the gods there is none that can doe as thou doest, for thou art great, and doest wonderous things, thou art God alone.

Secondly, this Gospell serueth aptly for the confirmation of our hope: [d] propounding Christ here both able, and willing to succour vs in all our afflictions. Able, for what can he not doe, who fed foure thousand hungrie people with seuen loaues, and a few small fishes, in such a plentifull manner, as that all of them were sufficed, and yet seuen baskets full of broken meat were left? His willingnesse is insinuated also, [e] for that before any of the distressed people made suit to him, he preuented them of his owne accord, calling his Disciples, and consulting how to releeue them in this extremitie, saying further, I haue compassion on the people, because they haue beene with me three dayes. He saith not, I haue compassion on my Disciples, or I would my friends and acquaintance were succoured, or I pittie the good men in the companie: but he saith in generall, I haue compassion on the whole multitude; not excluding any from his gratious fauours, openly proclaiming, [f] Hoe, euery one that thirsteth come yee to the waters, I say, come buy milke without siluer; [g] if any man thirst, let him come vnto me, and drinke. Come all ye that are wearie and laden, and I will ease you. [h] Si esurieris, panis tibi est: si sitieris, aqua tibi est: si in tenebris es, lumen tibi est, &c.

Let vs not therefore put our confidence in man, for if [i] all flesh be grasse, and the grace thereof as the flower of the field, then [k] cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arme. Neither let vs trust in our money, for [l] riches are vncertaine. Neither in our selues, for he that now stands may fall, 1.Cor.10.12. Neither in Princes, for albeit in regard of their high place, they be called gods; yet in regard of their fraile nature, they shall die [m] like men. And therefore the Master of the Ceremonies, at the Popes inauguration, beareth two drie reeds, whereof the one hath on the top a candle to kindle the other, crying aloud vnto the Pope, [n] Sancte Pater, sic transit gloria mundi. Neither in Angels, or in Saints, for they cannot haue [o] enough oyle for themselues and vs too. But let our [p] helpe stand in the name of the Lord, for his eyes are ouer the righteous, and his eares are open to their prayers, 1.Pet.3.12. [q] He deliuereth the soules of his seruants, and all they that put their trust in him shall not be destitute. The Lions roare and suffer hunger, but they that seeke the Lord shall want no manner of thing that is good. This was verified in [r] Daniel, who being cast into the dungeon of Lions, was not made their prey: for the Lions roared still, and continued hungrie, whereas Daniel was refreshed with an Angell from heauen. And therefore let euery Christian soule say with the [s] Psalmist, The Lord is my shepheard, how can I then lacke any thing?

Thirdly, this Gospell is a direction for loue: for that Christ expresseth in his
- Humble carriage: conuersing in the wildernesse with the people.
- Kinde speech: I haue compassion on the multitude.
- Bountifull deeds: In feeding a great companie which had nothing to eat.

Albeit Christ was the sonne of the [t] most High, holding it no [u] robberie to be equall with God: yet he thought it no disreputation to conuerse with men, with poore men, and that in the wildernesse. If a Kings onely sonne should so farre humble himselfe, as to be familiar with the Commons, all the Chronicle would be full of his praises, and all the Countrie ring of his courtesies. What did extoll [x] Rudolphus so much, as that when he was elected Emperour, he told his Nobility, That he would not be locked vp in a cheste from the sight of his people, but that euery one should haue accesse vnto him? or what did honour the good late Queene more, than than her courteous and ſweet carriage toward her loyall ſubiects? or who could giue better aduiſe to a young Prince, than that he ſhould be [y] the poore mans King?

By the compaſſionate ſpeech of Chriſt here, miſerior ſuper turbam: all Princes, Prelates, and Paſtors, are taught to [z] weepe with them that weepe, carrying tender hearts, and open bowels toward all ſuch as are in any diſtreſſe: [a] being eyes to the blinde, and feet to the lame. For as Chriſt did ſpeake compaſſionately, ſo deale bountifully with this hungrie multitude, cauſing them to ſit downe, and to eat of his loaues and fiſhes, heartily beſtowing on them ſuch as he had. Aurum habet eccleſia (ſaith [b] Ambroſe) non vt ſeruet, ſed vt eroget. And as the bleſſed Martyr [c] S. Laurence, The poore are the treaſures of the Church. It is recorded of [d] Baſil the Great, that in a famine he did not only giue to the poore ſuch as he had himſelfe, but exhorted all others earneſtly to open their barnes, and to doe the like. William Warham Archbiſhop of Canterburie was ſo liberall vnto poore men in his life, that at his death he had in all his treaſurie but thirtie peeces of gold: the which (as [d] Eraſmus of Roterodam reports) pleaſed him ſo well, as that he ſaid, It is well, I deſired alway to die no richer. And [e] Philip Melanæthon was ſo bountifull, euen in a meane eſtate, that euery houre ſomething was giuen at his doore. The gifts of God were ſo multiplied here, that the leauings in the end, were more than the loaues in the beginning. And [f] this ſhould incourage men in their almes, as being aſſured that [g] the merciſull rewardeth his owne ſoule; for there is that ſcattereth, and is more increaſed: but he that ſpareth more than is right, ſurely commeth to pouertie. Let vs therefore remember that old verſe, whenſoeuer we caſt our eyes vpon a brother in need.

Now we are debtors vnto our selues, our soules, our bodies, as also to our second selues, our wiues, our friends, all of our kinne, all of our kinde, yea to the very beasts, Prou.12.10. only no debtor vnto the flesh, in the last acception, as it doth import the lust of the flesh. And therefore when it shall (as it is inticing and subtle) call vpon vs importunatly to pay this debt as a dutie, we must answer, that hereby we shall increase the debt of our sinne to God, and so the more we pay, the more we shall owe, like paying with chalke, which euer makes the score greater. The second member of opposition is not expressed here, but it is implied, as all Interpreters obserue generally. For if we are not debtors vnto the flesh; it followeth necessarily, that we are debtors to the spirit, r by whose grace we are whatsoeuer we are. s God bestoweth on vs his gifts out of bountie, but our seruice performed vnto him is of dutie. t Where then are the workes of supererogation? If they be deeds of the flesh, the reward thereof is death; if they be workes of the spirit, then assuredly due debt. And so when we are at the best, all of vs are vnprofitable seruants, obliged to God in a double bond, one of our creation, as being the workemanship of his hands, and u who planteth a vineyard, and eats not of the fruit thereof? another in respect of our redemption, as being his bought seruants, his sworne seruants, his hired seruants, euer receiuing wages before hand. All of vs are bought with a prise, yea with the x pretious blond of Christ: and y therefore we must glorifie God in our bodies and in our spirits, for they are Gods. All of vs are his sworne seruants in holy baptisme, renouncing all other masters, as the world, the flesh, and the deuill: and openly protesting before God and his congregation, that we will fight vnder Christs banner as his faithfull souldiers and seruants vnto our liues end. All of vs haue payment in hand also, which, if we had so much as common honestie, should make vs ashamed to refuse the Lords seruice, whose wages we haue receiued already. For it may be said to vs, as the z Prophet in the name of the Lord spake to the Leuites of his time; Who among you shuts the doore of my Temple, or kindles a fire vpon mine Altar in vaine? Who can stand vp and say, that he doth any seruice to God without a reward? The Father of lies in this said truly, a Doth Iob feare God for naught? Did not the Lord make an hedge about him and his on euerie side? Consider this point when you will, and you shall finde that for euery peece of seruice ye haue done to the Lord, ye haue receiued present wages an b hundred fold, and in the world to come, if you c continue faithfull vnto the death, he will giue you a crowne of life. For your light affliction, which is but for a moment, causeth a farre most excellent and eternall weight of glorie, 2.Cor.4.17. And so the most holy man in his best workes, as d Bernard notes, is debtor to God for them, and not God a debtor to him: according to the text here, Brethren, we are debtors not to the flesh, but to the spirit.

g himſelfe doth expound himſelfe) who fulfils the luſt of the fleſh, h qui quantumcunq; poteſt voluntati pariter & voluptati carnis ſatisfacit. In that I now liue in the fleſh, I liue by faith in the Sonne of God, ſaith our Apoſtle. Thou heareſt the winde, but thou knoweſt not whence it commeth, or whether it goeth, i euen ſo is euery man that is borne of the ſpirit. k thou heareſt me ſpeaking, eating, labouring, ſleeping, and doing other things as other men, and yet thou ſeeſt not my life, for I liue by faith in the Sonne of God. The word which I now corporally ſpeake, is the word not of the fleſh, but of the ſpirit: and the ſight which goeth in, or commeth out of mine eyes, howſoeuer in the fleſh, is not gouerned of the fleſh, but by the Holy Ghoſt. I behold a woman, and luſt not to ſinne with her; this beholding is in the fleſh, becauſe mine eyes are the carnall inſtruments of my ſight: but the chaſtneſſe of this looke proceedeth onely from the ſanctifying ſpirit. So likewiſe my hearing commeth not of the fleſh, although it be in the fleſh: it is the worke of Gods owne ſpirit that I heare what I ſhould, as I ſhould, hauing a l good eare which hearkeneth vnto wiſdome gladly. Thus I liue, yet not I now, but Chriſt liueth in me, and in that I liue in the fleſh, I liue by faith in the Sonne of God, who hath loued me, and giuen himſelfe for me, Galat. 2. 20.

This doctrine is like flagons of wine to comfort ſuch as walke in the ſpirit, for they ſhall liue, ye liue that m they ſhall neuer ſee death. For when our breath once ſhall leaue our bodies, and we fall a ſleepe, we ſhall behold with the bleſſed Martyr n Stephen, heauens open to receiue vs, and Chriſt ſtanding at the right hand of God with ſtreatched forth armes, as readie to embrace vs. And ſo this kinde of death is but an inlargement after a long impriſonment, or as a landing at our owne countrey, after our tedious and troubleſome trauell in the tempeſtuous ſea of this world. But let the drunkard and incontinent perſon tremble, who follow the luſts of the fleſh, and that which is worſe, fulfill the luſts of the fleſh, and that which is worſt of all prouoke the luſt of the fleſh. For as long as they continue this habit of ſinne, o they be ſpiritually dead, and without repentance ſhall eternally periſh. Either we muſt ſlay ſinne, or elſe ſinne ſhall ſlay vs. p Let no man deceiue you with vaine words, for, for ſuch things the wrath of God commeth vpon the children of diſobedience. q For as no man commeth either to priſon or palace, but by the entrie thereof: euen ſo no man goeth to hell or heauen, but by the way thereof. A life which is after the fleſh, is a thorow-way to that dungeon of darkeneſſe; a life guided by the ſpirit, is the path-way to Paradiſe. Where the tree falls there it lies, ſaith r Salomon, and experience teacheth vs, that it falls to that ſide on which the branches are thickeſt: if the greateſt growth of our actions ſpring from the ſpirit, out of doubt we ſhall fall to the right hand, and liue for euermore: but if thine affections grow downeward, and thou walke after the fleſh, aſſuredly thou ſhalt fall to the left hand and die. For without ſholineſſe no man ſhall ſee God, and he that doth righteouſneſſe is righteous, ſaith, s S. Iohn. As if he ſhould ſay, not he that can talke of righteouſneſſe, but he that doth walke in the ſpirit. Tace lingua, loquere vita: Speake not thou for thy good life, but let thy good life ſpeake for thee. For if ye through the ſpirit mortifie the deeds of the bodie, ye ſhall liue.

Here ſome men obiect that of Paul againſt Paul t no man euer hated his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it. Anſwer is made, that we may loue the fleſh as a ſeruant to the ſoule, but not as a x miſtreſſe. Now y meat, correction, and worke belong to thy ſeruant. z So we muſt prouide neceſſarie food for the bodie leſt it faint, but with it a chaſtiſement and worke leſt it proue wanton. According to that of b Salomon: He that dilicately bringeth vp his ſeruant from youth, at length he will be euen as his ſoone. For as a ſhip if it be ouer-laded is eaſily ouerwhelmed by the water, or if it be too light and not ballaſſed, is eaſily driuen out of the due courſe by the winde: ſo the bodie muſt neither be ſo weakned and emptie with faſting, that it be not able, nor yet ſo pampered and ouer full with feaſting, that it be not willing to performe the workes of Chriſtian dutie. Such then as make their gut their god, concupiſcence their conſcience, luſt their law, c giuing

[d] Morlorat. For as many as are led by the spirit of God they are the sonnes of God] [d] As the naturall sonne is flesh of his fathers flesh, euen so Gods adopted children haue the Spirit of God dwelling in them, and this Spirit makes them and God one, as man and wife is one flesh, Ephes.5.31. To be led by the Spirit, is [e] not to be carried away with a violent furie, [f] but to be drawne obediently, [g] giuing our members as seruants vnto righteousnesse, wittingly, willingly cum dilectione & delectatione, with aliking and loue, saith [h] Augustine, Or with light and delight; for the Spirit leads vs especially monendo & mouendo: first informing our minde with his admonitions, and then inclining our hearts with his motions. He doth not lead vs as blind men are lead by their guide, a way which they doe not know, but he doth open our eyes, and lets vs see a farre off our heauenly Canaan, and then after he hath carried vs vp with Moses to the top of [i] Pisgah, he moues our hearts and makes them cheerfull, willing and resolute to walke towards it. See Gospell, 1.Sunday, and Epistle 2.Sunday in Lent, Epistle for Whitsunday, and Epistle 6.Sunday after Trinitie: how the same Spirit is to such as are vnder the Law, the spirit of bondage, but to such as beleeue the Gospell, the spirit of adoption, see Epist 4. Abba Father] This duplication is [k] patheticall, and mysticall. Patheticall, [l] insinuating the certaintie of our assurance that God is our father, and that we are his children: as also that we should be [m] feruent, earnest and importunate with perseuerance, not taking a deniall in our prayers at our fathers hands, againe and againe crying, father, father. And it is mysticall, for Paul in vsing an Hebrew word and a Greeke, [n] signifieth hereby that [o] there is no difference betweene the Iew and the Grecian, but that the Lord ouer all is rich vnto all, yea father of all that call on him. Euerie Christian in euery corner of the world may goe [p] boldly to the throne of grace, praying to God as to a father. He need not (as the Papists) cry to S. Martin, and to S. Marie for helpe, [q] The God of all consolation, and father of mercies, is our father in heauen. Able to succour vs in our afflictions as being in heauen, and willing as being a father.

The same spirit certifieth our spirit that we are the sonnes of God] He makes this certificate by word, deed, and seale. By word, terming vs often in holy Scripture Gods children, By deed, for the fruit of the [r] spirit is loue, ioy, peace, long-suffering, &c. by which [f] our calling and election is made sure. For all such as are led by the spirit of God are the sonnes of God. By seale, being [t] Gods earnest, by which a Christian is [u] sealed vnto the day of redemption. Here we must obserue that neither our spirit, nor the spirit alone giues this testimonie: but both concurring and meeting together; as the [x] word (συμμαρτυρεῖ) doth import. Our spirit makes not this true certificate, because mans heart is alwayes [y] euill, and often [z] deceitfull. And therefore boast not of thy conscience without the witnesse of the spirit: for Paul before his conuersion had an vnfained zeale of a false religion. Galat.1.14 and the Laodiceans had a counterfeit zeale of a true religion, Apocal.3.15; Againe, Gods spirit makes not this perswasion in vs without the witnesse of our spirit: for [a] if our heart condemne vs, what boldnesse can we haue with God? And [b] S. Paul speaking of his Apostleship, I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iustified. And therefore we must here take heed of presumption, and despaire. The fond Anabaptist and hypocriticall schismaticke take their owne presumption for this testimonie, liuing after the flesh, and yet boasting of the spirit. There is (saith [c] Salomon) a generation that are pure in their owne eyes, and yet are not washed from their filthinesse. These pure people brag so much of the spirit, as if none were the children of God, but such as either fauour or follow their humorous faction. Examine thy selfe by this text, a touchstone which can neither deceiue, nor be deceiued. If thou be the sonne of God, then art thou led by the spirit of God; if led by the spirit, then thou liuest after the spirit ſpirit; if thou liueſt after the ſpirit, then thou bringeth forth the fruits of the ſpirit: for the ſpirit is holy, the ſpirit of ſanctitie. Firſt he makes thee, then aſſures thee to be the ſonne of God. If thou continue ſo malicious as other, ſo couetous as other, ſo ſcornfull and proud as other, liuing after the fleſh, [b] albeit thou dreame of the ſpirit, it neuer lodged with thee. This opinion of thy iuſtification and election ariſeth onely from thine owne conceit, and Satans deceit.

[b] Philips in loc.

As the carnall Goſpeller may not preſume: ſo let not the weake Chriſtian of a diſtreſſed conſcience deſpaire, for that he feeles not alway the witnes of the ſpirit in the ſame meaſure. For the [c] children of God in this reſpect reſemble couetous rich men of the world, who ſuppoſe they be poſſeſſers of much, and yet their great thirſt after more, cauſeth them to eſteeme that which they haue as nothing, and therefore comfort not themſelues with the lawfull vſe of that which they haue, but vex their ſpirits with reſtleſſe thoughts for that which they want: euen ſo many good men exceeding rich in the graces of the Lord Ieſus, are ſo deſirous of more, that often they count that nothing which they haue, but grieuouſly complaine that they haue no faith, no loue, no grace, no life, no ſpirit. But aſſuredly this mourning for his abſence, is an euident demonſtration of his preſence. For as none are more ready to boaſt of the ſpirit, then they who haue him not: ſo none complaine more that they want him, then they who poſſeſſe him.

[c] Cowper in loc.

If we be ſonnes, then are we alſo heires, the heires I meane of God] Inheritances are conueied vnto men either by birth, or gift, or will. Almightie God hath [f] choſen and adopted vs his children before the foundation of the world, [g] begetting vs with the word of truth, and ſo making vs his ſonnes, it is his good pleaſure to [h] giue vs his kingdome; recording this adoption, and donation in his holy Scripture which is his reuealed will. But there is a great difference betweene the temporall and eternall inheritance. [i] For in the one the teſtator muſt be dead, and the ſucceſſour liuing: but in the other, Almightie God the teſtator is euer liuing, and his heires before they can be fully poſſeſſed of his kingdome, muſt be dead. Secondly, [k] temporall inheritance being diuided, is diminiſhed, and ſo much land is as a nothing among many: but our heauenly inheritance being imparted to ſo great a number (as [l] as none can number) is not leſſened or impaired. Euery ſaint and ſonne of God hath enough, and is a crowned King. Thirdly, the partition of an earthly poſſeſſion breeds among the coheires enuie: but in our heauenly, the ioy of one, is the ioy of all, euery one being glad for the good of another.

Beware] Becauſe there be few who finde the way to heauen, and many which hinder vs in the way, we muſt [x] walke circumſpectly, not as fooles, but as hauing all our eyes in our head. And [y] ſo much the rather for that our guides occaſion vs ſometime to wander, and goe a ſtray: [z] Qui ducunt, ſeducunt, ſome prophets are falſe. That our care therefore might be great to reſiſt the myſterie of iniquitie, Chriſt and his Apoſtles often inculcate this caueat, there ſhall ariſe falſe [a] Chriſts, and falſe [b] teachers among you, which ſhall priuily bring in damnable hereſies, euen renenowu [c] wolues, not ſparing the flocke. Some prophets are too laſie, non tendentes, ſed tondentes: other too buſie, contratendentes: ergo good paſtors ought to be ſuperintendentes, and good hearers attendentes, as it is in the text, attendite. Now that we may be circumſpect as we ſhould, we muſt vſe: 1. Feruent prayer with [d] Dauid, Shew me thy wayes, O Lord, and teach me thy pathes; open thou mine eyes that I may ſee the wondrous things of thy law; lead me forth in thy truth, and learne me, for thou art the God of my ſaluation. 2. Diligent ſearching of holy Scripture with the men of [e] Berea. 3. Godly conference like that of the [f] Eunuch and Philip. 4. Serious and deuout meditations, [g] exerciſing our ſelues in the law of the Lord day and night eſpecially iudicious and heedfull attending to the word preached. [h] An auditor muſt not be like the ſponge, that holdeth all water both good and bad; nor like the ſieue, that holds neither good nor bad; nor like the boulter that keepes in the courſe bran, and boults out the fine flower: but he muſt be like the ſcry, keeping the good ſeed, but caſting away the duſt and vnprofitable darnell. He muſt ſcry the Sermons of the Prophets and [i] try the ſpirits, [k] examining all things, and then holding that which is good. This duetie belongs not only to the Clergie, [l] but alſo to the Laitie, yea to the moſt ignorant. For albeit euery one cannot be learned in the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles, which are the great Bible: yet, that he may take heed of falſe teachers, he muſt vnderſtand the plaine principles of his Catechiſme, which, as [m] one ſaith, is the little Bible.

Falſe

False Prophets] In a mysticall sense, [n] the world, the flesh, and the deuill are false prophets. The world like the [o] lying prophets, who said to the King of Israel, Goe vp to Ramoth Gilead. The flesh a false prophet, like Iudas, betraying his owne master with a kisse. The deuill is the Father of lies, and all falsehood, not a rauening wolfe only, but a roaring lion also. Literally tale-tell Astrologers, who take vpon them as if they were bauds to the celestiall bodies, by the coniunctions of planets, and positions of starres, to prognosticate the ruins of publique weales, and misfortunes of priuate families, to calculate natiuities, and to fore-tell strange euents, are false prophets, and we must take heed of them.

[p] Nihil credo auguribus, qui aures verbis diuitant
alienas: suas vt auro locupletent domus,

Their cunning is [q] cosinage, learned in the [r] deuils academy, but condemned in the schooles of [s] Diuines, as being at the best but meerely coniecturall and vncertaine. For that noble gentleman Picus Mirandula, lib. 2. contra astrolog. cap. 9. writes of Ordelaphus a Prince, to whom it was fore-told by a famous expert man in that Art called Hieronymus Manfredus, that he should enioy prosperous and long life; who notwithstanding the selfe same yeere, being the first yeere of his marriage, deceased. And a certaine rich matron in Rome, named Constantia, departed the same yeere, in which she receiued great promises by soothsaiers of a long and happie life. Whereupon [t] Henry 7. King of England in derision of starre-gazers, asked one (who had prophecied of his death) this question, What shall betide me this Christmas? the false prophet answered, he could not tell: what then I pray thee (quoth the king) shall become of thee? to this he answered likewise, that he knew not. Well, saith the King, I am then more learned in thy science then thy selfe, for I know that thou shalt presently be committed to prison, and there lie fast all this Christmas for a iugling companion.

Now that we may take heed of these prophets, obserue three rules especially, deliuered by that reuerend Diuine [u] Master Fox: First the Prophets of God goe plainely to worke, whereas iuglers and soothtellers haue a doubtfull and a double meaning to be turned this or that way, like a nose of wax. To let passe the foppish oracles, and prophecies in old time; giue me liue to remember an example taking out of a common Almanacke. The prognosticator saith out of his deepe iudgement, that such a day shall be somewhat differing from indifferent. And what weather is that I pray? whether it be cold or hot, moist or drie, foule and faire, it may be said something differing from indifferent. 2. We must expend whether the prophecies are priuate or publique: for as the Scriptures; so the prophecies of God for the most part are not of priuate interpretation, but indifferently respecting the whole Church. And therefore such prophecies as concerne the names of priuate men, and armes of particular houses, are worthily to be suspected. 3. We must examine the matter and end of prophecies, as whether they be spirituall or worldly, whether they tend to any glorie of this present world, or whether they tend to the spirituall instruction or comfort of the publike Church.

But our blessed Sauiour here by false prophets (as the [x] Fathers obserue) doth vnderstand hereticall Doctors: called false, [y] for that they be falsifiers of Gods holy word; like the cunning Lapidarie, who sels a Byrall for a Diamond. Now the reason why God suffereth heretickes in the Church is manifold: 1. For the triall of our [z] faith; according to that of [a] Paul: there must be heresies euen among you, that they which are approued among you, might be knowne. If a prophet arise, saith [b] Moses, and intice thee to goe after other gods, thou shalt not hearken vnto the words of such a prophet, for the Lord your God proueth you, to know whether you loue the Lord your God, with all your heart and with all your soule. 2. [c] That the true Pastors might be more patient, and [d] painefull in their places. If Arrius and Sabellius had not exceedingly vexed the Church of God, the deepe mysteries of the blessed Trinitie would neuer haue beene so cleered and accurately determined by the Catholike Doctors. If Manichæus had not shamefully railed vpon the old Testament, Augustine would neuer haue taken such infinite paines in in answering all obiections against it. If Brownists and other sectaries had not impudently degorged their malice against our ecclesiasticall policie, the state of our Prelates, and questions about our discipline would neuer haue beene so sufficiently confirmed. 3. God permits hereticall teachers for our ingratitude: because men [c] loue not the truth that they might be saued, almightie God in his secret iudgement shall send strong delusions, that they should beleeue lies. As himselfe speaks by the mouth of his holy [f] Prophet, because this people come neere to me with their mouth, and honour me with their lips, but haue remoued their heart farre from me, the wisedome of the wise men shall perish, and the vnderstanding of the prudent men shall be hid. Because prophane people despise the person of the Priest, and neglect his doctrine: God often shutteth vp the eyes of the chiefe Seers, and so the blinde leadeing the blinde both fall into the ditch.

Which come] [g] Being neither sent of God, nor lawfully called by men: but they runne of their owne accord, alway without commission from heauen, and sometime without ordination on earth. [h] I haue not sent these Prophets, saith the Lord, yet they ranne: I haue not spoken to them, and yet they prophecied. Haply some men will obiect, God in old time called his Prophets and Apostles immediately, furnishing them also with gifts extraordinarily: but how shall a man in our time know whether he be called of God or no? To this obiection answer may be, that Vniuersities are the nurseries of Christian learning, as [i] Chemnitius termed them, ecclesiæ Plantaria. Being like the Persian [k] tree, which at the same time doth bud, and blossome, and beare fruit. In them alway some should be ripe for the Church, other drawing to their maturitie, some in the flower, and some in the bud of hope. For this end God promised that he would stirre vp Kings and Queenes which should be nursing fathers and nursing mothers vnto the Church, Esay 49. 23. that is, to be patrons of learning, and founders of Colledges and Schooles. My deare nurse the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, hath for her armes the booke clasped betweene foure Lions; and her worthie sister of Oxenford, the booke open betweene three Crownes. Hereby signifying (as I coniecture) that Englishmen may studie the Liberall Arts closely, and quietly, as also professe them openly and publikely being guarded with the Lion and the Crowne: that is, encouraged thereunto by royall Charters and princely priuiledges. The Vniuersitie of [l] Heidelberge giueth, a Lion holding a booke for her armes. Insinuating that Princes ought to be fauourers of all good literature. Whosoeuer then is bred in the Schooles of the Prophets, and brought vp in the nurseries of the Apostles, vntill he gaine diuersitie of gifts, in some small proportion answerable to the Prophets and Apostles, if his [m] lips preserue knowledge, if his tongue be learned, to [n] minister a word in time, marshalling his words in their place, [o] like apples of gold with pictures of siluer: albeit he haue no calling from God extraordinarie, yet he may perswade himselfe that he is διδακτικος, apt to teach. 1. See Magdeburg. cap. 10. in euery Centurie. So Martin Luther, Philip Melanæthon, Pet. Martyr, Biſhop Iewell, and other true Prophets in our time, were ſo much adorned with all kinde of knowledge, that all the world, not blinded by the prince of darkeneſſe, might eaſily perceiue they were ſent and ſepa ated vnto their calling by God.

Yea, but many learned men propheſie without any further warrant? No. Sufficiencie of learning is one, but not the only note of our inward calling. For the man of God, as he muſt be for his doctrine a Paſtor, ſo for his conuerſation an [z] enſample. May then euery man of ſufficient learning and honeſt life, climbe the pulpit and preach the word? No; for as there is an inward calling of God: ſo likewiſe an outward calling by men, as Timothie was ordered by laying on of hands, 1 Tim. 4. 14. [a] Paul bid Titus ordaine Biſhops in euerie citie. The bleſſed Apoſtles ordained Elders in euery Church, Acts 14. 23. And albeit there be now ſome queſtion about the manner of ordination, yet in all ages, and in all well ordered places, there haue beene certaine conſtitutions and Canons for admitting of men into ſacred orders. And therefore whoſoeuer ſhall propheſie without examination, approbation, and licence by preſent authoritie, commeth of himſelfe, and it is our dutie to take heed of him. See *Confeſſ. To you] [b] Not to the Turkes, or Gentiles, or other heretickes: but [c] to you which haue my word, ſeeming to come to you for your good, but their comming is indeed againſt you to your hurt. So the [d] Papiſts in our time crie, the Church, the Church. And the [e] ſchiſmatikes in their inuectiue pamphlets vſually take vp the words of the Prophet [f] Eſay, For Sions ſake I will not hold my tongue, and for Ieruſalems ſake I will not reſt. But the one ſeeke to bring vpon Gods Iſrael a tyrannie, the other an anarchie; both are ſuch as come to you, but againſt you.

In ſheepes cloathing, but inwardly they are rauening wolues] As [g] Satan being the prince of darkeneſſe, is oft transformed into an Angell of light; ſo the children of the deuill haue faire vizards to couer their foule faces. As [h] Tertullian gloſſing my Text, quenam ſunt iſtæ pelles ouium, niſi nominis Chriſtiani extrinſecus ſuperficies? All theſe ſheepes cloathing, are nothing elſe but preciſe titles of holineſſe, and outſides of Chriſtianitie. Falſe Prophets (as an ancient [i] Father obſerues) haue linſey-wolſey garments, intus linum ſubtilitatis, extra lanam ſimplicitatis demonſtrant. The ſubtile thread of deceit is within-ſide, but the plaine web of ſimplicitie without-ſide; their [k] inſide is of fox furre, their outſide of lambs wooll. And ſo the betrayers of the Church, as [l] Cyprian ſaid, are in ipſa eccleſia contra eccleſiam: in the Church againſt the Church. Here ſome will obiect, if an heretike be ſuch a monſtrous beaſt, [m] intus Nero, foris Cato, totus ambiguus; how ſhall a man take heed of him? Our bleſſed Sauiour ſheweth in the verie next words.

Ye ſhall know them by their fruits] As a woolfe may be knowne from a ſheepe by his [n] howling and [o] clawes; ſo may we diſcerne the falſe prophet from the true, by his words and his workes. [p] Ex malis moribus & malo dogmate. [q] Some Diuines haue referred this only to bad manners, [r] other only to falſe doctrine; but the Scripture ſheweth expreſly, that we may know them by both. As firſt by their lewd life: for albeit they diſſemble cunningly for a time, being in ſheepes cloathing, [s] yet if you be circumſpect, in the end you ſhall know the wolues euen by their clawes. [t] Etſi non ab omnibus fructibus, ſaltem ab aliquibus cognoſcetis eos: As, they be [u] louers of their owne ſelues, couetous, boaſters, proud, curſed ſpeakers, diſobedient to parents, vnthankefull, vnholy; [x] clouds are they without water, carried about about of windes, euen [y] let with ſenſualitie. But we may know them [z] eſpecially by the fruits of their doctrine, Tit.1.11. teaching things which they ought not for filthy lucre ſake, preaching fables: 2. Tim.4.4. and that which is worſe of all, doctrines of deuils, forbidding to marrie, and commanding to abſtaine from meats: 1. Tim.4.1.3. The [a] wolfe ſcattereth and deuoureth the ſheepe, but the good ſhepherd doth [b] gather the lambs with his armes, and carrie them in his boſome. The true Prophet [c] bindeth vp the broken hearted, and comforteth all that mourne, deliuering doctrine to [d] edification, exhortation, conſolation. Such then as [e] cauſe diuiſion, and ſcatter the ſheepe of Chriſt, ſuch as rather confound, then comfort the diſtreſſed conſcience, ſuch as build not vpon the [f] foundation Ieſus Chriſt, but are giuen ouer to fables, teaching for [g] doctrine the precepts of men: I ſay, ſuch as are thornes in our ſides, and thiſtles at our feet, are not good plants in the Lords Vineyard, but as S. Iude ſpeaks, corrupt trees, twice dead, plucked vp by the roots; and ſo we may know them eaſily by their fruits.

A good tree cannot bring forth bad fruits, neither can a bad tree bring forth good fruits] It is obiected againſt this axiome, that Dauid was a good tree, yet he brought forth euill fruits, [h] murther vpon Vriah, and adulterie with Berſheba, Paul on the contrary was at the firſt an euill tree, yet he brought forth good fruit; as being a [i] choſen veſſell to beare Chriſts name before the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Iſrael. [k] Euthymius anſwereth in a word; mutati ſunt, hic a prauitate ad virtutem: ille verò a virtute ad prauitatem; and therefore this ſaying muſt be conſtrued [l] in ſenſu compoſito; a good tree continuing good cannot bring forth bad fruit, and a bad tree, ſo long as it is bad, cannot bring forth good fruit. Now [m] that a tree may be good, it muſt haue a ſound root; that is, a good intention in euery worke. For [n] if the root be holy, ſo are the branches. 2. Good ſap, [o] Can the graſſe grow without water? or the ruſh without mire? ſo we without [p] Chriſts grace can doe nothing. 3. It muſt beare fruit in euery branch and bough, [q] in all things pleaſing God, and fruitfull in all good workes. Our ſoule muſt magnifie the Lord, our mouth ſhew forth his praiſe, our hand giue to the poore, our eare hearken to wiſedome; ſo the tree ſhall be knowne, [r] non ex foliis aut ex floribus, ſed ex fructibus: Not by the leaues, or by the bloſſome, but by the fruit. And here the Goſpell and Epiſtle meet, he that is led by the ſpirit, and walketh in the ſpirit, is a good tree, bearing good fruit,; but he that liueth after the fleſh, is a corrupt tree bringing forth euill fruit, as [f] adultery, fornication, vncleanneſſe, wantonneſſe, idolatrie, witchcraft, hatred, debate, wrath, emulations, &c. and euery tree that hath ſuch or the like fruit, ſhall be hewne downe and caſt into the fire, that is, as the Epiſtle doth expound the Goſpell: If ye liue after the fleſh, ye ſhall die.

Not euery one that ſaith vnto me Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdome of heauen] No man can ſay, that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt; 1 Cor.12.3. how then are any ſhut out of Heauen, who crie, Lord, Lord? Anſwer may be, that hypocrites acknowledge Chriſt to be Lord; but not [t] the Lord, nor their Lord. Againe, true Chriſtians confeſſe Chriſt out of [u] faith, hypocrites out of faſhion only. [x] With the heart man beleeueth vnto righteouſneſſe, and with the mouth he confeſſeth vnto ſaluation. Hypocrites are all for the outward crie, Lord, Lord: but ſuch as are found at heart, pray with [y] vnderſtanding, and [z] praiſe the Lord with all that is within them: [a] voluntatem & mentem ſuam ſono vocis enuntiant. See Epiſt. to. Sund. after Trinit.

But he that doth the will of my Father which is in Heauen, he ſhall enter into the kingdome of Heauen] To doe the will of God, is to [b] keepe his Commandements, and his Commandement, [c] is to beleeue in the name of his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, and loue one another. [d] Voluntatem Dei facit qui verè credit, rectè ſperat, firmè diligit. And he doth all this, who doth the beſt he can to doe it. [e] Nam vt faciamus ſua præcepta, non vt perficiamus in hac quidem vita Deus exigit. A deſire to beleeue well, and to doe good at ſome times, and in ſome caſes is enough, Almightie God accepting our will for the worke: 2.Cor.8.12.

The Epiſtle. 1 Cor. 10. 1. vnto v. 14

Brethren, I would not that ye ſhould be ignorant, how that our fathers were all vnder the cloud, &c.

The Bible containeth eſpecially three ſorts of writings: Legall, Euangelicall, Hiſtoricall.

As our Popiſh aduerſaries abuſe the two former, in making the Law carnall, and extenuating the free mercies of God in Chriſt: ſo likewiſe the latter alſo, reading in the Church vnto the people their owne legend, of their owne home-made ſaints: [f] as if the liues and hiſtories of ſuch holy men as are recorded in the ſacred Canon, concerned them no more, then a tale of Robin Hood. Our Apoſtle therefore wiſheth vs here to note diligently the mercies and iudgements of God vpon our fathers in old time, becauſe theſe things happened vnto them for enſample, and are written to admoniſh vs vpon whom the ends of the world are come.

There is no treaſure ſo much enricheth our minde as learning, no learning ſo proper for the direction of our liues as hiſtory, no hiſtory ſo well worth our heedfull obſeruing, as that which is euen by Gods owne finger, [g] written aforetime for our inſtruction. Optimum aliena inſania frui, was the motto of [h] Charles the fourth: and [i] Volateran ſaith, it is an happy diſcipline which is learned by the great expence and experience of other. If humane ſtory, much more diuine worthily deſerues to be called a glaſſe, and a miſtris of mortalitie: wherefore, Brethren, I would not that ye ſhould be ignorant, how that our fathers were all vnder the cloud, &c. theſe things are examples to vs, and are written to put vs in remembrance. So that in all this Epiſtle, three points are principally remarkable, concerning Gods heauie iudgements vpon our fathers in the wilderneſſe.

1. That they are written.
2. Written for admonition.
3. For admonition of vs eſpecially, who liue in theſe laſt dayes, vpon whom the ends of the world are come.

By the firſt, we may learne not ſleightly to paſſe by Gods fearefull iudgements vpon ſinne, but euermore to ſet a memorandum on them. If God will haue them written in his booke, then it is fit we ſhould write them in our Hiſtories and Chronicles, yea euen in our priuate notes and obſeruations. It was well done of [k] Egeſippus and [l] Ambroſe, to ſet downe the fall of Simon Magus. It was well done of [m] Epiphanius to record the miſerable death of the rotten hereticke Manichæus. It was well done of [n] Optatus to report, that certaine Donatiſts impiouſly caſting the Sacramentall Bread to dogges, were by the ſame doggs inſtantly torne in peeces. And it was well done of [o] Bellarmine to relate Gods terrible iudgements vpon Arrius, Montanus, Iulian Apoſtata, Neſtorius, and other ancient enemies of the Chriſtian faith. And it was well done of Maſter Fox to remember in his [p] Acts and Monuments, the ſeuere puniſhments of the ſame iuſt God vpon the bloudie perſecutors of his holy Martyrs. And it was well done of [q] Elias Hanſenmullerus, to note the deſperate death, and vncomfortable ends of Ignatius Loiola, Xauier, Turrianus, and other chiefe Suits or Eſauits. And haply well done of [r] Huntindon, to chronicle the moſt vnfortunate manner of William Rufus his dying. And well done of [s] Polydore, to note the terrours of conſcience which euer accompanied King Richard the third. But here we muſt obſerue, that theſe things are to be remembred for our good, not for others hurt. Many men are ready to marke the iudgements of God vpon other, but it is onely to blot the memoriall of the dead, or elſe to diſgrace their kindred aliue. Whereas we ſhould beware by their harmes, and learne to be wiſe by their folly. This vſe Chriſt aduiſeth to make, Luke 13.4. Thinke you that thoſe eighteene, vpon whom the tower of Siloam fell & ſlew them, were ſinners aboue all men that dwell dwell in Hierusalem, I tell you nay, but except you amend your liues, ye all shall likewise perish. And so Paul here; these things happened vnto them for our example, and are written to put vs in remembrance, that we should not lust after euill things as they lusted; and that we should not be worshippers of Images, as were some of them. The children of Israel in the wilderneſſe were [t] Gods people so well as we; yea, they were to vs in respect of their [u] faith our fathers; and they were all vnder the cloud, and all passed thorow the sea, and were all baptized vnder Moses in the cloud, and in the sea; and did all eat of one spirituall meat, and did all drinke of one spirituall drinke. [*] That is, they were baptized into Christ so well as we, receiuing the signes and seales of his fauour so well as we. For the spirituall meat was Christ. [x] That is, signifying Christ, as himselfe cals the wine his bloud, and the bread his body. The briefe of all is, our fathers had the same promises of Christ, and the same [y] Sacraments, and yet when they sinned against God, he did so destroy them in the wilderneſſe, that of many thousands only two, being aboue twentie yeeres old, namely, [z] Iosuah and Caleb, entred into the land of Canaan. And therefore let vs [a] beware that we doe not offend God [b] in our thoughts, as they did, lusting after euill things, Num. 11.4. in our words, murmuring against God as they did, and were destroyed of the destroyer, Num. 14.37. in our deeds, worshipping images as they did, according as it is [c] written, the people sate downe to eat and drinke, and rose vp to play: neither let vs be defiled with fornication, as some of them were defiled, and fell in one day [d] twentie three thousand. If God spared not the naturall branches, Rom. 11.21. let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. I would not haue you ignorant what our fathers in the wilderneſſe did, and suffered: for all these things are written for examples, especially to admonish vs, vpon whom the ends of the world are come.

Now the word end signifieth in holy Scriptures either a consumption, as 1 Pet. 4.7 the end of all things is at hand; or a consummation, as Eccleſiastes 12.13. Let vs heare the end of all. In this place we may receiue [e] both acceptions; it is now the [f] last houre. Wherefore being compassed about with such a cloud of witnesses, hauing read so many fearefull examples in old time, yea seene so many grieuous punishments vpon blasphemous wretches in our time, seeing we haue beheld the fals of so many, [g] let vs take heed lest we fall also. Gods correcting of other, is a directing for vs, euen the ruines of our fathers are registred in his book for our edification, and their follie for our instruction. Againe, the perfection of the world is now, for Christ is the [h] end of the Law: whose Gospell hath been preached in all [i] lands, and his sauing [k] health is knowne among all nations. And therefore we are they whom the ends of the world are come vpon, [l] that is, we must make an end of liuing after the world, as hauing our conuersation in heauen, Philip. 3.20.

Iesus said vnto his Disciples, there was a certaine rich man had a steward.

[m] Gaudentius is of opinion, that this steward is the deuill, abusing his gifts in tempting men vnto their condemnation. Other, as [n] Theophilus, Bishop of Antiochia, thinks it may be spoken of *S. and poſſeſſions are committed in charge, to wit, a generall Steward, as it is in our Engliſh tranſlation. And ſo S. Hierome reads in the cited Epiſtle, Redde rationem diſpenſationis tuæ, non enim poteris amplius diſpenſare. Whereupon Maldonatus in his Commentaries on the place confeſſeth ingenuouſly, that Hierome was not author of the common Latine edition of the new Teſtament. All of vs then are ſtewards, and diſpoſers of ſome goods of God: Clergie men are [x] ſtewards of Gods houſe, which is the Church; all Magiſtrates are ſtewards of the common houſe, which is the weale publique; Maſters are ſtewards of their owne priuate houſes; [y] all men are ſtewards and clerks of the priuie cloſet of their conſcience. There is none ſo mightie that is greater, or ſo meane that is leſſe then a ſteward to the King of Kings. Now the ſteward [z] ought to conſider with himſelfe theſe ſix things eſpecially:

[x] 1 Cor. 4. 1.

[z] See Ferus & Ardens in loc.

1. That he is a ſeruant, not a maſter.
2. That goods committed to his charge may not be waſted at his pleaſure, but diſpoſed as his Lord will.
3. That he is hired to labour, not to loyter.
4. That he muſt one day giue an account.
5. That many eyes obſerue him, euer readie to complaine.
6. That he may be thruſt out of his ſtewardſhip euery day.

Concerning the firſt, [a] euery good and perfect gift is from aboue; [b] what haſt thou that thou haſt not receiued? Almighty God is called in the beginning of this Goſpell a rich man, as being infinitely rich in goodneſſe and mercie [c] toward all, and therefore committeth vnto their charge much of his rich treaſure:

Namely, goods { Temporall, Corporall, Spirituall.

The which are not to be ſpent as we will, but imployed as he will.

In goods temporall a man may play the bad ſteward three wayes: In { Getting them wrongfully, Keeping them baſely, Spending them vnlawfully.

We may not gaine goods through others hurt, [d] building our houſes as the moth. The moth is made fat by ſpoyling the barkes and bookes in which it liueth: and [e] ſo the couetous rich is made full by deuouring the poore. But albeit vnconſcionable Nimrods be reputed only prouident and thriftie men, yet by the cuſtome of the Church heretofore they were [f] denied Chriſtian buriall, and by the moſt ancient [g] lawes of England, the goods of a defamed oppreſſor dying without reſtitution, were excheted vnto the King, and all his lands vnto the Lord of the towne. 2. We may be bad ſtewards in keeping our temporall goods baſely, [h] cuſtos es tuarum non Dominus facultatum. And therfore thou muſt expend thy meanes as thy maſter will haue thee, giuing vnto God, thy neighbour, and thy ſelfe that which is due. Vnto thy neighbour, making friends of thine vnrighteous mammon, as thy maſter here commands thee. [i] Stips pauperum theſaurus diuitum, was the word of the good Emperour Tib. Conſtantius. The rich mans treaſure is the poore mans ſtocke. So that if a diſtreſſed Chriſtian aske thine almes, he requireth only but his owne. When, I ſay, Chriſt in the perſon of a begger intreateth a gift, he might ſay, pay me a penny; not giue me a penny. 3. We may be bad ſtewards in laying out of our goods vnlawfully, either vpon workes of ſuperſtition to the diſhonour of God: or in vnneceſſary quarrels of law to the hinderance of our neighbours: or in ſurfetting or drunkenneſſe to the ruinating of our eſtate, danger of ſoule, hurt of bodie, loſſe of credit, griefe of friends, and vndoing of our heires. As the flattering Parafites, [p] our tongues are our owne, we are they that ought to ſpeake, who is Lord ouer vs? Euen ſo the riotous perſon anſwereth his good friends, exhorting him to frugall courſes; A man may ſpend his owne as he liſt, I waſte none of your money, but my proper goods, and what hath either Preacher in the pulpit, or friend in priuate to doe with it? All which he buildeth vpon a falſe ground, for no man is Lord, but only ſteward of his wealth.

p Pſalm 12.4.

Men alſo waſte their goods of the bodie, when as [q] they do not giue their members ſeruants vnto righteouſneſſe in holineſſe: but make them ſeruants of vncleanneſſe in ſinne, from one iniquitie to another. And men waſte the gifts of the ſpirit, when as they ſhall imploy them vnto Gods diſhonour, and the Churches hinderance. [r] There be diuerſities of gifts, and differences of adminiſtrations, and diuers manners of operations; one hath the ſpirit of vtterance, to another is giuen knowledge, to another propheſie, but all are to edifie, [ſ] for the gathering together of the Saints, and for the worke of the miniſterie.

ſ Epheſ. 4. 12.

The third thing which a ſteward ought to conſider, is, that he muſt labour in his ſtewardſhip, not loyter. Almighty God, who by his great power made all things, in his infinite wiſdome created nothing vaine and idle. The glorious Angels albeit they be ſpirits, yet miniſtring ſpirits, ordained for the [t] praiſe of God, and ſeruice of his Church, Heb. 1. 14 ſent from God to miniſter for their ſakes which ſhall be heires of ſaluation. I will not here determine whether euery particular perſon hath his particular Angell. [u] Quid enim opus eſt vt definiatur cum diſcrimine, quando neſciatur ſine crimine? But in generall onely you ſe that Angels are ſeruients vnto God, and his people, for ἄγγελος in Greeke ſignifieth a meſſenger, implying action and labour, as the [x] Magdeburgenſes haue well obſerued. As for our ſelues: after God had created our firſt parent Adam, he placed him in the garden of Eden, not to ſleepe in the ſweet bowres, or to ſpend his dayes in the pleaſant walkes idly: but to dreſſe it and to keepe it, Gen. 2. 15. After Adams fall, God laid this curſe vpon all his children: [y] In the ſweat of thy face ſhalt thou eat bread. The which is vnderſtood of the ſweat of the braine, ſo well as of the brow. So that all men, as well of profeſſion as occupation, ought to ſweat before they eat. There muſt be no ciphers in Gods Arithmeticke, no mutes in his Grammar, no blankes in his Kalender, no dumbe ſhewes on his ſtage, no falſe lights in his houſe, no loyterers in his vineyard. Art thou put apart to preach the Goſpell of God? then thou art a labourer; ſo the Text expreſly: [z] The harueſt is great, but the labourers are few. And 1 Tim. 5. 17. the Elders that rule well are worthie of double honour, ſpecially they which labour in the word and doctrine. Many (quoth father [a] Latimer) can away with præſunt, but not with benè. If that benè were not in text (as the Monke ſaid) all were well. If a man might eat the ſweet, and neuer ſweat, it were an eaſie matter to be a Preacher, if there were not opus as well as bonum in it. A Clergie man is inoperum, and that (as [b] Auguſtine notes) is nomen operis, it is to be the ſteward, and ouerſeer in Gods houſe, the which is an office of great imployment.

Art thou a Student in any profeſſion or faculties? then (as [c] Cato ſaid of Scipio) thou muſt be leaſt idle when thou art moſt idle. For enioying a quiet ſedentarie life by the gracious indulgences of thy Prince, and large maintenance of thy parents, free from the troubles of the Court, labour of the Countrey, buſineſſe of the Citie; thou muſt read diligently, conferre often, obſerue daily. For reading makes a full man, conference a readie man, writing an exact man.

All

All thy fine wit is but vanitie, all thy great ſpirit but impudencie, all thy braue flaunt of ſpeech is but a ſounding braſſe, except thou ioyne to theſe labour and induſtrie, without which Almightie God ſels no learning, as Heathen writers haue told vs. For the Muſes are ſo called [d] ἀπὸ τῆς μόσεως. Intimating that we ſhould earneſtly ſeeke for knowledge, as for a iewell of ineſtimable value, not only all the day, but euen at night alſo with lampe and lanterne. For thoſe ſermons are moſt excellent, and thoſe writings and exerciſes of ſchollers are moſt ſweet which a little ſmell of the candle.

Art thou an Artificer or Tradeſman? then early riſe, and goe to bed late, leſt [e] pouertie come vpon thee as one that trauelleth, and neceſſitie like an armed man. A trauell commeth ſuddenly, an armed man ſtrongly; ſo that the meaning of Salomon is, if thou neglect thy vocation and buſineſſe, beggerie will aſſault thee ſo ſuddenly, ſo violently, that thou ſhalt not reſiſt it. [f] A ſlothfull hand maketh poore, but the hand of the diligent maketh rich. He that gathereth in ſummer is the ſonne of wiſdome: but he that ſleepeth in harueſt is the ſonne of confuſion. He that will not worke in harueſt, ſhall want at Chriſtmas. He that ſcattereth abroad when he ſhould gather at home, drinking at the harrow, when he ſhould follow the plough, is a bad ſteward to his houſhold, and [g] worſe than an Infidell.

Art thou a Lawyer? Examine thy Clients cauſe faithfully, turne thy bookes exactly, proſecute his affaires induſtriouſly, leſt that Italian prouerbe be verified, The deuill makes his Chriſtmas pie of Lawyers tongues, and Clerks fingers. [h] Hac enim lege tueri pauperes videntur vt ſpolient, hac lege defendunt miſeros, vt miſeriores faciant defendendo.

Art thou a Souldier? abandon all idleneſſe, and indure all kinde of [i] labour, for only ſuch are fit for martiall feats: and the reaſon is rendred by [k] Vegetius; becauſe ſuch as are moſt acquainted with the troubles of life, doe commonly leaſt feare the paines of death. It was therefore the word of [l] Septimius Seuerus, Laboremus. And of [m] Aurelius Probus, Pro ſtipe labor. And [n] Epaminondas, Generall of the Thebans, vnderſtanding a Captaine of his Companie to be dead; exceedingly wondred how in a Campe, any ſhould haue ſo much leiſure as to be ſicke.

Yea, but ought Gentlemen of great poſſeſſions, and no office, forſake their ſports of hawking, and hunting, and bowling, and become labourers in the Lords vineyard? The Text is plaine, that all men are ſtewards; and therefore though I confeſſe that ſuch exerciſes in their place and time be commendable: yet all their dayes are not to be waſted in theſe, but ſome houres are to be ſpent for the good of the Common-wealth, and of their owne priuate families. And indeed the chiefe thing that commendeth a Gentleman, is actiuitie and induſtrie: for at the firſt all Nobilitie came from the pen or the pike, from learning or chiualrie, from Prieſthood or Knighthood. In our Engliſh hiſtories I finde that moſt of our Gentlemen were raiſed in flouriſhing peace by the Church, or elſe by feats of armes in the dayes of bloudie warres. A [o] worthy father in his facultie deliuers in print, that about 200. Gentlemen haue got honour to their families, by the ſtudie of our common lawes: and it euer hath beene thought a true poſition; Non genus, ſed genius. Non gens ſed mens: in the words of our [q] owne Poet; To doe the gentle deeds that makes the Gentleman. And therefore thoſe renowned Worthies in old time were called [r] Heroes, not ἀπὸ τῆς ἔρας, or ἀπὸ τῆς ἐρωτος, or ἀπὸ τῆς ἐρχεσθαι ἐν μάχαις τοῖς ἀνδράσι, but ἀπὸ τῆς ἀρετῆς: inſinuating that vertue is the ſole ground of true Nobilitie; whereas on the contrary, nothing doth more ruinate a noble family then idleneſſe the mother of ignoble thoughts, and midwife of all diſhonourable practiſes, euen the very Dunſtable plaine high way to Needom and beggery.

Nay, the charge of the Magiſtrate is ſo great, and the burden of the King himſelfe ſo weightie, that it made Chryſoſtome ſay, miror ſi quis rectorum ſaluari poſſit: holding it a matter not impoſſible, but very difficult, as [s] father Latimer expounds him. Peſant to the greateſt Prince. For as it followeth in the next place to be conſidered, Almightie God will take a ſtrict account of all ſuch talents as haue been committed vnto vs, either in common as men, or elſe in particular as magiſtrates, or miniſters, as fathers or children, as Princes or people.

Sometimes he reckoneth in this life with vs, in puniſhing vs with grieuous plaugues and ſickneſſe, which are his miniſters. And ſometime calling vs before the Magiſtrate, which is his Deputie. Sometime bringing vs to diſcredit before other, and ſometime to diſcomfort in our owne ſoule, for expending his goods vnprofitably. But his greateſt Audit is at the laſt and terrible day, when as he will caſt the ſlothfull ſeruant into vtter darkneſſe, for [t] hiding his talent in the ground, and the waſtefull ſteward for [u] ſpending all in riotous liuing. [x] Reioyce then, O young man, in thy youth, and walke in the wayes of thine heart, and the ſight of thine eyes, but know that for all theſe things, God will bring thee to iudgement. He will one day come vpon thee with a redde rationem, how is it that I heare thus of thee? Giue accounts of thy ſtewardſhip, for thou mayeſt be no longer ſteward.

Now leſt we ſhould flatter our ſelues, in imagining that God either cannot, or will not marke what is done amiſſe in our ſtewarſhip: let vs often remember that of [y] Dauid, He that planted the eare, ſhould he not heare? or he that made the eye, ſhall he not ſee? God is all eare, all eye, [z] totus animæ, totus animi; knowing, noting, ſeeing, ouerſeeing all things. And yet if he were not ſo, there be many tell-tales and pick-thankes in the family, relating all our miſdemeanour, and accuſing vs vnto him.

Among many [a] there be three principall accuſers: to wit, { Our conſcience neglected, / The poore oppreſſed, / The creature abuſed.

Theſe three ring loud alarums in our Lords eares, awaking him out of ſleepe, importuning him vnceſſantly to reckon ſpeedily with vs, either in his particular accounts at our deaths: or elſe at his generall Audit, in that laſt and dreadfull day. The conſcience begins this peale, as it were the Trebble, or firſt bell: The clamour of the poore, like the Counter-tenor, is exceeding loud, and [b] enters into the eares of the Lord of Hoſts: And the creatures ring more deepely, like the great Bow bell, [c] groaning and trauelling in paine. To pull at the firſt bell a little; conſcience is an inward acknowledgement of the good and euill in our actions, either excuſing or accuſing vs: Rom. 2.15. that is (as [d] Philip Melanchon in his definitions) It is a practicall ſyllogiſme in our vnderſtanding, the maior whereof is Gods law, the minor and concluſion, our application of this law, approuing in our actions that which is good, and condemning that which is ill. Or it is Gods eſpeciall Bailiffe, which arreſteth vs vpon euery treſpaſſe; and his priuie Secretarie, regiſtring all our thoughts, and words, and deeds in a booke of remembrance, which ſhall be brought forth, and laid open at that vniuerſall Audit; Dan. 7.10. The iudgement was ſet and the bookes opened. In which are ſet downe the particulars of all our receits and expences; there is [e] Item for lying, Item for ſwearing, Item for drinking, Item for ſlandering, Item for enuie. The totall ſumme is the manifeſt and manifold breach of all our Maſters Commandements. If theſe accounts be not croſſed in this life, we ſhall neuer haue our quietus eſt in the life to come. So ſaith the ſteward in this Goſpell, I cannot dig, and to beg I am aſhamed: It is too late to worke now the day is gone, and [f] night is come; and it will not auaile me to beg, as appeareth in the Parable of Dives: Luke 16.

I haue ſhewed [g] elſewhere, that there be foure kindes of conſcience, to wit, a good, but not a quiet: a quiet, but not a good: both good and quiet: neither good nor quiet. The children of God haue ſometime an afflicted conſcience, complaining of their ill husbandry to the Lord; but it is a good conſcience, for [h] a broken ſpirit is an acceptable ſacrifice to God. It was better with Peter when he wept, then when he preſumed. If thou wilt pleaſe God, thou muſt oft diſpleaſe thy ſelfe. For there is [i] ioy in heauen, when as there is an heartie ſorrow for ſin on earth. He that is thus affected, and thus afflicted in ſoule for his vnthriftie ſtewardſhip, hath rather a good monitor of his conſcience, then a bad accuſer. Yet we muſt endeuour daily that it may be quiet, as it is good. For ſuch a conſcience is a [k] continuall feaſt: at which [l] Angels are ſeruitors, and [m] God himſelfe gueſt, and the cheere, [n] Ioy in the Holy Ghoſt, and the muſicke, ſuch a peace with God, our neighbours, and our ſelues, as paſſeth all vnderſtanding.

The ſecond accuſers are the poore diſtreſſed and oppreſſed. The ſinnes of Sodome [o] vexing righteous Lot, are ſaid to crie to the Lord: Geneſ. 18.21. [p] Abel being dead yet ſpeaketh, and his bloud crieth euen from earth vnto heauen: Geneſ. 4.10. The wages of the labourers which vnconſcionable rich men haue kept backe by fraud, crie to the Lord, and their cries are entred in his eares: Iames 5.4. And therefore let churliſh [q] Nabal, and cruell [r] Ahab here learne to make the poore not their foes: but friends of their vnrighteous mammon. If they ſhall accuſe, crying for reuenge, the Lord reſpecting [ſ] the deepe ſighing of the poore, will [t] awake as one out of ſleepe, and as a Giant refreſhed with wine, will ſmite his enemies in their hinder parts, and put them to a perpetuall ſhame. But if the poore pray to God for vs, and praiſe God in our almes, our bleſſed Sauiour telleth vs, that we ſhall be receiued into euerlaſting habitations.

Laſtly, the creatures abuſed, accuſe the bad ſteward vnto his Lord, not onely the ſenſible creature, groaning and trauelling in paine, till it be deliuered from the bondage of corruption and vanitie, which againſt it will it ſuffereth vnder the wicked: but euen the very ſenſeleſſe creature, [u] the ſtone crying out of the wall, and the beame out of the timber: [x] the moth of the garment, and the ruſt of the cankered gold witneſſing againſt the couetous worldling. Yea, the dead letter of the Bible crieth and accuſeth, as Chriſt ſheweth in the [y] Goſpell: Doe not thinke that I will accuſe you to my Father, there is one that accuſeth you, euen Moſes in whom yee truſt: [z] that is, the Law ſhall accuſe for playing the bad ſtewards.

Wherefore ſeeing euery man is a ſteward, and euery ſteward is a ſeruant, and euery ſeruant muſt labour, and ſo labour, that he may doe good to his fellowes, and increaſe the talent of his maſter: ſeeing, I ſay, when we waſte any goods, other are willing to complaine, and God is able to thruſt vs out of our ſtewardſhip: ſeeing he will one day call for an account, and that day may be this day; let vs, I beſeech you, be good in our office, let vs examine our receits and expences euery day, that when our great Lord ſhall come to iudgement, and reckon with vs, he may ſay to euery one of vs; [a] It is well done, good ſeruant and truſtie, thou haſt beene faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler ouer much: enter into thy maſters ioy.

The Epiſtle. 1 Cor. 12. 1. vide v. 12

Concerning ſpirituall things brethren, I would not haue you ignorant, &c.

THe Corinthians indued with many notable gifts, had [b] forgotten (as it ſhould ſeeme) from whom, and for what end they receiued them; in ſo much, as the diuiſion of gifts occaſioned among them a [c] diuiſion of hearts, each one deſpiſing or enuying another, according to the proportion of their ſeuerall graces. Our Apoſtle therefore diſcuſſeth in this Epiſtle, three points eſpecially concerning ſpirituall things. As,

1. From whom they proceed; all theſe worketh one and the ſame ſpirit, diuiding to euery man a ſeuerall gift euen as he will.

2. What they be [d] for { The generall profeſſion of Chriſtianitie: No man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt. / Particular vſe: Diuerſities of { Gifts. / Adminiſtrations. / Operations. }

3. For what end: the gift of the ſpirit is giuen to euerie man to edifie withall.

Concerning

[b] Engliſh Gloſſe.

[d] Muſculus, Caietan.

Concerning ſpirituall things brethren, I would not haue you ignorant] This one phraſe repeated often in the [e] writings of this Apoſtle, ſheweth a [f] remarkable difference betweene Chriſtian and Antichriſtian teachers. A popiſh Doctor is well content that his brethren ſhould continue ſtill in blinde deuotion: but S. Paul is deſirous his brethren ſhould be zealous according to [g] knowledge, not ignorant in ſpirituall things. Other matters I will ſet in order when I come, [h] but in the meane while, brethren, I would not haue you ignorant concerning ſpirituall gifts: [i] ſo called in reſpect of the cauſe, for that euery gift is from the ſpirit: and in reſpect of the effect, as making men ſpirituall, directing vs how we ſhould liue not according to the fleſh, but after the ſpirit.

Ye know that yee were Gentiles, and went your wayes vnto dumbe images, euen as yee were led] Leſt they ſhould boaſt of their great gifts, he puts them in minde what they were before they were led by the ſpirit of God, namely, that they were miſled by the ſpirit of Satan, in ſuch ſort, that they worſhipped dumbe idols. He that is dumbe, for the moſt part, is alſo deafe: S. Paul therefore [k] taxeth here, their idle vanitie, for adoring ſuch gods, as could neither heare nor helpe, neither protect them from wrong, nor direct them in the truth, according to that of [l] Dauid: They haue mouthes and ſpeake not, eyes haue they and ſee not, eares and heare not: they that make them are like to them, and ſo are all ſuch as put their truſt in them. He might haue named other ſinnes, as he doth [m] elſe-where, [n] but he names Idolatrie as the greateſt, as the moſt common among the Gentiles, and as the mother ſinne, from which all other ariſe. For [o] becauſe they turned the glory of the incorruptible God to the ſimilitude of the image of a corruptible man, and of birds, and of foure-footed beaſts, and of creeping things; Almightie God gaue them vp vnto their hearts luſt, that they might commit all [p] vncleanneſſe euen with greedineſſe. In a word, [q] as all wickedneſſe is from the wicked ſpirit; ſo euery good grace from the good ſpirit.

No man ſpeaking by the ſpirit of God defieth Ieſus: alſo no man can ſay, that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt] It is obiected here, that the [r] deuils acknowledged Chriſt, and that hypocrites cry, Lord, Lord. Anſwer is made, that the deuils acknowledge Chriſt, as being thereunto conſtrained out of [s] feare; and that hypocrites, as diſſembling, doe this out of faſhion; only the true Chriſtians ſay, Chriſt is Lord, out of faith, as [t] with the heart beleeuing vnto righteouſneſſe, and with the mouth confeſſing to ſaluation. Our Engliſh phraſe doth expreſſe this well: Will you ſay it? that is, auow it vpon your certaine knowledge and conſcience, freely, fully, conſtantly. For many profeſſe God in words, [u] who denie him in their workes. If we conſtrue this, [x] de dicere voluntario non coacto, de dicere [y] lingua, corde, opere; no man can ſo ſay, that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt. [z] Other anſwer, that Paul here ſpeakes not of the regenerating ſpirit, or of iuſtifying grace, but of ſuch gifts as are common to the reprobate with Gods elect. Inſinuating, that no man, whether he be good or bad, can ſay, Ieſus is the Lord, but by the ſpirit [a] dwelling in him if he be good, mouing him if bad. So [b] Iudas preached, and [c] Caiphas propheſied, not as ſpeaking from themſelues, but as moued by the ſpirit: [d] Quicquid enim verum à quocunque dicitur à Spiritu Sancto dicitur.

There are diuerſities of gifts, and yet but one ſpirit: differences of adminiſtrations, and yet but one Lord: diuers manners of operations, and yet but one God] Theſe three word, gifts, adminiſtrations, operations, are three weapons to beat downe their pride. If gifts, why ſhould any boaſt, [e] as if he receiued them not; [f] if adminiſtrations and operations, euery one by loue muſt [g] ſerue another, as hauing his gift to edifie withall. In the three words, Spirit, Lord, God; the [h] Doctors obſerue the myſterie of the bleſſed Trinitie, the Father is called God, the Sonne Lord, the Holy Ghoſt the Spirit. Againe, [i] ſome note here the Deitie of the Holy Ghoſt, againſt Macedonius, in that the Spirit is called Lord and God: and Chriſts equalitie with the Father, againſt Arrius, in that Chriſt is not alway named after the Father, but ſometime, as in this place, before the Father. of Athanasius; In the Trinitie, none is afore or after other, none is greater or lesse than another. [k] Gifts are ascribed to God the Holy Ghost, whose speciall attribute is loue: administrations vnto God the Sonne, whose speciall attribute is wisdome: operations to God the Father, whose speciall attribute is power, working all in all. There are diuersities of gifts, as the [l] spirit of vnderstanding, wisdome, counsell, fortitude, &c. Diuersities of administrations, as some be [m] Prophets, other Apostles, and some Euangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers. Diuersities of operations, as to one is giuen the gift of healing, and to another power to do miracles, &c. All these worketh one God, who worketh all in all. He is [n] all in all; all as the [o] first cause, and working in vs all as the secondarie causes. According to that of the [p] Prophet: Lord thou hast wrought all our workes in vs, or for vs. Our Apostle doth not say, [q] qui magna operatur in magnis, aut qui miranda facit in Prophetis & Apostolis, aut qui multa facit in multis, sed qui omnia in omnibus. Insinuating that all these workes of all his agents are from him only, diuiding to euery man a seuerall gift euen as he will.

By which one sentence foure errors are confuted especially. 1. That opinion of the Gentiles, attributing seuerall gifts vnto seuerall gods. As good successe in warre to Mars, wisdome to Minerua, quicke dispatch of businesse vnto Mercurie: whereas the text saith, all these worketh one and the same spirit. 2. The words, diuiding to euery man a seuerall gift, ouerthrow their assertion, [r] who grant to God a prouidence and knowledge which is vniuersall only, not a particular in euery seuerall action and accident. 3. The clause, prout vult, Euen as he will, abundantly confounds Macedonius, denying the Godhead of the Holy Ghost, [s] because none but God can do what he will, or as he will. 4. [t] This makes against such as ascribe their diuersities of gifts either to mans merit or fatall destinie. For he saith not [u] as is due; but, as he will. Vnto one is giuen vtterance of wisdome, to another is giuen vtterance of knowledge by the same spirit, to another is giuen faith by the same spirit. He workes not all in one, nor all in many, but all in all; bestowing seuerall graces vpon seuerall persons as he will, each one being endued with a different gift to edifie withall.

Diuersities of gifts are not giuen vnto men [x] for ostentation, or faction, or as it is in the Gospell appointed to be read this day, to make merchandise in the Temple: but for edification to do good withall. Not only to themselues in their own particular estate: but πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον, for the benefit of other, euen the generall good of the [y] whole Church. For [z] as we haue many members in one bodie, and all members haue not one office: so we being many, are but one bodie in Christ, and euery one anothers members. See Epistle 2. And when he was come neere to Hierusalem, he beheld the Citie and wept on it, &c.

IN this historie S. Luke sets downe Christs behauiour both before and after he came to Hierusalem.

- Afore,
  - What he did, he wept.
    - Time when, at that houre when he was entertained of the multitude with great pompe and iollitie.
    - Cause why, the consideration of Hierusalems vnhappy state, in respect of her present sins, and future iudgements.
  - And in it, the
    - What he said,
      - Optatiuely: O, if thou hadst knowne, &c.
      - Definitiuely: The dayes shall come vnto thee, &c.
- After,
  1. Correcting the grosse abuses of the Temple, casting out those that sold and bought therein.
  2. Shewing the right vses of Gods house: namely, that it is appointed for prayer and preaching.

And

And when he was come neere Hierusalem, he beheld the Citie and wept] Our blessed Sauiour in his progresse to Hierusalem was honoured of the multitude very much, as [z] S. Matthew reports; for some spred their garments in the passages, other cut downe branches from the trees and strawed them in the way, the whole companie going before and comming after, cried Hosanna, blessed be he that commeth in the name of the Lord; or, as our Euangelist, they began to praise God with a loud voice for all the great works they had seene, saying, Peace in heauen, and glory in the highest places. And yet in the midst of all this iollitie, when he beheld Hierusalem he wept. [a] Insinuating that all the pomps and delights of the present world, are soone turned into mourning: [b] euen in laughing the heart is sorrowfull, and the end of mirth is heauinesse. In heauen is nothing but all pure ioyes, in hell nothing but meere miseries, in earth are both, one mingled with another. Our life resembles a riuer; for as [c] all riuers come from the sea, and returne thither againe; so the beginning and ending of our dayes are full of salt water, our first voice being a crie, the last a groane. There is haply some sweet and faire water in the middle of our age, but it passeth away so swiftly, that it is no sooner seene but gone. [d] Like the spiders house, and tree, which if it be taken out of his place, it will denie it, and say, I haue not seene thee. Seianus (as [e] Xiphilin reports) in the forenoone was so followed of the people that they would haue made him their Cæsar; yet hated him so much in the afternoone, that they sent him as a malefactor vnto the Iayle, giuing him iron fetters in stead of a golden crowne. [f] Balthazar in the middest of a great feast as he was carowsing in the golden vessels of the Temple, saw the fingers of a mans hand writing vpon the walls of his Palace, which so troubled his thoughts, and changed his countenance, that the ioynts of his loynes were loosed, and his knees smote one against another. [g] When the children of Iob were banquetting in their elder brothers house, behold there came a great winde from beyond the wildernesse, and smote the foure corners of the house, which fell vpon them and slew them: and therefore seeing the calamities of this life surpasse the ioyes in number and nature; Christ is said often in the Gospels historie to weepe, [h] but not once to laugh. [i] Hereby teaching vs, that so long as we be pilgrims in a strange land out of our owne countrey, we must sit downe by the waters of Babylon and weepe. As for our harps, we must hang them vp, vntill we come to Hierusalem aboue, Psal. 137.

This weeping of Christ concernes all men, especially Clergie men. It concernes vs all [k] as a demonstration of his manhood; for hereby we know that our High Priest is [l] touched with the feeling of our infirmities. It is an instruction for Clergie men in more particular, [m] for that he confirmed his owne precept with his owne practise. He said [n] else-where, Blessed are they that mourne; and behold himselfe doth here weepe.

The next point to be further examined, is, the cause why Christ did weepe. And that is the consideration of Ierusalems estate, both in respect of her present sinnes, and future punishment. When he was come neere to Hierusalem, he beheld the Citie, and wept on it. Here we may learne many good lessons. As first, it serues to [o] terrifie; for as the [p] penitent sinner occasioneth in heauen ioy: so the retchlesse offender continuing obstinate in his iniquitie, brings (as much as in him lieth) euen [q] heauinesse into the courts of happinesse. Secondly, this may comfort vs in our temptations, as being assured [r] he will not the death of a sinner, but that all repent and be saued. He doth affect our conuersion vnfainedly, who weepes ouer our sinnes so bitterly, speaking also pathetically: [t] Returne, returne, O Shulamite, returne, returne, O if thou hadst knowne those things which belong vnto thy peace! Let vs not, I beseech you, make Christ a stage-player or hypocrite, commanding his affections and teares in sport; nam quicquid vult, valde vult. And his will is [u] that all men shall be saued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. And therefore when Christ at any time shall draw neere to vs in his holy word and Sacraments, as he did here to Hierusalem in his bodily presence; let vs open the [x] doores of our heart, and gates of our temple, that the [y] King of glory glory may come in. 3. This teacheth vs to [z] loue our enemies, and to pray for them who perſecute vs. It is certaine Chriſt knew that he ſhoul be crucified in Hieruſalem, and yet he deſired their good, who ſought and wrought his hurt. 4. That we make not our ſelues [a] merry with the mad humors, idle ſpeeches, outragious oathes of drunkards and atheiſts; I ſay, that we laugh not at the fals of our brethren, applauding them in their folly, making their infirmities and ſinnes our tabret and delight: but rather following here Chriſts example, to lament, when we behold ſuch enormities in any. [b] Weepe for the dead, for he hath loſt the light: ſo weepe for the foole, for he wanteth vnderſtanding: make ſmall weeping for the dead, for he is at reſt, but the life of the foole is worſe then the death. And if we muſt be ſorrie for the ſinnes of another, how much more for our owne; weeping with [c] Peter bitterly? That S. Peter wept, I finde, ſaith [d] Ambroſe; but what he ſaid, I finde not. I reade of his teares, but not of his ſatisfaction: Rectè planè Petrus fleuit & tacuit; quia quod deſleri ſolet, non ſolet excuſari; & quod defendi non poteſt, ablui poteſt.

Or as [h] other, thou wouldeſt obey my preaching and beleeue. Haply this vnhappy Citie knew many curious quirkes of the law: but it did not vnderſtand this one neceſſary point of the Goſpell, that Chriſt was her [ſ] peace. For when he would [t] often haue gathered her children together, as the hen gathereth her chickens vnder her wings, they would not, but obſtinatly [u] reiected him, and betraied him, and denied him, and in fine crucified him: Acts 3. 13. 15.

For the daies ſhall come vnto thee, that thine enemies ſhall caſt a bancke about thee] [d] The time wherein vngodly men take their vaine pleaſures is but a day: but the time wherein they ſhall be puniſhed hereafter is called in the plurall number, daies. [e] If God ſpared not the naturall branches, if he reiected his own citie, when ſhe reiected his owne Son; let vs not, I beſeech you, [f] deſpiſe the riches of his bountifulneſſe, and patience, and long ſufferance, calling vs in this our day to repentance: for theſe three follow one another, [g] ingentia beneficia, ingentia peccata, ingentes pœnæ: Great benefits abuſed occaſion great ſinnes, and great ſinnes are the forerunners of great iudgements. He went into the Temple] It is a new conceit of ſome which are bad Philoſophers, and worſe Diuines, that our bleſſed Sauiour was a coward, in fearing the naturall death of the body, a diſtracted wretch in ſuffering the ſpirituall death of the ſoule, a brand of hell, in induring for a time the infernall death both of body and ſoule. But the ſiluer current of the Scriptures, and the whole ſtreame of Expoſitors, euen from the firſt preaching of the Goſpell, vntill the daies of [i] Auguſtinus, Iuſtinianus, and Cardinall [k] Cuſa, runne quite another way, concluding peremptorily, that our glorious Sauiour did vndergoe the firſt death manfully, and ouercome the other triumphantly.

[i] Scholys in Pſalm. 38. litera (A) [k] Tom 2. operum, pag. 659.

Not to crucifie the Text, and to meddle with impertinent controuerſies; [l] if Chriſt had beene cowardly daunted with the terrors of bodily death, he would not often haue viſited Hieruſalem, the city wherein he certainly knew that he ſhould be crucified, at thoſe times when there was greateſt reſort, and in thoſe places which were moſt frequented, as it is ſaid here, he went into the Temple. I confeſſe, Chriſt did naturally feare death, otherwiſe he ſhould not haue been affected as an ordinarie man: yet he ſuffered willingly, otherwiſe he ſhould not haue beene ſo well affected as an ordinarie Martyr. For whereas [m] there be three kindes of martyrdom; the firſt operis, ſed non voluntatis, as the martyrdome of the Bethlemitiſh innocents recorded by [n] S. Matthew: the ſecond voluntatis, ſed non operis, as the martyrdome of S. Iohn the Euangeliſt, reported in [o] Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie: the third, & operis & voluntatis, as that of S. Stephen, related Acts 7. if Chriſts martyrdome and bloudie paſſion had beene operis, ſed non voluntatis, only materiall and not formall, it could neither haue beene meritorious for himſelfe, nor ſatisfactorie for other. Becauſe it is a true rule both in reaſon and diuinitie, that an action done either by chance without our knowledge, or by violence againſt our will, is neither accepted of God, nor commended by men. That only is done well, which is done of our will. And therefore whatſoeuer other print or prate, Chriſt endured his paſſion moſt reſolutely and cheerfully, witneſſing ſo much of himſelfe, [p] No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it downe of my ſelfe.

For the clearing then of this point we muſt remember an old diſtinction, namely, that there was in Chriſt [q] (non ſecundum potentiam, ſed ſecundum actum) a double created or humane will, a [r] βουλητικὸν, and a [r] βουλευτικὸν, ſaith [r] Damaſcen, that is, as Aquin conſtrueth it, a naturall will and a rationall will: as the ſententiarie Diuines vſually ſpeake, voluntas vt natura, & voluntas vt ratio. Now Chriſt according to his ſenſuall and naturall will trembled at the pangs, and quaked at the paines of death: neither was this act ſinfull or inordinate in him, for as much as nature nature ſhunneth all things hurtfull and deſtructiue. And [f] Auguſtine writing of croſſes and troubles, affirmed truly, tolerare ea iubes, non amare: nemo autem quod tolerat amat, etſi tolerare amat. But according to Chriſts βούλησις and rationall will, it was his chiefe deſire to die: [t] O my father, if it be poſſible let this cup paſſe from me: neuertheleſſe, not as I will, but as thou wilt: οὐχ ὡς ἐγὼ θέλω, not according to my theleſis and naturall deſire, which abhorreth death: but as thou wilt, to which my rationall will is alway conformable. So [u] S. Auguſtine and the ſchoolemen expound his words in lib. 3. ſent. diſt. 17.

[x] Aquin doth exemplifie the point thus: A man (ſaith he) will not naturally ſuffer launcing and cutting of any member, yet for the good of the whole body, reaſon ouercomes often ſenſe, whereby burning and launcing is endured: in like manner Chriſt, ex impetu naturæ, abhorred death, but ex imperio rationis, conſidering that the paſſion of him our head ſhould procure great good vnto all the Church his body, and that the momentanie death of one ſhould purchaſe eternall life to all, in the mideſt of his great agonie he ſpake cheerefully to his Apoſtles, [y] Ariſe let vs goe: behold he is at hand that betrayeth me, ſaluting the traytor Iudas, friend wherefore art thou come? yeelding himſelfe voluntarily to his enemies attempt, neither ſuffering his followers to offend them, nor commanding Gods Angels to defend himſelfe. And on the croſſe ſo farre was he from the paines of hell, as that he promiſed vnto the bleſſed theefe, the ioyes of heauen: [z] Verily I ſay vnto thee, this day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe. To conclude with [a] Lombard, Chriſt feared death ex affectu ſenſualitatis: but not ex affectu rationis. As Altiſſiodorenſis vpon this text, eſchuing death ſecundum ſe: yet vndergoing death propter aliud; [b] giuing himſelfe for vs an offering and a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſauour to God. Comming into the world not to doe his own ſenſuall will: but [c] the will of God who ſent him. Otherwiſe he would not vſually haue gone to that citie where he ſhould be crucified, at ſuch times, and into ſuch places where the greateſt multitudes aſſembled, as the text ſaith, he went into the temple.

Now the reaſon why Chriſt ſo ſoone as he came to Hieruſalem entred into Gods houſe, was partly to moue his own followers vnto deuotion in the temple, and partly to remoue ſacrilegious perſons out of the temple. For the firſt, in that Chriſt did not ordinarily conuerſe in the Court, nor in the Market, nor in the Theatre, but in the Temple: he doth intimate to all Chriſtians in generall, but to Clergie men in more particular, that his [d] kingdome was not of this world. And therefore ſuch as will be his Diſciples, muſt renounce the pleaſures of the Theatre, the wicked gaines of the market, the vaine gallantrie of the Court, and wholly deuote themſelues either to ſay ſeruice in the Temple, or to doe ſeruice for the Temple. This we promiſed at our firſt matriculation and entrance into the Church; ſo that if Satan, [e] the prince of the world, take vs in his poſſeſſions, he will challenge vs for his owne, and preſſe God to forſake vs. [f] Iudica meum eſſe, qui tuus eſſe noluit; in ipſa quodammodo mea poſſeſſione apprehenſus eſt: quid enim in theatro renuntiator turpium voluptatum, aut in amphitheatro crudelitates ſanus intuendo? Did he not vow when he firſt gaue vp his name to be thy Souldier in holy Baptiſme, that he would forſake the Deuill and all his workes, the vaine pompes and glory of the world, with all couetous deſires of the ſame? What then hath he to doe in my kingdome doing my ſeruice? What buſineſſe hath he in the Play-houſes or other of my territories? he ſhould be in Chriſts Colledge, in the Diuinitie Schooles, in the holy Librarie, in the Temple, deſiring rather to be a [g] doore-keeper in Gods houſe, then a Commander in the tents of vngodlineſſe.

But this eſpecially concernes Eccleſiaſticall perſons and Church-men, as being in the right vbi, when they ſtand in the Pulpit and teach in the Temple. Clericus in oppido Piſcis in arido: Clergie men in the Church are in their proper element, for the Temple ſhould be the center of all their circumference. My meaning is not that the Kings Court ſhould be diſfurniſhed of Chaplaines, or his counsell of Prelats: God forbid. For as the Common-wealth is flourishing [h] when either Philosophers are Kings, or Kings are Philosophers: then so well is it with the Church, if godly Prophets hang as a pretious earing at the Princes eare. Worthily hath Erasmus obserued in an [i] epistle to Iohn Alasco, that if we had more Bishops like Ambrose, we should haue more Emperours like Theodosius. If Brentius the Diuine be counsellour to the Duke of Wittenberge, religion thereby shall be better established: if Occam the schoolman flie to Lewis the Emperour, he may well say, [k] Protect thou me with thy sword, and I will defend thee with my pen. In a word, if the kingdome be ruled by Gods scepter, it will continue: but [l] where there is no vision the people decay. So that if Clergie men follow the Court for the greater good of the Temple: then, as [m] Herodian said of Rome, whersoeuer the Emperour is, there is Rome: and as the [n] Poet, vbi Helena est, ibi Troam puta: so whersoeuer there is a good Prelate, there is a walking Church, and an holy Temple. But if our designes be meerely secular, hauing one foot in the Court, another in the Citie, none in our Cure: then assuredly we are out of our ranke, and most vnlike Christ our master, of whom it is said here, that he taught daily in the Temple.

The more we keepe within the circuits of our Churches, and circles of our studies, the more we frequent the Chappell, the Library, the Schoole, the more priestlike and schollerlike. But on the contrary, when our habits are irregular, our companie disordered, our speech vnsauoury, our whole conuersation according to the fashions of the world: then, as [o] Budeus is bold to write, we are rather Crassiani, then Christiani, more secular then ecclesiasticall. I doe not enuie the rich Clergie men, I wonder only with [p] Synesius, how they can gaine so much leisure as to serue two masters, God in Choro, and Mammon in foro. If riches increase, we must not set our hearts on them; if our places be great, our mindes must be lowly; rather then the cares of this world should choake the good seede in vs, we must imitate [q] Albertus Magnus, of whom it is reported in historie, that he left his Bishopricke of Ratisbone to reade publique Lectures in Colen: and follow Theodorits example, who writes of himselfe in a certaine epistle to Leo Bishop of Rome, that whereas he had beene Bishop liuing plentifully many yeeres, he had purchased nec agrum, nec obolum, nec sepulchrum, as the Magdeburgenses report in his words, in Cent.5.col.1011. For if we which ought to be the salt of the earth, and light of other, shall addict our selues vnto the world, being (as [r] Bernard speakes) habitu clerici, quæstu mundani, actu nemini: then we may cry with [s] Augustine; Væ mihi misero qui ista seruo in memoria, & scribo in charta, nec habeo in vita. Or as the same Father in another case: Woe be vnto vs, if we haue Christum in codicibus & non in cordibus. If we which are Gods inheritance, spirituall men, consecrated to the Temple, make it not our chiefe studie to doe good vnto the Church, as Christ here, who so soone as he came to Ierusalem instantly visited his fathers house.

Secondly, Christ entred into the Temple to remoue sacrilegious Merchants, and to reforme abuses therein. [t] Hereby signifying that the disorder of the Church occasioned the destruction of the Citie. [u] For so long as the Priests were wicked, the people could not be good. [x] By this example Princes and Prelates are taught that their chiefe time be spent, and best indeuours imployed in well ordering Gods house, that it proue not a den of theeues: but as God would it should, an house of praier. Aaron & Moses must ioyne together in this good work. The Minister must vse the spirituall sword, and the Magistrate the temporall, in casting out and whipping out of the Temple such as sell and buy therein. [y] Sacrilegium is so called, quasi sacriladium, the prophaning of that which is holy.

Now holinesse is ascribed vnto { Persons. / Places. / Things.

And therefore as [z] Aquine notes, sacriledge may be committed vel in personam, when an ecclesiasticall man is abused: vel in locum, when the Church is prophaned:

prophaned: vel in rem, when things dedicated to holy vſes are otherwiſe imployed. And this kinde of ſacriledge may be committed [a] three waies:

1. Quando ſacrum de ſacro aufertur, when holy things are ſtollen out of holy places, as the conſecrated veſſels out of the Temple.

2. Quando non ſacrum de ſacro, as if a theefe ſhould breake open a Church to ſteale away ſome priuate treaſure hid therein.

3. Quando ſacrum de non ſacro, when the Church is robbed of her poſſeſſions and endowments.

If all men examine themſelues according to this rule, many will aſſuredly find, that they worthily deſerue the whip. In our neighbour countries, they complaine with Peter [b] Bleſenſis, that clauſtra are turned into caſtra. And with Bernard, Plus calcaria quam altaria fulgent That the Nobilitie, Gentrie, Commonaltie, regard haram domeſticam magis quam aram dominicam. And I would to God England had not iuſt cauſe to crie out againſt ſelling of oxen and ſheepe, and doues in the Temple: that is, as one wittily, Beneficia magna, parua, omnia. So the Poet in old time:

[c] Filius eſt præſul, pater Abbas, Simon vterque.

How little a ſinne ſo euer it ſeeme to be, yet all kind of ſacriledge is odious in the ſight of God. As for that which is in perſonam, he ſaith, [d] he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. For ſacriledge committed in rem, [e] Ye haue ſpoiled me in tithes and offerings. And laſtly, for that in locum, our Sauiour here doth caſt out of the Temple, ſuch as ſold and bought therein.

This horrible crime is not only condemned by Papiſts and Lutherans, and the Church of England: but alſo by the conſiſtorian Diuines, who ſhut the doore now the ſteed is ſtolne, and repent too late that euer they betrayed Gods inheritance into the hands of impious cormorants. [f] Caluin compares the Magiſtrates of Geneua to cruell tyrants, affirming that they are the Popes ſucceſſors in theft and robbery. Beza in his Tract of three ſorts of Biſhops, is reſolute, That Proteſtant Church-robbers are new theeues, entred into the roomes of old theeues, according to that of Biſhop [g] Parkehurſt:

Olim in cœnobijs habitabant monſtra papiſtæ,
Nunc in cœnobijs habitant ſed monſtra rapiſtæ.

[h] Viret accounts them worſe then Friers, and Monks, comparing them vnto the deuils in the Goſpell, crying, Why art thou come to torment vs before our time? And albeit our Engliſh reformers a long time would in their haſte and heat, downe with the Church, euen to the ground: yet if we ſhall appeale from Philip King of Macedonia when he is drunken, vnto Philip King of Macedonia when he is ſober: or with Biſhop Groſted, from Pope Adrian priuate, to Pope Adrian publicke: or with the [i] quodlibeticall diſcourſer from the Pope as Clement, vnto his holineſſe as Peter. If, I ſay, we ſhall appeale from their paſſion, vnto their beſt writers in their ſetled iudgement; [k] we ſhal finde, that they are very well content that their Presbyters, and other officers of the Temple, ſhould enioy the lands and liuings of our Biſhops; intimating that Church-robbers would crucifie Chriſt againe for his coat: reſembling the Traytor Iudas; by the ſpoiles of the Church purchaſing fields of bloud that ſuch hate Chriſt, and defraud God, and are no better then Achan, Nebuchadnezzar, Balthazar, Ananias and Saphira. To conclude with [l] Iuſtinian, Proximum ſacrilegio crimen eſt quod maieſtatis dicitur: Treaſon is a pettie ſinne, in compariſon of ſacriledge. The reaſon is rendred by [m] S. Auguſtine, Tanto grauius eſt peccatum, quanto committi non poteſt niſi in Deum.

As this fault is moſt abominable, ſo the iudgements of God vpon it in all ages haue beene moſt fearefull. To begin with Simon Magus, the godfather of Simonifts, as we read, Acts 8. as he preſumed in the publike Theater at Rome, to flie vp into heauen, he caught ſuch a fall in the middeſt of his pride, that he brake his legs and his thighes, as [n] Clemens Romanus reports: Vt qui paulò ante volare tentauerit, ſubitò ambulare non poterat; & qui pennas aſſumpſerat, plantas amiſerat,

And Felix beholding the coſtly veſſels and chalices Conſtantinus and Conſtantius had beſtowed, ſcoffingly ſaid, What ſtately plate is here for the carpenters ſonne? but becauſe theſe beaſts opened not their lips, that their mouthes might ſhew forth Gods praiſe, but whet their tongues as ſwords to ſtrike at the Lords annointed; Iulianus mouth vſing alwaies vnſauoury ſpeeches, at the laſt acted a moſt filthy part: [r] for that ordure which ſhould haue gone downeward, was caſt vpward, dying a loathſome and naſtie death. And [s] Felix, who had ſo baſe a conceit of Chriſts bloud, did nothing night and day but vomit bloud, vntill his vnhappy ſoule was fetched away from his accurſed carcaſe. William Rufus, who pulled down Churches and religious houſes, to make palaces of ſtate and places of delight, was ſtrooken as he was hunting in his [t] new Foreſt with an arrow, ſhot by Sir Walter Tyrell, that he fell downe dead, and neuer ſpake word: [u] Vno gemitu ſine voce edito animam efflans ex equo in terram cecidit. [y] The goods of the Church are like the gold of Tholoſſa, none thriue that vnlawfully poſſeſſe a penny worth of them. Ex male quæſitis vix gaudet tertius hæres. O Lord God, [z] that our mouth may be filled with laughter, and our tongue with ioy; [a] make them and their princes like Oreb and Zeb, yea, make all their Princes like Zeba and Salmana, which ſay, let vs take to our ſelues the houſes of God in poſſeſſion.

It is written, My houſe is the houſe of prayer] Here we may learne the right vſe of Gods houſe, namely, that it is appointed for prayer and preaching. The Epiſtle. 1 Cor. 15. 1. vnto v. 12

Brethren, as pertaining to the Goſpell which I preached vnto, &c.

Saint Paul in this Epiſtle, doth
- Extol his preaching in
  - Generall, for that it was a Goſpell, and ſuch a Goſpell, as he receiued of the Lord.
  - Particular, ſhewing how Chriſt died for our ſinnes, and roſe againe the third day.
- Extenuate his perſon,
  - As being the laſt Apoſtle, borne out of due time.
  - As being the leaſt Apoſtle, not worthie to be called an Apoſtle. [c] The leaſt in reſpect of his former ſinne, for he perſecuted the congregation of God: but the greateſt in reſpect of his preſent grace, for Gods grace was in him, and with him in ſuch ſort, that hee laboured more abundantly then they all.

c Anſelm. Ardens, Aquin.

Brethren, as pertaining to the Goſpell] [d] In the former chapters, he corrected the Corinthians d Gorran.

Corinthians error, concerning the gifts of grace: but in this preſent, he doth rectifie their iudgement touching the gifts of glory: prouing at large the reſurrection of the dead: which one point of doctrine he cals a Goſpell, as containing glad tidings of great ioy, without which, [c] of all men Chriſtians ſhould be moſt miſerable. Or a Goſpell, as being a [f] maine piller of the Goſpell, and holy beleefe, [g] leſt they ſhould doubt of this truth, as of a matter indifferent not appertaining neceſſarily to their ſaluation. I haue preached, and ye haue receiued this article, ſo that you ſhall ſhew your ſelues [h] inconſtant, and [i] apoſtates in denying it. [k] Here we may note the degrees of faith, and ſteps vnto ſaluation. The firſt, is preaching of the Goſpell; the ſecond, hearing of that which is preached; the third, receiuing of that which is heard; the fourth, continuing in that which is receiued: and then laſtly comes ſaluation, [l] if thou be faithfull vnto death, I will giue thee a crowne of life.

[l] Apoc 2.10.

I doe you to wit, after what manner I preached] I deliuer not a new doctrine, [m] but onely repeat that old, which I preached, and your ſelues accepted and keepe ſtill, except ye beleeued in vaine. For I am not a [n] reede ſhaken with the winde, neither would I haue you [o] carried about with euerie blaſt of doctrine. [p] That which I taught you by word being preſent, I now commend vnto you by writing, being abſent. [q] Hence then obſerue, that we may not loath in any caſe, but rather embrace the ſame principles of holy religion often repeated againe and againe by the ſame Paſtor, in the ſame place.

For firſt of all] [r] That is, at the firſt, and chiefly, becauſe Chriſts * dying for our ſinnes, and riſing againe for our iuſtification, are the two great fundamentall arches of faith, on which all other articles are built. [t] If Chriſt be not raiſed againe from the dead your faith is vaine, and you are yet in your ſinnes. And therefore theſe points are to be taught in primis: that is, [t] inter prima credenda & maxima. For this cauſe, Paul preſſeth here Chriſts reſurrection by ſundrie demonſtrations, affirming, that after his death and buriall, he was ſeene of Cephas, then of the twelue, after that of moe then fiue hundred brethren at once, to Iames, and all the Apoſtles, [u] that is, both Apoſtles and Diſciples, and laſt of all, he was ſeene of me.

I deliuered vnto you] The word both in Latine and Greeke doth import tradition; and therefore the Rhemiſts obſerue, that the bleſſed Apoſtles planted the Church in all truth by tradition, afore they wrote any thing. [x] Anſwer is made, that Paul deliuered the doctrine of Chriſts death and reſurrection, according to the Scripture, which is not an vnwritten, but a written veritie.

Which I receiued] As in this Epiſtle before, chap. 11.23. I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I haue deliuered vnto you: So Galat. 1.12. Neither receiued I it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the Reuelation of Ieſus Chriſt; inſpired and called to his Apoſtleſhip by the Holy Ghoſt: Acts 13.2. [y] His Goſpell was not mans doctrine, nor after man: but he preached, how Chriſt died for our ſinnes, agreeing to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he roſe againe the third day, according to the Scriptures. Hereby teaching all teachers to [z] ſpeake the words of God. The chiefe places foretelling Chriſts death, are Exodus 12.7. Pſalm 22.17. Dan 9.26. Zachar. 13.7. Eſay 53.5. Concerning his reſurrection, Ionas 1.17. & 2.10. He was ſeene of me, as of one that was borne out of due time, tanquam abortiuo] A [e] childe may be ſaid abortiue three waies: as firſt, being borne out of due time: ſecondly, if extracted out of his mothers wombe violently: thirdly, if he want his due bigneſſe. In all theſe reſpects, our Apoſtle makes himſelfe abortiue; for he was not new borne [f] ſo ſoone as Peter and Iohn, and other of the twelue. Secondly, S. Paul was [g] pulled out of the Iewiſh ſynagogue, that he might be made the ſonne of Chriſts Church, as it were, by violence: for in the midſt of his [h] breathing out threatnings, and ſlaughter againſt the Diſciples of the Lord, he was [i] receiued to mercy, [k] put apart to preach the Gospell, as a chosen vessell, to beare Christs name before the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Israel, Acts 9.15. Thirdly, S. Paul thought himselfe abortiue, for that he saith, I am the least Apostle, not worthie to be called an Apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God. He did this ignorantly through vnbeleefe, 1 Tim. 1.13. Yet he did acknowledge it for a great fault, euen so great, that he deemed himselfe vnworthie to be numbred among the Apostles. How much more then ought we to lament our sinnes after the knowledge of the truth, after we haue [l] receiued how we ought to walke and please God? [m] If we say, that we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and truth is not in vs. If we acknowledge our sinnes, he is faithfull and iust to forgiue vs our sinnes. Agnosce tu, saith [n] Augustine, & Dominus ignoscit: nam quo pacto Deus dignetur ignoscere, quod in se homo dedignatur agnoscere?

But by the grace of God, I am that I am] He doth, as it were, [o] part himselfe, into two: considering his sinnes, he reputes himselfe the least Apostle; yet considering Gods grace which is in him, he saith, I laboured more abundantly then they all. [p] Intensiuè; for he was in iourneying often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in sea, in citie, wildernesse. Extensiuè, combred with the care of all the Churches, as he tels them in the next [q] Epistle. So that as [r] one doth glosse the text, Paul was Apostolorum minimus tempore, non dignitate; minimus humilitate, non operatione; minimus in se, magnus in Domino. [t] By this example Pastors are taught so to confesse their owne vnworthinesse, as that they bring not their calling into contempt hereby. Iohn the Baptist acknowledged himselfe, [t] not worthy to vnloose the latchet of his masters shooe: yet he did execute his office stoutly, telling the Pharisees and the Sadducees vnto their face, that they were a [u] generation of Vipers.

Yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me] Doctor [x] Bishop cauils at the Reformed Catholike, for translating this clause, the grace of God in me. Because forsooth, according to true construction, it should be, the grace of God which is with me. S. Hierome (who was in [y] Augustines account, homo doctissimus, & omnium trium linguarum peritus) hath read it both waies; [z] one where, the grace of God which is in me: another where, the grace of God which is with me: lib. 2. aduersus Pelagianos in tom. 2. fol. 284. So the Church of England may well admit both, as betweene which in effect, there is no difference. But to tell the truth, and so shame the deuil, as well our Bibles as Communion booke translate as he would haue it, The grace of God which is with me. Surely Mast. Bishop should haue deliuered an vntruth in saying, he: but in auowing they corrupt the text, he telleth a ranke lie. For I pray what shall he gaine, or we lose by this interpretation, in the question of free will? albeit Gods grace was working with him, he did not of himselfe worke with Gods grace. For he said afore; by the grace of God I am that I am: Ergo, it was of grace that he did worke with grace. As if he should haue said, I haue laboured more abundantly then they all, yet I can attribute nothing to my selfe herein, but all to grace, because it is the worke of grace in me, whatsoeuer I haue done in working with grace. Feareing lest the worke should be ascribed to himselfe, saith, [a] Oecumenius he referreth it to the grace of God. To the same purpose the same Apostle, Rom. 15.17,18. I haue whereof I may reioyce in Christ Iesus in those things that pertaine to God: for I dare not speake of any thing which Christ hath not wrought by me. To conclude with [b] Orosius: Headlesse presumptuous man, what doest thou looke at that he saith, with me? marke well that he hath first said, not I. Betwixt not I, and with me, commeth in the middest, the grace of God, whose indeed it is both to will, and to worke for the making of a good will, albeit the will be the will of man. Wherefore he was bold to say with me, because he had said, not I. So then the grace of Gods power worketh in the will of man, which hath giuen to it to will the same. Whereupon the conscience of man professeth and saith, not I, but Gods grace giueth him, that he may say with me. The Gospell and Epistle meet here: for the Pharisee trusting in himselfe, did attribute too much vnto his owne merit, saying, I am not as other men are. But the

The Goſpell. Luke 18.9. Infra Ver.15.

Chriſt told this parable vnto certaine who truſted in themſelues, &c.

IN this Goſpell 3. points are chiefly conſiderable: namely, the parables
- Occaſion, Chriſt told this parable to certaine who truſted in themſelues, &c.
- Propoſition, Two men went vp into the Temple to pray, &c.
- Application, I tell you this man departed home to his houſe iuſtified more then the other.

There be [c] foure kinds of proud men: 1. Arrogant, attributing euery good thing in themſelues vnto themſelues, and not vnto God. 2. Preſumptuous, acknowledging that God is the giuer of their grace, but vpon their owne merit. 3. Boaſters of eminencie, which indeed they haue not. 4. Deſpiſers of other, as affecting to be ſingular in that they haue. To all theſe generally, but to the laſt three more principally Chriſt told this parable. Bad liues occaſion good lawes, he that extracted [d] hony out of a ſtone, and oyle out of an hard rocke, ſeeing certaine truſting in themſelues, as if they were perfect; and deſpiſed others: [e] hereby gained a good hint to commend humilitie. The which is ſuch an excellent vertue, [f] that all other gifts of grace contend for it, as all the Cities of Greece did ſtriue for Homer. Temperance challengeth it for her owne, [g] becauſe there is arduum and bonum in euery vertue; the one doth require magnanimitie, the other humilitie. [h] Fortitude challengeth it for her owne, for that humilitie doth ouercome proſperitie which aſſaulteth vs at the right, and aduerſitie fighting againſt vs on the left hand. Iuſtice challengeth it for her owne, for that humilitie giueth vnto God, our ſelues and our neighbour that which is due. Whereupon Chriſt termed humilitie iuſtice, Matth.3.15. Thus it behoueth vs to fulfill all righteouſneſſe. [i] That is, humilitie.

Two men went vp into the Temple to pray] [k] That they went together was commendable, for where two or three are gathered together in my name, ſaith [l] Chriſt, I am in the midſt of them. It was alſo commendable that they went vp into the Temple to pray, for [m] Gods houſe is the houſe of prayer. If any come to prate, to plot, or practiſe villanie, we may ſpeake to them as the King Ahaſhueroſh once to Haman, [n] Will he force the Queene alſo before me in mine houſe? So, will ye luſt after a woman, or thirſt after any miſchiefe before God in his owne houſe? Commendable likewiſe (as [o] ſome Diuines obſerue) that they prayed apud ſe, not howling and crying as the [p] prieſts of Baal, but ſecretly within their heart. In all theſe reſpects our text makes the Publican and the Phariſee to be like. So that in the iudgement of the Church it could not well be diſcerned which of the two was more iuſtified. But almightie God who foreſaw two men in the field, whereof the one ſhould be receiued and the other refuſed; and two women grinding at the mill, whereof one ſhould be ſaued, and the other condemned: vnderſtood alſo that two ſhould goe together into the Temple to pray, whereof one was a Phariſee, the other a Publican: one reiected as wholly truſting in himſelfe; the other iuſtified as altogether relying vpon Gods mercy. Both appeared in their intention to be like, but they were found in their deuotion moſt vnlike. For the Phariſee ſtood and prayed thus with himſelfe: God I thanke thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, vniuſt, adulterers, or as this Publican: I faſt twice in the weeke, I giue tithe of all that I poſſeſſe. But the Publican ſtanding a farre off, would not lift vp his eyes to heauen, but ſmote his breaſt, ſaying, God be merciſull to me a ſinner.

The manner of the Phariſees prayer is { Long, in reſpect of battologie and tautologie. / Lewd, in reſpect of his geſture { Firſt, Standing ſo [r] pert. / Secondly, ſtanding [ſ] apart.

The matter is meere braggerie, { Commending himſelfe { Priuatiuely, ſhewing what he was not, not an extortioner, &c. / Poſitiuely, declaring what he was, I faſt twice in the weeke, &c. } Diſcommending other { Generally, not as other men. / More particularly, not as a Publican not as this Publican. }

The Phariſees oriſon was tedious, as containing moe lines then the Publicans prayer had words. Firſt, vſing battologie: for he might haue profeſſed all his perfections in that one word Iuſt; as well as the Publican confeſſed all his imperfections in this one word ſinner. Secondly, trifling in tautologie: for if he were iuſt, it followed he was not an extortioner; if not an extortioner, then without all queſtion he paid his tithes. Againe, if he faſted often, it argued his continence; and if he were more righteous then all men, it muſt be granted neceſſarily that he was more iuſt then the Publican. But this vaine babler did bumbaſt his ſtile with idle repetitions, and filled his periods with vnneceſſarie termes, exhibiting his petition not vnto God (as [t] Baſil notes) but vnto his owne ſweet ſelfe, [u] to heare himſelfe, and to pleaſe himſelfe; which the text inſinuates alſo, ſaying, Phriſæus ſtans orauit apud ſe: The Phariſee ſtood and prayed to himſelfe.

Some moderne hypocrits herein reſemble that old Phariſee, being ouerlong in their prayers, and exceeding tedious in their exerciſes, euen Narciſſus-like much enamoured with their own ſhadowes, alway curtalling, and often omitting our common ſeruice to prolong their priuate meditation. [x] Enemies to reading, becauſe they loue ſo well to heare themſelues talking. Vnlike that reuerend Prelate B. Latimer, who preaching at Stamford in the afternoone, [y] when the dayes were ſhort, promiſed in the beginning of his ſermon, that he would be very briefe, becauſe (ſaith he) the ſeruice muſt be done. In Latimers age then our Seruice-booke was not reputed a [z] Steiue-vs booke: but ſo full of ſweet conſolation and deuotion, as that the bleſſed Martyr of Chriſt, [a] Dr. Rowland Taylor, commended it vnto his deare wife, as the laſt token of his loue. Then the Collects and other parts of our ſeruice were receiued in the Church, before the diſtempered and ill digeſted ex tempore phantaſies of Anabaptiſticall ſpirits. I know prayers at one time may be more long then at another, and, as occaſion is offered, they may well and fitly be conceiued vpon the ſudden alſo: but yet when we come to the Temple to pray, our meditations ſhould be well compoſed, that our minde may be the better diſpoſed, and it is fit our ſpeech ſhould be little, that our deuotion may be great: for that which Epicarus ſaid of griefe, may be verified of prayer:

[h] Si longa eſt, leuis eſt; ſi grauis eſt, breuis eſt:

This leſſon our Maſter Chriſt taught, Matth. 6 forbidding in our prayers all battologie of the Gentiles, and polulogie of the Scribes, inioyning vs to begge [c] many things in a few words; otherwiſe we ſhall not pray to God, but prate to our ſelues, as the Phariſie did here.

The Phariſie ſtood and prayed thus with himſelfe:] The Publican prayed alſo ſtanding, but a farre off, not daring to lift vp his eyes to heauen: whereas the proud Phariſie notanter is ſaid to ſtand, without kneeling, or other kinde of humbling himſelfe before God. Contrary to that of the [d] Prophet, They ſhall worſhip thee with their faces toward the earth, and licke vp the duſt of thy feet. So that this pert carriage vpon his tiptoes [e] argued his arrogant and irreuerent behauiour in prayer. Againe, learned Beza from the words orauit apud ſe, notes his affected ſingularitie, ſequeſtring himſelfe from the Publican, and ſtanding apart like an I per ſe I; very well expreſſed in the French tranſlation, ſe tenant a part ſoy. Both of of them, as it is in the Text, went together into the Temple; but when they came there, the Phariſie like himſelfe tooke the [f] chiefe roome, leauing the poore Publican à longè, in the loweſt ſeat farre behinde him, as it were in the belfrie.

[f] Matth. 23.6.

Our moderne hypocrites alſo retaine theſe phariſaicall geſtures as their owne proper inheritance; for ſome will neuer kneele in the Temple, but at the Creed when as they ſhould ſtand: and other either ſtand or ſit at the Communion when as they ſhould kneele. To bend our knees at the Lords table, ſaith one, is artolatria, worſhipping of the bread; but I feare that inſolent cariage of ſuch ſpirits when they ſhould be moſt humble, is rather autolatria, worſhipping of themſelues. Againe, ſome ſtand apart in the Temple, like this Phariſee, profeſſing themſelues Separatiſts. As the Browniſts refuſe to commnnicate with vs Publicans, and other Noueliſts haue conſulted in their Conuenticles, whether it be fit for them to frequent the ſermons of conformable Preachers. And all their reaſon is, becauſe ſuch are Publicans as it were, that is, Cæſars officers, Parliament-diuin's, time-ſeruers, or Proteſtants of ſtate: contradicting herin [g] Chriſts owne canon, inioyning vs not only to heare, but alſo to doe whatſoeuer wicked Preachers ſhall deliuer out of Gods booke ſitting in Moſes chaire. So that if any Diuine be ſo bad as thou doeſt conceiue; yet [h] tolle quod tuum eſt & vade, take that which is thine owne and goe thy way. Si malè viuat ſuum eſt, ſi bene dicat tuum eſt.

God I thanke thee] A [i] good Prieſt begins his deuotion with a confeſſion of ſinnes, and ends with a thankſgiuing for grace. But this Phariſee quite contrary begins his prayer with ago gratias, and in ſtead of accuſing himſelfe condemneth his neighbours, I am not as other men are, extortioners, vniuſt, &c.

[i] Syluester apud Vatam in loc.

[k] Here then obſerue the Phariſies pride, in reſpect of
- God: I thanke thee.
- His neighbour: I am not as other men are.
- Himſelfe: I faſt twice in the weeke, I giue tythe of all that I poſſeſſe.

Hee did pretend deuotion in comming vp into the Temple, but when hee was come thither, he neither prayed for himſelfe, nor yet for other. If for himſelfe, then he would either haue cried mercy for ſome fault, or elſe craued it for ſome fauour. For the poore begger ſheweth his rags, and the ſick patient his wounds, and the humble petitioner his grieuances, and all neede Chriſt: Qui ſeipſum excipit, ſeipſum decipit. But this proud begger (as you ſee) ſhewes not vulnera, but munera: not his ragges, but his robes; not his wounds, but his worth; not his miſery, but his brauery; reputing himſelfe ſo iuſt, that (as [l] Auguſtine obſerues) he neither ſaid, Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes, as hauing no ſinne: nor, Thy Kingdome come, as abounding alread e with all grace. Neither did he pray for others, in that he cenſureth all other abſent, and condemnes the Publican preſent: making himſelfe rather a Iudge then an aduocate. Non eſt iſta ſupplicatio (ſaith [m] one ſweetly) ſed ſuperlatio: Thanking God more, for that other were bad, then for that himſelfe was good. God I thanke thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, &c.

The moderne hypocrites oft vſe the ſame phraſe, God I thanke thee, Signifying hereby, that they beleeue there is a God againſt Atheiſts, and but one God againſt the Gentiles, and that this one God onely muſt be worſhipped againſt the Papiſts, adoring creatures in ſtead of the Creator; and againſt the carnall Goſpeller, who doth aſcribe thankes vnto men, which are proper and due to God alone. If you ſhall at any time conferre vpon them a benefit, they will be ſo religious in thanking God, as that they will vſually forget to be gratefull vnto you. They will ſay, that it was Gods pleaſure, your compaſſion ſhould not be ſhut vp from them, it was his good will, not your free will; for you cannot of your ſelues thinke ſo much as a good thought, much leſſe performe ſo good a deed. And therefore though haply thou ſhouldeſt ſuffer them vnder a [n] colour of long praying, to deuoure thy whole eſtate, yet they would neuer thanke you, but thanke God that that they be not as you; not as this Publican. For they ſowre all all their ſpeeches, and moſt of their prayers ordinarily with this leauen of the Phariſies, inſinuating alway Satan-like the faults of the brethren, as that they be carnall Goſpellers, men of the world, children of darkneſſe, ſonnes of the deuill. In particular, aggrauating to the common people, the faults of the Clergie; terming them [o] enemies of the truth, atheiſts, haters of good men, ſoule-murtherers, antichriſtian chapmen, halting newtrals, hogs, dogs, wolues, foxes, proctors of Antichriſt: but euermore concluding their owne worth and praiſe, ſtiling themſelues the ſeruants and deere children of God, holy brethren, the ſanctified people, Chriſtians and good men, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, ſuch as deliuer only the ſinceritie of the Goſpell, and pure milke of the word. In euerie point conformable to this patterne, God I thanke thee, that I am not as other men are, &c.

Extortioners, vniuſt, adulterers] It is apparant by his owne euidence that he was all theſe. Firſt, he was an extortioner, in relying vpon his owne merits, and robbing God of his glory, which he [p] will not giue to another. Secondly, moſt vniuſt, in deſpiſing other, and condemning the Publican raſhly without any proofe, witneſſe, or forme of law: contrary to right and reaſon, playing two parts, Accuſer and Iudge. Thirdly, what was he but an adulterer, in being ſo wedded vnto the world, and enamoured with popular applauſe? So [q] S. Iames teacheth, O yee adulterers, and adultereſſes, know yee not that the amitie of the world is the enmitie of God? And therefore this Phariſie did [r] verbis proferre virtutem, & factis deſtruere veritatem. Euen as a mill that doth clacke much, and grinde little.
